"Here is a clear case in which those standards—and certainly the balance of programming—are being debased."

The program involved is Edward P. Morgan's nightly news report over the American Broadcasting Co. radio network. The controversy began June 19 when Morgan reported on a Justice Dept. suit against the city of Birmingham to enforce desegregation of its facilities at the municipal airport. Mayor Arthur J. Hanes protested the Morgan report and a day later, although Morgan had promptly corrected a single mis-statement, the mayor announced WBRC was dropping the program.

AFL-CIO Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack protested to the FCC on July 6, charging "Morgan's inadvertent error was seized upon as a pretext . . . to shut off one of the few remaining sources of free and critical comment available to Birmingham citizens."

The broadcasting company told the FCC the decision to cancel Morgan's program was made prior to the disputed broadcast and that the program had only been carried as an accommodation to ABC. However, Zack contended the letter did not answer the earlier complaint.

He pointed out that on Mar. 6, 1961, WBRC had requested permission to carry the Morgan newscast on a year-round basis. Because WBRC is a secondary affiliate of ABC, permission had to be secured from the network's primary Birmingham affiliate, WCRT.

"The necessary consent was obtained," the AFL-CIO letter said, "and the arrangement continued through Friday, June 22, 1962. Who was being 'accommodated'?"

The Taft company had also said it was substituting Chicago baseball games for the Morgan newscast as "part of the decision to expand and improve local program services including news." Zack observed, "How news services are 'improved' by replacing them with ball games is a question that leaves me bewildered."

The AFL-CIO also noted a resolution passed July 30 by the Young Men's Business Club of Birmingham denouncing WBRC's action.

Contract Welfare Plans Safeguard 14.5 Million

The number of workers covered by union-negotiated welfare and pension plans more than doubled between 1950 and late 1960, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

Those covered by negotiated health and insurance plans increased from about 600,000 workers in 1945, when the BLS began collecting data, to 7 million in 1950 and to 14.5 million in 1960.

Pension plan coverage during the same period, according to the BLS study, climbed from a "negligible amount" in 1945 to 5 million in 1950 and 11 million by the end of 1960.

Spurred by union negotiations in the basic steel and auto industries, health and insurance coverage increased by about 4.4 million workers between 1948 and 1950, and pension coverage rose by about 3.4 million workers, the bureau found.

By the end of 1960, health and insurance plans covered about 78 percent of all workers under collective bargaining agreements, and pension plan coverage affected 60 percent.

The bureau reported that negotiations during the 1950s not only increased the number covered but also achieved many improvements in existing benefits, broadening of the range of benefits, and gradual elimination of employe contributions.

Improvements in health and insurance plans consisted chiefly of raising benefit amounts, extending coverage to the dependents of active and retired workers, and adding new types of benefits. Pension plan improvements, besides liberalizing benefits, added provisions for early and disability retirement, for death benefits and survivors' options, and for vesting.

Other highlights of the report:

- During the entire postwar period, a majority of workers covered by negotiated welfare and pension plans were in the manufacturing industries.
- By 1960, however, workers in non-manufacturing industries made up a sizable proportion of those covered. Their share of health and insurance plan coverage had risen from 28 to 43 percent, and of pension coverage from 31 to 36 percent.
- The sharpest recent increases came in three non-manufacturing groups — contract construction, transportation and public utilities, trade, finance and services.

Health and insurance plan coverage in the construction industry rose from about 60 percent of all workers in 1954 to 75 percent in 1960. Pension plan coverage climbed from less than 15 percent to about 45 percent.

Council Defers Action on AGVA

Chicago—Action has been taken by the Variety Artists in regard to charges of improper conditions within the union and the AFL-CIO Executive Council sees no indication of a need for federation action, Pres. George Meany told reporters at a press conference here.

He noted that the AGVA national board had suspended Administrative Sec. Jackie Bright.

The union said Bright was suspended until he replies to the satisfaction of the AGVA board to allegations made before the Senate Permananent Investigations Subcommittee headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.). The board said this should include, but not be limited to, the taking of a lie-detector test.

No 'Second Place':

Meany Urges All-Out Effort To Surpass Soviets in Space

Lafayette, Ind.—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged an all-out American effort to surpass Soviet Russia in space, asserting that "we will not tolerate second place" in space or science because "that would mean our ultimate subjugation to dictatorship."

Meany told members and guests of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, meeting at Purdue University to present $5,250 in awards to nine winners of the union's ninth annual National Apprenticeship Contest, that the people of this country are disturbed by the ships of Soviet Russia in outer space because "we know that their space ships are aimed not only at the moon, but at us."

He told his audience that it is this "basic concern over our national security, rather than any blow to our national pride," that must shape future U.S. policy. Complimenting the union for its program designed to train workers in skills necessary for the space-atomic age, Meany said he was encouraged to find one field in which American vision and vitality are still supreme.

"The skill and productive ability of American workers" is "unmatched in Russia, or anywhere else in the world," he said. "This has been in the past, and may be once again, the key factor in preserving peace with freedom."

The Russian space ships, he continued, show that America must work harder to develop a mammoth rocket booster. This is a scientific problem, not an industrial one, he asserted, charging that those in Congress who blame the space lag on labor-management shutdowns at missile bases are "completely misleading the public."

The great need now, Meany declared, is for our government and our scientists to unite in an all-out effort to catch up, and then move ahead, in space.

Toward that goal, he said, the Plumbers and "all other unions in our free labor movement will give their highest skills and devoted service." Meany is a member, and for many years was an officer of the Plumbers.

Apprentice Winners Named

The audience at Purdue included 112 winners of contests for apprentices at the state and provincial levels, and 466 trade instructors here for refresher courses in teaching techniques.

Top prizes of $1,000 each were presented by union Pres. Peter T. Schoemann to George Illard of Local 8, Kansas City, Mo., first among plumbers' apprentices; James M. Fay of Local 475, Newark, N. J., top winner of the pipe fitters, and Frank C. Smith of Local 696, Newark, N. J., tops among sprinkler fitters.

Second place and $500 each in the three categories went to Francis Nicholson of Local 1, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Donald Addison of Local 394, Madison, Wis., and Patrick J. Cahill, Local 281, Chicago. Winners of $250 apiece for third place were Craig I. Carlisle, Local 33, Des Moines, Ia.; Harry Nagel, Local 420, Philadelphia, and Herman W. Devereaux, Local 669, Washington, D. C.

Meany recalled that the apprenticeship training program was proposed to him less than 10 years ago by the late Martin P. Durkin, then union president, who had just returned to office after serving briefly as Secretary of Labor in the Eisenhower cabinet. Meany said "many of us looked somewhat dubiously" at the "ambitious plan" for an educational program, but that Durkin persisted and when he died the program was carried forward with vigor by Schoemann.

The Program Wins Recognition

Today the program "has won nationwide recognition as an outstanding trade union achievement," and a great contribution to U.S. security and well-being, Meany said.

In his call to the nation for an all-out effort in space, the federation president observed that the trade union movement never has underestimated the Soviet menace, "yet we do not doubt for one minute that it can be overcome."

He said the ceremony at which he was chief speaker symbolized not only the accomplishments of the apprentice contestants, but the opportunity they have received for wider achievement in the future. He warmly praised the work done by apprentice teachers, paying tribute to the "farsightedness" of employing contractors as well as union leaders.

Safe Labor Day Drive Endorsed by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy, in a statement supporting the trade union movement's campaign for safety on the highways over the Labor Day weekend, has urged workers to transfer the standards of the workplace into other phases of their lives.

"Americans may take satisfaction from the progress made in this country to improve safety standards for our working men and women," he said.

All 50 states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia have enacted safety measures against occupational hazards, he observed, and added:

"This is an achievement that may be appropriately celebrated along with other gains on Labor Day.

"It is tragically ironic, however, that this day of the year should yield unhappiness in the form of injury and death on the streets and highways, and as a result of other holiday activities.

"What we have achieved in the workplace must also become the personal achievement of each of us. I urge all Americans to exercise care, to practice safety on the coming national holiday. For each of us, safety is a personal responsibility—to ourselves and to our families."

Labor's campaign in 1961 was climaxed by a new safety record when the number of travelers over the three-day holiday was considered. But there still were 386 traffic deaths and 83 lives lost in swimming and boating accidents.

Urges Safe Labor Day

Such tragedies, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said earlier, "have no place in the celebration of labor's national holiday."

The Labor Day safety campaign is sponsored by the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council with the cooperation of the AFL-CIO Committee on Occupational Health & Safety, and many unions. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers, is chairman of the steering committee.

Potofsky Asks Yates' Election In Illinois Race

Chicago—Retired members of the Clothing Workers in Illinois were urged to work for the election of Rep. Sidney R. Yates (D) to the Senate by ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky at the first pensioners' picnic of the Chicago Joint Board.

Potofsky contrasted the records of Yates and his Republican opponent, Sen. Everett McK. Dirksen, who is seeking re-election, pointing out that the latter was a leader in the successful fight to defeat the Anderson-King health care bill,

"The bill was defeated by a flood of lies," he told some 2,000 pensioners and their guests, "plus the most gigantic lobbying efforts, sponsored by the insurance companies and the medical politicians of the American Medical Association, that I have ever seen.

"You have a big job to do right here in Illinois to make sure that the fight is not over. The senator you now have is no credit to the state of Illinois and is no friend of yours. His name is Dirksen."

In fact, Potofsky added, whenever Congress is weighing a measure favorable to workers, "you'll find your Sen. Dirksen leading the fight against it."

"This year you have a chance to bring Dirksen back to Illinois as a private citizen," he said, "and to elect a good senator in his place. His name is Sidney Yates. As a congressman he showed that we can count on him as an able representative and as a friend of the worker."

Missile Strike End Ordered By Freeman

Gordon M. Freeman, president of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, has directed striking IBEW members at the Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville, Ala., to return to work pending a hearing by the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission.

The commission announced that its construction subcommittee headed by John T. Dunlop will hold a hearing on the case on Aug. 27 in Washington.

Freeman, acting at the request of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and under the authority granted him by the IBEW constitution, wired James H. Haygood, businesss manager of Local 558 at Sheffield, Ala., directing IBEW members to remain on the job pending a hearing on the "merits of the dispute."

About 150 IBEW members have refused to work at the Marshall Space Flight Center because of the employment of non-union electricians by the Baroco Electric Co. of Pensacola, Fla.

The IBEW president sent a copy of his wire to Goldberg, who is chairman of the Missile Sites Labor Commission, "urgently" requesting that hearings be scheduled at the "earliest possible date."

U. S. Labor's Cause Called Dedication to Humanity

American unions rededicate themselves on Labor Day 1962 to the "cause of humanity . . . the cause that makes life worth living today and assures all mankind of a tomorrow free from the perils of poverty, dictatorship and war," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in an international Labor Day message.

The message, prepared for beaming around the globe by the U.S. Information Agency, declared that "free American labor wants no captive nations in Europe or in Africa, in Asia or anywhere else."

Meany said American labor works for freedom, for better working conditions and expanding democracy at home and to help free trade unions and workers abroad "to resist and defeat tyranny in every form and to build healthy and prosperous democracies."

The Wall of Shame in Berlin, he said, is a symbol everyone can understand—the symbol of the "concentration camp state." The people of East Berlin and East Germany are behind the wall for "the crime of wanting freedom and being willing to fight for it."

Meany Calls on U. S. For 'Surge of Progress'

of the banquet, Meany commented that the initiation of the national apprenticeship program was "one of the last great social gains in that era of sweeping social progress that we enjoyed a generation ago." He added:

"I would be even happier if there were other new enlightened programs that were now approaching their 15th anniversary, or their 10th or their 5th, or even their first. Unfortunately, we do not have any such milestones in sight. For a whole generation we have, in effect, been marking time. I say we ought to start moving again; and it is in that spirit that I take part in this celebration."

Meany stressed the need for more apprentices, declaring that the nation is not training "as many young men as we should" and that not enough young persons are taking advantage of the program.

He cited the action in California by unions, employers and the state to promote the apprenticeship program and to launch a frontal attack on possible discrimination.

Job Lag Major Obstacle

But the "most important single reason why we are not training enough apprentices," he said, is the "lack of a full employment economy."

To solve the apprenticeship problem the nation must solve the unemployment problem, he said, adding:

"We have to create the kind of economy that genuinely offers equal opportunity for all. We must build up the confidence of all Americans, of all ages, of all backgrounds, that a job will always be available for every able and willing worker."

Much has been done in the last 25 years to strengthen and improve apprentice training, he said, "but without stamping out racial discrimination or achieving full employment."

"And so this will continue to be a patch-work effort, always doomed to fall short of its goals unless the basic national problems are met," he commented.

The apprentice program, he emphasized, has built a "close and harmonious relationship" among business, labor and government.

"I look forward to the day," he went on, "when all three partners in this undertaking can build on this partnership and widen it until it meets all of the fundamental needs of our society."

AFL-CIO Sec. Treas. William F. Schnitzler chaired the morning session of the anniversary meeting, which was devoted to presentation of honors and awards to individuals and groups who made contributions to the apprentice program during its first 25 years.

Goldberg in his speech said the economy of the U.S. is so productive that "no country" can match its accomplishments with ours. The key to this production, he said, is that "we are a free people." "Skilled workers," he declared, "are indispensable to the progress, prosperity and security" of the nation.

70 Unions To Cooperate In L. A. Drive

committees representing the various internationals would have to decide which union would be given the task of organizing a certain plant or shop and then everyone would pitch in and help that union where necessary.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter Reuther, chairman of the Executive Council Subcommittee on Organizing, told the representatives that "the prospects for organizing are the most favorable in years and every union can grow. We must have the cooperation of the internationals instead of competition and they must assign manpower and funds to assure success of the drive."

Meany Hits Press On Sudden Silence

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told an audience at the national apprenticeship anniversary program he found it "amazing" that the country's leading newspapers failed to report that the President's Labor-Management Advisory Committee recently had voted unanimously to support the Kennedy trade expansion program.

Saying that the bill is a "matter of tremendous importance" to the free world, Meany noted that "the very newspapers that criticize both labor and management for not getting along ignored this important news."

"Here we cooperated 100 percent," Meany said in a digression from his prepared text, "yet no major metropolitan newspaper printed a single line."

UNION STAFF MEMBERS get practice in writing job descriptions at the fifth Union Industrial Engineering Institute sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the University of Wisconsin. Shown above are students questioning a stationary engineer about his job at the university. Later they evaluated the job according to various systems used in industry and learned the limitations of the job evaluation process.

Industrial Engineering Institute Attendance Greatest in History

Madison, Wis.—The largest attendance in the five-year history of the Union Industrial Engineering Institutes marked the 1962 summer sessions on the University of Wisconsin campus here.

Fifty-five full-time representatives and staff members from 17 international unions and central bodies attended sessions in time study and wage incentives, job evaluation, and synthetic work measurement systems.

Emphasis of the two-week on-campus courses was to give students a working knowledge of recent developments in industrial engineering, and the collective bargaining measures needed to protect workers against misuse of new work measurement techniques.

The subject matter of the institutes reflected the expressed interest of union representatives active in bargaining and grievance handling, according to institute sponsors, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and the University of Wisconsin School for Workers.

Union awareness of the impact of current industrial engineering practices on established union working conditions was heightened by a policy resolution adopted last December by the fourth convention of the AFL-CIO. The convention called on all affiliates to:

- Use every available means to make all union members aware of this threat.
- Join in the fight to stop the spread of "abusive and arbitrary applications" of questionable engineering techniques.
- Attempt to influence industrial engineers to channel their efforts to basic human work problems, to research in job design and the adjusting of the work place to the worker.
- Take full advantage of schools such as the institutes to train as many union representatives as possible in effectively representing workers faced with threatening management techniques.

In letters to affiliates last spring, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler reminded union officers of the convention action and the opportunity to train staff members at very little cost. The AFL-CIO, he said, was "pleased to be able to provide this service to its affiliates."

The students came from the Auto Workers, Boilermakers, Brick & Clay Workers, Chemical Workers, Communications Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Glass & Ceramic Workers, Glass Bottle Blowers, Flint Glass Workers, Allied Industrial Workers, Meat Cutters, Molders, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Steelworkers, Woodworkers and the Wisconsin AFL-CIO.

The institutes were directed by Bertram Gottlieb, industrial engineer in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, and Norris Tibbets of the School for Workers. Other instructors were George Hagglund of the School for Workers; Charles Hall, industrial engineer, AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Richard Humphreys, education director, AIW; Research Dir. William O. Kuhl, Boilermakers; Research Dir. David Lasser, IUE; Fred Simon, engineering representative, UAW Agricultural Implement Dept.; Don Wasserman, economist, the Machinists.

CLC Proposes Aid for Victims of Automation

Ottawa, Ont.—A broad program to protect workers adversely affected by automation, tied in with full employment and a planned, long-term expansion of the public sector of the economy, was adopted by the executive council of the Canadian Labor Congress at a meeting here.

In a policy statement, the CLC proposed that affiliates help impress on federal, provincial and local governments the need for grants-in-aid, loans, scholarships and other financing to provide training for displaced workers.

In addition it suggested programs of sound basic education so workers can more readily adapt themselves to changing skill requirements, and relocation allowances to workers forced to move their families.

The proposed long-term expansion of the public sector of the economy would include urban redevelopment, slum clearance, housing, construction of roads and schools, and the conservation of natural resources.

The executive council also acted on a series of resolutions referred to it by the recent CLC convention in Vancouver. Among those approved were recommendations for:

- Abolition of capital punishment.
- Tightening of human rights legislation and creation of a citizens' advisory committee on the Canadian Fair Employment Practices Act.
- Exchange of trade union delegations "with those countries where trade unions function independently from their respective governments and employers."

Labor Foe Of Castro Gets 30 Years

David Salvador, Cuban labor leader who was an early confidante of Fidel Castro but split with the dictator over communism, has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for alleged crimes against the totalitarian regime, according to word received by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels.

He had been held without trial since his arrest by Castro police on Nov. 5, 1960—two years after he had been seized by police of the previous Batista dictatorship.

An early member of the Cuban Communist Party, Salvador bolted it in 1946, became an intellectual leader of the Sugar Workers Federation and ultimately was chosen general secretary of the 600,000-member union.

When Castro assumed power on Jan. 1, 1959, he freed Salvador from the prison in which Batista had confined him and made him secretary-general of the revolutionary Confederation of Cuban Workers (CTC). Differences with Castro's Communist associates developed almost immediately and mounted until Salvador quit the CTC post in March 1960 in protest against Red domination. His arrest came a few months later.

'Misrepresentation' Charged:

Unions Hit Railroads For 'Falsehood' in Ad

Railroad labor unions have accused the rail industry of "ridiculous falsehood" and "gross misrepresentation" in an advertisement designed to "mislead the public in the current dispute with its employes over work rules."

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, representing 24 rail unions, termed the advertisement a "new low in misrepresentation."

The advertisement said that the recent court decisions upholding the argument of the rail unions that the carriers cannot unilaterally impose new work rules and conditions is a "setback for the shipping and traveling public which now pays the railroad unions nearly $600 million each year for work not needed or not performed."

RLEA Executive Sec. Donald S. Beattie termed the statement "a ridiculous falsehood" because "not one penny of money is paid to railroad unions by shippers or the traveling public."

"The rail unions are financed by their members' dues payments, which come from earned wages and are freely voted by democratic action," he said.

The advertisement implies, he continued, that if the unions acceded to rail management demands and accepted "unsafe, substandard working conditions," the public would save $600 million a year.

"This too is a gross misrepresentation," he charged, "since the railroads have never proposed to reduce their rates to the shipping public by an amount equal to that they allege they would 'save' by work rules changes.

"The fact is that instead of being used for rate reductions, this money would go only to swell the already generally most satisfactory earnings of the bankers, insurance companies and other railroad financial interests who control the railroads through ownership of their stocks and bonds."

Beattie also renewed the RLEA request for "an extensive, thorough investigation" by Congress "to expose once and for all the myth of railroad 'poverty' and the motivations of the monopolistic financial forces in control of the industry."

Five OSU Students Get William Green Awards

Columbus, O.—Selection of five Ohio State University students to receive William Green memorial scholarships and fellowships for the 1961-62 school year has been announced by an OSU election committee.

The committee, headed by Prof.-Emeritus Alma Herbst of the university's Dept. of Economics, voted to renew the graduate fellowship of Sarvan K. Bhatia of India, the first overseas student to win a Green award. It also awarded a fellowship grant to another graduate student, Martin M. Perline, and scholarship awards of $800 each to three undergraduate students, John Duerr, Marcia K. Duncan and Mary L. Shiffer.

Prof. Herbst reported to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany that one extra scholarship was awarded this year because of a small surplus in the Green memorial fund. Yearly grants are made out of income from a $100,000 trust fund established as an enduring memorial to the long-time president of the former AFL. The grants usually provide for two fellowships and two scholarships.

The committee reported as follows on this year's winners:

- Bhatia, 32, came to OSU in 1961 after getting two degrees from Punjab University, India, and after five years of work for the upper house of the Punjab legislature. A linguist, he will complete work for a doctor of philosophy degree and return to India.
- Perline, 26, born in Phoenix, Ariz., did his undergraduate work there. Interested in labor economics and trade unions, he is completing a master of arts thesis on union activities.
- Duerr, 22, came here six years ago from Romania, and has maintained an "almost perfect" college record. Majoring in history and German, he hopes to teach those subjects after taking graduate studies.
- Miss Duncan, 21, is majoring in history and hopes to get government employment abroad. She has been an outstanding student in the honors program.
- Miss Shiffer, 21, is majoring in German and has an ambition to understand and interpret other peoples to her fellow Americans.

Woll Declares NLRB Seeks to Apply Law

The "new" National Labor Relations Board has changed many of the policies adopted by the NLRB during the Eisenhower Administration because it is "honestly and diligently" trying to carry out the law and not because it is "pro-labor," AFL-CIO Gen. Counsel J. Albert Woll has declared.

Interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting network's Labor News Conference, Woll noted that during the last two years of the Eisenhower Administration the Supreme Court reversed the NLRB in 11 of 15 cases.

This record of reversals, he said, is "particularly astounding when you consider that the board is supposed to be expert in its field."

A "rank amateur," he commented, "could do better just on the basis of luck."

Woll pointed out that the stated national policy, under existing federal law, is to "encourage, support and advance collective bargaining." While labor does not agree with all of the decisions of the present labor board, he said, it has been "sincerely . . . trying to interpret a very complex law."

He praised the NLRB for speeding up its decision-making process and said it would be "a very serious mistake" to adopt the U.S. Chamber of Commerce proposal to shift the power to decide unfair labor practice cases to the federal courts. The courts, Woll said, are already "overburdened" with pending cases.

Scholarship Winners Receive Awards

AFL-CIO SCHOLARSHIP certificate was presented to Mary Ellen Robinson at Hickory, N. C., by (left to right) Pres. W. M. Barbee of the State AFL-CIO. AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Carey E. Haigler and State Executive Sec.-Treas. Jim W. Holder. Mary Ellen was one of six winners of a nationwide competition.

TURNING OUT TO PRESENT AFL-CIO scholarship award to Edward M. Holpruch, Jr., of Seattle were (from left) Pres. Joe Davis and Sec.-Treas. Marvin L. Williams of the State AFL-CIO and Sec. Chester W. Ramage of Kings County Labor Council.

At simple ceremonies in six communities across the country, the happy young men and women who won AFL-CIO merit scholarships received their certificates of award to the accolades of families, friends and neighbors. The AFL-CIO awards six scholarships each year, a demonstration, as Pres. George Meany has said, that the federation "looks forward to the day when all of America's young people have the opportunity to complete a college education," and as a sign of organized labor's interest in furthering education.

The recipients of the scholarships won their awards in nationwide competition conducted by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. The grants range up to $1,500 a year and the winners may attend any recognized college or university of their choosing. Two scholarships are given each year in each of three geographical sections of the country, and those who receive them are selected from both union and non-union families. Since the AFL-CIO's program was inaugurated in 1959, a total of 24 scholarships have been distributed.

PRESENTATION OF AFL-CIO scholarship to Paul C. Jefferson, Chicago, was made by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William L. McFetridge. Looking on were the winner's mother, Mrs. Helen C. Jefferson, a member of Teachers Local 1, and grandfather, Prof. Edward M. Chandler of Roosevelt College.

The Missing Record

IN 10 WEEKS voters will be stepping into polling places across the nation to elect the 88th Congress and at this late date the record of the 87th Congress is still incomplete.

The snail-paced session—caused in large degree by the obstructionism of the southern Democratic-Republican coalition intent on killing or watering down nearly every Administration proposal—has made it more difficult for the voters properly to assess the record and the issues that will determine the outcome of the November balloting.

The record is not written in major areas such as expanded foreign trade, taxes, aid to higher education, public works, the youth opportunities bill, temporary unemployment compensation extension and a host of other matters.

In the rush to wind up its affairs and return home for the vital campaigning there is a real danger that many of these issues will be pushed aside. Many a bill has been trampled to death in the adjournment rush, especially after a long, drawn-out session, and many a bill of a damaging nature has slipped through in the confusion of going home that does not come to light for days or weeks afterwards.

There is obviously a need for a re-examination of the work schedules of Congress in light of the current session's record and pace. But given the traditional pace of a traditionally minded Congress, the greater problem is the obstructionism of the Dixiecrat coalition, the dragging out and delaying tactics until finally proponents throw up their hands and move toward the inevitable adjournment without action on their measures.

The voters deserve a decent interval of time to study the record and the issue in a congressional election year; to an extent it is being denied them this year.

More important, the voters have the right to review a congressman's or senator's record to determine his position on the major issues. Where these issues do not come to a vote because of delay and obstruction, then the cause of an informed electorate in a functioning democracy is ill-served.

Child Labor Checked

SCHOOL BELLS will be ringing out across the land in a week or so summoning millions of youngsters back from summer vacations. It's pretty well taken for granted these days that they will all show up, with varying degrees of enthusiasm, to renew their pursuit of knowledge.

Not so many years back this assumption would not have held water. There were untold numbers of children in elementary and secondary schools who worked year 'round in the mills and factories. Child labor was an accepted fact of life, with youngsters working 12 and 14 hours a day for a pittance to help their families eke out an existence.

The American trade union movement was in the forefront of the struggle to wipe out the ugly stains of child labor and the other evils that lingered in the industrial system in the early years of this century. Joining with other groups and organizations, labor helped substantially to remove this blot from the American scene.

This is part of the history of the American labor movement, part of its record of achievement in the public interest.

New Confederation Formed:

Lebanese Unions Stay Free, Plan New Organizing Drive

By Arnold Beichman

BEIRUT, LEBANON—In most of the Arab world, still struggling to enter the 20th Century, democratic freedoms are hardly visible. Military rule, authoritarianism, monarchical feudalism and religious bigotry abound. Only Lebanon seems to be neutral amidst the inter-Arab passions which make a mockery of the phrase "Arab unity."

Lebanon's press is relatively free, certainly the freest in the Arab world and the most numerous for a population of 1.6 million. There is no religious discrimination against Christian or Moslem and the small Jewish population seems untouched by Arab-Israeli conflicts.

Two of the labor federations—there are five in all, including a small Communist group which controls nine out of the 80 unions—are affiliates of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and refuse to apologize to anybody for the affiliation. The pro-Communist group belongs to the Soviet-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

For all labor, the right to collective bargaining is untouched by government hand and the right to strike exists in full measure. However, there is a move underway to limit the duration of strikes to a maximum of 15 days. Legislation is being proposed which would institute a system of compulsory arbitration after mediation efforts have broken down. Between mediation and arbitration, there would be 15 days during which strikes or lockouts would be legal, thereafter illegal.

Yet despite the free atmosphere in which unions live, membership is low, barely 30,000 in an urban work force estimated at 150,000 and in a total work force, including agricultural workers, of 260,000. One reason is that there are a large number of self-employed Lebanese and many family owned enterprises which reduce the potential.

One result of the low membership is lack of sufficient union income. Here the government enters by supplying an annual subsidy of about $17,000, which is openly distributed to the federations and some of the independent unions. The money goes to pay office and administrative expenses. It is agreed by all observers here that despite the subsidy the unions couldn't be more free of government control.

Hussein Ali Hussein, Moslem president of the Labor League, one of the five federations, and head of the Bakers Union (he recalled that on his visit to the U.S. in 1956, he had met a former Bakery Workers leader, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler) said, subsidy or no subsidy, there had been strikes against "the government" by public utility and transportation workers; the post office, telegraph and telephone workers, and workers in the government-monopoly tobacco industry.

The other labor federations include: the United Unions, which like the Labor League is an ICFTU affiliate; the Federation of Independent Trade Unions and the Federation of Unions of North Lebanon, which are anti-Communist but not ICFTU affiliates, and the pro-Communist Federation of Labor Unions. The Labor League, the United Unions and the Federation of Unions of North Lebanon have recently formed the Lebanese Confederation of Labor, which while permitting autonomy to its component federations, will act as a national spokesman.

Head of the United Unions is Gabriel Khoury, a Christian Arab, who is president of the new confederation as well as president of the Bank Employes Union. Both Hussein and Khoury are staunchly anti-Communist.

IT MAY SEEM AWKWARD to refer to religious affiliation in discussing labor leadership. However, Lebanon is a rather unusual country in this part of the Arab world because the Christian part of the Lebanese population is about half of the total population—or so it is believed. By government design, there hasn't been an official census for 30 years. The unwritten law is that the country is half-Christian and half-Moslem and everything else.

As far as economic ideology is concerned, the union movements are believers in free enterprise. Officials shun talk of socialism even when it is called "Arab socialism," the currently favorite slogan of Egypt's Nasser. Khoury, who was a delegate to the ICFTU congress in Belin last July, said:

"Our ideology is for liberty and not the class struggle, not to dispossess the rich. We believe in working with government and capital and thereby to create a social system which will give the worker an honorable part of the national income."

Hussein put it even more succinctly: "As far as our economic philosophy is concerned, we are like the AFL-CIO in America."

In coming months, the new labor confederation will undertake a national organizing campaign and, not least, an all-out campaign against the Communists. In the anti-Communist fight, said Hussein, the ICFTU will be an important ally because "the ICFTU has done a great deal in the international field to expose the Communists and to fight their destructive ideas."

Morgan Says:

Ideas Can Generate Power, Just Like Men, Money and Missiles

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

MAYBE this story doesn't mean a thing but, incurable romantic that I am, I like to think it does. It has nothing to do with power blocs or weapons systems or even votes. It merely involves a journey of a college student from the town of Kinston, N. C., to the city of Athens, Greece, and how he happened to make it.

Morgan

Yet in this tale, I fancy, there may be a word of reassurance to ex-Pres. Hoover and other honest skeptics about the promise of the United Nations and a hint to the city fathers of Albany, Ga., about how neighborhoods can be moved to work for something instead of against something else.

Kellis Parker is a junior at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. He is one of the university's few Negro undergraduates. Things were rough his freshman year and his grades were low. But the place offered a wider horizon than he had ever known before and he buckled down to study so he could stay. Parker started a graph of his progress and pinned it to the wall of his room. It shows a steady scholastic rise. The campus joint YM-YWCA got him interested in international affairs.

He was quiet, even shy at first but he made the varsity debating team as a sophomore, the only Negro on it. He also made the university band, became active in the Carolina chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, got involved in raising funds to bring an African student to North Carolina next fall. He was the first or at least one of the first Negroes to be served a meal in the Richmond, Va., bus terminal after its restaurant had been desegregated last February. Several weeks ago at the CCUN's national meeting at Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N. Y., Parker was elected one of a five-man American delegation to the 14th annual conference of the Intl. Student Movement for the UN in Athens.

The inevitable hitch developed. Kellis Parker needed $1,000 for the trip and he didn't have a dime. Now the plot pleasantly thickens. When he got home from Sarah Lawrence he told his eighth grade school teacher, Mrs. Vergial Webb, about his honor and his problem. Mrs. Webb went to one of Kinston's community leaders, Mrs. Sallie C. Hill, and she set in motion the "Kinstonian to Greece" project with a biracial committee. A policeman, Sgt. Harold Cogdell, was made chairman of the fund drive; Herbert Dawson of the Lane Funeral Home was named treasurer. W. S. Page, owner of radio station WELS and a member of the mayor's Human Relations Commission, was among the white people participating. The YM-YWCA in Chapel Hill lent a hand.

Contributions began to trickle in. Parker spoke on the radio and addressed the Kinston Rotary Club (all white). The Kinston Free Press covered developments. The project committee staged a benefit and the proceeds went toward Parker's trip. Donations ranging from 25 cents to $100 came in from school children, the Elks Club, a printing company, churches, grocery stores, drug stores, florists, the Kinston Shirt Co., lawyers, doctors, dentists and taxi drivers. When they added it all up, the two-week drive netted $1,262.84 with $200 more pledged.

THE DAY KELLIS left for New York a large motorcade escorted him in an open-top convertible from the Lane Funeral Home to the airport. He spent several days being briefed at headquarters of the CCUN and making UN contacts. He and the president of CCUN, Gary Marshall, a University of Texas student who enters Columbia University in September, flew off to Athens, ready and eager to discuss the conference theme: "The UN and Decolonization."

As one Kinston dispatch put it, "Kellis will be a wonderful delegate. . . . Representatives from other lands will see him also as an American Negro, as a Southerner and as a University of North Carolina student. . . . He will be speaking for the best in the Southerner and in a changing South." "Most important to everyone concerned," the account went on, "was that whites and Negroes worked together in mutual respect and a common effort. . . . Those of us who were down there"—the correspondent said —"came back with a good feeling about the town and its people."

It takes more than good feeling to solve international crises. A conference in Athens (cradle of democracy though that lovely city is) won't have any immediate effect on the Cold War. As it has been through history, power is what talks in the world arena today—manpower and money power and missile power.

Still, ideas and ideals have been known to generate power, too. If they can switch the current on in the town of Kinston, N. C., it can be done also in an unhappy, immobilized community like Albany, Ga., and eventually, with luck, among the struggling, contentious world neighborhoods that comprise the UN. At least this is the hope that free men stubbornly hold to and Kellis Parker and his friends have helped them strengthen their grip on that ideal.

Washington Reports:

Fringe Benefit Inclusion Urged In Davis-Bacon Wage Findings

IMPROVEMENT OF the Davis-Bacon Act to include fringe benefits in determining prevailing area wages is necessary in fairness to workers and contractors and to the community itself, Rep. John E. Fogarty (D-R.I.) and Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.) declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"Under the Davis-Bacon Act, as originally conceived," Fogarty pointed out, "contractors could bid against each other on the basis of their efficiency, ability and skill—but not at the expense of human beings and their families. The Secretary of Labor has the authority to determine the prevailing wage."

Since fringe benefits are not considered, the old formula is now outmoded, he said.

Halpern declared that the basic hourly wage rate falls "far short" of reflecting the actual labor costs on a construction job.

"That's because collective agreements in the building industry cover fringe benefits such as health and welfare and retirement plans," he said. "And the fair employer who has agreed to pay such benefits is at a disadvantage figuring against some contractor, maybe from another area, who doesn't pay such benefits."

THE TWO congressmen agreed that the Bacon-Davis Act was bipartisan in its history. Halpern observed that it was enacted when Republican Pres. Herbert Hoover was in office, and that both Sen. James J. Davis and Rep. Robert Low Bacon, the sponsors, were Republicans.

"Bacon was from the same New York district that I am now privileged to represent," he said.

Fogarty pointed out that the act was improved in some ways under the Democratic Administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1935. He said:

"The provisions of the act have been extended in recent years to apply to a number of federal grant-in-aid programs, such as the federally-impacted school programs, Hill-Burton hospital construction programs, the federal interstate highway and airport programs, water pollution control programs and the National Housing Act."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg was quoted to affirm Administration support of the proposed inclusion of fringe benefits.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SOME 50 REPORTERS and cameramen went out to the West with Pres. Kennedy as he began his congressional campaign with a whirlwind tour of South Dakota, Colorado and California.

In South Dakota the Democrats think George McGovern, recently director of Food for Peace, has a good chance to beat Sen. Joseph Bottum (R), appointed to fill the place of the late Sen. Francis Case. In Colorado, Sen. John Carroll faces a tough fight to win re-election over an aggressive Republican challenger, Rep. Peter H. Dominick, who is only a first-termer in the House but is obviously a young man in a hurry.

The state of California is the great prize, with eight additional seats in the House gained through the 1960 census count, and with Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown challenged by former Vice Pres. Nixon.

Brown had a million-vote margin over former Sen. William F. Knowland, then Senate Republican leader, when he won his first term in 1958, but he isn't kidding himself into thinking he has a prospective million-vote margin over Nixon.

The President kept his trip non-political in every observable public way. He was welcomed by a Republican governor, Archie M. Gubbrud, in Pierre, S. D., and from other platforms Mr. Kennedy acknowledged the presence of Republican members of the House and Senate who flew in to appear with him. Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel of California was transported home in a presidential plane for the damsite ceremonies where Mr. Kennedy and Gov. Brown inaugurated a Central Valley project.

TO SAY THAT THE PRESIDENT observed the amenities, however, is not to deny that he had political purposes in mind. His trip was a test run for the hot campaigns ahead, when Congress has quit at last and the candidates start begging for presidential help.

The ancient dogma is that no President can transfer popularity to a local candidate, but Mr. Kennedy may not be believing the dogma right now. On the three-day western swing, he talked water and power in states gasping for water and power, and there were no Democratic candidates who filed protests. Republican Senator Gordon Allott of Colorado felt it important to be present when the President was in Pueblo and flew out, together with the state's two Republican members of the House, by commercial plane. Allott isn't even up for election this year.

The President obviously was pleased at the crowds that greeted him, and he went into them to shake hands with men, women and children—and the broad smiles broke over their faces as they did in 1960.

The strain of two years in office does not show in his face; his smile comes as readily, he takes the jostlings with good humor, and the Secret Service guards must be driven half out of their minds as he occasionally gets himself surrounded by swarming citizens worth who knows how many votes each.

THE PRESIDENT wants some more votes in the House of Representatives, and the White House has made it clear that he doesn't intend to surrender in despair because the historical precedents say that Republican gains are likely. Mr. Kennedy is a politician who thinks he can alter precedents.

He has also allowed it to be known that he will be back in California at least once, and maybe twice, for direct campaigning in behalf of Gov. Brown. (From the former Vice President, incidentally, not a single word of utterance came during the two days Mr. Kennedy was in the state: He was reported resting at his home.)

The President got a report that in 19 western states the Democrats seemed to have a good chance to pick up 15 House seats. Back in Washington a day later, a careful Republican source said that GOP talk of regaining control of the House was nonsense—but that his own careful estimate indicated a 19 or 20-seat net gain. One of the reports obviously is wrong, but the campaign has been launched.

IMPROVEMENT of the Davis-Bacon Act is a "must" to protect the interests of workers, contractors and the community, according to Rep. John E. Fogarty (D-R.I.), left, and Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.). They were interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Back-to-School Shopping Poses Problems in Quality and Fit

By Sidney Margolius

PARENTS OFTEN are shocked by the high prices of some children's clothes, especially shoes, and often disappointed in the quality. Some stores charge almost as much for children's shirts, dresses and shoes as parents pay for their own. Careful shopping for back-to-school clothes can save you both money and subsequent drudgery.

Especially in these days of discount and other self-service retailing at low prices, you need to know how to tell durable, well-constructed garments from the poorly made ones that will wear through quickly, get baggy, soil more readily and split at seams.

In general, always examine materials for firm, close weave. In wool and wool blends also look for resiliency; in cotton knitwear, for elasticity, especially around collar and cuffs. Especially avoid T-shirts and other knit garments with thin spots that will wear through soon, or that are loosely knitted. In all garments, look at the labels for color fastness and shrinkage guarantees.

You may have seen some cotton shirts and other garments labeled "combed cotton." This is stronger and smoother than ordinary cotton. "Pima" cotton is a high grade of combed cotton.

Simplicity of style, especially in children's dresses, is another important factor in saving money and household work.

You also have to be careful of fit, since manufacturer's sizes vary. Too, sometimes children take one size in one type of garment, another in a different type. You have to be especially careful about fit in the new self-service discount department stores, where shirts and other garments often are prepackaged and cellophane-wrapped. Size is a particular problem in slim-hipped western jeans. In tee shirts, you can expect even superior ones to shrink as much as 5 percent, and poorly made ones up to 10 percent. Tee shirts especially need to be bought roomy, or even a size larger.

Better-made garments are cut roomier. You can lay one brand against another and notice differences. Skimpily cut garments put more strain on seams and materials.

Also notice how much wider the shoulder seams of well-made tee shirts are than those of cheap ones. Always look for generous seams in any children's garments, to avoid strain and for future letting out.

Seams should be flat and stitched closely, evenly and securely with strong thread. Edges preferably should be overcast to protect against raveling. Generous, overcast seams are especially vital for wash-and-wear garments made partly of synthetic fibers like dacron or nylon, since synthetic fibers are slippery and tend to slip or unravel at seams.

Look for bar-tacking, taped seams and other reinforcements at such points of strain as placket ends and under arms of dresses, pocket corners of trousers and shoulder seams of tee shirts.

Buttonholes should be closely bound so they won't tear easily with a child's rough handling.

Parents may find a saving in clothes that grow with the child. For example, the "Add-A-Cuff" slacks can be let down simply by snipping a couple of threads. So can the "Grow-A-Size" creepers for age one to two. "Gay Sprites" garments have seams that can be opened to reveal another seam, and pleats that can be let out to lengthen sleeves.

Shopping tip: after a summer of high meat prices, both beef and pork are getting cheaper. Turkey supplies are still large, making turkey an outstanding buy. This is the season to switch to medium and small eggs instead of large. The record pack of frozen orange juice is another current food bargain.

From Soup to Nonsense:

That Wonderful Vacation Trip—From the Inside Looking Out

By Jane Goodsell

The Bold, Brave Words: "We'll get the car all packed up the night before and be ready to roll first thing in the morning. If we get off at six, we should cross the state line by lunchtime."

The Moment of Truth: "For the luvva Pete, how many times do I have to tell you? We can't get another thing in this car, and that includes your eyelash curler! Now, let's get going! D'you realize it's already 11:45 and we're still — Great Scott, I forgot to turn off the water!"

The Bold, Brave Words: "Now dear, you just keep your mind on your driving, and I'll keep the road map on my lap so I can give you directions."

The Moment of Truth: "You and your fine talk about watching the road map! Why, any two-year-old would have noticed that we should have turned off there, 50 miles back. You don't even know how to fold a road map, much less read one!"

The Bold, Brave Words: "The trip will be a wonderful educational experience for the children. Visiting historical landmarks will give them a real sense of our cultural heritage."

The Moment of Truth: "Just imagine, a decisive battle was fought on this very ground we're standing on! Junior, look at what it says on that little bronze plaque over there. Junior? Junior! Where has that boy disappeared to? Oh for heaven's sake, he's fiddling with the gun machine again. Junior, you come back here this minute and look at this . . ."

The Bold, Brave Words: "Now that the children are older, we won't have to stop every few minutes. . . ."

The Moment of Truth: "Well, you'll just have to wait, that's all! Why didn't you think about that five minutes ago, back at the filling station?"

The Bold, Brave Words: "Boy, it'll be good to get away from that madhouse at the office. I'm not even going to think about it for two whole weeks!"

The Moment of Truth: "Hello, Charlie? Yeah, yeah, I'm in Disneyland. Say, I've been wondering if you remembered to get out those requisition slips. You did? Well, that's fine. Yeah, I was just wondering."

The Bold, Brave Words: "A family vacation will give us a chance to cement our relationship with the children, and get to know one another as a family."

The Moment of Truth: "If there's one more fight about who gets to sit next to the window, I'm going to turn this car around and drive straight back home. Now SHUT UP!"

The Bold, Brave Words: "Only 20 miles to go, and we'll be home. No matter how good a vacation you have, there's no place else like it. It'll be great to sleep in our own beds again."

The Moment of Truth: "Well, here we are, safe and—good grief! Look at that porch! The milkman must have delivered three quarts every day since we left! And the yard looks simply awful! Why, the boy who was supposed to mow didn't do a thing! Gee, the house sure is hot and dusty. . . ."

When you buy Union Label products and spend where you see the Union Shop Card and Service Button

UNION LABEL WEEK

SEPTEMBER 3-9, 1962

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO
815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W. • WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

PRINTED ON UNION MADE PAPER

Meany, Schnitzler Support Label Week

Union Label Week, which begins on Labor Day, has been hailed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler as a reminder of the importance of "buying union."

"Support of union-made, union label products" is "high on the list of fundamentals" of trade unionism, Meany declared in an endorsement of the annual observance sponsored by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. He added:

"Union Label Week serves to remind us, each year, that the best way to buy is to look for the union label, shop card or service button. These are symbols of fair wages and working conditions; and they are symbols of quality products and services as well."

Schnitzler declared that "the wholehearted and determined support of union-made goods and unionized services" contributes to "the well-being of union members, the prosperity of the country and the growth of the labor movement."

He noted that purchases of union goods and use of union establishments help provide job security for workers employed there.

"Since union wages are higher than others, this also helps to maintain the consumer purchasing power that keeps the economy going," he said, "and by demonstrating that union organization is good for business, we help to promote the union cause among unorganized workers and their employers.

"Let us all use our strength in the marketplace with the same vigor we show at the bargaining table and in the legislative halls. Let's buy union—not only during Union Label Week, but all the time."

"Automation has some disadvantages. I don't even have jobs for my relatives."

A Recurrent Issue:

Campaign for 35-Hour Week Rooted in American History

Organized labor's campaign for a 35-hour week with no cut in earnings is a revival of a recurrent bargaining and legislative issue that has featured the American economy since the Revolution, according to an analysis in the current AFL-CIO American Federationist.

At one time the demand was for a 10-hour day. That won, the cry was for the 8-hour day, the 40-hour week.

In nearly four decades ending in the mid-1930s, the generally prevailing workweek was slashed from 60 hours to 40 hours, a rate of roughly 5 hours a decade, says the article prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research. Now, it continues, "nearly 30 years have passed with no further general reduction in the workweek."

The Dept. of Research analysis makes these points:

- Full-time workweeks shorter than 40 hours are more common than is generally realized, with an estimated 10 to 15 percent of wage and salaried non-agricultural workers affected. Most of them work either 35 or 37.5 hours.
- The opposition of employers to shorter hours is traditional and consistent.

"Their attitudes have not been a guide either to the ecenomic or social desirability or to the practicability of hours reduction," the article declares. "The unqualified opposition typical in the last century and early part of this one has shifted in more recent years, however, to more sophisticated arguments that reduction may be sound—but only at some unspecified future period."

- In the past shorter hours have been won through the two avenues the AL-CIO Executive Council has just voted to utilize—collective bargaining and government action. The role of bargaining is generally recognized; the government has acted through legislation, as with the Wage-Hour Act, by developing cuts in hours in specific areas, as for women and minors, and by encouraging shorter hours as it did during World War I and the depression. In a few specific areas, employers have acted unilaterally.
- Past cuts in the workweek have come for the most part "in spurts and in large amounts rather than gradually." About 15 of the 20 hours cut from the standard workweek this century came over short periods of time, notably during World War I and the early 1930s.
- The timing and amount of reduction have not always been economy-wide, as "broad industry variations have persisted."
- The pattern of reduction also has varied—from hours (10 to 9 to 8) in the early 1900s, through days per week (Saturday, first from a full day to a half-day, then eliminated completely), now back to hours per day (especially to a new standard of 7 hours).

In addition, the analysis points out, in the last 20 years there have been reductions in hours in the form of paid vacations and more holidays. Their present levels average over the work year somewhat less than 2.5 hours a week.

There has been a change in the reasoning behind shorter hours, the article points out. Moves to cut the 10-hour day were based on social factors, with economic factors usually a secondary consideration. The demand for the 5-day week, however, was based on economic reasons, "to help maintain and stimulate employment." The desire for greater job security is similarly behind labor's current demand for a shorter week.

"The relative significance of a cut in weekly hours as against an increase in vacations and holidays as a means of reducing worktime," says the analysis, "can be seen in perspective by a direct comparison: if all present vacation and holiday time were doubled, the increase would not quite equal the reduction in annual work time achieved by a workweek cut from 40 to 37.5 hours.

"Another point to remember is that the historical reduction in the workweek has not been at the expense of additional real income for workers, but rather has developed together with rising real income.

"Occasional arguments of the past that reduction of hours would reduce national output and prevent increases in living standards were not borne out, for continuing advances in productivity have enabled both greater output and improved standards of living."

* Reduction is equal to 1¼ hours a decade if account is taken of paid vacations and holidays.

Funds Supported For Civil Defense

The AFL-CIO has urged the Senate to vote the full amount requested by the Administration for the Office of Emergency Planning and the Defense Dept.'s Office of Civil Defense.

Legislative Rep. George D. Riley, testifying before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, urged restoration of cuts made in both programs by the House.

He warned that "civil defense today is in a stop-and-go, halting, indecisive phase" and further cutbacks could be "the end of the line for the program."

Jobs With Peace Corps Proposed for Retirees

The Peace Corps has reminded retired union members and those approaching retirement that there is no upper age limit for volunteer service with the corps and that in fact, it needs the skill and experience of "senior citizens."

The organization's Office of Public Affairs has issued a bulletin listing requirements for service. Applicants may be any age above 18. General qualifications are a skill needed by the host country, sound health, emotional stability, willingness to work with others, initiative, and a desire to serve.

Married couples are eligible if they both qualify and have no dependent children under 18, according to Dir. Jules Pagano of the professional, technical and labor division of the office.

Among the skills sought are those of foresters, farmers, plumbers, sanitary engineers, tailors, veterinarians, well drillers, carpenters, machinists, masons, auto mechanics, nurses, road builders, building trades instructors, electrical workers, welders, and teachers.

Volunteers may continue to receive the full amount of any pension they may be entitled to, but they will be expected to live overseas on the living allowance provided by the corps.

Length of service is two years, including training. Volunteers receive allowances to cover food, clothing, housing, medical care and incidentals. At the end of their service they get a termination payment of $1,800 at the rate of $75 per month of service.

Intensive training is provided in the U.S. and host countries. Some assignments require foreign language ability, Pagano said, but most corps workers need not know a foreign language before volunteering. Language instruction is included in the training, along with studies in the history and culture of the host country.

Candidates are asked to fill out a Peace Corps Volunteer questionnaire, available from any post office, congressman or senator, or from the Peace Corps, Washington 25, D. C.

The corps reports that no volunteer is required to do any physical conditioning exercise against his will and that older volunteers have the same ratio of success in training as younger ones.

Purple Prose Common in Shorter Workweek Fight

Some of the choicest balderdash in the history of industrial semantics was brewed by the emotional tycoons of another day who found anything less than a 12-hour day and a 6-day week either ungodly or unpatriotic, or both. Some examples cited in the Federationist:

Judge Elbert Gary of U.S. Steel: "The commandment says, 'Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work.' The reason it didn't say seven days is that the seventh day is a day of rest and that's enough."

George L. Markland, chairman, Philadelphia Gear Works: "The work of this country cannot be done in 40 hours a week . . . Any man demanding the 40-hour workweek should be ashamed to claim citizenship in this great country. I see in it a gradual sinking into decay."

Charles R. Sligh, president, Sligh Furniture Co.: "The industries of the U.S. and the vast accumulation of wealth here has not been made through idleness but through industry and, in my opinion, it is a very regrettable fact that one occupying the position that Henry Ford does in the industrial world should for any reason expect to benefit industrial conditions by so much idleness."

[The Sligh who talked about Ford in that fashion was the father of the current Charles R. Sligh, executive vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and he was speaking of the current Henry Ford's grandfather.]

John E. Edgerton, president at the time of the National Association of Manufacturers: "I regard the five-day week as an unworthy ideal. It would be an economic 'faux pas' imposing further penalties upon industry and undermining our social structure."

A. H. Mulliken, president, Pettibone Mulliken Co: "The dangers of the five-day workweek [are that the worker] . . . would abuse the additional time; would waste it in unnecessary pleasures, if not in vicious habits; it would mean a waste of the workman's energy; encourage a disposition to loaf; create a desire for many things that would be not only unnecessary, but burdensome as to purchase and payment and involve men in debt. It would also create among their families a desire for luxuries and to use the additional holiday for display and injurious amusement."

Nixon Slur Against 'Labor Bosses' Becomes California Campaign Issue

as will be provided by groups of company volunteer campaign workers in company offices and industrial plants." Employers were asked to seek one or more employes to form special Nixon committees.

Gov. Brown, in the keynote address to the convention, referred to this so-called "back door" approach, and told the nearly 2,000 delegates representing 1.4 million AFL-CIO members:

"Nixon is afraid to come to you openly and honestly to ask for your support."

And, Brown said, Nixon not only "refuses to acknowledge Earl Warren as a former governor of this state, but he specifically ignores opportunities to defend the present Chief Justice against the slanders of the John Birch Society."

"Nixon pledges himself to reform labor . . . but if there is need for reform it is in Nixon's thinking that labor and management are natural enemies," Brown said.

"Nixon hasn't been told that labor in California, far from being a special interest, operates consistently in the public interest," Brown declared, adding:

"Earl Warren knew it. Former Republican Gov. Goodwin J. Knight (who withdrew from a primary race against Nixon) knew it. And now we will defeat Nixon because we have ideas and ideals and he has nothing to peddle but his own political ambition."

Says Nixon Invited

Pitts said Nixon's attempt to split union members from their elected leaders is a parroting of "the phraseology of every anti-union employer in history."

"The ridiculous charge that 'union political bosses have dropped an iron curtain' around union members is typical of the line taken by all ignorant employers who try to discredit the union's leadership in an effort to breed dissension and distrust," Pitts said.

Most decetiful of all, Pitts added, is the fact that Nixon was invited to state his views before the state Council of Political Education, but, while he now says he cannot get a hearing before organized labor, he did not accept the invitation after receiving both letters and phone calls requesting his appearance.

"In fact, he didn't show us the courtesy of responding at all," Pitts said, adding:

"The union 'bosses' Nixon refers to are the delegates elected by union members to attend this convention. But he is so blinded by his personal ambitions to get into the White House he refuses to recognize the democratic processes of American labor."

The convention approved policy statements and resolutions calling for a "vast expansion" of state government planning for the future, declaring:

"The orientation of government must be toward planning for growth and the assumption of social responsibility for stimulating private enterprise and unlocking human initiative.

"The word 'planning' frequently carries with it distasteful connotations . . . but the kind of planning organized labor supports is not government domination, but the application of reason and intelligence to socio-economic problems which affect all of us with equal force.

"We reject completely the philosophy of government that would confine responsible government to the sidelines and allow rampant speculation to plunder our resources and become the master planner of California's destiny.

"The threat of 'big government' lies not in bigness itself—for government is destined to grow with our exploding population—but the manner in which big government is employed to cope with the problems of our industrial society."

Door to Merger Still Open:

ABC Convention Approves Major Organizing Drive

By Eugene A. Kelly

The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, setting its sights on the organization of every worker in its industry, has voted to expand its organizing program and to continue to work for consolidation of all bakery unions by merger or absorption.

Meeting in convention in Washington, 372 delegates from 117 locals voted a 25-cent monthly per capita increase to finance an expanded organizing campaign, re-elected all top officers, and set up for the first time funds to send two members, or members' children, to college and to extend pension protection to all ABC staff members and local union employes.

The convention—the second since the union's founding—called for the five-day 35-hour workweek, with no night work and no work on Saturdays or Sundays. In so doing it concurred in the recommendation of the AFL-CIO Executive Council for a shorter workweek to spread work opportunities in the face of chronic unemployment.

The union, chartered by the AFL-CIO in 1958 after expulsion of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers on findings of corrupt domination, received the congratulations of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F Schnitzler for its success in providing union democracy and effective representation for some 80,000 of the 130,000 workers in the industry in this country.

Meany said events of the last few years "amply justified the action of the AFL-CIO" in expelling the "corrupt organization" that preceded the ABC and chartering a new union. He offered all possible help to "bring about merger under honorable conditions." without "hitting anyone over the head" to achieve consolidation and without compromising principles of "free and decent" trade unionism.

Warned on Cold War

Meany also discussed steps the AFL-CIO has taken to help keep America strong, and urged the delegates not to become discouraged over the cold war but to strengthen the economy and to keep our defenses so strong that the Soviet Union "dare not open an attack."

Speaking of those who favor cultural exchanges with Russia, Meany said "Let them hold their first meeting, if they want to see Russian culture, at the wall in Berlin" dividing West Germany from the Communist East. "This is communism," he said—"the real thing in all its brutal inhumanity."

Schnitzler told the delegates they were "living proof that when workers take the reins to clean out embezzlement and corruption" they can demonstrate that honesty pays. The real strength of labor, he said, is in the state and local union organizations.

Re-elected without opposition for four-year terms were Pres. Daniel E. Conway, Sec.-Treas. Curtis R. Sims, Executive Vice Pres. John DeConcini and Vice Presidents Archie Goodman, Joseph G. Kane, Amos Miller and Russell B. Prince. Peter Pointak, Baltimore, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of Vice Pres. Stanley Sincavage.

9 Board Members Re-elected

By secret ballot the delegates also re-elected nine present members of the general executive board and one former member, Robert E. Gregory of Richmond, Va., who replaced Anthony Guadagnino of Pittsburgh.

For the election session Conway turned the gavel over to Schnitzler as temporary chairman. Schnitzler was president of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers prior to election as secretary-treasurer of the former AFL and the AFL-CIO.

A vigorous debate at a night session preceded adoption of a resolution increasing the international union's share of membership dues from $1.25 to $1.50 a month, effective next Jan. 1. The money will be used for expanded organizing activities and for strengthening the pension fund and expanding it to cover local union staff members.

The convention authorized the executive board to increase the number of vice presidents, if necessary because of merger or absorption, and took other steps to strengthen the organization against raids on its jurisdiction.

The delegates cheered a message from Pres. Kennedy expressing his "warm feelings" for the union and his awareness of its "courage and cooperation." He said its achievements are an "inspiring example" of the results which flow from honest leadership and said he was "proud of what you are doing." The President, then a senator, was a speaker at the first ABC convention in 1958.

Other convention speakers included Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, National COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept., Pres. Harry Poole of the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept., and Msgr. George G. Higgins of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Wesley Reedy, assistant to Schnitzler, administered the oath of office to the elected officers.

More Protection Asked From Dangerous Drugs

the proposal is seriously defective in failing to deal with this problem.

He suggested that recent new FDA regulations on the distribution of drugs be reviewed by the committee for possible additional needed authority.

Biemiller made these comments on provisions of the Harris bill:

Manufacturing Standards—The proposed broader FDA authority for establishing standards should be strengthened by a provision for licensing drug manufacturing establishments.

Factory Inspection—The FDA authority to inspect should be broad enough to allow adequate inspections, with language specific enough to stand up in court if challenged.

Efficacy Tests — New drugs should be pre-tested for efficacy in addition to meeting existing tests for safety. Over-the-counter drugs as well as prescription drugs should be covered by the law. Also, the FDA should have authority to challenge drugs now on the market for proof of efficacy.

Certification of Antibiotics—The Secretary should have power to require certification of all antibiotics.

Advertising—There should be power to enforce truth in advertising by the drug industry and prevent the "harm done by costly and misleading" advertising. The problem boils down to concealment of dangerous side effects of powerful drugs and exaggerated or unfounded claims for effectiveness of certain drugs, he said.

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, takes the position that doctors should receive copies of drug package inserts along with promotional material mailed to them, and the law should require that doctors be given a full statement of all relevant findings on the properties of new drugs.

He reminded the committee that labor's concern over the Food & Drug Act goes back many years. He cited as a recent example the convention resolution, approved last December, for congressional action to "bring down the high price of prescription drugs, combat misleading advertising by drug companies, and improve the safety and usefulness of drug products."

The federation Executive Council, at its recent meeting, he told the committee, congratulated Dr. Kelsey for withholding approval of the drug thalidomide. He called it a "sad commentary" that present drug laws are "so inadequate that it takes heroism to administer them properly" in behalf of the public.

UAW Aides Complete Common Market Study

Detroit—Twenty-seven officers of Auto Workers' locals and eight international staff members recently returned after a 21-day tour of four European countries devoted to studying the impact of the Common Market on employment in the United States.

They visited the Ford plant in Cologne, Germany; the Volvo auto factory in Gothenberg, Sweden; the Intl. Harvester plant at Croix, France, and the aircraft plant in Weybridge, England, where Vickers-Armstrong builds the Viscount turboprop and a new commercial jet.

In addition, they conferred with Prime Minister Tage Erlander of Sweden and Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin; toured a new planned community development, including a National Health Service clinic, at Harlow New Town in England, and visited labor colleges in all the countries.

In Berlin, where they met UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, they attended sessions of the seventh congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which he was an AFL-CIO delegate. Reuther accompanied them on a tour along the West Berlin side of the wall the Communists built to prevent the escape of East Germans to free West Berlin.

"The primary emphasis, however, was to obtain a first-hand, working acquaintance with the industrial productivity of the countries both in and out of the Common Market," said UAW Education Dir. Carroll M. Hutton, the tour director, "and the need for international fair labor standards as advocated by the Intl. Metalworkers Federation," with which the UAW is affiliated.

Photo-Engravers See New Defense Needs

Chicago—Delegates to the 61st annual convention of the Photo-Engravers Intl. Union have taken up a heavy schedule of issues, including merger with the unaffiliated Lithographers and an increase in the defense fund.

Union Pres. Wilfrid T. Connell told the 116 delegates and 400 visitors that two of the top problems facing the union are finances and the craft's position in the graphic arts industry and the labor movement.

"The cost of organization has gone up," he said.

Lithographers Pres. Kenneth J. Brown received a warm ovation after a plea for merger of the two unions. He said the strengthened organization that would result could lead to further consolidation of graphic arts union.

The convention adopted a resolution instructing the officers to continue talks on the merger. The Lithographers have 37,000 members, the Photo-Engravers 17,000.

Connell warned the delegates that the union can no longer rely on old safeguards "to pull us through" the effects of technological advance in the graphic arts industry.

"There are only a few things we can do ourselves," he said. "We must now work with others on many problems."

Connell said changes in the printing industry "have made a great impact on our thinking."

"Everyone is conscious and disturbed by these changes," he added. "Workers in our industry share the same apprehension as workers in other fields."

He urged the delegates to analyze without emotion the union's position.

The executive council recommended, "in view of increased resistance of employers," that the defense fund be raised to a minimum of $500,000 and maximum of $1 million.

One of the resolutions before the convention calls for a five-day week of 30 hours for day workers and 28 hours for night workers, written into all contracts. Others cover proposed increased local union activity in community services, purchase of stock in the Portland, Ore., Reporter and internal union affairs.

Connell's report to the parley showed that of 111 locals, 109 now have contracts providing a workweek of less than 40 hours. Over 54 percent of the membership works a 35-hour week; 6 percent works 32.5 hours or less.

Elections, held annually by the Photo-Engravers, were scheduled to take place Aug. 25.

The Women's Auxiliary opened its 26th convention Aug. 21. The host Local 5 celebrated its 65th anniversary at a banquet Aug. 23.

Speakers included: William A. Lee of the Chicago AFL-CIO and Mayor Richard J. Daley; Samuel C. Bernstein, assistant Illinois director of labor; Msgr. Daniel M. Cantwell, chaplain of the Catholic Council on Working Life; Pres. Harry F. Sphanholtz of Lithographers Local 4, and Sec. Treas. Henry L. Coco of the Allied Printing Trades Council.

School Ordered To Hire Negro

Harrisburg, Pa.—The Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission in a final order has found that the Connellsville Joint School Board discriminated against Mrs. Jane McPherson because of her race in failing to hire her as a teacher.

The commission ordered the school board to hire Mrs. McPherson, a Negro, as a teacher of English at a salary of not less than $4,000 a year as soon as a vacancy occurs; and to pay her $2,208 for loss of earnings during the academic year just concluded, plus whatever the commission may later determine is necessary to cover additional loss between July 1962 and the time she is hired.

It further directed the board to hire job applicants solely on their merits and without regard to race, creed or color; to advise all persons concerned with operation of the schools that it intends to comply with the State Human Relations Act, and to notify the commission of its compliance within 30 days. The commission is headed by Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO.

To Meet New Needs:

Postal Clerks' Parley Votes Dues Increase

Portland, Ore.—Dues of members of the Postal Clerks will rise from 75 cents to $1 a month on Jan. 1 as the Clerks look forward to increased expenses of collective bargaining and increased benefits to be gained under recent new union-recognition procedures authorized by the Kennedy administration for government workers.

Delegates to the union's national convention here voted the increase by more than a two-thirds majority, on the basis that previous "limited" operations have caused a $250,000 deficit in the past year, and the union must add full time regional vice presidents to carry out its program.

Pres. E. C. Hallbeck, welcoming the convention action, pointed out the union dues will still remain below the level of other AFL-CIO unions of comparable size.

The union expects to negotiate on personnel policies, grievances and other working conditions. Under the new procedures, Congress will retain control over wages and hours.

Richard J. Murphy, Assistant Postmaster General in charge of personnel, told the delegates that Post Office and union officials will meet Sept. 15 to prepare ground rules for initiation of collective bargaining.

"Fortunately," he said, "the Post Office Dept. is 85 percent organized, and we regard this as a great boon."

The Postal Clerks, with 145,000 members, have about 80 percent of those eligible. Collection of union dues during working hours is now illegal, and will be stopped Sept. 15, Murphy pointed out, but the Administration is proposing that Congress enact a dues-check-off bill and "we'll back it to the hilt."

Murphy predicted passage this year of a substantial pay increase for postal employes. He said the only argument is between the 13.9 percent boost asked by the Administration over a three-year period, and the 13.4 percent asked by the union in two years. This is the first time a President has initiated a pay increase for postal employes, Murphy said, all such measures previously having come from Congress.

Postmaster General J. Edward Day revealed to the convention that the Department has approved a uniform for window clerks, a "Peking blue" jacket and maroon tie, with white shirt. Women clerks will have a blue fitted jacket with blue or white blouse. The size of the annual uniform allowance is subject to collective bargaining.

Frederick C. Belen, Assistant Postmaster General in charge of operations, pledged that "no policy of real consequence affecting you has been or will be placed into operation until and unless you have had a full opportunity to express your opinion regarding it."

Delegates audibly disagreed with Belen's statement that the Department's work-measurement system is helpful to workers as well as management.

Variety Artists Move To New N. Y. Office

New York—Offices of the Variety Artists have been moved to 551 Fifth Avenue, at E. 45th Street. The new telephone number is TN 7-5600.

'Work' Forces Threaten Union Security Backers

The National Right-to-Work Committee is threatening "reprisals" against congressional candidates seeking amendment or repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, which allows states to ban union shop agreements in labor-management contracts.

The committee's action was denounced by the National Council for Industrial Peace, headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and former U.S. Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, as "obstruction of national labor-management policy."

John M. Redding, director of NCIP, charged that the Right-to-Work Committee, "some of whose top members are openly allied with the John Birch Society," is "seeking by their loaded poll of Congress to influence federal legislation" but that the group has not "registered under the law regulating federal lobbying."

Redding declared that "this same group disdains state law as well," that a year ago "they failed to register as lobbyists under Maine's lobbying registration act although they were openly and flagrantly trying to influence the legislature to enact a so-called 'right-to-work' law." The legislature decisively rejected the proposed bill.

The Right-to-Work Committee has launched a campaign to determine the position of all congressional candidates on Sec. 14b of Taft-Hartley and has strongly urged support of candidates who favor retaining the section.

The section permits the states to preempt the position of the federal law on union security provisions in contracts.

The NCIP statement declared:

"Although the so-called Right-to-Work Committee declares in many of its statements that it does no lobbying, it now openly threatens every incumbent congressman with attack if he should believe that Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act should be amended or repealed."

PAYMENT OF $500 death benefit to Mrs. Alice Davis of Everett, Wash., brought to $10 million the amount the Building Service Employes has paid to members' families since 1942. Shown left to right are Sec.-Treas. Archie Carmichael of BSEIU Local 120; Mrs. Davis, widow of Ira N. Davis, and her son Ray, also a member of Local 120. The union's death gratuity system pays out $700,000 a year to aid members' families and to encourage the prompt payment of union dues. Members pay no premiums.

Teachers Union Re-elects Megel, Aims to Extend Bargaining Rights

Detroit—The Federation of Teachers, meeting in convention here, has re-elected Pres. Carl J. Megel to carry on the union's goals of expanding membership and winning collective bargaining rights for the nation's teachers.

Megel won a new two-year term as the candidate of the AFT's National Caucus, holding a 1034-to-554 margin over Myron Lieberman, candidate of the convention's Progressive Caucus. Lieberman is a member of University of Illinois Local 1055.

Megel has held the presidency for the past 10 years. He is a veteran classroom teacher with more than 25 years in Teachers' Union activities. Prior to his election in 1952 Megel was vice-president of Chicago Teachers Local 1.

The convention also elected or re-elected 16 vice presidents. They included nine running on the Megel slate, six supporters of the Lieberman caucus and one independent, John M. Fewkes, of Chicago Local 1, former AFT president and vice-president.

Other vice presidents are:

Edward A. Irwin, Sophie Jaffee, James O'Meara, Dorothy Matheny, Richard Parrish, A. James Heller, Charles W. Miller, Mary Wheeler, Rose Claffey, Ray A. Howe, William Snedecor, Betty Finnernan, Mary C. White, H. Johann Eschbach, and Frank Sullivan.

Re-elected incumbents were Irwin, Miller, Jaffee, Heller, Matheny, Claffey and Wheeler.

Bargaining Seen Urgent

In his presidential address Megel said collective bargaining will do the job that can't be accomplished by the so-called "professional negotiations" proposed by the National Education Association.

Megel predicted that collective bargaining rights for teachers, recently won in New York City, will "sweep the nation."

He defended the right of teachers to strike, pointing out that the AFT "has long maintained that collective bargaining is the avenue by which teachers can resolve their grievances and circumvent the need of a strike."

"The American labor movement has long maintained that the strike is an inherent right of all workers. I subscribe fully and completely to this declaration." Megel stressed the "soundness of our affiliation with the AFL-CIO" and pledged to maintain that affiliation.

A key resolution adopted by the convention endorsed as the union's goal "the winning of collective bargaining rights for teachers in the various school districts of the nation."

State Action Asked

The resolution called for passage of legislation in the various states "to establish procedures for such collective bargaining elections for public employes including teachers."

Other resolutions adopted by the convention call for:

- Creation of a separate U. S. Dept. of Education with cabinet status.
- Support of legislation providing medical care for the aged through social security.
- Immediate adoption by Congress of a federal aid to education program.
- Approval of AFT proposal of reciprocal agreements with other AFL-CIO unions so that individual members may transfer without initiation fee.
- Raising the status of teachers as professionals by transferring non-teaching burdens to clerical, custodial and other personnel.
- Increased faculty participation in school programming.
- Stepped-up activities aimed at organizing AFT locals among university and college faculties.

Other convention speakers backed the goal of collective bargaining for teachers.

'Fake Professionalism' Hit

Dr. Henry Herrmann, professor of humanities at Wayne State University, blasted what he called the "fake professionalism" of teachers who follow the NEA in shrinking from union identification.

"Let's get rid of the pseudo-professionalism in our thinking," he said. "I would rather that the 'prestige' professional emulate the teacher than have the teachers imitate the professions."

Edward A. Irwin, AFT vice president from Los Angeles, called collective bargaining the answer to the constant friction between teachers and their school boards.

'Hunger' Drive Backed:

Council Urges Action On Trade Expansion

Additional safety measures, including wider inspection, greater enforcement powers and removal of unsafe drugs from the market are needed, the council said, along with price reform. The Senate Judiciary Committee completely stripped out of the Kefauver drug bill the patent amendment provisions which are the key to price reform, the statement stressed, and the bill offered in the House is silent on the issue.

"We strongly urge the prompt adoption of adequate measures not only to ensure the safety and efficacy of drugs but also to bring down the high price," the council said.

On Latin America, the council declared that the military takeover in Peru and the continuing intervention of the military in Argentina are serious blows to representative democracy.

It noted that protests to the Peruvian military junta had brought some reforms and guarantees of traditional freedom but warned that there is a full-blown Communist attempt to capture the democratic Peruvian labor movement The council pledged assistance in every way possible to the Peruvian Confederation of Labor.

The AFL-CIO leaders called upon affiliates to give all possible support to the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, pointing out that it is the instrument of U.S. participation in the worldwide Freedom from Hunger campaign of the United Nations Food & Agriculture Organization, and that it relies entirely on voluntary support and contributions.

In other actions the council:

- Approved a report by a subcommittee of Vice Presidents Peter T. Schoemann and William C. Doherty that a resolution adopted at the 1961 convention of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. was null and void and "did irreparable damage" to certain AFL-CIO unions. The Label Dept. resolution had declared that "the only legitimate label on printed matter, circulars and periodicals . . . is the Allied Printing Trades Council union label."

The Papermakers & Paperworkers and the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers protested and the subcommittee after a hearing declared "that it be the sense of this Executive Council that all union labels displayed by organizations affiliated with the AFL-CIO be fully recognized."

- Said it would "join enthusiastically" in the celebrations next year marking the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Dept. of Labor and urged all affiliates to join in honoring the agency.
- Offered its warm congratulations and best wishes to the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training on its 25th anniversary.

HOW IT'S DONE IN ASIA was explained by trade union educators visiting this country as Intl. Labor Organization fellows, who met U.S. counterparts in AFL-CIO headquarters. Speaking is Sushil Ranjan Bhattacharya of the Asian Trade Union College in Calcutta, India, sponsored by the Intl.. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Seated from left are: Ronald A. Watts of the Newspaper Guild; AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin; Education Dir. Nandia Duraiappa of the Malayan Trades Union Congress, and Jacqueline Kienzle, Richard Deverall and Otto Pragan of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Benefit Renewal Asked For 400,000 Jobless

The Kennedy Administration has called on the House Ways & Means Committee for quick action to aid the estimated 400,000 persons who will exhaust unemployment compensation benefits by the end of the year.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the committee "the essential point is that we provide immediately a temporary program for those workers whose unemployment benefits have run out and who cannot find jobs." He urged that the temporary program be of "sufficient duration" so that the next session of Congress will give "adequate consideration" to "permanent improvement in our unemployment compensation system."

Pres. Kennedy, in his recent television address on the state of the economy, had emphasized the need for temporary jobless aid for the 100,000 men "who want to work and can't find a job, who every month exhaust their unemployment benefits."

Goldberg told the committee that since the temporary program adopted in 1961 expired in April of this year almost 600,000 workers have used up their state benefits. He noted that long-term unemployment has been on the rise since 1958 and in July 1962 almost one million workers had been unemployed 15 weeks or longer.

Labor Day Broadcasts Set for AFL-CIO Officers

Officials of the AFL-CIO will mark Labor Day with a series of broadcasts on radio and television.

Following is the radio schedule for Monday, Sept. 3:

Pres. George Meany, CBS, 7:45 PM (EDT)
Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, ABC, 7:15 PM (EDT)
Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, NBC, 8:05 PM (EDT)
Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Mutual, 9:15 PM (EDT)

Meany will also appear on the ABC television and radio network program, "Issues and Answers," on Sunday, Sept. 2. It is scheduled for 4-4:30 PM (EDT) on television and 8:30-8:55 PM (EDT) on radio. An updated version of "Land of Promise," produced by the AFL-CIO, will be broadcast by television stations in a number of cities during the Labor Day weekend. In it Meany outlines labor's achievements during the past year and its goals for the year ahead. The narrator is Ralph Bellamy, distinguished actor and president of Actor's Equity.

The radio networks say their affiliates frequently tape the broadcasts and run them later. In each city listeners should check their local station listings.

Zelenko Accused of 'Prejudging' ILGWU as Investigation Opens exchange stricken from the record.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has branded the Zelenko investigation a "political vendetta." Pres. George Meany pointed out in a news conference that "some of the subcommittee members" did not receive a political endorsement from New York's Liberal Party, with which the ILGWU has close ties.

The subcommittee investigation was recently announced by House Labor Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., (D-N. Y.). The New York Post commented that Powell had turned the inquiry over to Zelenko and departed so that "if the investigation backfires Zelenko will be left holding the bag."

Dubinsky Scheduled

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky was scheduled as a witness Aug. 24.

The early hearings were punctuated by a series of events in which subcommittee members repeatedly checked Zelenko's actions.

- When the chairman made accusations involving contract terms for Local 60-60A, covering shipping clerks and packers, he read out-of-context sentences to make it appear that workers could be shifted into higher classifications without higher pay.

Subcommittee members James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and John H. Dent (D-Pa.) backed up Zimmerman's protest at the distortion by omission, and Zelenko finally read an additional contract sentence showing the truth was the opposite of what the chairman had charged.

- Zelenko's first "bombshell" charge—an allegation that Dress Industry Impartial Chairman Harry Uviller had received a personal loan of $3,500 from the ILGWU —turned into a dud involving a clerical error.

Two easily available government reports listed the transaction as what it was—a loan to the Liberal Party, of which Uviller is treasurer, with the check having been endorsed and immediately deposited by the Liberal Party.

- Zelenko attempted to tie together the fact that Local 60 is composed of white pressers with the further fact that Local 60A has never had a separate charter. Roosevelt drily commented that if Local 60A were made to take a separate charter it would establish "the opposite of desegregation." The Local 60A branch was in fact underwritten financially by Local 60 in the first successful attempt to organize its members.
- Questions to ILGWU Vice Pres. Moe Falikman, manager of Cutters Local 10, went into election procedures, the manner in which a worker becomes a cutter, the ethnic composition of the ILGWU executive board and similar matters, including the fact that ILGWU officers submit signed resignations after election.

Subcommittee member Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.), went out of his way to praise the election procedures of Local 60-60A as backed up by the series of notices of nominations and elections submitted for the record.

Three witnesses—two Spanish-speaking and one Negro—charged that they had been blocked from membership in Local 10. ILGWU spokesmen noted that dates were vague and names not pinpointed.

The testimony of Hill, who is also labor secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was held out of the record by motion of Roosevelt pending its editing.

The 14-page full text was distributed to the press before it was submitted to the subcommittee, and when Zelenko announced he himself had not seen the statement, Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R-Pa.), bluntly responded, "Well, you should have."

Griffin also questioned the appropriateness of the Hill testimony and the witness was interrupted after his first sentence by subcommittee members. Whole portions were sliced out later as loaded with emotional diatribes and charges unsupported by facts.

Toward the end, Hill himself skipped parts of his document.

No Tennessee Winner; Fulton, Loser Run Again

Nashville—The 5th Congressional District absentee voting scandal here has resulted in refusal of the State Democratic Primary Board to certify incumbent Rep. J. Carlton Loser as party nominee. The board noted "serious charges" of fraud in the tally.

Loser, who was "counted in" to a disputed 72-vote victory over Richard H. Fulton by the tally of challenged absentee ballots in this city's 2nd Ward, at the last minute asked the board to withhold certification in view of the "cloud" cast on the election results.

Fulton and Loser were invited by the Primary Board to run against each other again in the November general election, with neither certified as the party's nominee.

The fraud-tainted primary here took on national significance because Fulton had campaigned as a supporter of Pres. Kennedy's domestic program, including the health-care proposal that Loser opposed. Labor gave Fulton active backing.

Fulton carried the district in the primary by a 143-vote margin on the basis of official returns, including voting machines and absentee ballots from all wards but the 2nd, thus apparently knocking Loser out of his congressional seat.

In the 2nd Ward, dominated by a city councilman named Eugene ("Little Evil") Jacobs, challenged absentee ballots turned Fulton's plurality into a 72-vote deficit, with Loser promptly claiming victory.

The Nashville Tennessean gathered and printed affidavits from workhouse inmates and other persons who swore they had neither applied for, marked nor returned as required by law the ballots tallied in Jacobs' 2nd Ward in their names.

Justice Dept. Investigates

In Washington a high-ranking Justice Dept. spokesman said charges of irregularities and fraud were "actively" under investigation.

Fulton carried Jacobs' home ward on voting machines by a 619-590 margin, but the disputed absentee ballots went overwhelmingly for Loser—223 to 17. Both the disproportionately large number of absentee ballots purportedly applied for and the disparity in the results were considered by observers here prima facie evidence of irregularities.

Mrs. Charles Houk, wife of the Tennessee State AFL-CIO treasurer and a member of the 5th District Primary Board, filed a minority report protesting the tally of the challenged ballots.

Stepped-up Public Works Program Passed by House

W. WILLARD WIRTZ
Named Secretary of Labor

ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
Named to U.S. Supreme Court

Appointments Hailed:

It's Justice Goldberg, Labor Sec. Wirtz

Arthur J. Goldberg, a leading labor lawyer for 25 years, seemed assured of speedy Senate action to change his title from Secretary of Labor to "Mr. Justice Goldberg."

Quick approval was expected also of Pres. Kennedy's nomination of W. Willard Wirtz, undersecretary of labor, to succeed Goldberg in the cabinet post.

Goldberg's nomination to be an associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court by Pres. Kennedy drew wide and bipartisan approval in the Senate and from public figures and the nation's press.

Kennedy named Goldberg, who has served in the cabinet since Jan. 20, 1961, to succeed Justice Felix Frankfurter, who retired from the court after 23 years of service at age 79 because of ill health. Goldberg, 54, had served the labor movement as an attorney for many years before accepting a post with the Kennedy Administration, including duty as general counsel to the former CIO and special counsel to the AFL-CIO.

Wirtz, who has served in the Kennedy Administration since its beginning, was named less than 24 hours after the President announced the Goldberg appointment to the high court. The present 50-year-old undersecretary of labor had been a public member of important national wage and labor policy groups, an arbitrator and a law professor before joining the government as Goldberg's top aide.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the federation was "extremely pleased with the President's choice of Arthur Goldberg," and called the elevation of Wirtz to the secretaryship "a fine appointment."

Meany praised Goldberg as a "capable, able and dedicated public servant" during his term as secretary of labor.

"This is a good appointment," he

House Unit Coalition Beats TUC

A labor-backed bill to revive the federal temporary unemployment compensation program — tagged with a "must" label by Pres. Kennedy—was rejected by a coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats in the House Ways & Means Committee in a sharp setback for the Administration.

The narrow margin of defeat, 13-12, kept alive the possibility that the committee might reconsider its action—a hope expressed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who termed the bill "highly important."

The bill before the committee would have provided additional benefits, up to 13 weeks, for an estimated 850,000 unemployed who have exhausted their state unemployment benefits or who are expected to use up their state compensation during the next six months. The TUC program enacted last year expired Apr. 1, and the last benefits were paid July 1.

Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) and 10 other Democrats supported the Administration

Bill Would Put 150,000 In New Jobs

By David L. Perlman

A stepped-up public works program, aimed at creating 150,000 new jobs in areas of heavy unemployment, has won House approval in a major Administration victory. A similar bill has already passed the Senate.

The labor-backed Clark-Blatnik bill was one of the high-priority measures Pres. Kennedy had called on Congress to enact before adjournment. The House version would authorize $900 million for both federal projects and for matching grants to cities and states, with one-third earmarked to help depressed rural areas. The Senate bill calls for $750 million in immediate spending, with an equal amount authorized on a stand-by basis if unemployment increases.

In the only record vote in the House, 202 Democrats were joined by 19 Republicans in voting against sending the bill back to committee. Voting to kill it through recommittal were 148 Republicans and 44 Democrats.

The GOP defections, including nine Pennsylvania congressmen, came in the face of a closed-door Republican conference decision to oppose the bill as a party issue. The GOP had denounced it as a "political boondoggle" designed to help Democrats get elected in November.

AFL-CIO Urged Passage

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller had written all members of Congress that the bill carried labor's "top priority" and was needed "to attack continued high unemployment and to build

Meany Lashes 'Money Arrogance':

Ex-Sec. Humphrey Hit on Nickel Deal

Former Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey should be recalled by a Senate investigating subcommittee to explain "windfall profits" by his companies under a government stockpiling program, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

In a signed editorial in the September issue of the American Federationist, AFL-CIO monthly magazine, Meany accused Humphrey of "big money arrogance" before the subcommittee headed by Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.).

The investigation involved a nickel-stockpiling contract signed with an M. A. Hanna Co. subsidiary just four days before the Eisenhower Administration took office, the federation president pointed out, but was attacked by Humphrey as "a stab in the back" at the former President.

Humphrey was a top official of the Hanna company and head of its mining subsidiary before becoming Secretary of the Treasury. He retained his company stock during his government serv-

Kennedy Hails Labor On Holiday

Pres. Kennedy called on the nation to observe Labor Day by resolving "to do better" and "achieve more" to provide jobs, health care, schools, housing and equal rights for all Americans.

The President praised the "solid tradition of achievement" of the nation's "free and strong" trade unions, and spoke of scientific progress capable "of creating a general abundance unprecedented in human history." But he emphasized his concern about:

- "The 4 million who do not have jobs, and especially about the 100,000 persons who exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits each month without finding work."
- The "prohibitive" cost of medical care for "our elderly population living on limited incomes."
- Cities "darkened with the blight of slums, threatened with traffic congestion, and endangered with paralyzing social problems."
- "The distance we still must travel" in eliminating racial discrimination.

As union members in cities throughout the nation prepared

New R-T-W Attack on Labor Bared

All unions should be on guard against a new assault on the trade union movement by "the viciously anti-labor National Right to Work Committee," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has warned affiliates.

In a letter to national unions and state and local central bodies, Meany said the attack was in the form of an "alleged poll" which he charged was deliberately framed to elicit answers hostile to labor. In particular, he said, it purports to

Negro Medical Group Endorses Health Care Under Social Security

Chicago—The National Medical Association, spokesman for the majority of the nation's Negro physicians, has become the first professional organization of doctors to endorse health care for the aged under social security.

In a sharp split with the American Medical Association—to which most of its members also belong—the organization's 67th convention here voted 106-71 to support the principle of social security financing of health care.

At its last previous convention, the NMA had joined the AMA in support of the 1960 Kerr-Mills Act providing limited federal grants for state programs of medical care for the needy.

This year, however, the convention declared that "having carefully re-examined the relevant facts pertaining to medical care for the elderly," it concluded that legislation providing health care under social security "is the best of the plans proposed."

The resolution had the strong backing of the NMA's new president, Dr. John A. Kenney, Jr. It was sponsored by one of the organization's most respected teachers of medicine, Dr. W. Montague Cobb, professor of anatomy at Howard University and editor of the Journal of the NMA.

In a comment on the action, Dr. Kenneth W. Clement of Cleveland, NMA president-elect, gave these reasons for the association's support of the social security prin-

Rises to 105.5:

Cost of Living Index At New High in July

By Robert B. Cooney

The cost of living index rose in July to a record high of 105.5, the Labor Dept. has announced, although the increase over June was only two-tenths of 1 percent.

July take-home pay and the purchasing power of factory workers fell off, according to a companion report, because of a reduced workweek and the higher cost of living.

The July CPI of 105.5 means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the base period of 1957-59 now costs $10.55.

The July reading was 1.1 percent higher than a year ago, the report said, with most of the increase since January.

The main push behind the July rise was attributed to higher average prices for key food items such as pork, fresh milk and eggs and increases for services, including medical care, movies, haircuts and beauty parlors.

The increase was moderated by lower average prices for such private transportation items as gasoline and new cars, the report added.

The report said the July CPI will bring a 1 cent an hour pay hike to these groups: some 780,000 workers in the auto and auto parts industries; 75,000 in the farm equipment industry and 65,000 in aerospace. Some 30,000 in a variety of metalworking firms also will get raises.

An additional 15,000 workers employed by trucking firms will receive 3-cent pay increases on the basis of annual or semi-annual reviews, the report said.

The July report on net spendable earnings of factory production workers said take-home pay —gross earnings minus federal income tax and social security reductions — averaged $85.53 a week for a worker with three dependents and $77.86 for a worker without dependents. This represented a fall-off of 58 cents —less than 1 percent—from the June figure. Take-home pay remained more than 3 percent above July 1961, the report added.

In terms of purchasing power—take-home pay reduced by the rise in the cost of living—the factory worker with three dependents had real earnings of $81.07 a week; the worker without dependents, $73.80. The fall-off from June was 71 cents for the former, 68 cents for the latter. Purchasing power was just over 2 percent higher than a year earlier, the report said.

Auto Workers Get Improvement Hike

Detroit — The Auto Workers have estimated that almost 500,000 UAW members will gain "annual improvement factor" wage increases of 6 to 9 cents an hour effective Sept. 3 under the terms of contracts negotiated last fall.

The contracts provide that the hourly pay of workers at Ford, General Motors, Chrysler and other plants shall rise annually by 2.5 percent of the worker's base hourly rate or 6 cents, whichever is greater. Several hundred thousand additional members in supplier plants will receive similar increases later in September.

The UAW said the improvement factor has hiked wages a total of 77 cents an hour since 1948.

ice and is currently honorary chairman of the firm.

Meany noted that the government's General Accounting Office reported the Hanna subsidiary made a quick $10 million net profit on the nickel-stockpiling deal "at absolutely no risk of loss" and with a company investment of only $3.5 million.

The GAO, he said, also found that the company received a $17.9 million "windfall" on purchase of a government-financed smelter "and picked up an additional $1 million by charging off as operating expenses what were actually capital investment items."

Meany pointed out that Humphrey's response to these disclosures was to refer to the GAO reports as "bunk" and "baloney" and to tell the senators they were "confused."

Reminiscent of Past

He also dismissed the nickel-and-smelter deals "disdainfully" as involving a mere "tag end of our business" as compared with the total assets of the Hanna company and displayed a "big money arrogance reminiscent of two generations ago," the editorial charged.

Humphrey's reaction to the probe "was to wrap the name of Eisehower around him like a comfort-and-security blanket and complain that the committee was engaged in a vendetta," Meany declared.

Calling on the Senate to continue its investigation and recall Humphrey to the stand, Meany said "the former Secretary of the Treasury ought to be reminded that only a coward would seek to hide behind the Eisenhower image as he has done to date."

"If a legal conflict of interest was not involved in this deal, certainly a moral conflict of interest was," Meany stated.

"George M. Humphrey's two days before the Symington subcommittee exposed much of what was wrong with the role he played —a very powerful if not dominant role—during his years in the Eisenhower Administration.

"The Humphrey regime in the Treasury was marked by tax slashes for corporations and the affluent, while high-level unemployment became chronic and government investment for the general welfare was repressed."

CAB Backs Pilots on StruckAirline

The Civil Aeronautics Board has told Southern Airways that it cannot give "super-seniority" to strike-breaking pilots it hired at the expense of longtime employes.

The struck airline had been ordered by the CAB to bargain with the Air Line Pilots and to offer reinstatement to all striking pilots who had not been "replaced" before July 12, 1960, when agreement was reached on economic issues but not on return of the strikers.

Southern told the CAB it wanted to put ALPA members lower on the seniority list than "replacements" it had hired between June 5, 1960, when the strike started, and the July 12 date.

The CAB agreed with the union that all strikers reinstated on settlement of the dispute "are entitled to their respective places on the seniority list, ahead of all the replacement pilots retained by Southern."

It's Justice Goldberg, Sec. of Labor Wirtz

added, "and in my opinion, Arthur Goldberg fully deserves this honor."

Declaring he has known Wirtz for many years, Meany said he is "admirably qualified to be the secretary of labor. He has the experience, background and understanding that are necessary in this difficult role."

In naming Goldberg, the President termed him "superbly qualified" as a successor to Frankfurter. Leaders of both parties on Capitol Hill expressed satisfaction with the choice.

Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) predicted prompt confirmation and Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) said he had no doubt that Goldberg would be confirmed before Congress adjourns.

Goldberg, in Chicago attempting to mediate a railroad dispute at the time of the President's announcement, said in a statement that "I cannot fill the place of as eminent a jurist as Mr. Justice Frankfurter."

"I shall do my best, however, to carry on his and the court's great tradition of supporting and defending the Constitution," he added.

Wirtz served as a public member and general counsel of the National War Labor Board from 1943 to 1945 and as chairman of the National Wage Stabilization Board in 1946. He has arbitrated industrial dispute cases in the steel, electrical, chemical, rubber and farm equipment industries. From 1946 to 1954 he served as professor of law at Northwestern University. He is a former Chicago law partner of Adlai Stevenson.

Kennedy's appointment of Goldberg came on his second opportunity to name a new justice. Earlier this year he named Byron R. White to the seat vacated by Justice Charles E. Whittaker. Frankfurter had been appointed to the bench by former Pres. Roosevelt.

Goldberg's appointment may provide the critical vote in a number of cases where the court has been split 5 to 4 in recent years, with Frankfurter generally voting with the conservative side. On the basis of briefs filed with the court during his days as an attorney and his general social and economic views, Goldberg is expected to line up with the liberal group on the bench.

100th Job Project Approved by ARA

The Area Redevelopment Administration has announced its 100th financial assistance project to help bring new jobs into areas of chronic, heavy unemployment.

A $285,840 loan to Arnold Graphic Industries, Franklin, Pa., is expected to provide 250 new jobs in the community, Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges said. He reported that ARA's first 100 projects, involving $38 million in loans and grants, will result in 35,000 new jobs. The federal investment includes $28.4 million in interest-bearing loans.

Argentine Government To Punish Anti-Semites

The Argentine national government has assumed the responsibility of punishing those responsible for "shameful" outbursts of anti-Semitism, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been advised by the Argentine ambassador to the United States, Roberto T. Alemann.

The assurance was given in reply to a letter Meany wrote urging Argentina to take "the most vigorous steps" to block the spread of anti-Semitism, which he called "far more than isolated criminal incidents" by "Nazis who fled to the Argentine."

Alemann wrote that he fully shared the AFL-CIO's concern over the outbursts and pointed out that his government had repudiated them. He quoted a statement in which Minister of the Interior Carlos Adrogue noted that "the difficult moments the Republic is going through are becoming worse by the tension that has been created by groups of anti-democrats, heirs of Nazism, in one of its most degrading manifestations: anti-Semitism."

In an appeal for order, the minister warned that "excesses" would be punished. He cited the "fruitful and arduous efforts" of Jewish citizens of Argentina which, he declared, "emphasize the thoughtlessness of these attacks that harm our country and present a gravely distorted image to the world."

"As Minister of the Interior," he continued, "I want to inform all the inhabitants of our country . . . that the national government assumes the responsibility of punishing these shameful actions and I assure you that the federal police and the forces of law and order have acted and will act out of conviction and out of duty in carrying out said purposes."

The government also is cracking down, the minister concluded, "to prevent the Communists from taking advantage of these disturbances for their destructive ends."

Alemann reminded Meany that in the Western Hemisphere, Argentina is second only to the United States in proportion of Jews in its population.

"There is no discrimination against them with regard to holding high office, carrying out activities of all kinds, joining social, political groups, etc.," he added, "and exercising all their rights as citizens just like those who believe in any religious faith.

"I am forwarding your letter to the Foreign Ministry in Buenos Aires and I would appreciate your sending me any complaints you receive on this matter as I shall be happy to cooperate with you in clearing up the problem."

In thanking the ambassador for "such a complete answer to the questions I raised," Meany said the AFL-CIO will continue, as it has in the past, "to watch with sympathetic interest the determination of the people of Argentina to retain democratic freedoms in a society based on social justice."

At Congressional Hearing:

Dubinsky Cites ILG Record, Lashes 'Insinuation' of Bias

New York—David Dubinsky, president of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union, spread on the record an eloquent and detailed rebuttal of charges of bias and corruption leveled against the union in a three and one-half hour appearance here before a congressional subcommittee.

He lashed out sharply at "insinuations, implications and news leaks by committee staff members that affect the union's prestige and good name and, therefore, the welfare of its members," and drew assurances from subcommittee members that neither he nor the ILGWU was being accused of anything.

Dubinsky appeared before the House Labor subcommittee, headed by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), which is investigating charges of discrimination and corruption in the garment union, in a federal courtroom here with some 30 Negro and Spanish-speaking ILGWU officers in the audience prepared to testify on their rise from the shop to officer rank.

His appearance came a week after ILGWU Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman accused Zelenko of having prejudged the issues in a television comment before the hearings on alleged "patterns of discrimination."

'Political Vendetta' Charged

The AFL-CIO Executive Council earlier branded the Zelenko investigation a "political vendetta," and Federation Pres. George Meany pointed out in a news conference that "some of the subcommittee members" did not receive a political endorsement from New York's Liberal Party, with which the ILGWU has close ties.

Dubinsky dealt with all the issues raised at earlier sessions, producing facts and figures, backgrounding the trade union philosophy involved, citing the history of the ILGWU and his own personal involvement. The highlights of his presentation included:

- It was ironic and wrong that of all the unions in the country, the ILGWU should be singled out for attack.
- The ILGWU has fought labor racketeers for years inside the union and within the labor movement as a whole. The ILGWU, he said, was largely responsible for changing labor's earlier hands-off policy on racketeering.
- The ILGWU does not discriminate against Negroes and Puerto Ricans as charged by several earlier witnesses. In fact, he said, the union seeks them out as leaders, adding: "Our members eat together, meet together, dance together, celebrate together and fight together."
- Assailed a statement by Herbert Hill, labor secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and a paid staff member of the subcommittee. The statement was made available to the press by Hill before he testified. Soon after he started reading it, subcommittee members objected, and the committee decided to have the statement stripped of offensive material before it was placed in the record. Dubinsky called the Hill statement "untruthful, irresponsible, a gross exaggeration, unfair, imaginative and done in the spirit of revenge."
- Employers are basically the "exploiters," said Dubinsky. "They will chisel anyone. Chiselers have no race discrimination. They're for equality."

Dubinsky conceded that a point made by the subcommittee about a "blank check" resignation clause in the union's constitution should be amended to guarantee the right of appeal to officers asked to resign, and promised to investigate fully the situation in Local 102, a group of garment truck drivers, in light of charges that the local had engaged in a "sweetheart" agreement with a shipping firm.

Randolph Defends ILGWU in Probe

Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, head of the American Negro Labor Council, has written ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky disassociating himself and the council from the House Labor subcommittee investigation.

Randolph specifically repudiated a circular put out under the name of the council accusing the ILGWU of anti-Negro and anti-Puerto Rican bias.

His letter noted the "long, progressive history of the ILGWU, a notable symbol of social, free democratic trade unionism under your distinguished leadership," and added that the council is opposed "to any witch-hunt against a bona fide labor union such as the ILGWU."

Meany Warns Unions Of New 'Work' Attack

show that most Americans are opposed to the union shop.

The principal question in the "poll" on which 1,413 persons were "interviewed," Meany said, was as follows:

"No American should be forced against his will to join a church, union or political organization."

The wonder is, Meany said, that such a statement did not yield 100 percent agreement, instead of the 93 percent claimed by the promoters.

"It goes without saying that a Presbyterian, Methodist or Baptist would not agree that he should be forced to become a Catholic and that a member of the Jewish faith would not agree he should be forced to become a Protestant, Catholic or member of the Moslem religion," Meany commented. "Wars have been fought and new nations founded on such a fundamental issue.

"Likewise the answer is a foregone conclusion when a Democrat is asked whether he believes it would be right to force him to become a Republican.

"To equate membership in a trade union with a man's religious and/or political beliefs, to inject this question into the same sentence and to surround the whole with an imputation of force, is not only dishonest but malicious as well."

Meany contrasted the "poll" findings with the demonstrable results of the 1958 elections, when so-called "right-to-work" proposals were on the ballot in six states. In only one of these contests, Kansas, did the anti-labor side prevail, by a narrow margin, he recalled; in the rest the proposals were overwhelmingly rejected.

"Since 1958, not a single state has enacted such a law despite the fact that such laws have been introduced by the 'right-to-work' mercenaries and propagandists at almost every session of every legislature," Meany continued.

However, he warned, the "poll" is already being used by Sen. Barry M. Goldwater (R., Ariz.) and others to arouse new anti-union sentiment.

"You can expect this poll . . . will appear in your area in the near future," Meany said. "These paid propagandists, who have used 42 percent of the funds they raise from the American business community just to raise more funds, plan to make wide use of this new propaganda device.

"Therefore, I urge you to be on your guard. When this stacked poll is used in your area, demand the right to be heard so that the public will learn the truth about this issue. Remember, the American people believe in fair play and when they know the facts they will turn their backs on those who use lies for political purposes."

Oil-Chemical Industry Union-Busting Charged

Denver—An oil-and-chemical industry drive to break down contract provisions on job security has forced some 7,500 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers on strike against three companies.

The strikes, at least one of which has lasted more than four months, involve Oil Workers and other union members in a dozen plants from Pennsylvania to Louisiana to the Rocky Mountain states, a union announcement declared.

The issues vary from plant to plant and often appear highly complicated, the Oil Workers said, but in general involve company efforts to weaken or eliminate long-established contract clauses affecting seniority, grievance procedures, job assignments and other guarantees of security for individual workers.

Mobil Oil Co. employes are on strike at Casper, Wyo.; Trenton and Detroit, Mich.; East Chicago, Ind.; East St. Louis, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo.

Shell workers are striking the company's big refinery and chemical plant at Pasadena, Tex., and workers of other unions have walked out at Shell plants at Norso, La., and Wood River, Ill.

Strike in Colorado

About 1,200 workers are on strike at American Metals-Climax Molybdenum at Climax, Colo.

Six hundred Koppers Co. workers have been on strike for more than four months at Kobuta, Pa.

In an angry blast at the companies, Oil Workers Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer charged that workers are being treated as "no longer important."

"Some years ago these corporations took pride in the fact that layoffs were practically unheard of," he said. "They were proud of the fact that they took care of their people. But now they push men with long records of service out of the plants."

Schafer said one company negotiator told him that "we are going to move men around just as we see fit, and you can bargain for them on the rates of pay."

'Loaded' With Supervisors

But the plants now are laying off men and are loaded with supervisors, he charged.

In a telegram to Mobil management, Schafer told company Vice Pres. Paul Wollstadt that the firm "appears engaged in a union-busting campaign" bordering on violation of the National Labor Relations Act, which requires companies to bargain with the unions of their employes. He told Wollstadt that the inconsistency of local plant managers makes resolution of the deadlocks in bargaining virtually impossible.

Wollstadt replied that local managers "are bargaining and will continue to bargain on all bargainable issues," but failed to identify what he considered bargainable issues, Schafer said.

The union has been able to hammer out a satisfactory settlement at only one Mobil plant—at Ferndale, Wash.—in local negotiations.

Union Vice Pres. E. D. Swisher reported that the Koppers Co. has made no real effort to bargain at the struck Kobuta plant.

Intl. Rep. Wesley Vanover, who with Swisher has been assisting the local union in negotiations with Climax Molybdenum, said no end of that strike is in sight.

The company is trying to almost completely rewrite the contract to remove vital protections, he charged. These include reductions in the protections of the seniority system, job bidding procedures and grievance plans.

Michigan Plan OK'd On Worker Training

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has authorized the state of Michigan to train or retrain unemployed workers under the new Manpower Development & Training Act—the first state to qualify for a statewide plan under the terms of the law.

Goldberg signed an authorization for 11 training projects covering nine occupations. Total costs and allowances for a first group of 299 persons will be $421,183 for projects in these areas:

Detroit, automatic screw machine setup men, transmission and differential repairmen and general auto body repairmen, 40 trainees each; Battle Creek, nurse's aides, 36; Alma, nurse's aides, 30; Lansing, general machine operators, 25; Muskegon, general machine operators and woodworking machine operators, 20 each; Jackson, auto mechanics, 18; Grand Rapids, inert gas welders, 15; Kalamazoo, auto painters, 15.

Those present at a signing ceremony in the Labor Dept. were Dir. Seymour L. Wolfbein of the department's office of manpower, automation and training, Gov. John B. Swainson (D), and Senators Patrick V. McNamara (D) and Philip A. Hart (D).

Under the legislation passed by Congress and signed by Pres. Kennedy last March, unemployed heads of households were given first claim on $435 million in federal retraining funds and matching state funds. The act was designed to equip a million jobless workers with new skills in a three-year program.

The law provides that if a worker is qualified for retraining in a skill for which there is a job demand, he will be eligible for up to a year of on-the-job training, or subsistence payments.

Metal Trades To Represent 11,000 in N.Y.

New York—The Brooklyn Metal Trades Council has won official exclusive bargaining representation for the approximately 11,000 New York Naval Shipyard employes in the unit for which it petitioned. Locals of 19 international unions of the AFL-CIO were involved in the petition.

The Brooklyn yard is the first naval installation to grant the exclusive representation rights made possible under Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition. Recognition was spelled out in a letter to Grover C. Carlsen, council president, from Rear Adm. E. C. Holtzworth, commander of the yard.

Holtzworth's decision was based on authorization cards signed by employes on a voluntary basis without necessity of an election.

Industrial Fatalities Show Drop in Canada

Ottawa, Ont. — Fatal industrial accidents in Canada showed a sharp drop to 174 in the first quarter compared with 250 in the first three months of 1961, according to a preliminary report by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

WAYS OF USING FILMS in worker education programs are being discussed above by AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. George T. Guernsey (seated) with some of the delegates to the desegregated summer school sponsored by the Florida AFL-CIO. The school was held in a Sarasota hotel bought by the Chicago White Sox to assure unsegregated facilities for all its players during spring training.

Parades, Picnics and Speeches Carry On Labor Day Tradition

for rallies, parades and other traditional Labor Day events, AFL-CIO leaders and affiliated unions and departments set the tone for labor's holiday observance in a series of statements keyed to the coming elections. (See texts on pages 8 and 9.)

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany referred to Labor Day as marking "the beginning of a national political campaign" and warned:

"We cannot very well complain about the kind of Congress we have unless we help to choose our congressmen and senators."

Meany termed the record of the second session of Congress thus far "one of inaction or defeat" for measures "essential" to the nation's progress. The responsibility, he said, lies with "a reactionary coalition" which "made a mockery of the numerical majority held by the President's party."

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler charged that the nation has been "too close to standing still for too long a time."

The labor movement, he said, is "determined to make improvements in this country, to get moving again; and we are determined to do it soon."

Both the federation's Industrial Union Dept. and the Building & Construction Trades Dept. emphasized labor's determination to "get out the vote" in the November elections.

BCTD Pres. C. J. Haggerty called on the department's affiliated councils to make voter registration "the first order of business" until the registration books are closed.

The IUD statement declared that "the 1962 congressional elections can be won in our industrial cities and towns if we turn out the vote."

Labor Day will be observed across the nation at events ranging from the World Fair at Seattle, where Meany will speak, to the Michigan State Fair, on the outskirts of Detroit, where Gov. John B. Swainson (D) and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther were to address a mammoth rally sponsored by the Wayne County AFL-CIO. It will be preceded by a parade to the fairgrounds by thousands of union members.

All four national radio networks will carry special Labor Day addresses by AFL-CIO officials on Sept. 3. Meany will be heard over the CBS network at 7:45 p. m.; Schnitzler at 9:15 p. m. over the Mutual network; Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne at 8:05 p. m. over NBC stations, and Vice Pres. George M. Harrison will speak at 7:15 p. m. over the ABC network. All times are eastern daylight, and schedules may vary in some cities. Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who had been scheduled for a radio speech, was forced to cancel his appearance because of the pressure of aerospace negotiations.

Traditional picnics and parades will be held in scores of communities, special masses and other church services have been scheduled in a number of cities, and statements and proclamations have been issued by governors, mayors and other public officials.

Labor Day marks the start of Union Label Week, with its emphasis on the importance of looking for the union label, shop card and service button. It also marks the culmination of a safety campaign sparked by the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions to "Make Labor Day a Safe Holiday."

Negro Medical Group Votes Medicare Backing

ciple and its sharp break with the AMA on the issue:

"The majority of delegates," he wrote, "believed that the Kerr-Mills bill had been a colossal failure" and provided no adequate protection for Negroes "in those states which traditionally discriminate against Negroes."

Furthermore, Clement said, "the House of Delegates of the National Medical Association believed that all aged Americans should find adequate access to health care, without being demeaned by a 'pauper's oath' and other indignities."

Taking issue with the AMA's current political drive to elect "conservative candidates for all offices on the grounds that they would oppose the Kennedy medicare bill," Clement said this posed "a real threat to the Negroes' quest for equality." Many AMA-supported candidates, he noted, have opposed civil rights and equal opportunity legislation.

The NMA's split with the AMA paralleled the position taken by the American Nurses' Association, which earlier this year reaffirmed its support of social security health care despite reported pressure from the AMA to back down.

A nationwide committee of other physicians, many from university medical schools, has also been actively supporting social security health care and challenging AMA's attacks on the bill.

Labor in U.S. Hailed By Morse on Holiday

Geneva—The rising tide of newly independent countries has brought new strength to the Intl. Labor Organization as well as new responsibilities, Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse said here in a Labor Day message.

Extending ILO greetings to union members on U.S. labor's annual holiday, Morse said his staff is confident that it will be helped in the future, as in the past, by the "thoughtful support" of American labor.

Eras of change are never easy for the participants, he said in expressing appreciation for a U.S. labor movement which calls on its members to "exercise their responsibilities at home and abroad."

Goldberg on Labor Day:

'Fruitful' Economy Based on Freedom

The economic rights that American workers enjoy stand in "strong contrast" to the "controlled labor movements, controlled labor markets and the forced labor practices" of the Communist world, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said in a Labor Day statement.

But, he cautioned, "We must do more."

The fruitful economy we enjoy, he noted, is "conducted by free decision and conditioned by free institutions." Citing the right to a "good job," the right to organize into free and democratic trade unions, the right to engage in free collective bargaining to assure economic justice, he said he believes the American achievement of individual freedom with general prosperity is "the dominant force in modern history."

He warned, however, that satisfaction with U.S. progress must be "tempered by an awareness that the economy still is short of its full potential" and Americans must ask themselves not how well they have been doing, but how they can achieve full employment and full capacity production.

It is important, he related, that the United States maintain "an economy that seeks constantly to fulfill its potential" because the hopes of other peoples in the world for freedom depend upon this nation's "capacity to grow and develop."

In the long view, ours continues to be a successful society, he went on, with continuing progress in the achievement of better education, human rights and scientific discovery, but he listed shortcomings including idleness, discrimination and "uncompleted educations," though some progress is being made.

Seven hundred communities have benefited from area redevelopment, thousands of persons are being retrained, and thousands more will benefit from the new Manpower Training & Development Act, he said.

Labor Day Salute Given by McNamara

Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara has issued a Labor Day salute to the working men and women of America expressing confidence that labor will continue to make its full contribution, as an "essential part of the team," to the nation's defense.

Referring to the "indispensable part" labor plays in providing supplies and weapons, many of "unparalleled complexity," to the defense of our country and its allies, McNamara said:

"The teamwork that has met and overcome the challenges of the past must continue . . . with even greater efforts" to meet the challenges ahead to U.S. security.

"But we must do more," said Goldberg, noting Congress has before it a "battery of full employment measures" including what he termed the vitally important Youth Employment Opportunities Act. Beyond these measures, he said, every American can help realize these goals:

- An efficient economy offering good jobs to all able to work.
- A sound currency and a competitive posture assuring the success of American products in any market.
- A labor-management relationship based on responsibility and understanding.
- A free union movement living up, in every segment, to its traditions of responsibility, democracy and integrity.
- Genuine equality in education and employment.
- Adequate medical care for the aged, soundly financed and not dependent on an "ignominious statement of poverty."

Much to Be Done, Meany Declares In New 'Land of Promise' Interview

Organized labor is proud of the role it has played in American progress and is determined to work for the "much that remains to be done," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a new interview on the AFL-CIO sponsored film, Land of Promise.

The movie, which has won wide acclaim since its original production in 1960, has been brought up to date with Ralph Bellamy, distinguished actor and president of Actors' Equity, as narrator. Showings were scheduled by TV stations in 45 major cities over the Labor Day weekend.

Meany expressed labor's pride in its record in reply to an observation by Bellamy that "labor has come a long way since Samuel Gompers, hasn't it?"

He explained that the AFL-CIO is committed to the proposition that "what is good for America is good for the labor movement."

"That's how we want to move ahead—all of us moving together toward a better way of life," he said. "We can't be satisfied with things as they are."

Then he spelled out in some detail the reasons why America must work for continued improvements:

"Here, in the richest country on earth, we still have an intolerable unemployment problem. We have not learned how to handle our material resources, our productive genius, in a way that will provide useful jobs for all. And we must.

"We have the highest wage scales in the world; yet millions of workers are still not protected by any minimum wage law. Many Americans are paid less than they need to exist.

"We have a social security system, providing pensions for most workers. But we still haven't faced up to the fact that severe illness can—and does—destroy the security that these pensions are supposed to provide. Our older citizens must have protection against that threat.

"On the surface, we have won our fight for free public education. But look below the surface—and you find bad schools, crowded classrooms, not enough teachers—and poor pay for those we have.

"We still have racial segregation and discrimination despite the inspired rulings of the Supreme Court. These evils must be stamped out—in the schools, in housing, on the job and in the unions—everywhere in America."

The country has had a "new movement forward," in the last two years, Meany noted, but "it has not gone fast enough or far enough." It must do better, he went on if "full opportunity" is to be offered the job seekers of both today and tomorrow.

"And it's not just a matter of our own people," Meany continued. "The United States, by the sure process of historical development, has become the leader of the free world. We must fulfill that obligation.

"We cannot content ourselves with looking back at old accomplishments. We must constantly work for something better.

"I know we can do it. Here in America we have the resources—human as well as material. We have the know-how. We have the hands, the hands of workers, united as Americans, working to build a brighter, better and richer future for all."

In Far-Off Places:

U. S. Labor Helps Steer World to Freedom

New Nations In Ferment Require Aid

By Alexander Uhl

WHEN AMERICA celebrated its first Labor Day in 1882, the leading figures in the American labor movement were immigrants who had come to the United States as the land of hope and promise.

Peter McGuire, who proposed observance of the day, was an Irishman, Samuel Gompers, an English Jew. The ancestors of John L. Lewis were Welsh. The parents of Eugene V. Debs were Alsatians. And there were hundreds of others.

They had come from far-off places to make their way in a free and young country. They brought with them the background of European workers who had pioneered in the building of unions against great adversity. They found in America a land of unequalled opportunity and they made great use of that opportunity in lifting the level of workers to a standard of life that has become the envy of workers everywhere.

Today the sons and grandsons of those pioneers are spreading, in their turn, the message of a free labor movement throughout the world, but above all to the underdeveloped and emerging young nations which are now groping their way into the 20th century.

Ghana and the Congo. Tanganyika and the Cameroons. Asia, Africa, Latin America. All over the world are millions of workers who know little of democracy and even less of unionism. Men and women who are torn between the call for freedom as we know it and the authoritarian state that communism seeks to set upon them.

Many Factors Involved

Who will win them? Freedom or communism?

The answer will depend upon many factors. But not the least will be the success of the free world labor movement in teaching, training, convincing, helping the workers of the new nations to build their own free unions in defiance of Communist efforts to "brainwash" them.

Among the leaders of this great effort in behalf of freedom has been the AFL-CIO. With the other free labor movements of the world, it faces an immense task.

EIGHTY YEARS AGO, on Sept. 5, 1882, the first Labor Day parade went down—not up—Fifth Avenue in New York. This old woodcut appeared in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

Latin America, of course, is our biggest challenge. Here are millions of workers in countries which are part of our Western Hemisphere and which suddenly have become the center of great social ferment. The Cuban revolution under Fidel Castro, who has turned his back on us to embrace Communist dictatorship, is a bitter challenge to every American.

It has now become vital that not only must the Communist invasion of our hemisphere be turned back in Cuba but that other Latin American nations be "made safe for democracy." Pres. Kennedy has recognized this in launching his Alliance for Progress based on land and tax reform.

No one has spoken more clearly than he on the necessity for social and economic improvement if Latin America is to avoid being sucked into political chaos.

In this task, the role of American labor is crucial. The AFL-CIO has recognized this and has created the American Institute for Free Labor Development, whose purpose is to strengthen unions and other free institutions in Latin America.

Within recent years the entire continent of Africa has come out of the colonial stage and is now throbbing with new life and ambitions. Where once there were only a handful of independent nations in Africa there are now more than 32.

Once raw materials-producing countries in the colonial economic pattern, they want to jump overnight, if possible, into the modern industrial age. Yet their people and even their small educated classes are far from experienced in the problems and needs of 20th century industrialism or even of the responsibilities of freedom. They are, above all, naive and inexperienced in their relations with the Communist world which is seeking to propagandize them and push them into the Communist orbit.

Already communism has penetrated such areas as the Congo, where Communist supporters such as Gizenga and the late Patrice Lumumba have sought to take power. A Communist take-over in newly emerging and strategic Africa would be disastrous for the free world.

A half-century ago we looked upon Africa as a strange and romantic area fit mostly for elephant and lion hunting. That is true no longer. A Communist-dominated Africa with its millions of people would represent a tremendous setback for freedom.

Here again the AFL-CIO and other segments of American labor are working to help guide the people of this newly awakened continent into the path of free labor. Hundreds of young African workers have come to the United States under American labor auspices and are being trained in leadership and trade union history and methods. At stake is the future of an entire continent.

Much the same is true in portions of Asia which also are emerging from colonialism and are groping their way toward a free life of their own. Here the Communist pressure is perhaps greatest of all because of proximity of the Soviet land mass to the continent itself.

ICFTU College Backed

India, Pakistan, Viet Nam, Korea—these countries, too, have need of and seek education and training in the ways of free trade unionism. One of the most important roles that American labor has played in this training is in support of the Asian Trade Union College in Calcutta, operated by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions of which the AFL-CIO is a part.

Thus, literally, half the world today is in ferment, seeking a better life for its people. The way in which it turns will be of immense importance to every American. The United States government, under Pres. Kennedy, has recognized this. So have the leaders of organized labor, who are keenly aware of the dangers of Communist subversion and are determined to stop it.

A great deal has been accomplished already, but the task is a huge one and much remains to be done.

We've Come a Long Way, But—

1961's Basic Problems Are Still Unsolved

By Harry Conn

TRADE UNIONISTS this Labor Day 1962 will march proudly in parades with colorful banners unfurled, relax at picnics and listen to speeches. Labor Day for others will be, simply, a day of rest—a holiday, a vacation, time to spend with the family.

For all Americans Labor Day is the long weekend, the ending of summer and the opening of a new season. But the holiday is also a brief pause in the never-ending and demanding endeavors of our daily lives—a time to reflect on the past, present and the future. How far have we come?

The many Labor Day speeches, the greetings from prominent Americans in our labor papers tell us. They recall the back-breaking hours of endless toil, the brutality of working conditions, shameful exploitation, education for only the wealthy few—with limited but significant exceptions, these things are no more.

What of the present? The future?

First, what has happened to the workingman since Labor Day 1961?

Basically, the problems that were with us then remain: unemployment continues high; automation makes more inroads into jobs; the American economy moves ahead but at a sluggish pace; the drives to weaken and undermine effective unionism are thriving; roadblocks to union organization remain; progress in Washington is thwarted by a conservative coalition, and the international situation, while perhaps removed from the critical list, remains serious.

A year ago, the first session of the 87th Congress was steaming to an early post-Labor Day adjournment with these measures left unpassed: federal aid to education, medical care for the aged, "truth in lending," jobless retraining, teeth in the law for disclosures of pension and welfare plans, standards for migratory workers, civil rights, closing of tax loopholes, a cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs.

Of these, the second session has passed only two—jobless retraining and pension and welfare plan disclosures.

Among the measures defeated outright were the urban affairs department, civil rights legislation and a farm bill. Some of the other measures haven't gotten to first base, while others are caught in the congressional labyrinth.

Little Change in Year

The economic picture one year ago was not unlike the situation today.

Unemployment was 6.9 percent, higher than today. The Kennedy Administration was expressing concern over the jobless picture. Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, in announcing the August figures just after last Labor Day, spoke hopefully of impending improvements in the economic situation but stressed that the Administration was seriously concerned with the lack of progress in solving the unemployment problem.

Under prodding of reporters who wanted to know what the Administration would do should there be no improvement by 1962, Goldberg said the Administration was hopeful that the steps it and Congress had taken would begin to show effect soon. But, he added, if improvement was not sufficient by January 1962, the President would support a program of federal loans and grants for public works on a state and local level.

Goldberg and the Administration have followed through on this promise but Congress has been less than responsive to the total need. Under the prodding of Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), the Senate did pass a public works bill which provides for $750 million this year for public works and an additional $750 million next year. The total is relatively small but nevertheless it is a start. The House has not acted.

Other steps have been taken by the Administration to help spur economic growth. The Area Redevelopment Administration, strongly urged by labor, has initiated projects in areas of labor surplus which will mean more than 80,000 jobs, but the chain reaction which these new industries are expected to start could mean many more.

Organized labor has been in the forefront of a demand for a tax cut—largely in the lower economic brackets—to provide essential purchasing power to get the economy moving. Other groups have been taking up the call for tax action this year and the President has decided to wait until early 1963.

Gains Scored

On the labor-management front there were new gains for the Auto Workers not too long after last Labor Day. The gains were pronounced non-inflationary by the Secretary of Labor. In 1962, a contract between Big Steel and the Steelworkers was worked out long before the expiration of the old agreement and this also was recognized as "non-inflationary."

It was after the latter contract that one of the biggest explosions was set off. Big Steel announced that it was raising the price of steel $6 per ton. Pres. Kennedy, using all the legal resources at his command, forced the big firms to back down in an unusual test of strength. Big business has never forgiven Kennedy for this action but the labor movement applauded the strong stand by the President.

One of the most encouraging single episodes on the labor-management front was the Kohler plumbing firm's finally running out of legal procedures, which forced management to resume negotiations with the Auto Workers. The dispute started in 1954 and has been one of the most bitter and widely publicized in modern labor history.

Organized labor has watched with some satisfaction the actions of the National Labor Relations Board, which has reversed many of the one-sided decisions of the old Eisenhower-appointed board. In many areas workers are getting a little better break before the NLRB.

One of the many key rulings by the Supreme Court during the year, one of the most significant was in the so-called Tennessee case. This has established a broad movement forcing state legislatures to reapportion legislative districts to give the urban voter a "fair share" vote. The impact of this ruling is expected to reach all the way to the Congress since state legislatures carve out congressional districts.

Labor Day 1962

IN 1898, SAMUEL GOMPERS defined Labor Day as marking "a new epoch in the annals of human history." The holiday, he wrote in an editorial in the American Federationist, "is devoted to no man living or dead; to no sect, sex, race or nation. It is founded upon the highest principles of humanity, is as broad in its scope as the universe."

In the 64 years since Gompers wrote, there has been a tendency to overlay the holiday dedicated to America's workers with seasonal significance—the end of the summer vacation period, the reopening of schools, the beginning of political campaigns.

Over the years the messages and speeches of public leaders and government officials have dealt more and more with the state of the economy and in passing, almost, with the problems and achievements of American workers and their trade unions.

Free trade unions in America are an integral part of the nation. Without them the decent living standards and the dignity and freedom of American workers could not have been attained. Yet, at best, trade unions are but grudgingly accepted by American business and industry. In many instances and areas of the country they are bitterly and brutally opposed.

Since the end of World War II there has been an almost unrelenting attack on unions and unionism in the form of a continuing stream of proposals for repressive and punitive legislation. A persistent propaganda permeates the nation's mass media creating a false and distorted portrait of the organizations formed by American workers collectively to advance their economic well-being and that of the nation.

And while the attacks on the nation's free trade unions continue from those who fear labor's goal of social justice for all Americans, others bemoan the "stagnation" of the trade union movement, wail over its so-called loss of "idealism" and yearn for a "militancy" associated with the years when depression-ridden, unorganized workers moved in massive numbers toward trade unionism.

ORGANIZED LABOR has never yielded its vanguard position in the battle for progress. In Congress, in the state legislatures, in the cities, it is the people's lobby, the only organized group speaking for the interests of all the people, seeking to advance broad social and economic programs that benefit all Americans.

The economic gains labor has won at the bargaining table have become the benchmark for wage and benefit patterns throughout American business and industry.

It is because the trade union movement is in the vanguard of the never-ending battle for freedom and social justice that it is under constant attack from those who cling to the power stemming from narrow self-interest, from those who place their personal gain above that of the nation.

The complex needs the nation faces in the 1960s — full employment, broad social insurance programs, protection and extension of civil rights and civil liberties, the fight to preserve peace and freedom from the Communist onslaught—are areas in which the labor movement has provided the programs and leadership looking toward solutions.

The task on this Labor Day 1962 is to rally the nation to these programs, to reaffirm this holiday as dedicated, in Gompers' words, to the "highest principles of humanity"—the goal of social and economic justice for labor, the working people of America.

In Labor Day Messages:

Religious Leaders Emphasize Common Responsibility for Jobs

POVERTY IS "ethically intolerable" and is no longer necessary, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. said in a Labor Sunday message in which it called on the American community for an all-out effort to abolish grave need at home and abroad.

"This is the opportunity and responsibility God has put into our hands," the council said. "We dare not refuse or postpone our response."

It noted that the church and the labor movement, "no less than government, industry and agriculture," share a responsibility "for the underprivileged, the 'least of these' whom Christ regards as brethren." Many efforts to "alleviate, prevent and cure" poverty have been made, it continued, but the problem persists.

"We must explore such approaches as more adequate social insurance to meet the exigencies of illness, unemployment, and old age; more nearly universal coverage of workers by minimum wage laws; intensified programs of vocational guidance, training and retraining for young people and workers affected by technological change; achievement of full production with jobs for all who want them; a more satisfactory rate of economic growth; improvement of management and distribution practices; improved allocation and management of our resources through national and regional planning both public and private; re-examination of the meaning of work, leisure, and property; and a readiness to adjust our patterns of life and thought to human needs in an age of automation and abundance."

THE COOPERATION of all levels of the economy on another front—"a common effort to prevent the spiritual erosion which will inevitably ensue from increased unemployment and the creation of economic wastelands" if automation is uncontrolled—was urged by the Synagogue Council of America.

The council is the coordinating committee of Orthodox, Conservative and Reform Jews in the U.S. and is headed by Rabbi Julius Mark.

"No one will gainsay that automation is necessary for the continued economic growth of the United States, essential to continued progress in science and vital to the defense of our nation," its Labor Day message said.

"But it cannot be allowed to proliferate at the expense of human lives. Automation will indeed be a mixed blessing if it creates a reservoir of hard-core unemployed; if it renders every younger man 'too old' to work, if it dislocates whole cities. . . .

"The utilization of collective bargaining can be an effective tool in the orderly development of automation and technological progress and should be used as such. Collective bargaining has become an inviolate right of labor, not to be used as an indiscriminate weapon for industrial warfare but as a necessary method of protecting its basic needs. It must, however, recognize the basic needs of both sides—employers and workers alike—and must respond as well to the overriding common interest."

The council declared that observance of "this sacred day of labor" would be incomplete without recognition of the "continued deprivation" suffered by millions of workers because of "the color of their skin, their racial origin or the country from which they came."

A HOPE THAT labor and management will analyze the basic guidelines "of a sound wage-price-profit policy" laid down by Pope John XXIII in his recent encyclical, Christianity and Social Progress, was expressed in the Labor Day statement of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, of which Msgr. George G. Higgins is director.

"We further hope that, in doing so, they will give special attention to the problem of providing employment to the greatest number of workers and eliminating some of the grosser inequities in the distribution of national income," the statement said.

"It is little short of a national scandal that in this, the most productive and most affluent society in the history of the world, the rate of unemployment is still dangerously high and that extreme poverty is still the lot of such a large percentage of our citizens."

The economic progress of the past will continue and grow, the department asserted, "given a minimum of good sense and public spirit" on the part of labor, management and government.

"But the spirit of Labor Day," it continued, "with its traditional emphasis on the dignity and worth of the individual human being, should serve to remind us that economic progress is not an end in itself; that, in the words of Pope John's encyclical, it 'must be accompanied by a corresponding social progress so that all classes of citizens can participate in the increased productivity.'

"Now is the time for labor and management in the United States to face up to this challenge with renewed vigor and determination."

Morgan Says:

Does Talking to Reds Do Good Or Is It Just a Waste of Time?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

SOME OF OUR FRIENDS abroad allege that the United States is not giving effective leadership to the Western Alliance because the government is deflected by a desire to lead the neutrals and the underdeveloped new nations into the western camp.

Morgan

The argument runs that this involves a lot of wasted effort on hopeless assignments like the endless disarmament and nuclear test ban conferences. According to this reasoning, we Americans are too preoccupied with our "world image" and instead of courting the good will of the uncommitted nations with exercises of dubious propaganda value (i. e., disarmament conclaves), we should tell the Soviet government, politely but firmly, that we are not interested in talking about Berlin, arms control or anything else until some Communist willingness to compromise appears.

In short, what these friendly critics are saying is that the only realistic statesman in the western camp today is France's Charles de Gaulle. The general has been maintaining for a long time that East-West conversations have produced nothing but concessions from our side, that our willingness to talk has led us to make accommodations that we wouldn't have had to make if we had avoided the conferences in the first place.

What, for example, is there to talk about on Berlin except the fact that the Soviets have broken the four-power occupation treaty by sealing off the city with the wall? What, for example, is there to talk about on disarmament or a test ban treaty while the Russians continue to reject the fundamental principle of on-site inspection? Isn't our position eroded a little more every time we enter these sessions as long as the Russians continue their intransigence?

Since December 1945, the first winter after the end of World War II, there have been no less than 71 international organization conferences on disarmament. Out of countless hundreds of individual sessions no agreement has emerged.

Now in Geneva the U.S. and the Soviet Union are blaming each other for the failure to reach an accord to cease the testing of nuclear weapons. Do we let this dreary merry-go-round continue to revolve ad infinitum or do we halt it with the candid admission that it is fooling nobody and getting nowhere?

SOME OF THOSE who are wary of what we might call the de Gaulle theory fear that if we limit the talking between East and West we invite the threat of fighting. However, if there is one thing Kremlinologists agree on it is the conviction that Khrushchev & Co. do not want war.

Is the de Gaulle posture of cool aloofness the right one or is the more flexible London-Washington line of conferring with Moscow and probing for the little openings more likely to pay off? The hindsight of history may tell but it is highly difficult to judge in the middle of events. Actually there would seem to be points of value in both approaches.

The glacial detachment of de Gaulle should be a helpful reminder that the Communists don't negotiate in any western sense of the term. They put a twist of their own on the "when-did-you-stop-beating-your-wife?" technique. They do something outrageous—such as pitching Berlin into crisis by violating a quadripartite agreement—and then draw us into a conference where we find ourselves confronted with demands for concessions if they cease doing what they had no right to do in the first place.

On the other hand it does not automatically follow that by talking with them we show softness. For example, the suggested reduction of inspection posts made by the chief U.S. negotiator, Arthur Dean, at Geneva recently was not a bundle of "concessions" as New York Gov. Rockefeller and other Republicans so hastily and cynically charged, but simply a recognition that scientific advances in detection methods made a reduction possible without damaging the effectiveness of the proposed test ban pact.

What we need to keep most clearly in mind at this juncture is that the crucial arena in our clashes with Soviet power is not Asia or Africa or Latin America but Europe. These other continents are trouble spots demanding a good deal of our attention but the first priority of importance must be given Europe.

As he has done after previous space spectaculars, Khrushchev may try to capitalize politically on the new prestige the twin triumphs of Nikolayev and Popovich have given him. But what can be more impressive to him in return than the exploits of the cosmonauts are the economic power of the Common Market and the political potential of a North Atlantic alliance working in concert? Would that all the western allies, including the U.S.A., recognized that as vividly as he does.

Washington Reports:

Goldberg Forecasts Congress Will Set 'Creditable Record'

BEFORE THIS SESSION of Congress concludes, "we will have a very creditable record of performance," Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg declared in a special Labor Day weekend program for Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"The public works bill will put many hundreds of thousands of Americans to work," Goldberg asserted. "The Youth Employment Opportunities bill will give our young people great opportunities. The President's foreign trade bill will open new areas for foreign trade. For every billion dollar increase in exports, there will be 150,000 more jobs."

The Secretary said that although unemployment has decreased within the last 18 months [since the Kennedy Administration took office], "it has not declined enough." He pointed out that the rate of joblessness had reached nearly 7 percent in the 1960-61 recession, and was 5.3 percent when measured for July 1962. Of special concern, he said, is "creeping unemployment."

EXPERIENCE WITH the Area Redevelopment Act has shown, Goldberg asserted, that "an older worker who has some type of working experience and some type of skill is readily adaptable to retraining."

"The concept that you have to be a youngster to be trained doesn't hold up," he said.

Goldberg expressed confidence that Congress, when it reconsiders the Manpower Retraining Act in later years, will include benefits to enable a retrained jobless man to move himself and his family to another area to get a job. The proposal for transportation payments was stricken from the act this year.

The Secretary of Labor advised young people to remain in school as long as they can.

"We have almost 1 million young people who are out of school and out of work," he said. "They constitute a little more than 20 percent of our total unemployed population. They should know that young people who drop out of school before they finish grade school have less chance for work at good wages than those who finish grade school; those who quit school before they finish high school have much less chance than those who are graduated, and those who drop out before they finish college have less chance than college graduates.

"Today the future belongs to the educated, whether vocational or non-vocational."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ONLY REGRET arising from Arthur J. Goldberg's elevation to the Supreme Court is that his departure from Pres. Kennedy's Cabinet will remove an adviser of unusual talents whose counsel on a wide variety of issues has always been informed, always effectively stated, always infused with wisdom and a strong sense of humane compassion.

It is an understatement to say that the new justice-designate, who served a long career as legal adviser to labor unions and often a union negotiator, earned the respect of the business community as well. He was trusted because his inherent integrity was recognized on both sides of the bargaining table and because of the acumen with which he demonstrated that apparently wide cleavages of viewpoint could be patiently narrowed until they became negotiable.

It was his good fortune, in all posts he has filled, to see no basic conflict between the public interest and the reasonable demands of the citizens of a democracy for equity.

WHEN THE SENATE LABOR COMMITTEE held hearings on his nomination as Secretary of Labor, he could say quite honestly that he would enforce the laws—including some laws that impinge stringently on unions—with complete honesty, but that he also intended to apply them with common sense and reasonableness. He told the senators that he considered it intolerable that the new industrial revolution automation has brought upon us should be marked by the kind of callous human waste and suffering imposed by the first industrial revolution.

More than this, Mr. Goldberg's talents as a courtroom lawyer in the appellate field earned the respect of the justices who will now be his associates and brethren. His losing legal battle against former Pres. Eisenhower's use of a Taft-Hartley injunction against the striking Steelworkers in 1959 brought open admiration from members of the bench who nevertheless felt regretfully compelled to uphold the President.

In the Labor Dept. he served what he believed was the public interest—and nothing less. No one who knows him can doubt that on the Supreme Court he will serve the law and the constitution and the public interest—and nothing less.

THE CAREER of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, whose place on the court Mr. Goldberg will fill, is one of the strangest in the long history of the bench.

Feared by the business community as a "radical" when he was nominated by former Pres. Roosevelt, he quickly became the intellectual leader of the conservative wing.

Early in his service he wrote the majority opinion in a decision upholding a Pennsylvania requirement that the children of members of Jehovah's Witnesses could legally be compelled to begin each school day with a recitation of the salute to the American flag. The vote was 8 to 1, with only the late Chief Justice Harlan Stone dissenting, but the passage of only a few years brought an outright reversal. Stone's dissent was so persuasive that newly-appointed members of the court overrode Justice Frankfurter to vindicate the American principle that freedom of conscience is a precious and constitutionally protected right.

One of the last cases in which Justice Frankfurter participated was the Tennessee legislative reapportionment decision—and once again he was the loser. His lifelong principle was that legislative bodies must be given freedom by the courts to pass laws either wise or unwise, and he wrote that a judicial attempt to force state legislatures to adjust their election districts to population shifts was to enter a "political thicket." The majority felt otherwise.

Nevertheless he is powerful in forensics, learned in the law, a man of passion and a judge and teacher of profound influence. He was the second of Franklin D. Roosevelt's nominees for the bench. Of the high court that Roosevelt remade, the residuary legatees are Justices Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas.

CONTINUED HIGH EMPLOYMENT is a matter of major concern to labor, management and government, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg (right) asserted in a Labor Day weekend interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. He was interviewed by Harry Flannery, AFL-CIO radio coordinator.

Meany on Labor Day:

November in September: Register and Vote

TRADITIONALLY, we in the labor movement greet Labor Day with a feeling of justifiable pride. It is our own holiday, and it stands as a monument to remind us of how far we have come since it was first celebrated. It also stands as a challenge to remind us of how much remains to be done.

However, this year there are more immediate questions to discuss; for once again, Labor Day marks the beginning of a national political campaign.

It is true that this is not a presidential year. But the decision that will be made in November will have as much significance as the presidency itself.

Consider the record of the 87th Congress, which is now winding up its term.

During its first year, in 1961, the Congress turned in a constructive performance. It caught up on many items of unfinished business—legislative proposals that had been discussed for a number of years, that were obviously necessary, but which had been blocked by the previous Administration.

We won a substantial improvement in the wage-hour law. We finally gained an area redevelopment program. A meaningful housing bill was enacted. The social security system was strengthened.

But when it came to a real breakthrough—the new forward movement our country needs, and which the Kennedy Administration urged—there was a different story. Although many new steps were clearly called for, as a logical follow-up to the earlier ones, Congress called a halt. The spirit of progress that was evident in the first session was missing in the second.

No comprehensive action was taken on the continuing plague of unemployment. An extension of the social security system, to help insure our retired citizens against the costs of hospital care, was bottled up in the House and defeated in the Senate. On a whole range of other vital questions—federal aid to education, sensible revision of the farm problem, civil rights and many others—no broad, meaningful legislation has come from Capitol Hill.

THE RECORD IN 1962 to date is one of inaction or defeat for far too many measures essential to the progress and well-being of our country.

Let us clearly understand where the responsibility lies. It lies with a reactionary coalition, including members of both parties, which on questions of domestic progress nearly always commands a majority in Congress.

This coalition made a mockery of the numerical majority held by the President's party. Too many Democrats opposed the President's program; not enough Republicans broke ranks to support it.

This makes it more difficult for us to do an effective job of finding a remedy. In every congressional district, and in every one of the Senate contests, you in the home areas will have to make a judgment, not by party label, but on the issues. You will have to look at the records of the incumbents; you will have to study the pledges of the challengers. There is no other way. There is no single yardstick by which to make your judgment.

But there are some benchmarks we can use and one of them is social security insurance for the elderly, covering hospital and other institutional care.

In the Senate there was a record vote—lost by 52 to 48. Every senator who is running for re-election this year had to stand up and be counted. That makes it easy.

In the House of Representatives, no vote was taken; the bill never came out of the Ways & Means Committee. But every candidate has a duty to reveal his position, frankly and openly.

This can be tricky. Every candidate for the House will probably proclaim that he "recognizes the problem." He will truthfully say, if he is an incumbent, that he never had a chance to vote, that no bill reached the floor. But no one who aspires to sit in the Congress of the United States should be allowed to duck the key question. It's simply this:

"Are you in favor of medical insurance protection for the elderly as part of the social security system?"

This is the heart of the matter. There is no need to talk about the details of the legislation—about the amendments and the compromises that were offered in an attempt to get a bill passed. The issue is whether we will provide for the minimum health needs of our retired citizens in a fair, low-cost way as part of the social security system. A candidate who cannot answer "yes" or "no" to a direct question is too devious to deserve your support.

IT SEEMS TO ME there are two great dangers we must face and overcome in the next two months.

First is the danger of confusion. As I noted earlier, this is not the kind of election in which the record of one party can be flatly compared to the other. It is a national election cut into almost 500 pieces.

We must depend, not on party slogans, but on personal thought, personal choice based on the individual positions of the candidates.

In at least a few areas the candidates—whether they are incumbents or challengers—will add to the confusion. One or both of them will tell you something like this:

"I am really on your side, but it is not a popular position in this district, so I just won't say anything positive about it."

If you let a candidate get away with this kind of maneuver, you are wrong. And if he operates that way, he is wrong.

There is every reason to believe that the people of this country are far ahead of the newspapers, the political leaders and the other experts. There is every reason to believe that the people want the kind of new, imaginative action the President promised in 1960.

I base this opinion on the polls—not the public opinion polls, but the voter polls.

All we have had until now, of course, have been primary elections. But these elections have real significance. Let me cite just a few of the results:

IN CALIFORNIA, the reactionaries staged an intensive and well-financed primary campaign against those Republicans they considered to be too "liberal." I do not offer a definition of a "liberal" in that context. But the fact is that the extremists on the right wing were defeated.

IN SOUTH CAROLINA, Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D) routed the retiring governor, who was the choice of the reactionary coalition in the Democratic primary. Sen. Johnston is a supporter of the social security hospital program.

IN LOUISIANA, incumbents who generally supported the President easily defeated opponents who were in open opposition.

AND IN TENNESSEE, two established Democratic congressmen who had opposed the social security hospital plan were downed by challengers who made this a key point.

In short, confusion does not pay. Pussyfooting does not pay. The people want what we want. They want the program they voted for in 1960. And in 1962 they will vote for the candidate who wants it too, not just in his heart but on the record.

The second danger is indifference. And I mean indifference by union members.

As a general proposition, 75 percent or more of the well-to-do, the employers, the better-paid professional people, the executives—and their families—vote on election day.

Also as a general proposition, less than half of the working people, union or non-union—the wage-earners, the salaried workers in the lower brackets—go to the polls in any given election.

THIS IS A DISGRACE. This distorts the real will of the people; it distorts it worse than gerrymandering congressional districts. Yet the fault is ours, and ours alone.

We cannot very well complain about the kind of Congress we have unless we help to choose our congressman and senators.

If our congressman is very good at sending us government bulletins, if he gets us passes to the galleries when we come to Washington as tourists, if he calls us by name when we meet at church back home—but if he still votes wrong on every question—are we for him or against him?

These are the things that all of us have to consider. These are the things that spell the difference between a country that wants to move forward and a Congress that is holding back.

Obviously the first thing we must do is register. In most states there is still time before the November election.

In these times, a citizen who does not bother to vote is simply not a good citizen. And I say just as definitely a union member who does not is not a good union member, either. In these times, collective bargaining is not enough. In these times, what we can win in collective bargaining can be nullified to some extent by adverse legislation.

Now take the matter of pensions. Our pension plans really started to mean something when we built on a national system, a government system, that gave us a foundation. Twenty or 30 or 50 dollars a month, by itself, will not keep anyone alive. But add it to social security and you have a different picture.

What made social security? Votes. Not votes in the union meeting; votes in the polling booths on election day.

I am not suggesting that government dictation is a substitute for collective bargaining, or for union organization. That would be an unhappy day, if it ever came. And it will not come—we are dedicated to a free society, not some version of the corporate state. Yet in this era, government has an essential part to play if we are to accomplish our desired result.

We want full employment. We want better schools. We want to wipe out discrimination based upon race, creed or national origin. We want to protect our retired people from becoming charity cases if they get sick. All these aspirations, and many others, depend in some part on the federal government.

In 1960 we supported a candidate for President who said he wanted our country to start moving forward again. We agreed with that concept. The American people agreed with it. The President still wants to move forward. We are still in agreement with the President. Now we want to see some practical results and we can get those results only by electing congressmen and senators who support these objectives. And we can elect such candidates—regardless of party label—only if we are registered to vote, and actually do vote in November.

You may feel, with some reason, that I have spent very little time discussing Sept. 3, and a great deal of time discussing Nov. 6. That is true; I have not even said a word about Peter McGuire and the first Labor Day. Yet I am sure that McGuire, and those many other stalwarts of our movement in days gone by, would understand and sympathize with my objective.

Let every union member be a qualified voter and an understanding citizen, and this republic will be in good hands.

That is my message, as I wish all of you a happy holiday.

Pres. Jodoin's Message:

Full-Scale Review of Social Security Gaps Demanded by CLC

The following is extracted from the Labor Day message of Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress.

LABOR DAY IS A TIME when trade unionists naturally focus their attention on the objectives of our movement. Throughout the years, our primary objective has always been the provision of a better life for all, but the means by which improvements can be made change with the times.

It is natural that organized labor has had to concentrate much of its effort on bettering wages and working conditions, and this continues to be a basic function of our unions. At the same time we are well aware that great improvements in living standards can be obtained through social programs. Advances in the field of social legislation, for example, can bring great benefits not only to union members but to all people.

THE SOCIAL IMPROVEMENTS which we, as Canadians, enjoy today have come slowly and in the face of strong opposition. At every stage there have been forceful influences which would halt social advances or turn the tide backward. This condition exists today.

This is no time for us to slip back; this is rather a time when we must move forward. The provision of a steadily improving standard of living and a better life for all the people is the one way by which we can prove that the democratic system which we support meets the needs of the people.

We are at a stage in our history when a good deal of attention is being focused on social legislation. This is timely.

While it is natural that our attention conters largely on matters within our own country, we must not lose sight of the vital world situation. It is regrettable that another Labor Day has come without any marked easing in the severe international tensions that have now existed for so long.

We, as a labor movement, must continue to press for policies which will lead to an easing of these tensions and which will contribute to world peace. The spirit of brotherhood on which the labor movement is founded is not one which can be restricted by international borders.

At the same time we can make a great contribution to world freedom and democracy by establishing the highest possible standards here in Canada. We may be proud that labor has always been in the forefront of efforts to gain improvements for all people. We must maintain that position.

Schnitzler on Labor Day:

'We Are the Custodians of Progress for All...'

AS WE APPROACH another Labor Day, we again find ourselves—as always—with our sights set on the future.

While we celebrate the glorious past, we are even more concerned about what lies ahead. We are anxious to move forward. We are impatient with the roadblocks that stand in the way of progress. We don't want to stand still.

We have been too close to standing still for too long a time. No real progress has been made on unemployment; for while there have been fluctuations, the jobless rate has remained above an intolerable 5 percent for more than four years. Far too little has been done to meet the shortcomings of our educational system. Our retired citizens are still without social security insurance against hospital bills. And there are many similar examples of unsolved problems.

The labor movement is not happy about this record. We are determined to make improvements in this country, to get moving again; and we are determined to do it soon.

All this is against a background, we must acknowledge, of general prosperity and well-being, of generally attractive gains in wages and other conditions of employment, of general—though modest—advances toward social objectives.

So we find even our friendlier critics showing signs of dismay. They find labor calling for new advances when they feel we should be reasonably content, if not complacent. Often as not they say something like this:

"When are you fellows going to be satisfied, anyway?"

THAT'S NOT REALLY a hard question. The answer is that we in the trade union movement will never be satisfied, because we never expect to see the day when nothing more remains to be done to perfect human society on earth, or on those planets we may be visiting in years to come.

Union members are not satisfied with their wages because they reject the notion that they should be "slotted in" at a certain level, eternally bound to stay put, subject only to changes in productivity or the cost of living. If the labor movement had ever accepted this concept, at any stage in its long history, life in America would be far poorer, far shabbier, than it is today.

Union members are not satisfied with the legislative record—which, in effect, is the record of social progress—because they know how much remains to be done. The union member is not like the businessman, who may welcome or even contribute to the bankruptcy of a competitor. The union member is concerned about unemployment, even if he feels safe from it. He is concerned about discrimination against minorities, even if he is a fifth-generation American. He is concerned about the needy aged, even if he is a well-fixed unmarried orphan.

We will never be satisfied, not because we are greedy for ourselves, but because we seek the ultimate best for the society of which we are a part. We are a long way from the horizons we now envision, and if we ever reach them, new horizons, just as distant, will beckon us on.

This is the nature of our movement and, because of it, we are the custodians of progress for all the people of this land.

Text of ICFTU Greetings:

Free Trade Unions Face New Demands

ON THE OCCASION of Labor Day 1962 trade unionists from all corners of the free world united in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions send fraternal greetings to their fellow-workers in North America.

The trade unions in North America have grown powerful and through militant action have brought to the workers human dignity and the opportunity to live a full life. Yet the work of the unions does not finish or even become lighter. Some old social injustices remain and new ones arise needing the keen attention of trade unionists at all levels. We wish you well as you dedicate yourselves anew to the tasks before you.

YOUR LABOR DAY, like May Day in other democratic countries, is traditionally a time for reviewing the international position of working people.

Never has the challenge to international trade union action been greater than it is today. The living standards of the masses in the developing countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America have to be raised with the least possible delay. The way to do this is the free trade union way. Where free trade unions flourish, an evolution of social and economic structures is taking place and democracy is firmly rooted.

The ICFTU world congress just held in Berlin showed that the international is enthusiastically supported by the workers of all continents and that a climate favorable to the growth of free trade unionism exists.

The ICFTU, supported by its strong national affiliates, must take full advantage of this climate and redouble its efforts to provide organizational and educational assistance to the trade unions in the developing countries. This union-building period will last for many years yet and a large sustained effort is required.

The international trade union struggle against tyrannical regimes must be intensified. The free trade unions must continue to press their governments to stop all aid to Spain and their economic and military cooperation with it, which only serve to prolong the life of the dying Franco regime and are regarded as a betrayal of their cause by democrats inside Spain. The regime in South Africa, which has established a full police state and stamped out all vestiges of freedom, must be fought by all the means in our power. Dictatorships in Latin America must be replaced by vigorous democracies.

THE FIGHT TO REMOVE the last vestiges of traditional colonialism must go on and we shall continue to denounce Communist regimes which trample underfoot the genuine aspirations for national freedom of their peoples. The trade unions must strive to make the United Nations a more effective instrument for achieving a peaceful world order.

The ICFTU must give even closer attention to the great international economic issues of our day. Notwithstanding all the economic aid given by the strong democracies, the gap between rich nations and poor continues to grow wider. The trade unions have to point the way to a more equitable distribution of the world's wealth.

The North American trade union movements have given massive support to the ICFTU and we are confident that they will continue to be a great driving force within the international. The individual support and understanding of all North American trade unionists is needed. Together with the trade unionists of all other continents they will continue to be in the vanguard of the forces working for peace, freedom and social justice everywhere.

Building Trades Dept. Says:

Worker Registration and Voting Help Shape Policies of Nation

(The following is extracted from the Labor Day message of Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.)

ON THIS LABOR DAY 1962, our main consideration is concentrated on the future of our nation.

We know that America must go forward, utilizing its full potential of manpower and industrial capacity in order to strengthen the national economy and safeguard world peace and freedom. To achieve these objectives, we need a Congress responsive to the will of the American people, and willing to back up a constructive program. The present Congress has failed all too often in those respects.

On Nov. 6, the American people will have an opportunity to make up for past congressional shortcomings. The entire membership of the House of Representatives comes up for election, as well as 39 U. S. senators. Usually, the friends of labor have a difficult time in these off-year elections. This year should be an exception. It can be if each of us as individuals, and together as organizations, would devote some time and effort before the registration deadline to getting our members, their families and friends, registered and qualified to vote.

Statistics conclusively show that those precincts where our members live have a definite fall-off in the total vote cast in the off-year elections. As a result of this off-year apathy, we lose friends.

REGISTRATION DEADLINES are fast approaching in every locality throughout the country. I sincerely hope that our councils will make every effort to secure the highest possible registration among the members of their affiliated locals. I believe this should be the first order of business in each council until the registration books are closed in their jurisdiction.

Those persons elected to the House and Senate on Nov. 6 will take their seats in the 88th Congress and will help shape the policies of our nation for the next two years. The 88th Congress will consider much important legislation—federal aid to education, medical aid for the aged, a public works program, and many more items of great importance to all of us.

It is our right and responsibility to do all we can to insure that those who will be considering this legislation are the best. Certainly it is most important that each of our members take part in helping to make this selection. The members can only do that if they are registered, and then actually cast their ballots.

Industrial Union Dept. Says:

'The Time Has Come to Press For a Reduction of Work Time'

(The following is extracted from the Labor Day message of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.)

THE AFL-CIO INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPT. extends fraternal greetings to the working people of the free world and to their unions on this holiday of U.S. labor. To those held hostage behind the iron curtain and in other areas of totalitarian bondage, we pledge continued solidarity in the struggle to strengthen and extend freedom. To the peoples of the newly developing nations, we offer understanding and the helping hand of friendship.

On this Labor Day, the Berlin Wall still stands as the mute symbol of the tyrannical forces oppressing our world. In the western sector of the beleaguered city, a free people understandably have demonstrated their impatience with the cruel inhumanity of their oppressors. We urge discipline and patience despite provocation and assure Berlin's workers that they do not stand alone.

A year ago, Khrushchev boasted that he would outstrip us in material and cultural progress within two decades. Yet the Soviet even now faces a new crisis in agriculture which has spread to the entire bloc. The Soviet peoples face a dearth of consumer goods and even drearier diets as the price of the Kremlin's military and political ambitions. U.S. industrial labor again challenges Khrushchev to seek the peace and to agree to a workable ban on atomic testing so that there may truly be peaceful competition.

HERE AT HOME the American economy still fails to perform adequately.

The nation's productivity, in part, is being translated into unemployment. Automation, which should benefit all, is creating insecurity among working people. The way to get America moving again is to create jobs so that all willing to work can find gainful employment. The time has come to press forward for a reduction of work time.

Industrial labor has a key role to play, starting now. Every industrial worker will best serve himself, his family, his nation, and his union by registering and making certain that all eligible members of his family do likewise. All local union leaders and active unionists must do all possible to get out the vote.

The 1962 congressional elections can be won in our industrial cities and towns if we turn out the vote. We have a great opportunity to defeat the unofficial political party—the coalition—that wields the power in Congress. We must do this so that our nation may face the realities of the 1960s. Let us resolve on this Labor Day that we shall do so.

The head of Chicago Local 5, he defeated Wilfrid T. Connell of Boston, international president for eight years, and will take office on Sept. 24.

The 116 delegates representing some 17,000 members voted to retain all other officers, who ran without opposition.

They are Vice Presidents Edward A. Nyegaard, Frank D. Smith, Daniel A. Streeter, Jr., Edmond L. LaBauve and Walter F. Risdon, and Sec.-Treas. Ben G. Schaller.

During final sessions of the week-long parley, the delegates voted tentatively to raise the defense fund to a minimum of $500,000 and maximum of $1 million. Changes in the Photo Engravers' constitution and general laws to allow the defense fund boost will be voted on in a referendum. As of June 1, the balance in the defense fund was $306,800.

Earlier in the convention, the delegates instructed the officers to continue merger talks with the unaffiliated Lithographers. They also voted to publish in pamphlet form the convention speech of Lithographers Pres. Kenneth J. Brown for distribution to all Photo Engravers locals.

The officers were instructed to submit a plan to next year's convention to allow retired members to work at the trade for a limited time at the discretion of the local union, since the Social Security Act allows retirees to earn up to $1,200 a year before losing benefits.

In other actions the delegates:

- Called on officers actively to resist restrictions on free collective bargaining. One form of curb on bargaining noted was compulsory arbitration.
- Directed the executive council to give further study to the need for creating regional councils which would benefit small locals.
- Set up a fund to aid members suffering from blood or skin infections resulting from working at the trade.
- Defeated a move to cancel reservations for next year's parley in Miami, Fla., and meet elsewhere. Delegates felt that holding its convention in the anti-union climate in Florida might help the union elements in the area.
- Urged locals to set up community services committees and called for support of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities.
- Voted to promote the sale of stock in the Portland (Ore.) Reporter.

Schaller reported that in the period since the union was founded in 1900 until May 31 the Photo Engravers paid more than $11.5 million in benefits to members, families or estates. These included strike and lockout payments, aid to members suffering from tuberculosis, burial payments and insurance and disability benefits.

5 SAG Members Fined, Suspended

Hollywood, Calif. — Five members of the Screen Actors Guild have been found guilty of unbecoming conduct for working in a picture made by a non-union producer and accepting substandard wages and working conditions. Each was fined $500 with $400 suspended conditionally, and suspended from union membership until $100 is paid.

30-Hour Week Long-Range Aim:

California Labor Charts Major Legislative Targets

Long Beach—The 4th convention of the California AFL-CIO concluded here with a call for a long-range goal to reduce the workweek to 30 hours.

The nearly 2,000 delegates, representing 1.4 million AFL-CIO members, earlier pledged their full support to the AFL-CIO Executive Council's immediate drive for a 35-hour week, to be achieved through both legislation and collective bargaining.

In the unanimously adopted resolution, the delegates said that "throughout the history of the organized labor movement one of its first objectives has been the reduction in the hours of human labor."

Because of extremely advanced technology in this present atomic age, they said, a long-range goal of 30 hours should be established.

The convention also demanded a state investigation of "increasingly unreasonable hospital and medical fees which are harming union health and welfare programs."

Voicing their "outrage" at reports that the American Medical Association and private insurance companies poured $7 million dollars into a campaign to defeat Pres. Kennedy's program for medical care to the aged under social security, they called for enactment of legislation "much stronger" than the Anderson-King proposal narrowly beaten in the Senate in the current session of Congress.

This is "incumbent upon the labor movement," they said, citing the history of the Forand and Anderson-King bills, "both of which suffered scores of modifications and compromises before they were finally killed."

"The enactment of a full program of prepaid health care for the aged under the social security system must be made a prime issue at the next session of Congress," the convention declared.

The delegates also called for an increase in the wage base for the old age and survivors' disability program from $4,800 to $10,000 a year and a boost in the employer and employe contribution rate "sufficient to finance the Social Security program."

They gave full support to a program to "harness the state and federal governments' power to borrow money inexpensively to achieve a truly mass housing market producing dwelling units at an annual rate of 2.3 million."

The convention, after a floor fight, decided to oppose a proposal on the November ballot to reapportion the state senate by giving additional seats to urban areas with larger populations.

It adopted a resolution declaring that the proposed reapportionment measure was inequitable and would not solve the problems caused by the present state senate committee system which has resulted in the defeat of numerous labor-backed proposals.

It also voted against any attempt to seek modification of California's present 8-hour day limit on labor by women workers.

Nearly 200 resolutions were adopted, but most of the interest centered on the current political fight between Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown and his Republican opponent, former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon.

Nixon has said he will "go over the head of the labor political bosses" and seek employer support in the plants as a device for getting worker support.

This created more antagonism against Nixon than any of his otherwise bland statements during the political campaign. The State AFL-CIO voted unanimously to endorse Brown.

Rail Service Workers Back 35-Hour Week

Chicago—The Transport Service Employes (UTSE) wound up a three-day convention here by voting support of the AFL-CIO drive for the 35-hour week and the full range of the federation's legislative, political education and civil rights programs.

Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver told 100 delegates to the union's 13th biennial convention that the American Negro had made the greatest contribution in the 20th Century to the cause of democracy.

"We have substituted law for revolution in order to bring about justice for all," said Weaver, one of the founders of the union.

He praised the delegates for providing Negro leadership for the trade union movement, and said many former UTSE officers now serve in high positions in government and labor.

The union represents about 7,000 railroad porters ("red caps") and workers in a wide variety of industries. UTSE Pres. Eugene E. Frazier said the union began expanding its organizing efforts when the railroad industry slowed down.

"We had to find new jobs for our members," he pointed out.

He called the meeting here 'an educational conference stressing the growth of our union." Part of the education program included workshops on proper filing of reports required by the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Frazier, who will be up for reelection at the 1964 convention, said the union was disappointed with the record of the 87th Congress and declared that labor has an important role in deciding who returns to Congress.

"The records show, beyond a doubt, that when working men and women, union members, go to the polls in large numbers, the liberal cause invariably prevails," he said.

Speakers included Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers; Aaron Aronin, field director of the Jewish Labor Committee of Chicago; AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Daniel J. Healy; Philip Weightman, assistant director of AFL-CIO COPE; Lawrence Rogin, AFL-CIO education director; and the union's attorney, Leon Despres, a Chicago alderman.

Postal Drivers Aim At Workweek Slash

Chicago—A series of proposals aimed at improving working conditions in the postal service were drafted here at the 18th biennial convention of Post Office Motor Vehicle Employes. The union, which won exclusive bargaining rights in the recent National Labor Relations Board election will ask Congress to:

- Reduce the workweek from 40 to 35 hours.
- Increase wages as provided in the House-passed Morrison bill.
- Provide overtime pay for substitute employes, those not on civil service.

The Motor Vehicle Employes also voted to set up dual locals for members who are supervisory employes. The number in various cities ranges from three to 90. The separation of rank-and-file and supervisory workers was called for in the President's Executive Order on recognition of federal employes' unions.

The union will ask the Post Office Dept. for a clothing and tool allowance for mechanics. Drivers already have a uniform allowance. The department will also be asked to give the union first consideration on all movement of mail before going to private contractors.

Speakers at the parley, including Post Office officials, concentrated on department problems.

The 114 delegates, representing 5,000 members in 160 local unions in major cities re-elected Everett Gibson as top officer, changing his title from secretary-legislative representative to president. His headquarters are in Washington.

Others chosen were Lee B. Walker, Allan Northem, Leon Hawkins, Carl Fleissner and Paul Jameson, vice presidents; Charles Muente, financial secretary; Chester Parish, treasurer, and Bernard Bennett, editor of the union magazine, "Rotor."

U.S. Judge Backs 'Hot Cargo' Clause

Newark, N. J.—A federal judge has ruled that the Carpenters District Council here has a right to strike to retain a "hot cargo" provision in a collective bargaining agreement with the Associated Contractors of Essex County.

U.S. Dist. Judge R. J. Wortendyke refused to enjoin a strike that began when the contractors refused to sign a renewal contract permitting employes to "individually refuse to work on a job site" where non-union conditions exist.

Sharply differing with previous rulings of the National Labor Relations Board, the court ruled that a strike to secure the inclusion of a lawful clause in a contract "is no more an unfair practice" than would be the use of similar action to obtain a higher wage rate.

Green Memorial Set for Coshocton

Coshocton, O. — Tribute will be paid to the late William Green, president of the former AFL at the time of his death, on Sept. 2 in the First Baptist Church here, which he attended.

On behalf of the AFL-CIO, Regional Dir. Jesse Gallagher will place a wreath on the grave at brief graveside services. George P. Delaney, special assistant to the Secretary of Labor, will be the principal speaker.

Wage Hike Also Goal:

Fire Fighters Act To Cut Workweek

San Antonio, Tex.—A shorter workweek and improved wage scales for professional firemen were set as goals at the 26th convention of the Fire Fighters here and for the members of this union a "shorter" week means anything close to the national pattern of 40 hours a week.

Only a relatively few fire departments now work such a schedule. The usual pattern, it was reported, is between 60 and 72 hours a week, with a small number of groups required to put in 84 hours.

Efforts will also be made to bring fire fighters' wages more in line with those of other skilled trades. Several resolutions called for closer relationships with state and local central labor bodies to gain added trade union support in wage negotiations with municipal officials.

Fire Fighters Give RocketFuelWarning

San Antonio — A Safety Committee report to the Fire Fighters convention here laid heavy stress on what it termed the danger to public safety from the transportation of rocket fuels without adequate warning identification.

The toxicity of rocket fuels when ignited is in the range of one part to 1 million, the committee warned, and inhalation can bring agonizing death within three minutes.

Pres. William D. Buck, a retired St. Louis fire captain, won re-election, defeating Martin E. Pierce of Boston 290 to 132. John C. Kabachus was re-elected secretary-treasurer without opposition. Two new vice presidents were elected, Robert E. Tighe of Detroit and Eric Simmons of Victoria, B.C. Thirteen other vice presidents were re-elected. San Diego was chosen as the 1964 convention city.

A rollcall vote established an increase of 10 cents a month per capita tax to support present services, to initiate a new public relations program, and to expand some other services. The increase will become effective in September 1963, and will raise the per capita to 50 cents per month per member.

A message to the convention from Pres. Kennedy declared the courage of fire fighters "in the face of great danger to their personal safety merits the profound gratitude of all Americans."

"The inherent hazards of their profession pose a serious problem for society," he said. "The rate of disabling injuries for fire fighters is about three times as high as it is in our manufacturing industries. We must all do better than we have been doing to provide for the safety of our fire fighters, especially through the prevention of fires before they actually start."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg also sent a message of greetings to the 109,000-member union, which has more than 90 percent of its jurisdiction organized.

NEW UNIFORMS for some 30,000 clerks who meet the public in post offices were revealed by Postmaster-Gen. J. Edward Day when he addressed the Postal Clerks' convention in Portland, Ore. Shown modeling the uniform—blue jackets for women, blue jackets and maroon ties for men—are Bonnie G. Del Vecchio and George King, both of Washington.

Postal Clerks to Fight 'Work Measurement'

Portland, Ore.—The "paramount issue" for the Postal Clerks in the months ahead will be elimination of speed-up practices in post offices, the union's convention declared.

Adopting a 14-point legislative program, delegates sharply criticized the post office "work measurement system" as simply a "speed-up."

Pres. E. C. (Roy) Hallbeck, who was re-elected to a two-year term without opposition, said the worst feature of the work measurement system is that it makes a conscientious worker look bad, while a "faker" can misrepresent facts and get an excellent rating.

The Postal Clerks, one of the unions of federal employes officially recognized under an executive order recently issued by Pres. Kennedy, are authorized to negotiate on personnel practices and working conditions. Congress retains control of salaries and hours, and the union like others made up of federal employes is forbidden to strike.

This was the union's first convention since merger of three organizations of postal clerks two years ago. Hallbeck said the "most heartening aspect" of the convention was the unanimity among "former strange bedfellows," despite their varying traditions.

He said the Postal Clerks face a major problem in training union representatives in collective bargaining procedures, because few of the members have experience in the field.

Other goals in the priority program include legislation to liberalize the Hatch Act, which regulates political activity by government workers; make union recognition a matter of law, instead of executive order; provide for voluntary retirement after 30 years of service with full annuity; provide a 35-hour workweek.

Delegates voted 512-399 at the closing session to change the constitution to provide for referendum election of national officers, instead of at the convention, but the change failed of approval because a two-thirds vote was needed.

The national per capita tax was increased from 75 cents to $1 per month.

National officers unopposed for election, in addition to Hallbeck, were John F. O'Connor, legislative director; Donald E. Dunn, executive vice president, and Owen H. Schoon, new secretary-treasurer.

N. J. Labor Lays Plans for $1.25 Minimum

Newark—The New Jersey State AFL-CIO will renew its fight for a $1.25 hourly state minimum wage law when the assembly returns from recess in November, Pres. Vincent J. Murphy has announced.

Thousands of the state's workers are being "exploited," Murphy said, because of the lack of a state wage floor. Many workers are trying to support their families on "unbelievably low" incomes, he said.

The state federation will urge passage of Assembly Bill 508, currently awaiting action by the Republican-controlled Senate Labor Committee. Originally the bill called for a $1.37 minimum wage which was reduced to $1.25 when it was passed by the House in May. The measure provides time and a half pay for work over 40 hours in a week.

A state AFL-CIO survey has shown that a single woman, living with other members of her family, needs to earn at least $1.37 hourly to maintain a minimum standard of living, without frills or luxuries.

Murphy said the average family needs far more than $1.37 an hour for its support but "many unconscionable employers ignore this" and continue to pay "disgracefully" low rates. The low-paid workers for the most part are not union members.

The Senate should act as soon as possible, Murphy said, adding:

"How anyone can expect a worker to live in today's economy on $40 or less a week—which is what thousands are earning—is beyond understanding."

Action Urged On County Colleges

Newark, N. J.—Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO has urged freeholders in the state's 21 counties to take immediate action to establish two-year county colleges and to get them into operation, ready to receive students in the next year or two.

Under a law adopted this year, counties may establish the junior colleges by action of freeholders unless a referendum is petitioned for by a percentage of registered voters.

Bakers President Hails Organizing Assistance

Organizing assistance from the AFL-CIO has been a major help in the development and growth of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, Pres. Daniel E. Conway told delegates to the union's second constitutional convention in Washington, D. C.

Conway introduced AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston, who addressed the convention as a "friend" who had worked from the beginning with ABC leaders to build the newly-chartered union after the AFL-CIO had expelled the Bakery & Confectionery Workers in December 1957 because of corrupt domination.

Livingston told the delegates that organizing the unorganized is the "life blood of the labor movement" and that labor cannot make progress unless it pays equal attention to effective bargaining, beneficial legislation and exercising the right to vote.

Since the merger of the AFL and CIO in 1955, Livingston said, more than 1.5 million new members have been brought into the labor movement and an equal number have dropped out because of automation and other technological changes.

Over all, he said, 18 million workers are union members but some 27 or 28 million are not—8 million in government service, 5.5 million in the service trades, more than 5.5 million in retail and wholesale, and the balance in industrial and "white collar" fields.

These are the areas where labor will work, said Livingston, who predicted that "regardless of what you read and hear, I think we are headed for a more solidified labor movement" than ever before. Just ahead, he said, is a pilot organizing project among 750,000 unorganized workers in Los Angeles, for whom a major campaign is planned.

Virginia Labor Hits Teamsters On CWA Raid

Richmond, Va. — The Virginia State AFL-CIO has been praised by Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne for a convention resolution condemning an effort by the unaffiliated Teamsters to raid a CWA unit.

In a letter of appreciation to Sec.-Treas. Brewster Snow of the state body, Beirne expressed "deepest gratitude" for the resolution. The Virginia State AFL-CIO, he said, is the first state council to take such action.

The resolution pointed out that on July 19 last, Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa sent a letter advising his union heads that Kenneth Silvers, former national director of CWA's installation unit, was "heading up a full-scale campaign" to organize telephone installers into the truckers' union.

A CWA trial court expelled Silvers and 18 other CWA members, and suspended two other members. All were tried on charges of a plot to switch 17,000 Western Electric installer unit members into the Teamsters, a union ousted by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt leadership. Silvers failed to defend himself and announced publicly that he was working full time for the Teamsters.

3 Unions Sue Rail Group For Libel

New York—Three rail operating unions have filed a $1.5 million libel suit against the Association of American Railroads, based on advertisements leveling "featherbedding" charges against the unions.

The Railroad Trainmen, the Firemen & Enginemen and the Locomotive Engineers said the decision to sue in State Supreme Court here was reached after the railroad association refused a retraction.

In another development related to the work rules dispute on the railroads, a U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago agreed to an industry request to speed up hearings on a union request for an injunction against the companies. The railroads have been restrained from unilaterally imposing drastic work rules changes until the appellate court rules on the issue.

Wage-Hour Amendments Mark First Anniversary

Labor Day 1962 marks the first anniversary of the effective date of a major domestic achievement of the Kennedy Administration—the 1961 amendments to the federal wage-hour law benefiting more than 27 million of the lowest-paid U.S. workers.

The amendments, representing the greatest advance since enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act in 1938, brought gains scheduled over a five-year period.

The time-table for those previously covered by the law follows this schedule:

- Sept. 3, 1961, the minimum was raised from $1 an hour to $1.15 for 23.9 million workers.
- Sept. 3, 1963, the minimum goes from $1.15 to $1.25.

For 3.6 million newly covered workers:

- Sept. 3, 1961, a minimum was established at $1 an hour straight time, no overtime.
- Sept. 3, 1963, no increase in minimum pay, but overtime must be paid at time and a half after 44 hours in a week.
- Sept. 3, 1964, $1.15 an hour and overtime after 42 hours.
- Sept. 3, 1965, $1.25 an hour and overtime after 40 hours in one week.

The newly protected workers, who must wait until next year for the beginning of stepped-up improvements, include 2.2 million retail and service employes, 1 million construction workers, 100,000 seamen, 93,000 transit workers, 86,000 in service stations, 33,000 in fish processing plants and 30,000 telephone operators.

AFL-CIO Sounds Warning:

Industrial Security Bill Called Threat to Constitutional Rights

The AFL-CIO has called for defeat of a bill to give congressional sanction to an "industrial security" program, warning that passage would cause "serious damage to basic constitutional rights.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote all members of the House urging them "most strongly" to vote against HR 11363. He stressed that the bill would permit the secretary of defense "to deny basic constitutional liberties of American citizens; namely, the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses and the right to appeal to the courts from adverse decisions" by the secretary.

The bill's history goes back to 1959, when the U.S. Supreme Court held the government's industrial security program invalid in an 8-to-1 decision. The court majority held that without statutory authority for such a program, denial of confrontation and cross-examination of government witnesses was illegal.

Former Pres. Eisenhower issued an executive order restoring the program with some changes to meet the court's decision, but did not apply the confrontation and cross-examination principles to all cases.

The present bill is an attempt to give the executive order congressional sanction to make further legal challenges more difficult.

Biemiller declared that "the AFL-CIO does not yield to any group in its support of all necessary measures to protect the national security and resist Communist aggression and subversion."

"In doing so, however, we feel it is of the utmost importance that we do not ourselves become like the forces and institutions we are trying to defeat," he said. "Respect for constitutional safeguards is at the heart of the American way of life."

He pointed out that the bill is scheduled to come before the House under a procedure calling for suspension of the rules which requires a two-thirds vote, and that debate under this approach would be limited to 20 minutes to each side.

"This new attempt to secure House approval of HR 11363," he wrote, "without hearings and under truncated legislative procedures is the fourth time passage under such procedures has been attempted."

The measure has been on the consent calendar three times this year but in each case objection was voiced to consideration without debate. Biemiller commented:

"The procedures thus far followed for securing affirmative House action on this measure are hardly such as to inspire public confidence in the bill."

Biemiller pointed out that although the bill purports to deal with procedures to protect classified information in industrial plants, it would apply also to any "educational, or research organization, institution, enterprise, or other legal entity located in the United States, whether or not operated for profit."

Citing the Supreme Court decision invalidating the previous program, Biemiller wrote:

"We ask the members of the House to be no less zealous than the Supreme Court in protecting the rights of confrontation and cross-examination against the serious damage to which they would be subjected by the passage of HR 11363."

Public Works Plan Wins House Approval

urgently needed public works."

While the House acted on public works, the Senate was in the midst of a heated floor debate over the emasculated tax-revision bill reported out by its Finance Committee.

With the Administration hoping that some holes cut into the already-compromised House-passed tax bill might be plugged in conference, the committee bill, floor-managed by Sen.. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.), appeared to be surviving major challenges.

Withholding Plan Rejected

An attempt to retain the House-passed withholding tax on dividend and interest income was rejected 66-20 in favor of a proposal requiring the reporting of dividend and interest payments, but not withholding.

By a 54-39 vote, the Senate loosened the House bill's restrictions on tax-deductions for lavish business entertainment expenses. On one Administration-supported provision which labor has opposed—to provide tax credits for business expenditures for new machinery and equipment—liberal forces lost a fight for deletion, even though they had the support of Sen. Harry F. Byrd, conservative chairman of the Finance Committee. The vote was 52-30.

A key vote, to tighten up a committee-emasculated provision dealing with taxation of foreign-earned income, was pending as the AFL-CIO News went to press. Before the Senate took up the bill, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg charged in a network radio interview that the Finance Committee had "wrecked . . . the whole tax reform bill."

In other major congressional developments:

- The Senate unanimously passed the Kefauver drug safety bill, which had been hastily patched up by the Judiciary Committee in the wake of public concern over the nation's narrow escape from the baby-deforming thalidomide drug. The committee restored key safeguards which it had previously stripped from the bill.

- New life was unexpectedly breathed into a labor and Administration supported plan to allow private and public utility groups to utilize waste steam from the atomic plutonium reactor at Hanford, Wash., to generate needed electricity for the Northwest. The House had previously voted against the proposal. However, the Senate voted to put it back in the Atomic Energy Commission authorization bill. A motion to instruct House conferees to hold firm against the Senate version was defeated, 246-148.

- A hot House fight over foreign aid spending was put off until Sept. 19, with the Administration seeking to mobilize strength against a slashing cut in appropriations sought by Rep. Otto E. Passman (D-La.), chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee which handles the bill.

At his Aug. 29 news conference, Kennedy took up the cudgels for his foreign aid proposals and warned that it would be "the height of folly" to appropriate $50 billion for defense and then let "very vital countries pass into the Communist bloc." He appealed for bipartisan support "because this is in the vital interests of the United States."

- The House gave final congressional approval to a constitutional amendment outlawing the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal—but not state or local—elections. To become a part of the Constitution, it must be ratified by 38 states within seven years.

- The controversial communications satellite bill, establishing a private profit-making corporation subject to government regulation for U.S. participation in a global satellite system, was sent to the White House, after the House voted 371-10 to accept minor changes made by the Senate.

AMVETS' Award Goes to Meany

New York—The 18th annual AMVETS convention has voted its Americanism Award to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for contributions to the "strengthening of American democracy."

The award cited Meany for "his realization of the importance of labor-management relations; his abhorrance of corruption within the labor movement; for his outstanding efforts in furthering the role of an intrinsic segment of a free and democratic society."

Previous recipients include former Presidents Truman and Hoover and Bernard Baruch.

bill. They were Reps. Cecil R. King (Calif.), Thomas J. O'Brien (Ill.), Hale Boggs (La.), Eugene J. Keogh (N.Y.), Frank M. Karsten (Mo.), William J. Green, Jr., (Pa.), John C. Watts (Ky.), Al Ullman (Ore.), James A. Burke (Mass.), and Martha W. Griffiths (Mich.). One of the 10 Republican members, Rep. Howard W. Baker (Tenn.), also voted for the measure.

Voting to kill the bill were Republicans Noah M. Mason (Ill.), John W. Byrnes (Wis.), Thomas B. Curtis (Mo.), Victor A. Knox (Mich.), James B. Utt (Calif.), Jackson E. Betts (O.), Bruce Alger (Tex.), Steven B. Derounian (N.Y.) and Herman T. Schneebeli (Pa.).

Democrats voting against it were Representatives A. Sydney Herlong, Jr. (Fla.), Clark W. Thompson (Tex.), James B. Frazier, Jr. (Tenn.), and Burr P. Harrison (Va.).

Earlier the AFL-CIO had told the committee the legislation was needed to meet the "urgent needs" of jobless workers and to provide "a much needed stimulus to a sluggish economy."

'Hunger Can't Wait'

Permanent reform of the unemployment compensation program is called for, but "hunger can't wait" until the next session of Congress, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank declared. Cruikshank and Leonard Lesser, social security director of the Industrial Union Dept., presented labor's views in a joint statement to the committee.

Opposition to the bill came from employer organizations and a handful of state officials, mainly from the South, who protested that part of the payroll taxes paid by employers in their states would go to provide benefits for workers in hard-hit industrial states, where unemployment is highest.

Endorsing the nationwide method of financing the extended benefits, Cruikshank warned that if the program depended on state-by-state financing, "those states fearing higher costs and tax rates as compared to those of neighboring and competing states would refrain from entering the program."

Telegraphers Strike To Win Job Security

Chicago—The Railroad Telegraphers climaxed almost five years of unsuccessful efforts to negotiate a job stabilization agreement by striking the Chicago & North Western Railway, one of the major western carriers.

The union, with approximately 1,000 members on the C&NW, walked out after all negotiations and mediation attempts had failed to induce management to agree to a job security arrangement.

The ORT said Ben W. Heineman, C&NW board chairman, had "resisted persistently" and fought the issue through the courts with a claim that job security was non-bargainable. Meanwhile, it asserted, Heineman "pushed one of the most extreme job-slaughter programs" in the country.

The telegraphers previously had announced an Aug. 2 strike but postponed action at the urging of Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. The latter flew to Chicago to help seek a settlement of the dispute but released both union and management from a commitment to continue negotiations as of 4 p. m., on Aug. 29.

Goldberg, however, continued efforts to get an agreement. He returned to Washington only after Pres. Kennedy announced his appointment to the Supreme Court and the strike had started.

The railway, which serves nine midwestern and plains states, sent furlough notices to 16,000 employes. ORT picket lines were observed by other unions and traffic came to a halt. The last train into the line's terminal here was the Northwood Fishermen's Special, from Green Bay, Wis.

The dispute dates back to December 1957. At first management refused to bargain at all on the subject, according to ORT officials. Union members voted almost unanimously for strike authorization in July 1958, but the C&NW tied the issue up in the courts until the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in April 1960 that job security is a legally bargainable issue under the Railway Labor Act.

Later the ORT negotiated what it called a "trail-blazing" job security pact on the Southern Pacific but the C&NW rejected it. In April 1962 a Presidential Emergency Board was appointed. It issued advisory recommendations and negotiations were resumed, without an agreement.

After Goldberg withdrew, he offered the "full services of the government" to Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., of the National Mediation Board, who also had tried to help settle the dispute.

Meanwhile a Special Emergency Board, named by Kennedy to get the facts in an ORT dispute with the New York Central Railroad, reported to the President that job abolition by management had imposed hardships on employes and recommended a series of protective devices, including advance notice to laid-off workers and allowances for employes whose jobs are abolished. Appointment of the board deferred a strike set for June 12.

Unemployment in August Shows Jump to 5.8 Percent

Riddled Tax Bill Passed By Senate

The battered remnants of the Kennedy Administration's tax-revision program are on the way to a House-Senate conference committee after the Senate beat down amendments to restore key sections eliminated from the House-approved bill and passed the measure as rewritten by the Senate Finance Committee.

The roll-call vote on final passage was 59 to 24, with 40 Democrats and 19 Republicans voting for the measure and 14 Democrats and 10 Republicans lined up against it.

In addition, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, the Senate was nearing final action on a separate bill, already cleared by the House, to let self-employed persons claim tax deductions to create their own private pension plans. The bill, sponsored by Sen. George A. Smathers (D-Fla.), was barely kept out of the tax-revision measure after Senate Democratic Floor Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) promised an immediate separate vote on the proposal.

With Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.) handling the Finance Committee tax-revision bill, the Senate defeated these major amendments offered in last-minute efforts to bring the bill closer to the original Administration proposals:

- An amendment by Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) to tighten up taxation on foreign earnings of U.S.

Agency Shop Ban Rejected by Court

Los Angeles—An effort to block an agency shop agreement at the Douglas Aircraft plant failed when U. S. District Judge W. M. Byrne turned down a request of three non-union employes for a temporary restraining order.

The judge set Oct. 22 for further arguments in the case.

The National "Right-to-Work" Committee has been campaigning here and elsewhere against the agency shop and ads have been placed in newspapers urging workers to oppose union-security clauses at Douglas and other aerospace firms.

In Washington, in efforts to renew aerospace negotiations, a Presidential Review Board headed by Dr. George W. Taylor called four managements and two unions, the Machinists and Auto Workers, back to the bargaining table.

Labor's Day at Seattle Fair:

5 Million Jobs Seen In 35-Hour Week

Seattle, Wash.—The dramatic contrast between two universally recognized symbols of today's world—the Space Needle and the "Wall of Shame" in Berlin—was underscored by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in an address to a Labor Day throng at the Seattle World's Fair.

Speaking also on the state of the domestic economy, Meany said the AFL-CIO will fight for the 35-hour week "not because American workers are lazy, but because it would create 5 million more jobs in private industry when it is fully applied."

"We are going to bargain with our employers for the shorter workweek without reduction in pay because pay cuts would shrink purchasing power and eventually hurt employers as much as the workers," he added.

Meany hailed the Space Needle as "a towering monument to the aspirations of humanity for a better life."

"It embodies," he said, "the hopes of all decent people for a peaceful world which can be explored in the years to come for new discoveries that will make life more secure and more rewarding for mankind."

The Berlin Wall, on the other hand, is a symbol of "the cruelty of dictatorship," he declared.

"It stands for the basic brutality of the Communist conspiracy, its utter disregard for human life and values. It crystalizes for all the world to see the bitter mockery of Communist pretensions to peaceful aims and progressive views. It identifies the Communist world as a prison, where people are walled in for life and from which they can escape only if they dare risk being shot down by machine guns in cold blood."

The AFL-CIO president spoke at the Plaza of States, heart of the fairgrounds, as the flags of the U. S. and its 50 states flew in brilliant sunlight. Aided by Gov. Albert D. Rossellini (D) and the state's senior U.S. senator, Warren Magnuson (D), Meany raised the AFL-CIO organization flag on the 52nd flagpole.

The governor later read a proc-

Increase Sharpest In Last 20 Months

By Saul Miller

The year-long level of persistent, high unemployment continued in August as the jobless rate jumped to 5.8 percent, the sharpest rise in 20 months.

The Labor Dept. reported that an anticipated 450,000 drop in unemployment showed up in mid-August as about 86,000, and instead of a decrease of about 700,000 in the labor force, there was an increase of 113,000.

Dr. Seymour Wolfbein, the department's manpower expert, told reporters that the monthly job report indicated a continuation of the same conditions that have prevailed throughout the year—a sustained upturn in employment without a resulting "impact on the unemployment side."

Total employment, which normally drops in August, moved to a new record high of 69.7 million persons, another upset of seasonal predictions for the month.

Wolfbein said it was difficult fully to determine the meaning of the figures until the more detailed job report became available the following week. He said, however, that the reversal of normal expectations did not foreshadow a recession.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate moved from 5.3 percent in July to 5.8 in August. The movement from June to July had been downward from 5.5 to 5.3 percent.

Long-Term Idle Up

The rate for the first eight months of the year has averaged out at about 5.5 percent and most labor economists have felt this figure was more indicative of the actual situation—persistently high unemployment since January.

Unemployment in August dipped numerically from 4 million to about 3.9 million, but the number of

Freedom Seen Based On Unions

Blackpool, England — Normal diplomatic channels "simply cannot carry all the messages needed to build world freedom and world peace," Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers told the annual meeting of the British Trades Union Congress here.

"We of the trade unions of the world — and most specifically I mean of the free world—must establish our own contacts, our own lines of communication, our own bonds of brotherhood and solidarity, if the fellowship of man is to reign supreme," he declared.

Fraternal Delegates

Knight, an AFL-CIO vice president and president of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers, and Pres. John H. Elliott of the Street & Electric Railway Employes were AFL-CIO fraternal delegates to the TUC congress.

Knight drew upon experience in his own union, the AFL-CIO and the IFPW in appealing for international labor cooperation to help both struggling newly-freed nations and their labor movements to develop along democratic lines.

Army, Navy and Labor Dept. Grant Recognition to AFL-CIO Affiliates

The Army, the Navy and the Labor Dept. have granted exclusive collective bargaining recognition to AFL-CIO affiliates in the latest of a series of representation agreements under Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order on union recognition for federal employes.

The Labor Dept. local of the Government Employes won exclusive recognition for the department's 4,000 employes in the Washington, D. C., metropolitan area on the basis of signed authorization cards. A majority of professional employes, who had the right under the order to be excluded from the bargaining unit or set up a unit of their own, also chose AFGE representation and will be included in the same unit. Managerial and designated supervisory officials are excluded.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, in a letter written just prior to his nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court, congratulated the AFGE local on its selection as bargaining agent and praised "the spirit of cooperation and mutual respect and trust that has characterized our negotiations leading to this recognition."

In another major development, Machinists Local 830 scored a decisive victory in a collective bargaining election among some 1,700 employes of the U.S. Naval Ordnance plant at Louisville, Ky.

In the first major representation election ever held at a government industrial establishment, employes cast 988 votes for the IAM and 399 for no union.

Pres. William H. Ryan of Machinists Dist. 44, the IAM's nationwide organization of government employes, said the election was held because the Navy unit had declined to accept the union's card count as a basis for recognition. The outcome, he noted, was that more em-

ALBUMS OF STAMPS commemorating 25th anniversary of national apprentice training program were presented by Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, center, to Pres. C. J. Haggerty, left, of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., and Executive Dir. William E. Dunn, Associated General Contractors of America, and others at a Washington ceremony.

Apprenticeship Act Anniversary Marked

Free business and free labor, working together rather than apart, can do a better job than in the past in building a "stronger and more prosperous" land, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. said at a ceremony marking the 25th anniversary of the National Apprenticeship Act.

Haggerty was one of several speakers representing government, management and labor at Washington ceremonies marking the issuance by the Post Office Dept. of a commemorative stamp climaxing National Apprenticeship Month.

Haggerty expressed pleasure at the cooperation of workers, employers and the Dept. of Labor in government-sponsored apprentice training programs and said that, with further help from all parties, it should be possible to "broaden the base of cooperation" not only during national emergencies but also in the regular course of peacetime pursuits.

The mistaken idea that labor and management are natural enemies "has been pretty thoroughly dispelled by the emergence of the real enemy — totalitarian dictatorship," he said. "There is no profit to be derived from conflict and strife but only bitterness and division," he added.

One of the most frequent complaints heard about apprentices, Haggerty observed, is that "there are not enough of them." He offered the example of his home state, California, as a place where "unions and employers are cooperating fully with the state government in a sound and progressive program."

Broad Expansion Sought

The program, he said, is "intelligently directed because it seeks the expansion of the entire apprenticeship base, with emphasis on those industries and firms which up to now have not borne their fair share of the load."

The program includes a campaign in schools and communities to make children and parents aware of apprenticeship opportunities and here, he said, unions and management are "working together with a great degree of harmony."

The 4-cent apprenticeship stamps went on sale after Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day had sent an album to Pres. Kennedy and presented albums to Haggerty and others including Executive Dir. William E. Dunn of the Associated General Contractors, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg through Mrs. Esther Peterson, assistant secretary, and Dir. Edward E. Goshen of the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

Mrs. Peterson pointed out that in 25 years of apprentice training, certificates have been awarded to some 500,000 workers, and that, in addition, "literally millions of workers in 375 crafts have benefited from on-the-job training programs." There are now 160,000 apprentices in registered programs and 200,000 in unregistered classes but many more are needed—at least 250,000 qualified candidates for registration a year, she said.

Dunn promised that management would step up its training efforts and said the record of the skilled workers of America on the current missile program "is a shining example" of the ability of the government, labor and management to work together.

IBEW Given Awards for Training Role

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has received an award from the Labor Dept.'s Apprenticeship Bureau for outstanding service in the apprenticeship field.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman said the union also takes pride in the award of certificates to "Bill" Damon, the IBEW's first national apprenticeship director, and posthumous awards to the late IBEW Pres. D. W. Tracy and the late Marion H. Hedges, former research director. At one time Tracy was assistant secretary of labor responsible for the training program.

The certificates, signed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, cite the "achievements of American craftsmen and apprentices."

They were produced by members of two Washington, D. C., union locals, working at their own request and on their own time without pay —Banknote Engravers Guild Local 32, and Plate Printers Local 2, of the Intl. Plate Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers.

Glass Workers Strike Big Canadian Plant

Hamilton, Ont. — About 1,100 members of the Glass & Ceramic Workers went on strike at the Dominion Glass Co. here in support of wage and other contract demands.

NLRB Examiner in Ruling:

Largest Textile Mill Held Guilty Of Abusing 'Free Speech' Right

Cleveland, Tenn.—A new election has been directed by a National Labor Relations Board examiner at a Burlington Industries woolen mill here where, he ruled, the company abused its "free speech" right by threatening the plant would be closed if workers voted for a union.

Trial Examiner Joseph I. Nachman, upholding charges by the Textile Workers Union of America, found that supervisors of Burlington's Cleveland Woolen Mills Div.—formerly known as the Peerless Woolen Mills Div.—made a fair election impossible by creating fear among workers that they might lose their jobs.

The threat was a potent one, the examiner found, because the election here came shortly after Burlington had actually closed a mill at Rossville, Ga., only 30 miles away, where another union had won bargaining rights and was seeking a contract.

Nachman's ruling followed a recent NLRB decision setting "free speech" limits beyond which an employer may not go during an organizing and election period. It was the second finding in less than a year that Burlington — the nation's biggest textile manufacturer, with 112 non-union plants and only two organized ones—committed unfair labor practices by illegal coercion of its employes.

The company made a calculated attempt to "wean employes away" from the union and frustrate TWUA's attempt to organize the plant, the examiner ruled, by these actions:

- A speech by the plant manager to the 850 employes, meeting in small groups during September 1961, which the examiner called coercive because it was "framed to convey the message" to employes that their job security would be weakened if they voted for the union, "though the use of such words was carefully avoided."
- Statements by four company supervisors that employes might lose their jobs if they voted for TWUA.
- A statement by another supervisor that a worker should "just look 30 miles down the road"—a reference which could, Nachman concluded, have reference only to the Rossville plant closing.

Heavy Losses Claimed

The examiner ruled that a posted notice signed by the Burlington board chairman, the late J. Spencer Love, was not coercive. It said:

"Regret to tell you folks that our operations at Cleveland, as well as Rossville and Tifton (Ga.) have taken heavy losses over a considerable period and there are no present indications of improvement. . . . The purpose of this letter is to impress on all employes of this plant the gravity of the situation and the genuine need for all possible cooperation and better results if we are to continue operations."

Other management speeches and statements, considered in their context, were clearly coercive, the examiner ruled. Among them was the plant manager's speech saying a union would "not work to our employes' benefit" but to their "serious harm," and "it is our definite view that if the union were to come in here it would not help you."

The manager said that TWUA was the same union which tried to organize the Cleveland plant in 1957; that previously he had "worked with this same union in three other plants," and "it seems to me their main objective is to create discord and disharmony" between management and employes and the "only thing the union can actually guarantee you is that they can put you out on a strike."

Early in August the NLRB overturned a rule, in effect for almost five years, giving wide latitude to employers' verbal attacks on unions under the Taft-Hartley Act's "free speech" clause. The board said it would set aside election results where there was "substantial interference" with employes' right of a free choice, regardless of the form in which an employer statement was made.

Guilty at Rossville

A month earlier the board found Burlington guilty of unfair practices in refusing to bargain at Rossville and telling workers it would close the plant.

It ordered the nation's biggest textile chain to pay $150,000 in back wages to 1,700 Allied Industrial Workers whose jobs were lost when the mill was liquidated. Previously a federal judge had refused the board's request for an order to prevent the plant closing.

Court Backs NLRB On 'Runaway' Rule

Philadelphia—A ruling by the National Labor Relations Board that Sidele Fashions, Inc., had unlawfully "run away" from this city to Ware Shoals, S. C., has been upheld by the U.S. 3d Circuit Court of Appeals.

The decision enforces an NLRB order of last Oct. 2 directing Sidele to pay its workers for wages lost because of the moving. Only nine of 200 former employes got jobs at the new location. The board found that Sidele management's true purpose in moving was to "wrest bargaining concessions" from the Ladies' Garment Workers, with which it had a contract.

Special Delivery Union To Step Up Organizing

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Special Delivery Messengers, meeting here at their 15th biennial convention, approved a vigorous campaign of organization and authorized the appointment of additional local and regional representatives to help conduct the drive.

The delegates approved a report rejecting amalgamation with any other union but leaving the door open for a working alliance which would not deprive union members of their present craft status.

Taking note of Pres. Kennedy's recent Executive Order 1098 allowing for union recognition, the convention observed that the union had won exclusive recognition rights on a national level and local recognition at 11 of 15 regional postal offices. On this basis, delegates defined the duties of new local representatives and authorized payment of organizers' expenses.

The delegates voted for "continued zealous efforts" to secure the support of all special delivery messengers in the postal service in accordance with the union's AFL-CIO charter.

In other actions, the convention:

- Re-elected Pres. George L. Warfel, Sec.-Treas. William E. Peacock and six vice presidents. Contested races resulted in re-election of Vice Presidents Michael J. Cullen of Brooklyn and George Albert of Chicago.
- Adopted the president's report predicting more union-management cooperation in working out service problems in the best interests of workers, the government, and the public, and urging an end to "economy" cuts in the special delivery service.
- Endorsed legislation calling for the 35-hour week, time and a half pay for substitutes after 40 hours, optional retirement after 30 years of service, and an increase of $25 in the present uniform allowance of $100 a year.

The delegates made several technical changes in the union constitution and voted to hold the 1964 convention in Chicago. Speakers included Assistant Postmaster Gen. Ralph W. Nicholson, Deputy Assistant Postmaster Gen. Charles H. Ryan, James J. LaPenta, Jr., of the Post Office Bureau of Personnel, former U. S. Sen. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) and Pres. Edmund P. Tobin, Union Labor Life Insurance Co.

Members of the women's auxiliary re-elected Mrs. Elfa Bisbee of Kansas City, Mo., as president and Mrs. Lucille Peacock, Washington, D. C., secretary-treasurer.

Cases Filed With NLRB at Record Pace

New cases filed with the National Labor Relations Board in the April-June quarter of 1962 set a pace which, if continued, would result in another new record for total inflow of cases in one year.

For the quarter ended June 30, the board received 6,655 cases of all kinds—unfair labor practice charges and requests for elections. At that rate of filing, the board said, it would have an annual caseload of more than 26,600—an all-time high.

Comparable figures were 24,848 cases filed in fiscal 1962, and for each of four preceding years 22,691, 21,527, 21,633 and 16,748, an average increase of about 2,200 cases per year over the period.

The NLRB report for the quarter listed board decisions in 144 contested unfair labor practice cases, up 30 percent over the same 1961 quarter. The general counsel issued 31 percent more unfair practice complaints than in the comparable 1961 quarter—288 against employers, 87 against unions, 17 against both.

Unions won 59 percent of the 2,075 elections in which 146,300 employes balloted, compared with 54 percent in the second quarter of 1961 and 59 percent in 1962's first quarter.

The backlog of unfair practice cases and election petitions awaiting decision rose during the quarter from 448 to 488 despite efforts to reduce delays.

At United Aircraft:

IAM Scores Gain In Back Pay Fight

East Hartford, Conn.—A federal court ruling here has been hailed by the Machinists as a "major breakthrough" in nearly two years of union efforts to win reinstatement and back pay for 3,455 employes of United Aircraft Corp.

U.S. District Court Judge T. Emmet Clarie ordered the company to supply the IAM with information the union says it needs to enforce a strike settlement agreement reached in August 1960. Specifically, Clarie told United to answer 19 questions put by the union concerning the corporation's rehiring practices following the IAM strike at its Pratt & Whitney and Hamilton Standard divisions.

The decision, a union spokesman said, means that "for the first time we will be in a position to move against the company on behalf of each and every employe who participated in the strike and who has not received his or her full rights as guaranteed by that strike settlement agreement."

Under the settlement, the company promised to rehire to their original positions all strikers for whom jobs were available and to give hiring preference for four months—until January 1961—to those not rehired immediately.

United told the court that of 4,500 strikers who registered to return to work at Pratt & Whitney, 2,400 were put back in their old jobs. The company also reported that it had reinstated 655 of the 2,010 strikers who had applied for their old jobs at Hamilton Standard plants in Windsor Locks and Broad Brook.

The union's breach of contract suit charged the company with failure to maintain the preferential rehiring list, failure and refusal to provide the IAM with information to which it was entitled on the administration of the agreement, and failure and refusal to reinstate employes to available jobs.

In a companion case, the National Labor Relations Board is continuing its investigation of unfair practice charges filed by the IAM against the company, which forced the NLRB into the U.S. Court of Appeals to sustain its subpoena power.

In support of its charges against the company, IAM cited a report of U.S. Comptroller Gen. Joseph Campbell revealing that United was seeking reimbursement from the Navy for a large amount of overtime work in the post-strike period while a number of former strikers were seeking their jobs back.

The union also said the report gave evidence that rehiring by the company lagged during the period in which preference was given former strikers, but spurted sharply immediately following termination of preference.

Back pay at stake in the case could run as high as $10,000 each, plus interest, for employes refused reinstatement and up to $2,600 plus interest for those rehired at lower classifications.

AFL-CIO Challenges Agency Shop Decision

The 6th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that the so-called agency shop is illegal under the Taft-Hartley Act has been challenged by the AFL-CIO in an "amicus curiae" brief supporting the National Labor Relations Board's petition for Supreme Court review of the case.

The appeals court overruled an NLRB decision holding the agency shop to be valid in Indiana—a state with a so-called "right-to-work" law—and ordering the General Motors Corp. to bargain with the Auto Workers over such an arrangement at its nine Indiana plants.

The court held that, "right-to-work" law or not, the agency shop was illegal because Taft-Hartley gives employes the right to refrain from union activity "except to the extent that such a right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization."

Since the agency shop does not require membership, but gives the employe the option of paying the equivalent of union dues to the union representing him, the court reasoned that it was a form of union security different from the union shop and therefore not permitted by the law.

The NLRB promptly petitioned the Supreme Court for a review, charging that the appeals court decision flies in the face of 25 years of board history. The high court is now in recess, but will have the case before it when it reconvenes in October.

The AFL-CIO brief declares that it is "tortured construction" to outlaw a lesser form of union security when a greater one is allowable. Actually, it points out, the union shop itself is enforceable only as an "agency shop," since the law forbids a union to cause the discharge of a worker for any reason except refusal to pay dues and initiation fees.

While under the law a contract may not provide more in union security than membership of employes at a stated time, "nothing in the act forbids requiring less . . . than such membership," the brief observes. The limitations of the law, it argues, provide "an outer limit of union security" and not the sole permissible form. The agency shop, the brief states, "falls squarely within that perimeter."

Reciting the many contracts which now contain the agency shop—including those recently negotiated with Douglas Aircraft by the Auto Workers and Machinists—the AFL-CIO also asserts that invalidation of these agreements would have "serious consequences" for unions, workers and employers.

Terzick to Advise On Housing for Seniors

Treas. Peter Terzick of the Carpenters has been named a member of the Advisory Committee on Housing for Senior Citizens recently established in the Housing & Home Finance Agency.

The committee will provide objective opinion to the assistant administrator of the agency in charge of the Office of Housing for Senior Citizens.

ROBERT R. BRYANT
New Firemen & Enginemen Secretary-Treasurer

Scott Retires, Bryant Takes BLF&E Post

Cleveland—Sec.-Treas. Ray Scott has retired after 21 years as a major officer of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen and Robert R. Bryant, 42, has moved up to the secretary-treasurer's post.

Bryant was elected alternate to Scott at the 80,000-member rail union's convention in 1959. Bryant served as Texas state legislative chairman for the BLF&E until June 1, when he moved here preparatory to succeeding Scott.

Scott's career, as an international officer began in 1941, when he was elected editor and manager of the BLF&E magazine. The 1953 convention elected him secretary-treasurer.

Scott came from the ranks, like all other BLF&E officers. He started railroading on the Chesapeake & Ohio as a locomotive fireman in 1916 at Huntington, W. Va. He held local lodge office and was BLF&E general chairman on the C&O until 1941.

Bryant began his railroad career as a Southern Pacific fireman in El Paso, Tex., in 1941. He served 10 years as local chairman of BLF&E Lodge 135, and was elected Texas State Legislative Board chairman in 1954. He and his wife Barbara and two sons, Harry and Robert, Jr., live in Westlake, O., a Cleveland suburb.

Jobless Rate In August Up To 5.8 Percent

long-term jobless showed a slight increase over the month.

Wolfbein said two unusual factors in the August figures affected in some degree the rise in the unemployment rate: the impact of model changeovers in the automobile industry and an unexpectedly large influx of adult women into the labor force, "many of whom were prospective teachers not yet at work at the time of the survey."

He noted that during the survey week used by the Census Bureau, auto production was down to 1,800 units compared to 146,000 units in the survey week the month before. He characterized the increase in adult women in the labor force as mostly "new-job waiters," persons who had jobs opening up in 30 days but were not employed at the time of the survey.

The preliminary figures revealed, he said, an increase of about 300,000 adult women in the labor force as contrasted to an anticipated seasonal drop of 80,000.

Doherty Retires:

Keating New Chief Of Letter Carriers

Denver—Delegates to the Letter Carriers convention here unanimously elected Jerome J. Keating as president for the next two years after voicing a deeply emotional tribute to William C. Doherty, who declined re-election after 21 years as the union's president and 30 years as a national officer.

As vice president, to succeed Keating, the NALC elected James H. Rademacher, previously assistant secretary-treasurer. To fill the vacancy left by the retirement of another veteran officer, Sec.-Treas. Reuben B. Kremers, the delegates chose J. Stanly Lewis, an executive board member from Burbank, Calif.

Doherty was hailed by delegates and guest speakers alike as the man who took the helm of a bankrupt, faction-ridden organization in 1941 and steered it to unprecedented legislative accomplishments.

He was lauded, too, as the architect of the NALC's overwhelming victory in the Post Office Dept.'s nationwide union representation election earlier this year.

Postmaster General Speaks

In a dramatic demonstration of the Post Office Dept.'s policy switch under the Kennedy Administration, Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day came to Denver to present Doherty—technically still a "mailman" on leave from the Cincinnati Post Office—with the department's highest honor, the distinguished service citation.

Day, the first postmaster general in 14 years to address a NALC convention, described Doherty as "one of the great labor leaders of this country," who combined "deep dedication" to the interests of the members with "the highest integrity and equal devotion to the welfare of the nation." Day's two immediate predecessors had been almost continuously at odds with the union.

As the convention's first order of business, the delegates unanimously voted to establish a scholarship fund in Doherty's name and later they voted also to change the name of the union headquarters building in Washington, D. C., to the William C. Doherty Building.

Some 3,000 delegates and nearly as many auxiliary members attended the 43rd biennial convention of the 157,000-member union. Denver area letter carriers swelled attendance to more than 6,000 at a special convention-eve program held in the scenic Red Rock natural amphitheatre 15 miles west of Denver. Caravans of buses and cars brought the delegates from the city. Among those welcoming the group was Denver Postmaster George A. Cavender, former president of the Colorado AFL-CIO.

The union's role in winning congressional support for a pay raise this year was praised by speakers from both houses of Congress, including Senate Post Office Committee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.), Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), and Representatives James H. Morrison (D-La.), sponsor of the union-supported House bill; George P. Miller (D-Calif.), Arnold Olsen (D-Mont.) and Peter H. Dominick (R-Colo.).

Doherty's Record Lauded

Johnston noted that postal workers had received 10 pay raises during Doherty's period in office and assured the delegates that "there will be an 11th one" before Congress adjourns. He said Doherty deserved special praise for having trained an able corps of officers to take over the union's leadership.

The convention voted to continue the NALC's efforts to bring about "one big postal union" through amalgamation of all AFL-CIO-affiliated unions in the postal service.

Doherty told the delegates that he was retiring at age 60, five years before the union's mandatory retirement age, because "others of equal ability are on their way up" and "I felt it would be selfish and unfair of me to stand in the way."

"It is far better," he added, that members "should ask why their national president is retiring than for them to start asking why he isn't retiring."

Keating, who has been Doherty's chief aide and the union's legislative spokesman for many years, was a Minneapolis mail carrier until 1942, when he went to the union's national office. He is a graduate of the University of Minnesota and edited the union's monthly magazine, the Postal Record.

Coast Carpenters Ratify New Pact

San Francisco—A three-year contract covering 18,000 carpenters in four counties in the San Francisco Bay area has been signed by the District Council of Carpenters and eight local employer associations after ratification by 18 union locals.

The new agreement, retroactive to June 16, provides increased wages and benefits totaling 90 cents an hour over its three-year term. Wages move up 15 cents an hour in the first year, 23 cents in the second, 25 cents in the third.

Improved health and welfare benefits, pensions and holiday pay are estimated to total 17 cents in the first year and 10 cents in the second year.

The agreement was reached at meetings of union officials and employers in Washington, called by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

3 Federal Units Grant Exclusive Recognition

ployes voted for the IAM than had signed authorization cards.

The IAM said the first goal in collective bargaining will be negotiation of "an effective grievance procedure."

IBEW Locals Recognized

In a third step towards collective bargaining in government, the Army Corps of Engineers granted exclusive recognition to three craft units of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, including Locals 2080 and 316 in the Nashville district, and a unit covering six dams in the Omaha district represented by IBEW Local 1688.

Earlier, in the biggest union recognition agreement in the federal service outside of the Post Office Dept., the Brooklyn Metal Trades Council was granted exclusive recognition for 11,000 employes of the New York Naval Shipyard.

Meanwhile, at Seattle, Wash., where the AFGE was holding its convention, the Dept. of Agriculture signed a written contract with the union's Council of Meat Inspectors covering employes throughout the United States.

Mr. Justice Goldberg

THE U.S. SUPREME COURT occupies a unique position in the American system of government. It is the guardian of the democratic principles and the democratic structure that have given America the vigor and flexibility to press forward under ever-changing conditions to achieve leadership of the free world.

The respect, and almost awe, in which the court is held by the majority of the American people flows from the court's great traditions, which have been built and maintained over the years by outstanding justices who understand the role of the Constitution as a living document.

The nomination of Arthur J. Goldberg to the court is in the tradition of great justices. Goldberg's overriding concern as a labor lawyer, as secretary of labor, as a public figure has always been for democratic principles and procedures; for due process; for respect for the dignity and worth of the individual.

His training, his background, his intellect will serve the court well in the spirit of Holmes, Brandeis and Cardozo and bring to it a measure of warmth and understanding that will help maintain the values of our democratic heritage.

How to Get School Aid

THE SCHOOL BELLS are ringing through the land, once again summoning children back to too few schools manned by harried and underpaid teachers working in antiquated buildings with limited facilities.

The urgency of the school bell has little meaning, however, for the conservative coalition in Congress. It has effectively stymied every effort to enact federal aid to education. The inertia that has gripped the coalition-controlled Congress on education has extended even to the presumably noncontroversial measure to provide a limited degree of assistance to student-jammed colleges and universities.

For troubled parents concerned with the education of their children, with inadequate school facilities and crowded classrooms, there is an answer in November, when a new House of Representatives will be elected. A victory for candidates pledged to work and vote for federal aid to education can produce the necessary legislation and overwhelm the coalition and its callous disregard for the needs of the nation.

'The Public Be Damned'

THE ARROGANCE of big business, so candidly put on display recently by former Treasury Sec. George M. Humphrey, has come into sharper focus in the refusal by four major steel companies to turn over records in compliance with a Senate subcommittee's subpoenas.

The Senate Subcommittee on Anti-Trust & Monopoly, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), is investigating the methods of setting steel prices in terms of the industry's almost universal and uniform price increases attempted last spring and recalled in face of Pres. Kennedy's firm and courageous opposition.

The steel companies' refusal to provide the subcommittee with pertinent records and figures has barely made the daily press, radio and television in contrast to the normal stream of editorial denunciation and blanket-type coverage if any other group had defied a Senate subcommittee and in effect had told it to go chase its tail.

This defiance should not go unchallenged in this very real area of the public's interest.

'Who Does Kefauver Think He Is?'

Changing Political Orientation:

Iraqi Trade Union Movement Casting Off Communist Control

By Arnold Beichman

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — Early in September a three-man delegation of Iraqi trade unionists is scheduled to arrive in the U.S. for a month's visit. They are to be guests of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers, headed by Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers.

The arrival of the delegation is, perhaps, significant of a changing political orientation in the Middle East generally and in Iraq, specifically. A country about the size of California with a population of more than 6.5 million people, Iraq has been under a dictatorship since July 1958 when Gen. Abdul Karim Kassem overthrew the feudal monarchy and replaced it with his one-man rule.

The Soviet Union and its local Communist Party immediately moved in to help establish a Soviet satellite in the Middle East. The first object of successful attack was the brand-new trade union movement. Under the monarchy, the total union membership in the entire country was 800 in a work force of over 2.5 million. Kassem, for good and sound reasons of his own, encouraged labor organization and suddenly there were more than 250,000 members—solidly under Communist control.

Today in Iraq, the Soviet Union remains an influential participant in Iraq's economic growth and military strength. Newspapers are forbidden to attack the USSR for any reason because, by government ukase, American or British "imperialism" is Iraq's arch-enemy. Even East Germany, North Viet-Nam and North Korea have higher diplomatic status here than the U.S.

However, the Communist Party of Iraq is illegal and underground, and Communist control of the trade unions has been smashed by the government. Only five small unions in Baghdad are Communist-controlled today. Not only that, but the Iraqi Petroleum Workers were encouraged by the government to join the IFPW, and the Iraqi Foreign Office formally approved the U.S. tour of the three Iraqi unionists headed by 36-year-old Hadji Ibrahim Jawad al-Saleh, president of the General Federation of Iraqi Trade Unions (GFITU) and the Iraqi Petroleum Workers.

Jawad al-Saleh said that upon his return from America he would apply on behalf of the GFITU for membership in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Early in its four-year existence the federation's Communist leadership affiliated itself to the World Federation of Trade Unions.

The GFITU president said not only was his half-million-member organization out of the WFTU, but that a few months ago he sent a sharp protest to the Soviet trade unions for allowing an Iraqi Communist now living in Bulgaria to pose as a spokesman for Iraqi labor at a recent Soviet labor convention in Moscow.

WHETHER THE IRAQI government will allow the GFITU to join the ICFTU remains to be seen. Foreign Minister Hashim Jawad said in an interview that he doubted the Iraqi labor movement was "ready and experienced enough."

The government maintains an ironclad control over the unions by virtue of the fact that Iraq is still under martial law. Technically strikes are permitted, but when a dispute reaches the strike stage, the security police move in and politely request a postponement until they can talk things over with the employer. Recently, workers at the second largest tobacco company decided to strike against a wage cut. The security police imposed a "cooling off" period and reportedly are trying to work out a compromise.

Government control, however, does not mean that the workers never get a fair shake. So long as Iraqi labor maintains a loyalty to the regime and stays out of anti-Kassem politics, there is a surprising amount of sympathy for its demands.

Despite all the sympathy, however, wages are quite low and working conditions, except with the foreign-owned oil companies, depressing. Iraq is an underdeveloped country, potentially rich, but the potential is far from being realized. Wages run about $200 a year for unskilled workers generally. The average wage paid by the petroleum companies is about $1,500 a year. Technically the legal workweek is 46 hours but enforcement is erratic unless there is an effective union official about, and there aren't many.

Iraqi trade unionism, in contrast to unionism in Egypt, Lebanon and Syria, has yet to achieve any real status, or even modicum of independent influence. It's all too new in a country run by a jittery dictatorship. But the yearnings and striving of Iraqi's labor leaders are visibly real in trade union terms.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO MOVE very far beyond the city limits to realize we are a nation of restless people. The country is constantly on the go, whether commuting downtown from suburbia or jetting from coast to coast. But, ridiculous paradox that it is, the transportation business is sick.

Morgan

Major airlines are flying perilously in the red; only mergers, they argue, and/or government subsidies will save them. The railroads are sounding what could be a death rattle. In metropolitan areas, where 70 percent of our population lives, highway travel is chaotic. At this rate the crawling caterpillar of the traffic jam may soon replace the eagle as our national emblem.

Undeniably, one villain in this picture is that treasured American possession, the motor car, including its horrible hybrid, that behemoth, the trailer truck. Destruction by nuclear warfare may properly be a secondary worry. We are already destroying ourselves on the road in the carnage of traffic accidents.

Here are some figures to file and forget—if you can. Between the end of World War II and 1961, half a million people were killed in the U.S. on streets and highways. American battle fatalities in World War II and the Korean war combined totaled 325,000. Some 774,000 Americans were wounded in those two wars but in 15 years 10 million people have been injured in motor vehicle crashes in this country.

Cities are swiftly reaching a traffic saturation point. Soon there will be no more room for cars and trucks on the streets. Last year the Saturday Evening Post reported that traffic jams in New York City alone cost $1 billion annually in wasted time, lost sales and extra expenses. Nobody can accurately estimate yet the damage from carbon monoxide poison but the air pollution problem is rapidly coming to a head.

The volume of traffic even menaces visibility. I had a frightening experience on my way from Washington to New York driving along the New Jersey Turnpike in a rainstorm. Gigantic trucks lumbered past me, belching black fumes from their exhausts and spreading great sheets of water across the highway from their huge, heavy wheels. Each time one roared by this mixture of exhaust smoke and rain completely obliterated the view ahead. Yet these monsters are getting bigger and bigger, giving more expensive superhighways more and more punishment—without paying their fair share of the cost, to say nothing of the pollution they add to the air.

These problems of transport, traffic, public health and safety may be most acute in the vast industrial strip 100 miles wide stretching nearly 500 miles along the Atlantic seaboard from Washington to Boston. Thirty-seven million people live in this sprawling megalopolis; nearly 30 percent of the nation's manufacturing is done here; 27 percent of all federal income taxes are collected here; 21 percent of the nation's college graduates are turned out here. It's quite a little neighborhood.

To its transport crisis railroads could provide one solution. An exciting plan to use them has been hatched by Rhode Island's junior senator, Claiborne Pell, once more identified with the sedate spas of Newport and Watch Hill than government.

PELL'S TRANSPORT PLAN has already been hailed in more than 60 newspaper editorials, by planning experts, financiers and, to his surprise and delight, some railway union officials. What he proposes, quite simply, is to form a public authority composed of the District of Columbia and the eight states comprising the Washington-Boston megalopolis to run rail passenger service, leaving the profitable freight service to the railroad companies. On the four-track right-of-way between the Massachusetts capital and the national capital two tracks would be used for high-speed light-metal passenger trains, two for freight.

Financing would not be cheap. Pell figures it would cost half a billion dollars—to be raised by 30-year, 3.5 percent tax-exempt bonds guaranteed by the participating states. He points to Philadelphia and Boston as successful examples of improved rail commuter service with local government help. He makes an impressive case for his plan though Congress isn't likely to do anything with his resolution this year.

But if enough harassed travelers get the picture of swift, safe, quiet and economical transport by rail instead of the dangerous, choking traffic moil on the highways and time lost in airport buses and waiting rooms, they may flock back to the depots in larger numbers than they forsook the railroads when the automobile began to look like the answer to everything—mistaken dream though it was.

Washington Reports:

Job Program for Youth Needed To Check Rise in Unemployment

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG the nation's youth "is just about double what it is for the country as a whole," Rep. Henry Reuss (D-Wis.) pointed out in urging congressional approval of the Youth Employment Opportunities bill, one of the "must" measures listed by Pres. Kennedy in his State of the Economy message to Congress and the nation.

"That means that one out of five young men and women just out of high school finds himself unemployed," Reuss said in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations. "This is a great social as well as economic problem."

Rep. James G. Fulton (R-Pa.), also a supporter of the bill, warned that with the population increasing, the number of jobless young people will rise by 40 percent by 1965 unless action is taken to try to prevent school dropouts and find means of training or employment for youth.

Fulton, a member of the House Science & Astronautics Committee, said a million new jobs will open up in the space industries, but will require special training in electricity, radio, radar and computers.

THE PROPOSED Youth Employment Opportunities Act would give young men between 16 and 22 years of age an opportunity to take part in conservation programs for a minimum of six months and a maximum of two years. The basic wage would be $70 a month, with an additional $5 a month paid after each successive 6-month enrollment. Enrollees would get hospitalization insurance, needed clothing, transportation, quarters, meals and educational training services. Both young men and women could take part in state, county and municipal programs in hospitals and other public establishments.

Reuss compared the conservation part of the program to the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps of the '30's, asserting that the CCC at another time of high unemployment gave many young men an opportunity to be useful citizens. The new program, he declared, also would "help fight defeatism and frustration in our young people."

The program would provide employment for only 12,000 in its first year, but, Fulton pointed out, "we must make a start—unless something is done, we will face a tragic future."

Asked if the program would displace other workers, Reuss declared the bill specifically provides that employment under the act must be in addition to present jobs. Both congressmen emphasized that the bill would provide a means for on-the-job training. The measure is now pending in the House Rules Committee.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE SENATE'S TREATMENT of two of Pres. Kennedy's nominees for federal judgeships is an extreme example of abuse of power operating through the committee system and the tradition of so-called senatorial "courtesy" between members.

Thurgood Marshall, a distinguished lawyer, was appointed nearly a year ago, Sept. 23, 1961, to one of the nation's highest courts, the 2d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Former Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond was named last Apr. 16 for the U.S. Court of Custom and Patent Appeals.

Neither has yet been confirmed. Neither has yet been approved or disapproved by the Senate Judiciary Committee. And Gov. Almond has not even been given the courtesy of a committee hearing.

The explanation in each case is obvious. Judge Marshall, who is actually serving on the appellate bench because he was named when Congress was not in session, is a Negro who for years was general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Neither Chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) of the Judiciary Committee nor Subcommittee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.) has felt impelled to any celerity in confirming in a high judgeship the former NAACP counsel who argued and won the Supreme Court's school desegregation cases.

Almond is the former governor who incurred the bitter wrath of Virginia's senior Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D) by breaking down the Byrd policy of "massive resistance" to school desegregation. Byrd is apparently unrelenting in his desire for vengeance.

JUDGE MARSHALL'S confirmation is considered to be certain before adjournment. A subcommittee headed by Johnston has held hearings, and although the subcommittee report to the full committee was 3-2 against him, the votes for confirmation appear readily available in the full committee and on the Senate floor.

Southern Democratic senators who feel their political needs compel it will vote against him, but northern and western Democrats and Republicans will approve his confirmation.

In the meantime, however, Judge Marshall has been placed in the false position of sitting on the appellate bench and participating in important cases without having in fact a permanent legal title to his job. In the event Congress unexpectedly adjourned without Senate action on his confirmation, he would be compelled to leave the court within 30 days of the end of the session.

As for Gov. Almond, the Byrd vindictiveness seems ignoble beyond the ordinary range. A senator by tradition can block confirmation of a judge in his own state by declaring the appointment "personally obnoxious," but Pres. Kennedy did not name Almond to a district judgeship in Virginia. Byrd is extending the tradition to block confirmation to a District of Columbia federal court.

WORSE YET, the Virginia senator is being permitted to block confirmation without publicly declaring his opposition. Chairman Eastland has indicated merely that he has heard nothing to indicate that Byrd wants any hearings on the Almond nomination.

The prospect therefore arises that the President and Almond must decide after adjournment whether they wish to involve themselves in more of the same kind of treatment by a recess appointment—which would be perfectly legal.

Gov. Almond could then serve on the customs court all through the first session of the next Congress, but if denied confirmation he then would have to depart at the close of the session—perhaps even then without the opportunity of a committee hearing.

The Senate's power to advise and consent to the appointment of federal judges is an instrument that should be used with a sense of responsibility. It should not be abused for the private ends of members, nor should refusal to confirm a nominee be accomplished except on the basis of a public record in which the nominee has the chance to be heard in self-vindication of his career and character and the reasons for opposition are plainly stated.

House Rollcall on Public Works Bill

Here is the key rollcall vote by which the House rejected an attempt to kill the job-creating public works bill by sending it back to committee. The recommittal attempt was defeated 221-192. Democrats voted 202-44 against killing the bill; Republicans voted 148-19 for recommittal.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for recommittal was a wrong vote (W), while a vote against recommittal was a right vote (R). Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large; NV—not voting.

'The Ultimate Best':

Labor Day Speeches Stress Social Goals

Labor's role in preserving democracy and advancing its social objectives throughout the world was the central theme stressed by AFL-CIO leaders in Labor Day addresses broadcast by the major radio networks.

The trade union movement is constantly looking to new horizons and will never be satisfied with the status quo, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared in answer to those critics who suggest labor should content itself with past gains.

Labor will never be satisfied, he said, "not because we are greedy for ourselves, but because we seek the ultimate best for the society of which we are a part."

Schnitzler's address was carried by the Mutual radio network. Vice Pres. George M. Harrison spoke over outlets of the American Broadcasting Co. and Vice Pres. Joseph Beirne over the National Broadcasting Co. network.

Major portions of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's speech at the Seattle World's Fair were heard on a special Labor Day radio program of the Columbia Broadcasting System. (Story begins on Page 1.)

Schnitzler noted that if the labor movement "at any stage in its long history" had accepted things as they are, "life in America would be far poorer, far shabbier than it is today."

'Slotting In' Decried

Union members, he said, "are not satisfied with their wages because they reject the notion that they should be 'slotted in' at a certain level, eternally bound to stay put, subject only to changes in productivity or the cost of living."

Still to be won, he observed, are decent schools for "all" American children, opportunity for promising high school graduates — regardless of their economic circumstances—to develop their talents fully through higher education, "decent homes at moderate prices for our growing population" through the elimination of slums, an America "where segregation and discrimination will be forever abolished and all men will truly live like brothers."

Harrison emphasized the need for safety on this Labor Day—a kind of safety "even more important" than traffic safety.

"Our motive, our objective," he declared, "is just what we say it is —the economic safety of the American people through full employment. We believe that in the long run, only a shorter basic workweek can produce that result. . . .

Freedom in Danger

"We must achieve and maintain full employment, not only for our own well-being as Americans, not only to insure a bright future for the generations to come, but also to preserve the cause of freedom on earth. If we falter, freedom totters; if we fail, freedom will vanish."

Beirne described for his listeners what he called "the hidden side" of the labor movement, the side seldom exposed by the press to the public.

As an example, he cited the $3 million the AFL-CIO spends each year—some 23 percent of its total budget—to help the development of democratic trade unionism in other countries.

Another little-publicized project of labor, he said, is the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee which coordinates the federation's aid to public and private charitable and social service organizations and carries on many programs of its own, such as consumer counseling.

"The labor movement today is just as exciting, just as fully imbued with the pioneering spirit as it was in the early years, when our organizations were fighting desperately to survive," Beirne declared.

In other Labor Day weekend observances, AFL-CIO representatives spoke at celebrations in Lafayette, Ind.; Providence, R. I.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Worcester and Boston, Mass.; Galesburg, Ill.; Paragould, Ark., and Keokuk and Ottumwa, Ia.

In the annual ceremony at the Camden, N. J., grave of Peter J. McGuire, the Carpenters' leader credited with the inspiration for Labor Day, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James B. Carey read a message from Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. The Supreme Court justice-designate extolled McGuire for "turning the key that freed the American worker from a life of oppression and hardship."

"McGuire would be proud above all else," Carey declared, "because he would find that in this 80th anniversary year of the Labor Day he founded, we are renewing the fight for the cause he held most dear—the shorter workweek."

On Labor Day Sunday, George P. Delaney, acting director of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Country Program Affairs, gave a memorial address honoring William Green in the First Baptist Church the late president of the former AFL attended at Coshocton, O.

"Green's vision was so far-reaching and his humanitarianism so dominating in his life and work," Delaney said, "that he constantly sought a better life for all those who work, and thus for all who profit by the work of others. He was convinced that human dignity and freedom were the birthright of all."

In the nation's capital, following the celebration of the annual Labor Day mass by Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, archbishop of Washington, a wreath was placed on the statue of James Cardinal Gibbons by Bricklayers Pres. John J. Murphy.

Meany Predicts 5 Million Jobs If AFL-CIO Wins 35-Hour Week

lamation designating the day as Labor Appreciation Day at the fair and the week as Union Label Week in the state.

Union Labor Job

State AFL-CIO Pres. Joseph Davis noted that the work which had gone into erecting and operating the fair and its exhibits was performed 99.44 percent by union labor and that "not a minute" had been lost in the process through strikes or lockouts.

This, Davis said, was an example of "sensible management and sensible unions, each working in behalf of their own people" but with the public interest in mind.

A scroll presented to Meany by Ewen Dingwall, executive director and vice president of the fair, commemorated the labor record that started with a no-strike, no-lockout pledge in April 1960.

"The history of the Seattle World's Fair will have no more important nor brighter chapter than its relations with labor," the scroll said.

In other speeches, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) and Rep. Don Magnuson (D-Wash.) spoke with fervor of labor's contributions toward a better world for all mankind.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) said all America "owes a deep debt of gratitude" to the trade union movement for spurring social legislation and advancing the living and working standards of the nation. He recalled labor's progress under such late leaders as Samuel Gompers, William Green and Philip Murray, and observed that "in Meany beats their spirit."

In his address to the rally, Meany declared that "the fate of freedom" depends on America's ability to maintain its military and industrial superiority over the Soviet Union.

He warned, however, that the weapon most feared by the nation's enemies — its industrial might — "may be seriously weakened" by the slow pace of the economy and the high unemployment that has "plagued and blighted it."

Effect of Unemployment

"Unemployment feeds upon itself," he asserted. "When great numbers of people stop spending because they don't have the money to buy, more factories are compelled to shut down and more millions are thrown out of work. Before long the downward spiral dumps the national economy into a recession. Our country has now suffered from a continuous succession of recessions—one after another almost every two years—and each time it becomes harder to climb out, each time the receding tide leaves a higher plateau of unemployment than the last."

The job displacement brought on by automation and improved production methods, coupled with the postwar population rise, Meany said, means that "in order merely to stand still our national economy must in the next 10 years create at least 3 million new jobs a year."

But the nation so far has failed to measure up to this need, he added, declaring:

"I am not blaming the bankers or the industrial leaders of our country. I certainly don't believe labor is at fault. The unemployment problem clearly is bigger than both of us. It will take government action to help provide an effective long-range solution."

Basis for 35-Hour Drive

The absence of such government action, through the failure of Congress to enact the program of the Kennedy Administration to move the economy forward, compelled labor to "take whatever steps it can on its own initiative to make more jobs available to more people by spreading the amount of work that is available," Meany said.

"And we are going to work for the election of a new Congress next November that will be willing to reduce the statutory 40-hour week to 35 hours, without loss of pay, so that non-union workers can share the benefits," he declared.

He called on American workers to "live up to their responsibility" by registering and voting in the November elections, thus helping "to give the next Congress a mandate for action and progress."

U.S. Workers Urged to Advance 'Even Faster' on Organizing Front

By David L. Perlman

Seattle—Delegates to the Government Employes convention, representing 50 percent more members than the union had at its last convention two years ago, were urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to move even faster on the organizing front to "take full advantage" of the union recognition policy of a "friendly Administration."

Meany also called on the AFGE to play a larger role in labor's voter registration drive—which he emphasized does not come under the Hatch Act's ban on partisan political action by federal workers.

When unions spend their money to encourage members to vote, "they are contributing to democracy," Meany declared. There is nothing in the Hatch Act, he said, which prevents a local union from "spending its last dollar" if necessary to help get out the vote. Millions throughout the world, he asserted, would gladly "give everything they own for the right to vote for the people who govern them."

In an opening report, AFGE Pres. James A. Campbell termed the issuance of Pres. Kennedy's executive order on employe-management relations last January the start of "a new era" in the government service.

He hailed as a milestone the attainment by the union of the 100,000 mark in membership early this summer and said the total has now climbed to 109,000—a gain of more than 35,000 in two years.

A pilot project in which AFL-CIO organizers worked with members of the AFGE field staff and a volunteer committee of members helped develop new techniques in white collar organizing, Campbell said.

Delegates also heard:

- Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) predict that Congress will vote federal employes a bigger pay raise than the Administration had proposed—and that Pres. Kennedy will sign the bill.
- Sen. Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) pledge support for legislation to correct any deficiencies in the government's union-management relations policy so as "to bring collective bargaining closer to reality."
- Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., term the Administration's union recognition and collective bargaining policy the "biggest forward stride in 50 years."

Under "the new ground rules," he said, unions of federal workers will no longer have to tolerate a "papa knows best" attitude "in any level of management."

While the AFGE's full legislative program was to be acted on later in the convention, the opening session voted unanimously to wire key congressional leaders urging enactment this session of a pay raise bill, a boost in the pensions of retired employes, authorization for employes to purchase additional life insurance under the government's group program, and optional retirement after 30 years of service regardless of age.

Campbell, who has headed the AFGE since 1951, was scheduled to retire at the close of the convention, and a field of four declared candidates was in the race as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Delegates also were to elect a secretary-treasurer.

Kennedy Salutes Labor Educators

Dusseldorf, Germany—The opportunity to develop mental disciplines or to learn a new skill is a key to the new life millions of people in the developing nations "so urgently seek," U.S. Pres. Kennedy said in a message to the meeting here of the Intl. Federation of Workers Educational Associations.

"For working men and women in the world's industrial community," he said, "their opportunity lies in strengthening their education or in improving their skills. Education frees man from his individual limitations, while it assures the society of men that they may live together in freedom. The power of the mind to reflect and to deliberate frees us from those who would impose doctrine or ideology and inhibit the rights of self-expression."

Liberal Amendments Rejected:

Battered Tax Bill Passed by Senate

corporations and of citizens living abroad.

● An amendment by Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) to restore a major part of the House-approved provision for the advance withholding of federal taxes due on dividend and interest payments to investors.

The Gore amendment was termed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany "essential to tax equity and to prevent the export of jobs of American workers."

In a telegram to all members of the Senate, Meany said the Finance Committee provision "continues the practice of subsidizing overseas investment" through tax incentives, thus "cutting exports and eliminating U.S. jobs." The Gore amendment, he said, would "remove the tax incentive."

The Smathers bill also was strongly opposed by the AFL-CIO. In a letter to all Senate members, Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller charged it would "open up new loopholes" in the revenue laws "in the guise of providing equity."

Special Relief 'Wrong'

It was "especially wrong," he declared, to grant "tax relief to a special group" when Congress next year is expected to undertake a comprehensive tax reform proposal.

In its final form the Senate bill loosened the House measure's restrictions on tax deductions for lavish business entertainment expenses.

It knocked out the House section providing for taxation of foreign earnings, although retaining taxation of such earnings when acquired by "tax haven" operations through "sales" subsidiaries abroad.

It included House provisions allowing tax credits for certain business investment in new machines and plants—a section opposed by labor—even though these provisions were opposed by conservative Finance Committee Chairman Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.).

It included a section, already approved by the House but opposed by labor, permitting corporations and businessmen to deduct as business expenses the cost of lobbying for or against proposed legislation of "direct interest."

Only two substantial modifications were made in the Finance Committee bill. One came when Kerr accepted an amendment by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) to eliminate tax exemption for foreign subsidiaries of U.S. corporations that sell 10 percent or more of foreign production in exports back to the United States.

The other came with approval of an amendment by Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) knocking out tax exemption on a corporation's expenses in giving employes and stockholders information on pending legislation.

Kerr Leadership Holds

Conservative Republican and Democratic lines generally held tight under Kerr's leadership against all other amendments.

The Gore amendment, to restore the Administration proposals on taxation of foreign earnings except in underdeveloped countries, was beaten 58-to-30.

The amendment was supported by Democrats, 30-28, but opposed by all 32 Republican senators voting.

The Hartke amendment would have restored the House-approved tax withholding plan on dividend and interest payments, with an exemption for interest and dividends paid by banks and savings and loan companies. It failed on a 69-20 vote.

Ohio COPE Endorses DiSalle for New Term

Columbus, Ohio — The Ohio AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has endorsed Gov. Michael V. DiSalle (D) for re-election.

The state COPE also endorsed Democratic candidates for Congress in 18 of Ohio's 23 districts on the basis of recommendations from district COPE groups. Remaining endorsements are to be announced after consultation with local organizations.

No endorsements were made in the contests for U.S. senator and congressman-at-large.

United Garment Union Backs 35-Hour Drive

Evansville, Ind.—An increase in membership, number of locals and financial strength since the last convention in 1957 was reported by officers of the United Garment Workers at the 27th general convention here.

Evansville, Ind., Local 366 and Mt. Vernon, Ind., Local 193 were joint hosts to the convention, which in five days of meetings amended the constitution to meet legal requirements and re-elected Pres. Joseph P. McCurdy and six other general executive board members for five years. Also returned to office as general auditor was Marie Bailey, South Bend, Ind.

The delegates paid tribute to the union's retiring secretary-treasurer, Miss E. M. Hogan, who nominated Catherine Peters of Michigan City, Ind., as her successor. Miss Peters was elected without opposition.

The convention called for renewed organizing efforts in the needle trades and went on record as favoring a 35-hour work week, a federal wage minimum of $1.50 an hour, and legislation looking toward higher standards of occupational safety and equal pay for equal work.

Also adopted were resolutions favoring repeal of state right-to-work laws and opposing the "competition of cheap foreign-made goods."

The convention was addressed by Pres. John E. Mara of the Boot & Shoe Workers; Sec.-Treas. Arthur Gildea of the Brewery Workers; Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.; Pres. Dallas W. Sells of the Indiana State AFL-CIO; Executive Vice Pres. Stanley L. Johnson of the Illinois State AFL-CIO; and Pres. Edmund Tobin of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co.

NLRB Upsets 'Outside' Gate Picket Ban

The National Labor Relations Board, formally reversing a decision of the Eisenhower-era board, has dismissed an unfair labor practice complaint involving union picketing of a plant gate reserved for employes of "outside" contractors.

Following guidelines laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court, which itself reversed an appellate court order and remanded the case for additional fact-finding, a three-man NLRB panel has ruled that the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers were within their legal rights in picketing the "contractors'" gate during a 1958 strike at the Appliance Park plant of the General Electric Co. near Louisville, Ky.

The picketing was lawful, the board held, because the work being done by contractors' employes who used Gate 3A was related to GE's "normal operations" and formerly had been done by GE employes. It included repairing roads, installing shower rooms and enlarging a ventilating system.

The decision was made by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

The Supreme Court ruled in May 1961 that the picketing was lawful primary activity unless certain specified conditions existed. The board now has found that the conditions did not exist at Appliance Park. They were:

● The work done by the men who use the gate must be unrelated to the firm's normal operations.

● The work done must be of a kind that, if done when the employer was engaged in its regular operations, would make it necessary to curtail the operations.

Defunct Union Held No Bar To New Talks

● A Butte, Mont., firm committed an unfair labor practice, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled, when it refused to bargain with Operating Engineers Local 375 on the excuse that it had a valid contract with a defunct unaffiliated union whose members had voted to join Local 375.

The board's general rule entitles newly certified unions to 12 months free of interference from rivals but the rule cannot be applied in unusual circumstances such as those in the Butte case, the board decided in a 3-2 vote.

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown ruled that Rocky Mountain Phosphates, Inc., was well-informed of a change in bargaining agent and could not have had a "good faith" doubt about Local 375's majority status. To hold otherwise would "penalize" employes for exercising their right to select a bargaining representative, they said. Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom, dissenting, said the ruling will "undermine the efficacy" of NLRB certifications.

'Independent' Dissolved

An "independent" union was certified by the board in 1960 and was dissolved after months of futile negotiations on a first contract. The workers voted to dissolve the independent, to designate Local 375 as bargaining representative and to transfer the independent's treasury to Local 375.

The results were posted on the plant bulletin board and management was notified by letter.

Bias Fighters List Keys to Drive on Hate

Primary emphasis on "compliance and enforcement activities" was reaffirmed by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity as the key to its drive against discrimination.

The committee, in reaffirming its policy approach, declared that there must be recognition of the fact that "enforcement and persuasion are both essential and indivisible parts of a total program."

The committee also received a report by Theodore W. Kheel, New York attorney and former president of the National Urban League, urging the appointment of a full-time executive vice chairman as "operating head" of the committee, a more aggressive public relations program and a more adequate follow-up of Plans for Progress.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announced after the meeting that AFL-CIO unions and the committee are developing "Union Programs for Fair Practices."

Present plans, said Goldberg, vice chairman of the committee, call for signing of joint statements by union presidents and the committee later this year. The programs would essentially cover the major principles set out in the AFL-CIO civil rights resolution adopted at the 1961 convention.

Labor's Lines of Communication Urged to Build Freedom in World

"It is no idle cliche to say that freedom itself is dependent largely on the growth and health of free trade unions throughout the world," he maintained. "It is the harsh lesson of history that the first target of dictatorship — whether of the right or of the left — is the leadership of the union movement.

"But the converse is also true. Where a truly free union of workers exists and takes its proper role in the affairs of each nation, individual freedom is extended and enhanced in almost direct proportion to the strength of that union movement."

Warns on Expectations

In today's world struggle between liberty and despotism, he emphasized, "it is the labor movement that holds the real balance of power," and it must provide "both the inspirational leadership and the technical help" required for the development of strong unions.

"Most important," Knight continued, "we must not expect that in a newly liberated nation, or in a nation just touching the fringes of the 20th Century, trade unions will either rapidly or automatically reach the level of sophistication that our unions have developed.

"We must be charitable when we see evidences of nationalism taking precedence over unionism, for we have had that in our own history. And we must understand that the temptations available to new trade union leaders are perhaps even greater than those which tried our own early leaders.

"Inevitably there will be these very few leaders who will succumb, but we must be mature enough to accept these and other setbacks and go on to build anew, until a firm and solid foundation is laid under every union in the world."

Elliott, discussing mainly the U.S. domestic economy, also stressed the "increasing interdependence" of the two nations.

"I am happy to say that this concept is seldom challenged in America today," he said. "We have our quarrels over specific programs, but American isolationism, which was so formidable a force only two decades ago, has virtually dissolved.

"Our people now recognize what the labor movement has known from the beginning, that the partnership of free nations does not begin or end with a shooting war but must be maintained and strengthened, year after year, in the endless war against tyranny and oppression."

He told the TUC delegates that the AFL-CIO is "worried" about the U. S. economy because it has not grown fast enough to create full employment or to open up new jobs as old ones are wiped out by automation and technological change. Even in the "most unlikely event" that Congress should approve the economic measures the AFL-CIO has proposed, he added, "we are afraid the solution would not be a permanent one."

It is for that reason, Elliott explained, that the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted to campaign for the 35-hour week without a cut in take-home pay.

"We are convinced that this fundamental change is essential," he said, "if, in the long run, there are going to be enough jobs for a growing population in an increasingly automated industrial world."

Nixon Recruits Employers To Swing Worker Votes

Panel Urges Aerospace Union Shop

By Eugene A. Kelly

Los Angeles — The Machinists and the Auto Workers have set a new deadline of Sept. 22 for a strike of 100,000 aerospace workers and called a joint meeting of union negotiators here Sept. 15 to make strike preparations.

The action came as a presidential panel recommended settlement terms, including a union shop at each of the four firms involved—North American, Ryan Aeronautical, Lockheed and General Dynamics - Convair—subject to a two-thirds vote of approval by the workers involved.

Spokesmen for the IAM and the UAW expressed disappointment at the wage increase recommendations but agreed to use the proposals "as a basis for negotiations directed toward speedy settlement."

Negotiations nevertheless appeared deadlocked after bargaining sessions requested by the panel. An IAM leader said there has been no progress in talks and, "unless something changes, there will be an aerospace strike Sept. 22." UAW Regional Dir. Paul Schrade said no further meetings are scheduled although the union is willing to "meet any time to bring about an honorable settlement."

The three-man board appointed by Pres. Kennedy July 21 recommended, in addition to the union shop, general wage increases following the settlement reached by the two unions in mid-July with Douglas Aircraft Co.—5 to 8 cents an hour retroactive to July 23, 1962; another 6-8 cents in 1963, and an additional 6-9 cents in the final year of a three-year contract.

The report of the Aerospace Board was made by Dr. George W. Taylor, chairman; Ralph T. Seward and Charles C. Killingsworth. All are veteran arbiters and conciliators.

They said that after their recommendations were made to the parties, three companies agreed to resume talks and to bargain on all the issues, including the union shop, but that Lockheed "held to its fixed position" against a union-shop clause. As of Sept. 10 the parties were deadlocked again, the board reported.

The board's union-shop formula is this:

- The issue is to be settled by a vote of the employes in each bargaining unit, with a two-thirds majority of those voting required to validate a union shop agreement.
- The vote to be on acceptance or rejection of a clause requiring,

Asks Backdoor Aid In Plants, Offices

San Francisco—An attempt to recruit employer support in a "back-door" campaign of propagandizing workers politically is being used in Richard M. Nixon's campaign for governor of California.

Nixon, the former Vice President who was defeated for President in 1960 by John F. Kennedy, is seeking a comeback this year as Republican candidate for governor against Democratic incumbent Gov. Edmund G. Brown.

The Nixon attempt to approach workers through their employers is rated by observers here and in Washington as one of the most audacious efforts at political "payroll propaganda" since 1936. In that year, hundreds of thousands of factory workers were subjected to employer - circulated campaign leaflets, stuffed in their pay envelopes, denouncing Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's newly - enacted Social Security Act.

Thomas L. Pitts, executive secretary-treasurer of the California State AFL-CIO, has labeled the Nixon project "a totally immoral and vicious attempt to win votes by economic intimidation."

The documented Nixon for Governor Committee's "back-door" effort to get worker votes for the Republican nominee with the surreptitious assistance of company executives includes these features:

- An appeal to executives to "pick out one or more" employes willing to help form pro-Nixon "Win in November" groups in company offices and industrial plants."
- An apparent agreement by the executives to provide names and addresses of workers, so that the management - selected "volunteer" pro-Nixon employe groups will have "the opportunity of mailing Nixon literature to the homes of all fellow employes."
- An assurance to businessmen that their role in setting up the "volunteer" pro-Nixon groups of employes will not be revealed.

New York Teachers Win Pact

New York—The United Federation of Teachers has reached an agreement with the New York Board of Education on an initial contract giving 40,000 teachers numerous improvements in benefits and a union grievance procedure with binding arbitration.

UFT Pres. Charles Cogen said the contract, agreed to after eight months of bargaining, is the first of its kind in a metropolitan school system and represents "a victory for teachers everywhere" because it will stimulate other teacher locals to press for union-negotiated agreements.

Cogen and 11 other members of the UFT negotiating committee will recommend approval to the union board of delegates and to union members who will vote approval or rejection in a referendum to be completed Sept. 26.

Negotiators for the union and the board initialed the seven-page agreement and, Cogen said, the Superintendent of Schools has agreed to recommend it for implementation later this month.

Incorporated into the pact are salaries and budget increases approved by the board last June 21. The schedule for the school year just begun provides a minimum

Mrs. Bridges Loses In New Hampshire

New Hampshire Republicans turned down a bid by Mrs. Doloris Bridges, widow of the late Sen. Styles Bridges, for nomination to her husband's four-year unexpired term, and knocked out Gov. Wesley Powell, onetime Bridges protege, who was seeking an unprecedented third term.

In Georgia, Democrats in the 5th Dist. (Atlanta) forced nine-term Rep. James C. Davis into a runoff primary Sept. 26, and in the statewide contest smashed the comeback hopes of former Gov. Marvin Griffin, self-styled bitter-end segregationist.

GOP Rep. Perkins Bass beat Mrs. Bridges and two other opponents, interim Sen. Maurice J. Murphy, Jr., who was appointed by Powell, and Rep. Chester Merrow. Mrs. Bridges, citing the narrowness of the Bass plurality, indicated she might seek a recount, but the results were expected to stand up.

Powell was defeated for the GOP nomination by State Rep. John Pillsbury, whose victory ended Powell's hope for strengthened state political power and possible national attention.

In Georgia, where Democrats voted for the first time in half a century without a unit rule giving voters in small counties greater influence than city voters, Griffin was swamped by State Sen. Carl E. Sanders, a moderate on race issues.

Davis, a power in Congress because of his seniority, trailed slightly behind a young Atlanta lawyer, Charles L. Weltner, but two minor candidates got sufficient votes to require the runoff two weeks later.

A few days earlier in New York, Rep. Herbert Zelenko, a Democrat running without Liberal Party endorsement, was beaten for renomination by Rep. William Fitts Ryan. Ryan and Zelenko were put into the same district by a reapportionment law

IBEW Urged To Step Up Job Training

By John M. Barry

Montreal—A two-level approach to the challenges of the space age — through collective bargaining and education—was emphasized by Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in his keynote address to the IBEW's 27th Convention here.

To meet those challenges "we must study and train, and train some more," Freeman told the 2,500 delegates.

"The future belongs to those who prepare for it," he declared.

In calling for renewed stress on the training aspects of the union's program, the IBEW president expressed pride in the number of members already engaged in skill-

August Rise in Employment Fails To Match Seasonal Expectations

The number of workers on non-farm payrolls and in manufacturing failed to increase in line with seasonal expectations in August and the workweek declined two-tenths of an hour on a seasonally adjusted basis, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The department's detailed report on employment and unemployment showed an increase of 225,000 in August in non-farm employment as against an anticipated increase of 300,000. This resulted in a drop in the seasonally adjusted number of non-farm payroll workers from July to August and a similar drop in production workers on manufacturing payrolls.

The workweek, which was expected to rise slightly between July and August, remained unchanged. Applying the yardstick of seasonal variation, it dropped from 40.4 hours in July to 40.2 hours in August.

The detailed report followed by a week the department's announcement that the jobless rate jumped from 5.3 percent of the labor force in July to 5.8 percent in August, the sharpest rise in 20 months. The department had anticipated a 450,000 drop in unemployment in August but the jobless declined by only 86,000 to 3.9 million.

Dr. Seymour Wolfbein, the department's manpower expert, in reply to queries said he expected the unemployment rate would average between 5 and 5.5 percent for the rest of the year.

In another report the Labor Department announced that the number of major industrial areas with 6 percent or more unemployment dipped from 48 in July to 47 in August, bringing this category to the lowest since the summer of 1960.

There were three changes in the Mill Closing Threats Cited:

TWUA Challenges Burlington On 3d NLRB Election in Year

Threats by Burlington Industries, Inc., to close a mill if a union won an election have led, for the third time in a little over a year, to a union petition asking the National Labor Relations Board to set aside the results of the votes.

The latest such petition was filed by the Textile Workers Union of America on the ground that management interference made a fair election impossible at the Vinton, Va., weaving mill of the nation's largest textile chain.

The interference, Dir. Boyd E. Payton of the TWUA's upper South division said, included talks by supervisors to every worker about the possibility of the mill closing; posting on a company bulletin board, under glass, of a picture of a closed mill entwined by weeds and cobwebs bearing a caption, "Don't Let This Happen Here"; and promises of a special party and a picnic if the union was defeated. The union lost, 182-226, and the celebrations were held.

"They really threw the book at us this time," said Payton. "It was a thorough brainwashing."

The company tactics that smashed union organizing attempts at two other Burlington plants have been cited earlier by both the union and NLRB attorneys in a court petition for an injunction to halt unfair labor practices. The election was held while the petition was pending in U.S. District Court and now, the union charges, all the warnings of illegal company actions have been borne out by the facts.

The NLRB and union charged Burlington interfered with its employes' legal rights by these actions:

- Mailing to all employes, posting copies on bulletin boards and reading to all workers a letter threatening "serious harm" to the firm if they became unionized.
- Telling employes directly and by radio and newspaper, in the weeks before the election, that the company had dropped plans to renovate a nearby plant because of the union organizing drive at Vinton.
- Intimidating workers through the actions of 14 supervisors, who called employes into their offices, questioned them about union activities or sympathies; threatened them with plant closing and discharge, and requested them to report to the company all union activities.

Charges against the company were filed by the TWUA July 6, followed by the NLRB's petition for an injunction in August. The election was held Aug. 31.

The Burlington record also covers the closing of a large woolen mill at Rossville, Ga., after the Allied Industrial Workers won an election in mid-1961, and the layoff of 1,700 workers. Unfair practice charges were filed and management agreed to pay $150,000 to the laid-off workers.

Shortly after the Rossville plant closed, employes of an affiliated plant at nearby Cleveland, Tenn., were reminded of the plant-closing danger so effectively, TWUA charged, that they voted against the union in another election. An NLRB examiner has recommended that this election be set aside and that Burlington be ordered to stop interfering.

TWUA also has cited its experience in organizing two Adler Hosiery mills owned by Burlington in Cincinnati. Shortly after the NLRB held a hearing to determine if an election should be held, management laid off the workers and shipped the machinery to another plant in the South.

The union urged the NLRB to move for a federal injunction, but the agency said it did not have sufficient evidence of a law violation.

Burlington Industries Hit on Long Record

Burlington Industries, hit for unfair labor practices at its Cleveland, Tenn., plant in a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner's report, has had until recently an almost unbroken record of success in avoiding contractual relations with unions, according to John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the Textile Workers Union of America.

He cited this record:

TWUA has won at least 18 elections in Burlington plants over a 15-year period but has been able to get only one signed contract—in a ribbon plant that was later liquidated.

When TWUA won an election in 1939 at a Burlington plant in Covington, Va., the company moved part of the operation to Statesville, N. C. The Covington mill remained empty until 1942 when these things happened: TWUA won a new election, the employer dismantled some of the recently installed machinery and packed it for shipping. The union tried for two years to negotiate a contract while 90 looms stood idle, and ultimately the mill was abandoned.

TWUA has appealed to the courts and the NLRB to halt plant closings where the company appeared to be evading its bargaining responsibilities. Two courts refused to take that action. The NLRB ordered severance pay in a Rossville, Ga., case.

Edelman listed one exception to past Burlington practices: Burlington took over unionized cotton mills a few months ago in two southern states and has been dealing normally with two unions that had contracts there.

Labor Dept. Approves Retraining Projects

The Labor Dept. has announced approval of 70 job retraining projects in 11 states—the first fruits of the Manpower Development & Training Act passed by Congress last March. An additional 107 projects have been given preliminary approval.

Acting Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the 177 projects are expected to provide training in 51 needed skills for 8,113 persons living in 89 areas of heavy unemployment. Additional proposals thus far submitted by states would, if approved, boost the number of trainees by more than 4,000.

Funds for the labor-backed program—$70 million for the current fiscal year, a 30 percent slash in the amount authorized—were only recently made available in an appropriations bill. Congressional delay in voting the money set back the start of the program from its anticipated July 1 date.

"This is an extremely important attack on the nation's unemployment, especially long-term unemployment," Wirtz said. "This is not going to be training for training's sake. It is training with a purpose. Before any project is approved, there must be a reasonable assurance that there will be a job waiting for the worker when he completes his training."

The program, he added, is designed to qualify for employment "persons who could not be expected to obtain full-time jobs with their present skills."

Pennsylvania had 31 projects in the first group followed by Michigan with 11 and Maryland with seven. Other states represented are Indiana, Wisconsin, Colorado, Rhode Island, Mississippi, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Texas. Training given covers a wide range of occupations including auto mechanic, draftsman, welder, office machine repairman, operating room technician, stenographer and salesman.

Unemployed trainees who are heads of households and have at least three years of previous work experience are entitled to allowances equal to either the average unemployment benefit in the trainee's state or the amount of unemployment compensation he would receive if he were not in training—whichever is higher.

Benefits can be paid for up to a year of retraining. Additional transportation and subsistence allowances may be paid workers accepted for training outside of their home communities.

Under the three-year program Congress authorized, the federal government will pay the full cost of the retraining until June 30, 1964. Thereafter the states must pay half the cost.

The law gives the Labor Dept. responsibility for determining the occupations in which training shall be given, choosing the trainees and helping to place them in jobs after they have completed their training. The Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare arranges with the states and communities for the actual training.

Free Labor Institute Fills Education Post

Sam Haddad, a Pennsylvania state mediator since 1960 and formerly president of a 1,500-member local of the Steelworkers in New Castle, Pa., has been named education director of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

COPE Leaflets Set For Distribution

Two new register-and-vote leaflets are now available for mass distribution by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

Looking for Your Voice? is Publication No. 124 and deals primarily with registration. Publication No. 125, A Brighter Future, accentuates voting, though both deal with both subjects. They may be ordered by number from COPE at 815 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. There is no charge for the leaflets in any quantity.

USWA Wins 21 Cents In Copper Settlement

Salt Lake City—A strike-averting agreement reached recently by the Steelworkers and Kennecott Copper Corp. will bring contract benefits of more than 21 cents an hour, according to union estimate, to 2,700 workers in seven Utah and Arizona locals.

A new two-year contract, reached as the union was preparing to walk out, is retroactive to July 1 for clerical, technical, maintenance and production workers covered by USWA contracts.

Michael J. Soldren and Orville Larson headed the union bargainers. They said the biggest single gain is a company agreement to pay the cost of all employe contributions for insurance, health and welfare benefits, including Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage. All retirees will get the same medical benefits as workers, plus life insurance coverage.

The contract also provides for wage hikes of 6 cents an hour this year, and another 6 cents next July 1; pay increment increases of one-eighth cent an hour per year between job classes; elimination of wage inequities between the Utah and Arizona divisions; an inequity increase for groups of workers at Hayden and Ray, Ariz., and a uniform sick leave plan covering all USWA-represented workers.

Negotiations have started on a first agreement between the USWA and the Anaconda Co. for the Anaconda, Mont., installation.

TRADE UNION EDUCATION was the central topic of a three-day training conference for 25 presidents and education committee chairmen of Minnesota central labor bodies. Participants are shown above with the conference faculty, drawn largely from the State AFL-CIO and the labor education program of the University of Minnesota's Industrial Relations Center, which conducted the sessions.

Telegraphers Victims:

'Gang-Up' Charged In Railroad Strike

Leaders of five railroad operating unions have charged the industry with "ganging up" against the Railroad Telegraphers on strike against the Chicago & North Western Railway for a fair job-protection agreement.

Vowing that the "gang-up" will not succeed, the five officials quoted management spokesmen as saying the industry is "100 percent" behind the C&NW and saying the objective was against a "job freeze" of any kind.

The strike, which started Aug. 30, is not for a "job freeze," said Grand Chief Roy E. Davidson of the Locomotive Engineers and Presidents H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, W. P. Kennedy of the Trainmen, Neil P. Speirs of the Switchmen and Louis J. Wagner of the Conductors.

They said the strikers are seeking, instead, the type of protective agreement recently put into effect on the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Negotiators for the Rail Telegraphers and railroad management moved their talks from Chicago to Washington at the request of Acting Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, who urged a prompt settlement.

Pres. George E. Leighty of the Railroad Telegraphers said the union has agreed to settle for less than its original proposal and that management has at no time since the dispute began in 1957 actually submitted a definite offer to the union.

Charging that management has tried to "brainwash" shippers, the public and the press, Leighty said:

"We are not seeking veto power. We are not seeking a job freeze. We do not insist on retention of useless positions for employes who have no work to perform.

"Our union is seeking from the North Western the same kind of agreement it has on the Southern Pacific. This provides an orderly procedure and timing for job abolitions plus protective conditions for those adversely affected by job changes."

Rail unions will hold a public rally Sept. 19 at Manhattan Center, New York City, in support of their campaign against "devastating changes" in railroad working rules, and against managements' "merger mania." Speakers will include Gilbert, Pres. Michael Fox of the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes' Dept.; Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), and Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks.

Luncheonette Manager
Rose's Store #6
Algonquin Manor Shopping Center
Louisville,Ky.

Dear Mrs.Ashcraft;

Your services are no longer needed.Effective 6:00 P.M. August 24,1962.You are hereby discharged for encouraging union activities,and openly displaying,on your attire,not one but several union buttons.

Yours truly,

T.O.Andrews
Manager
Rose's Store #6

THIS LETTER FIRING a Louisville worker for "encouraging union activities" and "openly displaying union buttons" has been filed by the Retail Clerks with the National Labor Relations Board as evidence that a variety store committed an unfair labor practice. The letter was sent by the manager of a store the union was organizing.

Sept. 22 Deadline Set For Aerospace Strike

as a condition of employment, that all employes seek union membership by tendering periodic dues and initiation fees or, in case of those with religious objections, an equivalent amount to a recognized charity or an appropriate employe benefit fund.

- The maintenance of membership provisions of current agreements to remain in effect until the vote, and will be continued if the union shop provision is not approved.
- The union-shop clause, if approved, will take effect at the end of the first payroll period following the election.

The board also recommended that unsettled economic issues be dealt with in collective bargaining, and that a layoff benefit plan now in effect be continued for the term of the new contract—provided that, effective as of last July 23, each company contribute 2 cents an hour to a fund to provide improved layoff benefits when the present plans terminate.

The Taylor board made supplemental recommendations on disputes between the unions and two other firms—Aerojet-General with the IAM and Ling-Temco-Vought, Inc., with the UAW.

The same economic settlement formula was proposed as for the other firms. A union shop already is in effect, the board said, at Aerojet-General. State "right-to-work" laws prohibit the union shop in Texas and Georgia, and the board said that portion of its formula would not apply at Ling-Temco-Vought in Dallas, nor at Convair plants in Forth Worth or the Lockheed plant in Marietta, Ga.

The unions first set a strike deadline of July 22 at the four major aerospace firms but postponed it 60 days at Pres. Kennedy's request.

Earlier this year the IAM and the UAW, meeting to plan joint objectives, had agreed to make an all-out effort to get "catch up" raises for industry workers whose average wages are below the levels of other big industries, and a union shop.

The agreement with Douglas provides an agency shop, or a union shop if the agency shop is found to be illegal.

Anti-Union Firm Puts It In Writing

Louisville, Ky.—When management fires a worker for union activities, it rarely admits it. But the manager of Rose's Variety Store No. 6 here has put it in writing.

The evidence, in the form of a letter to Mrs. Captolia Ashcraft, has been filed by the Retail Clerks with the National Labor Relations Board along with a complaint that Manager T. O. Andrews committed an unfair labor practice by interfering with her right to join the Clerks and by discharging her for union activity.

The letter, dated Aug. 24, notified Mrs. Ashcraft as follows:

"Your services are no longer needed. Effective 6 p.m. Aug. 24, 1962. You are hereby discharged for encouraging union activities, and openly displaying, on your attire, not one but several union buttons."

The Rose chain, with headquarters in Henderson, N. C., has 151 stores in the South. When the Retail Clerks started organizing at two stores here, management raised wages 25 cents an hour and boosted the workweek from 36 hours to 40, according to Mrs. Nancy Von Bokern, RCIA representative.

Besides filing with the labor board, the union has proposed that management hold short courses for its supervisors—in labor law, letter writing and labor economics.

At issue in the NLRB case is Mrs. Ashcraft's employe status. The union claims she is a non-supervisory sales person, but Rose management asserts she was a luncheonette manager.

Landmark Contract Won by N.Y. Teachers

salary of $5,300 a year for beginning teachers at the bottom of the experience rating ladder up to a top of $9,970 in the 14th year, with a super-maximum for day academic and day vocational high teachers ranging from $6,575 to $10,445 for those serving 15 years or more.

The union said a few locals, in districts with less than 1,000 teachers, have written contracts providing union recognition as their principal benefit, but that none approaches the agreement here in comprehensiveness.

The UFT won exclusive representation rights for all teaching employes in a citywide referendum last December. Its victory followed several years of struggle to weld all teacher groups into one strong unit. That period of struggle included two walkouts by union teachers.

Principal benefits of the new agreement are:

- The school board recognizes the union as the exclusive bargaining representative for classroom teachers.
- The board has agreed to allocate $6,023,942 from its budget for more teachers and teacher aides to reduce the teaching load, to provide fewer class periods and to reduce large-size classes.
- New aides will be provided in specified school divisions to relieve teachers of non-teaching clerical and "police" chores.
- Teachers in the elementary schools are guaranteed a duty-free lunch period of 50 minutes.
- Seniority shall govern in the employment of regular substitute teachers.

Other benefits include improvements in sick pay, death benefits, sabbatical leave for study or rest, legal assistance for teachers in assault cases, and pay for injuries received in line of duty.

The contract contains a no-strike clause but the union said, in a statement mailed with a copy of the agreement to all teachers, that the prohibition is for one year only and "we have not renounced our right to take whatever action we deem to be most effective" in support of negotiations for a new contract when this agreement expires next June 30.

Stage Employes Convention Sets Organizing, Job Expansion Goals

Las Vegas, Nev.—Delegates to the 46th biennial convention of the Theatrical Stage Employes have launched an ambitious program of progress for the union and the industry to provide more employment opportunities for more members.

In the report of Pres. Richard F. Walsh to the 1,200 delegates here, great emphasis was placed on an organizational drive designed to bring all workers in theaters throughout the country under the IATSE banner. Another area explored at the parley is a plan to open the door to pension coverage for smaller locals in particular and to improve pension programs existing in the larger locals.

Walsh's report also referred to an industry anti-trust decree which he said is hurting motion picture theaters by placing roadblocks in the way of expansion, with resulting job curtailment. Walsh called upon the Dept. of Justice and the courts to give relief from judgments and interpretations growing out of charges of restrain of trade.

The report also covered such items as a new studio opened in Canada, membership of IATSE in the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, improved safety measures in the industry, recent labor laws and decisions, political action and a comprehensive report on regional activities. The convention is also expected to consider problems growing out of the practice of some producers making so-called "runaway films" abroad.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany lauded the union for its "splendid record in the entertainment industry" and expressed confidence that delegates could successfully meet new problems in the field.

He warned, however, that a much broader problem faced the entire labor movement and the country in the current international crisis. Labor, as the largest organization of private citizens in the country, has a deep responsibility to maintain our present type of democratic government, Meany declared.

"This does not mean we are satisfied, we will continue to press for better wages, better conditions and stronger job security," he said. But above all, labor must use all of its influence to see that the U.S. is kept "militarily strong enough to resist the type of Soviet aggression which threatens the entire world."

Labor must also fight, the AFL-CIO president said, to keep our space program moving "at any cost" and to keep the U.S. economy prosperous. This latter objective is lagging and "quick, aggressive action" is needed to meet the growing unemployment threat.

The best way to do this, Meany said, is to give the Administration a Congress it can work with, and toward this end he urged all-out labor political participation.

C. A. Kidwell Dies; Leader in Indiana

Washington, Ind.—Charles A. Kidwell, secretary-treasurer of the former Central Labor Union here for many years and holder of the same office in the Daviess County AFL-CIO from the time of merger until he retired in October 1960, died at the St. Paul Hermitage, Beech Grove, Ind. He was 82.

Ashbrook Retires From Boilermakers

Kansas City, Kan.—Earl B. Ashbrook, a veteran of more than 50 years of activity with the Boilermakers, has retired as the union's director of publications.

He became editor of the Boilermakers Journal in October 1948 and was named director of publications at the 1961 convention.

CWA Hits Hoffa Role in Raiding

The Communications Workers predicted overwhelming defeat of Teamster efforts to raid CWA members of the Western Electric installation unit, declaring that under "Hoffa leadership" the union fails to meet the "very minimum standards of decent American trade unionism."

The CWA executive board adopted unanimously a resolution charging that under the presidency of James R. Hoffa the Teamsters union is being destroyed.

"The Teamsters Union, under its present leadership" said the CWA board, "is guilty of repeated acts of attempted strike-breaking, unwarranted jurisdictional raiding and lack of decency, candor and trade union morality in its relations with members of the Teamsters union and of other unions."

TAKE-HOME PAY and purchasing power of factory production workers fell off between June and July, the Labor Dept. recently reported. The reasons: a reduced workweek, to some extent seasonal, and a rise in the cost of living. Take-home pay—gross earnings minus federal income and social security deductions—averaged $85.53 for a worker with three dependents and $77.86 for a worker without dependents; purchasing power or "real" spendable earnings totaled $81.07 and $73.80, respectively.

Job Increase in August Less Than Seasonal

150 major areas measured: two moved from the 6 to 9 percent jobless range to from 3 to 6 percent—Newark, N. J., and Evansville, Ind. The Gary-Hammond-East Chicago, Ind., area moved to the 6 to 9 percent range.

The department's job report disclosed that overtime remained "relatively high" in August, averaging 2.8 hours per week, unchanged from July.

The monthly analysis noted that non-farm payroll employment has "shown virtually no change over the past three months," and that "trade, finance, service and government have been the principal contributors both to the over-the-year and the recovery-period gains" in employment.

Manufacturing employment, at 16.9 million in August, was still 200,000 short of pre-recession levels, Wolfbein noted, although 800,000 higher than at the trough of the 1960-61 recession.

He ascribed the drop in hours on a seasonally adjusted basis to the decline in workweeks in steel and auto. In automobile production the workweek dropped a full hour from July to August due to model changeovers and a decline in production. The workweek in steel dropped two-tenths of an hour to 39.2, continuing a gradual trend downward.

Average hourly earnings dropped 2 cents an hour to $2.37.

Pre-Tax Profits Up

In contrast to the jobs report, Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges told a news conference that corporate profits before taxes had increased in the second quarter of the year to a seasonally adjusted rate of $50.9 billion. The record for the quarter was set in 1959 at $51.5 billion.

A report on profits from the Securities & Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission for manufacturing companies showed a 16 percent increase after taxes in the second quarter of 1962 over the first quarter. This report also placed the spring months as second best in history, topped only by the second quarter of 1959.

KEY ROLES in the National Medical Association's convention decision to support health care for the aged under social security financing were played by Dr. John A. Kenney, Jr., left, president of the NMA, and Dr. Kenneth W. Clement, president-elect of the nationwide organization of Negro physicians.

IBEW Wins Arbitration:

'Textbook' of Anti-Unionism Seen in Mississippi Case

Greenville, Miss.—The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers recently won an arbitrator's ruling that the Mississippi Power & Light Co. here discriminated against an employe when it transferred him to another town for accepting re-election as president of the Greenville AFL-CIO and for assisting other unions in their organizing drives.

The employe is Robert E. Thompson, electric meterman for 13 years at Greenville and then at Jackson, Miss., where management transferred him last Nov. 20 because of his "outside activities."

The arbitrator's decision came at the close of a two-year period in which businessmen and industrialists fought to defeat union organizing attempts here with "citizens committees" and sizeable newspaper ads carrying "open letters" denouncing union representatives as "outsiders" working to prevent industry from moving into Greenville.

Although the union won, the community and company harassment of Thompson and of union organizing efforts is rated by observers as almost a textbook example of the devices used in some southern areas to coerce and intimidate local workers who are potential union members.

Thompson is a member of IBEW Local 985. One of the power company officials—J. M. Hinds, manager of the Greenville division—was active as president of the Industrial Foundation of the Greenville Chamber of Commerce, a central anti-union group.

Company Blamed

Said Howard W. Wissner of Tulane University, chairman of the arbitration board which settled the dispute when the IBEW invoked the arbitration section of its contract with the utility:

"The company's action in transferring Thompson interjected the company into the controversy on the side of the anti-union forces."

By its actions, the arbiter found, management violated IBEW contract sections providing that it would not interfere with the free choice or the actions of any employe in union matters and would carry out in good faith "the spirit as well as the letter" of the agreement, especially the "company's commitments as to no discrimination."

Wissner ruled that Thompson should be reinstated to his former position and compensated for extra expenses such as rent, telephone and auto mileage between Greenville and Jackson. Management has complied with the ruling.

The arbiter's report cited this background:

In mid-1960 the Mississippi State AFL-CIO and local union officials decided to revive the Central Labor Union at Greenville. Thompson was elected by his union, IBEW Local 985, to serve as a delegate and then was chosen as president of the city central body.

The anti-union campaign soon began raging, Thompson was first warned about his activities, then was given the transfer order.

Ads assailing unions and "outsiders" were printed in the Delta Democrat-Times, Greenville, on 10 dates between May 16, 1960, and Nov. 5, 1961. During that period the unions lost three representation elections.

A full-page 1960 ad, addressed to the employes of the Mosco Screw Co., urged:

Signed by 250

"VOTE NO . . . and bring 1,000 new factory jobs to Greenville in the next 12 months. If you vote 'Yes' you can kiss them goodbye.

"Industries move South to escape union pressures. Let's keep Greenville a good place in which to live and work."

Names of more than 250 individuals and business firms were appended. They included the Delta Department Store, Greenville Lumber Co., Greenville Studebaker Co., the Washington County Savings & Loan Co.

The union lost the 1960 election but another union won, 63-32, two years later.

Another ad, with 460 names of "fellow citizens," ran in the Democrat-Times shortly before employes of the U.S. Gypsum Co. voted against union representation. It made these assertions:

"Industries are leaving the North to escape the practices of . . . unions . . . The union can give Gypsum employes nothing but false promises and propaganda for which they are charged dues and high assessments . . . Vote NO on Friday and guarantee a better living."

The Atkins Saw division of Borg-Warner Industries, which moved from Indianapolis into a new plant leased by the community, proclaimed in a half-page ad printed Oct. 22, 1961, that in June 1960 the people of Greenville invited Atkins Saw to come here, that 500 people "now have steady work at wages and with benefits as good as any in Greenville."

It warned that "now Greenville is faced with a new challenge from an invasion by a group of OUTSIDERS." It signed itself "Atkins Saw, a Greenville industry."

In an election at Atkins last May, employes voted for the Steelworkers, 151-140, with 28 votes challenged by the union.

Delaney Dies; Head of Operating Engineers

Westport, Conn.—Joseph J. Delaney, president of the Operating Engineers, died of a heart attack at his summer home here. He was 65.

A member of his union since 1919, he helped organize New York Local 15 in 1920 and was its business agent for nearly 40 years. He was elected a general vice president of the union in 1940, secretary-treasurer in 1957, and president in 1958 following the resignation of William E. Maloney.

A resident of the Bronx in New York, he also was an outstanding figure in local and state labor circles and was a vice president of the former New York State Federation of Labor from 1939 until the State AFL-CIO was established. He was a lifetime friend of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

In a wire to Sec.-Treas. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, Meany and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler hailed the "exceptional loyalty and dedication of Pres. Delaney to the ideals of the working man" and declared his loss both to the union and the labor movement will be felt greatly.

Schnitzler, in a telegram to his widow, Mrs. Mary Delaney, expressed "heartfelt sorrow" to the family, saying "his dedication and loyalty to the working men and women of America will long be remembered, and his loss will be felt deeply."

JOSEPH J. DELANEY

Also surviving are two sons, William, of the Bronx, and Joseph, Jr., of Norwalk, Conn. Funeral services were held in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, with burial in Gate of Heaven Cemetery.

Hemisphere Newsmen Open Panama Office

Bogota, Colombia—The Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations has announced it will establish a headquarters in Panama City in November as a Latin American base for technical assistance to its affiliates.

Space for the headquarters has been offered by the Sindicato de Periodistas de Panama in its Casa del Periodista. Staffing the center as IAFWNO inter-American representative will be Richard P. Davis, whose services were offered by the American Newspaper Guild.

Davis is a former ANG vice president and is on leave from his job at the Baltimore Evening Sun.

The announcement came at a meeting of the IAFWNO executive committee following the federation's second congress here, which was opened by Guillermo Leon Valencia, new president of Colombia.

Delegates representing newspapermen from 23 nations in the Americas protested recent violations of press freedom in the Western Hemisphere, issuing a special plea for the lives of two Cuban journalists scheduled for execution by the Castro regime.

Re-elected as top officers of IAFWNO were Luis Carnero Checa of the Federacion de Periodistas del Peru and ANG Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., co-chairmen; Alberto Schtirbu of the Federacion Argentina de Periodistas, secretary; and Nicolas Pentcheff of the Union of Free Journalists in the U.S.A., treasurer. The last group is made up of journalists exiled from Iron Curtain countries.

Nixon Enlists Employer 'Payroll' Drive

'Backdoor' Effort Aimed At Workers

Said the announcement to employers:

"Your company's committee of volunteer WIN [pro-Nixon] workers will not flood your office or plant with Nixon for Governor literature. All literature to employes will go to their homes and there will be no company identification contained in the mailings."

The Nixon for Governor Committee's effort to get widespread employer support for pro-Nixon activities among employes began here last July 26, when Sen. Hiram Fong (R-Hawaii) addressed a Bay State Republican Alliance luncheon of businessmen.

Businessmen interested in the so-called "in-plant, volunteer" pro-Nixon operation were invited to return for a 5 p. m. meeting at which details of the program were unveiled.

Invited to Sign Up

Documents distributed at the later meeting very frankly described the proposed "back-door" approach to workers, and invited company executives either to sign up on the spot to "participate" or to sign up to "discuss" the matter.

Republican headquarters here in northern California have confirmed that a comparable Republican appeal was made to Los Angeles area businessmen the following day.

The Republican effort to enlist employer-inspired pro-Nixon activity among workers included a claim that the GOP was deprived of "access or entry to the union workingman through any 'front-door' approach."

EMPLOYERS ATTENDING the Los Angeles and San Francisco pro-Nixon meetings were asked to sign these cards declaring that their companies would "participate" in the Nixon self-labeled "back-door" approach to getting political support from workers or would like to discuss the matter further before deciding on participation.

"This important block of voters," the GOP statement to businessmen said, could be reached only by a "back-door" approach through such groups as pro-Nixon "company volunteer campaign workers" recruited by their employers.

Employers were assured that the "volunteer" Nixon workers they selected would not "operate in any fashion which would lead to partisan battles" but in "talks" to fellow workers would function "in coffee breaks, over lunches, etc.," and in a "casual, informal" manner.

Pitts Charges Threats

Pitts charged in his denunciation of the Nixon project that an employer-inspired political campaign among workers involved obvious overtones of economic threats and intimidation.

He also lashed Nixon recently for a public statement that his candidacy was opposed only by "union political bosses" and that he intended to continue taking his case "over their heads directly to the union members."

Nixon complained in reply that the "labor press" was "not open" to Republican candidates, and that the "back-door" approach to what the GOP document called "Democrat workers" seemed necessary.

In fact, Pitts declared, Nixon was invited both by letters and telephone calls to appear with other candidates before the state Council of Political Education and state his case for himself, which would have assured him access to the state's "labor press."

Although the GOP nominee now complains he cannot get a hearing, Pitts went on, "he didn't show us the courtesy of responding at all" to the invitations.

This state's big daily newspapers —in Los Angeles, San Diego, Oakland, San Francisco—have almost unanimously supported Republican candidates for statewide and national office in the past and supported Nixon himself in the former Vice President's previous campaigns.

WIN WITH NIXON

VOLUNTEER EMPLOYEE CONTACT PROGRAM

TO: The Company Executive for His Information & Consideration

WHAT IS THE WIN PROGRAM?

The WIN program is the vehicle through which we hope to place Dick Nixon's philosophy and programs for California before the working man in major corporations and industrial plants. We believe the average Democrat working man will more readily listen to the persuasions of a fellow company employee than he will to any Republican precinct worker who might call on him at his home.

It is obvious that the Nixon for Governor Committee will not have access or entry to the union working man through any "front-door" approach. Our only hope of reaching this important block of voters is through a "back-door" approach such as will be provided by groups of company volunteer campaign workers in company offices and industrial plants throughout California. Therefore, the WIN Program is of vital importance to the final outcome of this crucial election.

WHAT THE WIN PROGRAM DOES

The WIN Program gives a committee of company volunteer employees the opportunity of mailing Nixon literature to the homes of all fellow employees, notifying them of Nixon appearances at community rallies, on TV, and at other functions which your employees may wish to attend or view. Most important of all, it gives the Nixon employee committee a chance to talk informally to fellow employees at appropriate intervals and urge them to vote for Dick Nixon for Governor in November.

WHAT THE WIN PROGRAM DOES NOT DO

Your company's committee of volunteer WIN workers will not flood your office or plant with Nixon for Governor literature. All literature mailed to employees will go to their homes and there will be no company identification contained in the mailings.

Your WIN committee will not hold formal meetings in the offices or plants, or operate in any fashion which would lead to partisan battles within the company or plant. WIN worker talks with fellow employees will at all times be casual, informal and conducted on coffee breaks, over lunches, etc. Though it is our aim to see that the committee contacts every employee in the company at one time or another, this should be done in a completely informal manner and operate at all times according to company policies.

WHAT YOU CAN DO TO HELP

Before you leave the meeting today, it would be helpful if you would fill out the white card stapled to this memo. Turn it in at the door when you leave.

When you have decided that your company will participate in the WIN Program, seek out one or more employees who will agree to help form the WIN committee in your company. Fill out the employee recruitment cards contained in your WIN kit and send them to WIN Director, Nixon for Governor Headquarters, ~~3908 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 5, (telephone DU 5-9161)~~. Field workers from the WIN office will then be in touch with your volunteer WIN workers within a few days to provide them with information as to how to start expanding their committee and begin activities.

NIXON FOR GOVERNOR COMMITTEE
NORTHERN CALIFORNIA OFFICE
525 MARKET STREET — ROOM 526
SAN FRANCISCO 5, CALIFORNIA

THIS IS A PHOTOCOPY of Nixon for Governor Committee's appeal to employers to set up in-plant political groups to propagandize fellow workers for the Republican candidate against incumbent Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown. Document was distributed to company executives at meetings in San Francisco and Los Angeles. It promises employers they will lose no production time, pledges that company-selected "pro-Nixon" employes will talk things up with fellow workers only "on coffee breaks, over lunches, etc."

Steel Firms Carry Plea to Eastland To Overturn Kefauver Citation

Nine executives of four major steel companies who had refused to appear before the Kefauver Anti-Trust subcommittee in response to subpenas ordering them to furnish cost and price data have asked the parent Senate Judiciary Committee not to approve a resolution citing them for contempt of the Senate.

The Kefauver subcommittee, which has been probing the action of major steel companies in seeking to boost prices last April, voted 5-2 to recommend the contempt citation after the company officials failed to appear at a scheduled Aug. 31 hearing.

Charged by the subcommittee with contempt were executives of Bethlehem, Republic, National and Armco Steel companies. Eight other firms, including U.S. Steel which initiated the unsuccessful industrywide price hike, agreed to provide the information with the understanding that the data would be furnished only if all firms complied with the subpenas.

Although contempt citations requested by investigating subcommittees are normally approved routinely, the Judiciary Committee, headed by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) granted permission for the company spokesmen to appear before the full committee and present their argument that the cost data would harm their competitive position.

Committee Republicans expressed open support of the steel executives' decision and Eastland said at one stage, "I sure don't blame them for not submitting the data."

While the company spokesmen were arguing their case before the Senate committee, attorneys for three steel firms asked permission in federal court in New York to change their pleas in an anti-trust indictment.

Bethlehem, U.S. Steel and Erie Forge & Steel had originally entered not guilty pleas to charges that they had conspired to fix prices in the sale of open die steel forgings.

Now, their attorneys told the court, the companies would like to plead "no contest," which would leave them open for fines and possible prison terms for individual defendants but would not constitute an admission of guilt.

Meany Strongly Backs Goldberg Confirmation

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany described Arthur J. Goldberg as "a capable, impartial and devoted public servant during his term as secretary of labor" in a letter urging the Senate Judiciary Committee to approve Goldberg's nomination to the Supreme Court.

Meany wrote Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) that he is "entirely confident" Goldberg will serve on the court "with distinction and with complete dedication to the welfare and interests of the United States and all of its citizens."

As the committee moved speedily into the confirmation hearings, a similar endorsement of the Goldberg nomination came from Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers. During a relationship of more than 25 years, Potofsky wrote, "Arthur Goldberg's counsel was constantly designed to promote industrial peace." He will "brilliantly serve his country" on the court, Potofsky predicted.

Strong bipartisan support of the nomination was indicated as both senators from Goldberg's home state of Illinois—Democrat Paul H. Douglas and Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen—accompanied the nominee to the opening of the hearing and remained to testify enthusiastically in his favor.

The only opposition testimony came from a Birmingham, Ala., contractor who has sued Goldberg in a dispute over a Labor Dept. ruling in a Walsh-Healey Act wage determination.

In answer to questions from committee members as to whether Goldberg's personal convictions would influence his legal decisions, the nominee replied:

"I believe very strongly that in the exercise of high responsibilities we must ever be on guard lest we erect our own prejudices into legal principles."

AFL-CIO Members Top Worker Givers

Camden, N. J.—Members of AFL-CIO unions give twice as much to United Fund drives as other members of the work force, Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO said here.

Speaking to labor representatives at the opening meeting of the 1963 United Fund labor participation drive, Murphy said that AFL-CIO members make up 15 percent of the national work force but give more than 30 percent of the funds realized from United Fund drives.

This is due, he said, to the "tremendous support" the AFL-CIO has mobilized for federated giving, and to its educational programs.

No Progress on Jobs

THE KEY FACTS emerging from the Labor Dept.'s report on employment and unemployment in August is that jobs fell short of anticipated increases and unemployment failed to drop as expected.

This trend reflects what is happening throughout the economy—an inability to meet anticipated goals. Economic growth overall is slow and sluggish.

Month-to-month changes in the employment-unemployment situation are affected by many variable factors. But when these changes are plotted for the first eight months of the year, the significant fact that emerges is that there has been no meaningful improvement in the unemployment situation.

The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment has registered between 5.3 and 5.8 percent of the labor force from January through August, averaging about 5.5 percent. The seasonally adjusted figures for the average workweek have dropped six-tenths of an hour since April.

These are the important figures and trends, rather than the new "records" reported nearly every month in one category of employment or another—records stemming from a constantly growing population and work force rather than from a dynamic economy.

The Administration had set as a goal a reduction in the unemployment rate to 4 percent of the labor force by the end of 1962. Most economists now agree that the rate will not drop below 5 percent and is more likely to stand at 5.5 percent for the year.

A good deal of the failure to achieve economic goals stems from failure of the coalition-controlled Congress to enact key sections of the Administration's legislative program designed to stimulate the economy into faster growth. The Administration also has moved too cautiously in some areas, overly concerned with criticism from business and industry.

A new Congress oriented to the nation's economic needs and the Administration's program can help provide the dynamics that will step up the pace of economic growth and make inroads on the unemployment problem.

Pink Slip Next?

EMPLOYERS' ATTEMPTS to influence workers to vote for or against a particular candidate for public office had almost disappeared from the American scene until Richard M. Nixon revived it recently in California.

Back around the turn of the century it was not unusual for workers to receive political material in their pay envelopes with a warning from the employer that if a certain candidate was not elected a pink dismissal slip might show up in the envelope next week. This practice gradually died out until the bitter presidential campaign of 1936 when business went all-out in an attempt to defeat Franklin D. Roosevelt, including distribution of anti-FDR leaflets by employers to workers in their plants.

Nixon has tidied up and refined the approach—his material will go to the workers from lists supplied by the employer, but the employer will not be identified. Hand-picked employer representatives would push the Nixon cause, circulate among workers at coffee breaks, etc., and "talk up" the GOP candidate for governor.

The 1962 Nixon version of economic arm-twisting by employers is a direct descendant of the pink slip technique. The threat of economic reprisal may be a bit more shielded but the effect is the same.

Recovery Under Way:

Shadow of Nasser Rule Stalks Syrian Trade Union Movement

By Arnold Beichman

DAMASCUS, SYRIA—Syria, a country roughly the size of North Dakota, is trying hard to recover from four years of Nasser rule. In February 1958, Syrian politicians asked the Egyptian strong man to merge his country with Syria into the United Arab Republic. Instead of a unification, Nasser turned it into Operation Swallow-Up, with Syria enjoying even less independence than when it was a French mandate.

By September 1961, however, the Syrians had had enough of Nasser. The Army engineered a coup, expelled their Egyptian regents and announced the dissolution of the UAR. Last March, another coup by the Army replaced the conservative government with another described as "left-of-center," although in no sense pro-Communist.

For the past year, Nasser's Radio Cairo has been broadcasting violent attacks on Syria as target No. 1, followed by similar assaults on Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Iraq—all of whom respond in kind.

Syria's trade union movement had some kind of existence before Nasser, was extinguished during Nasser's reign, and is now trying to make some kind of comeback. But the Syrian government is so fearful of "Nasserism" that it recently tossed out a number of labor leaders, charging them with being Nasser agents.

As of July 3, Syrian labor unions, grouped into the General Federation of Syrian Trade Unions with a claimed membership of 72,000, came under government supervision by what is called "Legislative Decree No. 50." Since it is agreed, even by government leaders, that the present regime is transitional and without real legality until elections are held (probably by the end of the year), there is a sort of twilight zone as to what rights the unions have or have not.

THE DECREE NEITHER permits nor forbids strikes. Before unity with Egypt, strikes were permitted. After unity, all strikes were forbidden. Pres. Fozi Bali of the Syrian federation said that since the present quasi-legal government has restored many pre-unity labor rights, there is no longer any need to strike.

In cases of non-wage labor-management disputes, he said, a five man committee representing both sides, plus representatives of the Ministries of Justice and Labor and a representative of the governor of the province in which the dispute exists, hears the complaint and issues a final decision. Wage disputes, however, are heard by a different tribunal—labor and management spokesmen and representatives of the Ministries of Labor, the National Economy and Industry. The Ministry of Labor, however, must approve the decision of the Wages Commission.

Fozi Bali said that as soon as a constitutional government comes to power, the federation will make as its first demand the reinstatement of the right to strike. He became federation president two months ago following the ouster of the then federation leaders, who called for reunion with Egypt in mid-June on the eve of the national labor convention.

The Ministry of the Interior, run by an Army general, cancelled the convention. About 100 union officials were arrested and charged with instigating a "political" strike in the biggest textile plant in Syria, which led to violence and the killing of four workers. With the removal of the federation leaders, a new group headed by Fozi Bali took over the vacated posts. Eight of the ousted labor leaders will shortly go on trial charged with "pro-Nasser" activities.

SYRIA'S ECONOMY is full of wobbles and its labor movement suffers accordingly. Wages are low and 75 cents a day isn't considered too bad. The workweek is six days, 48 hours. Skilled workers do a little better, about $2-$2.50 a day. Complicating the country's economic life is the presence of about 100,000 Palestinian refugees.

Unemployment, as in most underdeveloped countries, is technically low because when no real jobs are available one can sell chewing-gum on the street, shine shoes, watch a car or collect old newspapers. The problem is, of course, underemployment.

Syrian labor has a long way to go before it can begin to call itself a real trade union movement. The will may be there but internal government pressure and fancied or real conspiracies against Syria by Nasser will prevent, for the foreseeable future, any union growth.

As for international affiliation, Syria's labor federation is a member of the Confederation of Arab Trade Unions whose headquarters and operating staff are in hostile Egypt. Because Isreal is a member of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Syrian labor shuns that affiliation, and because it is anti-Communist, Syrian labor shuns the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Morgan Says:

Soviets Have 'Miscalculated'—But Short-Range Perils Remain

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

SO WHERE ARE WE? Admittedly the world picture is scrambled and throbbing with trouble and confusion. Berlin boils with danger while impetuous American politicians demand that the U.S. government "do something about Castro." And Communist China points propaganda torpedoes across the Formosa Straits, hoping to blow the Chiang Kai-shek regime out of the water over the latest episode in the strange and exciting saga of that remarkable but embarrassing aircraft, the U-2.

Morgan

Unfortunate as the latest brace of U-2 incidents is—the shooting down of a spy plane from a Chinese Nationalist base over eastern China and the straying off course of another American U-2 over Russian-held Sakhalin Island above Japan—Washington does not now expect major trouble about them. Neither Moscow nor Peiping is likely to let the subject die quickly and the Chinese Communists have already begun shrilling fresh charges about western perfidy in Asia but our basic difficulties—and they are considerable—lie elsewhere.

One informed Administration view is that the Communist powers are approaching a major crossroads in which we are threatened with short-term peril but from which we may extract long-range advantage if we have both good luck and good judgment. According to this theory, some leading Communists must be beginning to realize that their system is showing grave deficiencies as an easy method by which to take over the world.

They have grossly misjudged and underrated capitalism's capacity to endure by adaptation and adjustment. Instead of the corpse they thought Europe was becoming in 1914, it is now, after two world wars, a live and vigorous body growing both economically and politically. Instead of the lethal quarreling the Communists were sure the capitalistic powers would fall into, they have cooperated to form NATO and the Common Market. Instead of the new nations of Africa and Asia flocking to the temples of Marxism as they emerge from western colonialism, they are demanding to be allowed to stand on their own feet. Communism's own imperialism has—so far—failed to expand on these continents.

WHAT INDEED DO the Communists have to show for their efforts? Khrushchev has a $600 million bill for military aid to Indonesia without an ally in return, and the Dutch-Indonesian crisis over West Irian has been contained by the United Nations. The major internal Soviet crisis—in agriculture—has not been solved, the rift between Moscow and Peiping is approaching the proportions of a cataclysm, and the Communists have not picked up a single acre of real estate since World War II by peaceful means.

They must then, as they approach the crossroads of decision, be asking themselves, "Where do we go from here?"

But assuming this theory is sound it means historically, if it means anything, that communism in the long pull is failing. This, in the view of some high Administration sources, is precisely why the immediate future is charged with danger and portent for us. They reason that the Communists may take some desperate risk—or try to stampede us into some weakness or other folly—in the arena of Berlin or Cuba and they also half-way expect the Soviets to try some new spectacular in space.

Against these prospects, how should we react? One main line of Administration thinking is that we should be resolute but not reckless, that we must be meticulously careful not to make some foolish move against Cuba that would allow the Russians to take reprisals, not between Havana and Key West but in Berlin where the larger stakes lie. At the same time it is vividly recognized that we can't abide a Communist government on our doorstep as a permanent state of affairs.

Thus any new move we make must be done in concert with or at least have the backing of the Organization of American States. Encouragingly, the intelligence from Latin American capitals since the revelation that Moscow has sent arms and men to Cuba indicates our Latin allies are strengthening their anti-Communist sentiments.

Maybe the Russians have overlooked the possible parallel between U.S. marines in Nicaragua 40 years ago and foreign Marxist contingents in Cuba today; they may be surprised to find the hemisphere may be aroused against a tangible threat of Communist imperialism, too.

But the Kennedy regime is worried about the possible "obsessive" reaction of some politicians to the Cuban issue in the congressional election campaign and is trying to counsel restraint. Miracles don't usually spring from campaign speeches, and the Cuban problem, thorny as it is, is only part of a large one.

Washington Reports:

Congress Seen Sure to Protect People from Hazardous Drugs

CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL of a bill that would protect the American people from hazardous drugs is assured in the House, Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.) and Rep. John B. Bennett (R-Mich.) declared jointly in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations. Such a bill has already passed the Senate.

Mrs. Sullivan remarked that the thalidomide scare had given impetus to amendment of the antitrust laws with regard to the manufacture and distribution of drugs. She pointed out, however, that it was tragedies, similar to the birth of deformed babies after German mothers had taken the tranquilizer, that had brought about the Food & Drug Act itself.

"The present law has been in effect for 24 years and is full of holes and inadequacies, but this year we will probably not do more than tighten up on drug controls," Mrs. Sullivan said.

The most important provision in the proposed House bill, Bennett asserted, "would put authority in the Food & Drug Administration, or the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, for removal from the market of any drug which he deems eminently hazardous to public health." At present, the agency has to go through the time-consuming process of court action to get a drug off the market.

"This new provision won't permit any red-tape or run-around procedures," Bennett explained. "There will no longer be need to wait while people lose their lives or until serious damage has been inflicted on people."

ANOTHER PROVISION of the bill will give the Food & Drug Administration authority to decide if a new drug should be tested, and under what conditions. At present, a manufacturer can send a drug to doctors for testing on people by merely filing a statement with the FDA.

A second provision would require that a manufacturer get FDA permission before putting a drug on the market. The FDA would then have time and opportunity to determine whether the drug was safe. At present, the manufacturer can put a drug on the market if no action is taken by FDA within 90 days.

Under present law, Mrs. Sullivan noted, thalidomide might well have been placed on the market in the U.S. if Dr. Frances E. Kelsey "had not been so stubborn."

"And if had been on sale, it could not be removed without legal proof of danger to the user," she added.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CANDID OBSERVERS here concede that the pattern of the primary elections, now nearly completed for the year, shows no intra-party swing either to liberal programs and attitudes or to Goldwater-type conservatism. Indeed, it is generally felt that Goldwater-type oratory might come less frequently from the Arizona senator himself if the dream begins to unfold whereby he sees a plausible chance to run on the Republican national ticket in 1964 with Gov. Rockefeller of New York.

The ardent segregationist Marvin Griffin, former governor of Georgia, got badly licked when he tried for a Democratic political comeback against a self-defined moderate on race issues, State Sen. Carl E. Sanders.

A great many Negroes vote in Georgia, and a great many white citizens there have a plain distaste for church-burners, children-threateners and segregation demagogues. They feel "moderate" about things, including the Bill of Rights and Supreme Court decisions on school segregation.

In the New Hampshire Republican primary, a couple of people identified with the late Sen. Styles Bridges—his widow, Mrs. Doloris Bridges, and Gov. Wesley Powell—got dumped. But though Powell was long associated with the former powerful right-wing chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, he has been acting like a highly personalized would-be state GOP dictator, and the voters responded as New England voters often do in such circumstances. They just threw him out.

NEW HAMPSHIRE VOTERS didn't exactly go liberal. The fourth-place candidate for the Senate seat was Rep. Chester Merrow, generally considered a traditional New England GOP progressive; the nomination went to Rep. Perkins Bass, a "moderate." In Vermont, Democrats didn't act very excited about liberal and "peace" issues either, at least as represented by former Rep. William H. Miller; in an upset, they picked W. Robert Johnson for a Senate nomination.

The only real victory for a self-described Goldwater conservative in 11 recent primaries came in Wisconsin, where Philip Kuehn beat off a challenger who assailed Kuehn's John Birch Society backers in a race for nomination for governor. In Arizona itself, Goldwater proclaimers didn't do so well; the senator's speech writer and campaign strategist, Stephen Shadegg, lost the GOP nomination for governor. Evan Mechem, who beat him, said he was just as conservative as Shadegg; still the senator's man got licked.

Rep. Herbert Zelenko lost his seat in a New York City Democratic primary, the voters choosing instead Rep. William Fitts Ryan, who has been identified with the party's reform group. Rep. H. Carl Andersen, beaten in the Minnesota Republican primary, clearly was the victim of entanglement in the Billie Sol Estes investigation.

THE PRIMARY PATTERN is for renomination of incumbents in both parties, with no clear movement to the liberal or conservative side. In the November elections, of course, the issues of the Kennedy program will come up in at least a few outstanding races.

Gov. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, Democrat, will try to beat the aging Republican 18-year veteran, Sen. Alexander Wiley. In Colorado, Rep. Peter H. Dominick, a freshman House member who is aggressively reminiscent of the onetime youthful Sen. William H. Knowland (the "young fogey"), is trying to knock out liberal Democratic Sen. John A. Carroll.

In Utah, young Rep. David King, Democrat, will try to oust Republican Sen. Wallace Bennett, the National Association of Manufacturers' best spokesman in the Senate since John Bricker of Ohio was bumped.

Across the country, dozens of House races will involve Democratic pro-Kennedy challengers who are trying to oust conservative Republicans, or conservative Republicans seeking to replace liberal Democrats. The districts generally are so-called "swing" districts, involving victory margins of 55 percent in recent elections.

There isn't anything that has happened in the primaries to make it safe to guess what the results will be—particularly unless present registration campaigns overcome the normal apathy of offyear elections.

THE NATION'S DRUG LAWS will be strengthened because of the thalidomide-deformed baby scare but not as thoroughly as they should be, according to Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.), left, and Rep. John B. Bennett (R-Mich.). They were heard on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Expert Gives Pointers on Buying Good-Quality TV Receiving Sets

By Sidney Margolius

A NEW REGULATION requires that by 1965 all TV sets must be factory-equipped with all-channel tuners to receive UHF (ultra-high frequency) in addition to the VHF (very high frequency) broadcasts now prevalent in most parts of the country.

This means that eventually you will be able to receive additional programs, including perhaps some more educational ones than are now usually available. It also means that it would be desirable to be careful about what kind of set you buy between now and '65.

Manufacturers themselves are beginning to worry about what to do with left-over non-UHF sets after the cutoff date. The trade papers reported one proposal to unload in Japan, which has not yet achieved the UHF degree of TV civilization. But Japanese businessmen have indicated that they have enough TV sets of their own of which to unburden themselves.

Any family buying a TV set in the next two years preferably should get one already equipped with an all-channel tuner, or at least with a channel strip so it can be converted easily and inexpensively, especially if it is a costly console model.

All old sets can be converted to UHF with a separate converter that sits on top of the set, and there will be no great damage if you do buy a non-UHF set now and convert it later. Certainly there are some excellent values in non-UHF portables and table models at this time.

However, a converter will cost $30 to $50, depending on how far you are from broadcasting centers. This is more than the extra cost of about $20 for an already-equipped set.

In buying a TV set whether now or later, note that—generally speaking—there are two grades or qualities. The so-called "metropolitan" receivers usually give satisfactory reception within 20-25 miles of the broadcasting center without an outdoor antenna. But with a properly-installed outside antenna, these moderate-price sets sometimes receive well as far as 60 miles away, advises Michael Koleda, a technician.

First step in evaluating the quality of a television set is to inspect the exterior finishing: quality of the trim, of the masking around the screen, the knobs and handle (on a portable). These details are important not only for themselves but because they are a clue to general quality. Manufacturers usually finish the lower-quality sets more cheaply, the better sets more carefully.

OBSERVE THE CLARITY and steadiness of the picture received and watch out for distortion, particularly at the edges of the screen.

Also observe the picture tones. A mediocre set will provide good contrast of black and white but cannot be adjusted to get softness in between, or the detail provided by a good set. In fact, the picture on a poor set has almost a silhouette effect.

An even better gauge is to observe how well the set receives the test pattern which stations periodically broadcast if a pattern is available while you are shopping. As you fine-tune a well-made set, the vertical lines of the test pattern will disappear toward the bottom of the screen.

This ability to reproduce the center of the pattern in detail is a sign that the set was carefully engineered and aligned. The degree of manufacturer quality control of alignment varies among different makers, TV technicians advise.

Other requirements equal, a set with the speaker up front provides better sound. An aluminized tube provides more brightness for the same voltage.

There is much controversy over hand-wired versus printed-circuit sets. A hand-wired set usually costs about $20 more. Most sets now use at least some small sections of printed circuits. But service technicians feel that while printed circuits are durable, hand wiring is not as troublesome to repair if circuit repairs do become necessary. A printed circuit takes more time to replace, thus requiring a somewhat higher service charge.

In general, the better the set the better the chance of getting good reception without an outside antenna, and even if you do plan to use an antenna, a poorer set is likely to create antenna problems.

Some portables have a switch in the back for distance and local reception. The switch does not make it a better set. On the contrary, its presence indicates that the set is not too automatic, and lacks some tubes or circuitry, thus needs the switch.

The number of tubes, however, is no longer a wholly-reliable guide to quality, since manufacturers are engineering sets now to use more multi-purpose tubes.

No one manufacturer can be said to have the best quality in all television models, experts advise. One maker or private-brand retailer may offer good higher-priced sets but not the best in the inexpensive bracket, or vice-versa. Individual sets vary even in the same model and brand, as do the preferences of buyers.

Perlis Rejects 'Mythology':

Rights of Workers Urged on Agencies

New York—Trustees of voluntary health and welfare agencies have been urged by Leo Perlis, veteran member of many agency boards, to recognize the rights of agency employes to organize and bargain collectively with hospitals and other non-profit organizations.

Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, said that disregard of employe rights, and their exclusion from protections guaranteed by law for other workers, places them in the category of second-class citizens and is the direct cause of low wages, substandard working conditions, labor unrest and strikes.

In a statement here, Perlis rejected the common presumption that unpaid presidents of hospitals are "somehow more devoted to healing the sick than paid hospital orderlies" and assailed the legend that "if you work for nothing, you are most concerned; if you work for little, you are less concerned; if you ask for more, you are least concerned."

This "bit of mythology" nourishes an "oasis of altruism" which voluntary, non-profit welfare organizations have populated "not with their top executives, who are adequately paid, not with their hospital administrators, who are well paid, not with their fund-raisers and publicity men, who often are overpaid, but with their generally unorganized, unrecognized and underpaid clerical and professional employes," he said.

Perlis appealed to his fellow trustees to follow these guidelines in dealing with employes of charitable, religious and non-profit agencies.

- The humanitarian agency should be more sensitive to the basic human drives of its workers for recognition, respect and remuneration than the private corporation. Self-reliance and higher standards follow when employes band together, Perlis observed.
- The fact that a hospital president, although unpaid in that capacity, may also be a very well-paid corporation president does not escape the underpaid hospital employe when the president seems more zealous in guarding the hospital budget than recognizing a rise in living costs.
- The satisfaction derived from missionary devotion to a noble cause is compensation not measurable in financial terms, but it applies more to agency trustees than to underpaid floor sweepers.
- Some wealthy persons cannot understand how a man can get tired of his dull routine job after only eight hours, or how a file clerk is prepared to wage the good fight for another day off.
- Agencies are custodians of a public trust and should set a good example by recognizing responsible union organization, responsive collective bargaining, and the development of adequate grievance machinery.
- The best way to prevent strikes is for agencies to recognize the moral right of employes to join unions and enter into agreements calling for arbitration in lieu of strikes or lockouts.

Financial problems of agencies, Perlis said, cannot be solved by starvation wages or strikes nor by the rejection of collective bargaining.

Asserting that AFL-CIO unions, more than many other organizations, are directly responsible for an increase of millions of dollars in voluntary giving, Perlis advised agencies to call on labor and the community for help in finding solutions to the needs of their workers.

AFL-CIO Research Analysis:

Study Shows 'Moonlighting' Not Significant in Joblessness

Reduction of the workweek without loss of pay does not contribute significantly to a rise in "moonlighting"—the holding of two jobs at the same time.

Nor has "moonlighting" been a serious cause of unemployment or an obstacle in overcoming it.

These are the main conclusions of an article, "Moonlighting—Its Cause and Effect," prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research for the current issue of the federation's monthly magazine, the American Federationist.

Various unions which have already succeeded in cutting the workweek below 40 hours—typically to 37.5 or 35—without a corresponding cut in pay "have responded rather uniformly that they have not detected any upturn in the number of members taking second jobs," the Dept. of Research reports.

For example, it notes that in the ladies' garment industry, where the standard workweek is 35 hours, most of the workers are women, and "the extra hour off a day almost invariably has been used for household responsibilities."

And in the brewery industry, where working time has been cut to 7.5 or 7 hours a day, union officials report that dual jobholders are the same men who sought and obtained second jobs when hours were 8 a day.

Income Level a Factor

On the other hand, where pay has dropped along with worktime—following, for example, the cutback to a straight 40-hour week and the elimination of regularly paid overtime—"moonlighting" has been stimulated by the desire to maintain income and living standards, the article reports.

Thus the critical element, it continues, "has not been the number of hours on the primary job but the need or desire to maintain an accustomed income level."

It discounts, for that reason and others, the significance of dual jobholding among rubber workers in Akron, O., where an unusual 6-day, 36-hour week prevails.

This began as a depression work-sharing measure, AFL-CIO researchers noted, and was resumed when the longer workday and workweek demanded by World War II production was dropped. Despite substantial hourly pay increases, the post war cutback in work schedules led to a sharp reduction in the incomes of workers and a resulting rise in dual jobholding.

Other income problems also are seen at the root of much "moonlighting," including temporary family financial emergencies, low pay on the primary job, and instability of income or periodic seasonal layoffs in the first job.

Among the non-financial reasons workers give for taking second jobs, the article reports, are a preference for the work offered by such occupations as farming, night-time teaching, theatrical or musical work; experimentation in training for a new line of work; the desire for self-employment to "build up one's own business"; the desire for "sociability" to stave off boredom in off-working hours.

Practice Not Widespread

While unions for the most part frown on "moonlighting"—especially where the second job is at substandard wages or is used to displace full-time single-job workers—the practice is not as widespread as is commonly believed, the Dept. of Research points out.

A Labor Dept. survey found 3 million workers—or 4.6 percent of all those employed—holding more than one job as of December 1960. But 10 percent were primarily farmers with second jobs on the side, and another 20 percent had farm work as their secondary job. In addition, 20 percent represented workers whose second job was in self-employed activity (for example, the skilled factory worker who repairs television sets at home).

The number of non-farm "moonlighters" holding two wage or salary jobs thus comes to only 1.65 million—or 2.5 percent of all workers—the research staff points out.

It notes further that for fully 29 percent of all "moonlighters," both jobs are really part-time and that total time worked by nearly all of these (27 of the 29 percent) amounts to 40 or fewer hours a week.

The Labor Dept. survey also found that median hours worked in all second jobs came to 11 a week and that combined hours on both jobs averaged 50 a week.

"So the second job is typically quite short time," the Federationist article observes.

Few Jobs for Idle

Because the great bulk of "moonlighting" involves so few hours and includes a heavy percentage of farm work and self-employment, it does not represent "much meaningful employment" to jobless workers, the Dept. of Research finds.

Further, it concludes, comparison studies show there has been little change in the amount of "moonlighting" over several years and there has been no consistent relationship to unemployment trends.

"When unemployment rose in 1958, dual jobholding also fell off," the article observes, "so increased unemployment clearly was not caused by 'stealing of jobs' by 'moonlighters.'

"When unemployment rose again in 1960, dual jobholding remained unchanged, so again there was no indication that 'moonlighting' increased at the expense of the unemployed."

Labor Abroad Hails Amity On Holiday

This year's observance of Labor Day found the free trade union movements of the United States and Mexico "striving to maintain the strongest continental unity," the Mexican Confederation of Workers said in a holiday message to the AFL-CIO.

The goal, said CTM Gen. Sec. Fidel Velazquez in a letter to Pres. George Meany, is "that we may serve efficiently both the improvement of the living and working conditions of the working people and the defense and development of democracy and freedom in our countries."

Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, also cabled fraternal greetings.

"We are proud of the close friendship and cooperation between our two movements," Histadrut said in a message signed by Sec.-Gen. Aharon Becker, "and look forward to other future strengthening. The great achievements of American labor are inspiring working people everywhere. May this Labor Day mark another milestone in the successful struggle of organized labor to improve the lot of the working people and may you continue to grow from strength to strength."

The Berlin Section of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB) expressed pleasure at the opportunity to send greetings "after all you have done and still are doing for the Berlin working people."

"We regard this day as a day of your work and your success," it said, "and we hope that on this day the thought of freedom and humanity between the two continents is strengthened."

"Much success in your struggle for full employment and further improvement of social conditions" were wished by the Austrian Trade Union Federation in a letter signed by Pres. Franz Olah.

Meany Appointed Bible Week Aide

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been named an honorary vice-chairman for the 22d annual observance Oct. 15-21 of National Bible Week. Also chosen were Mrs. Dexter O. Arnold, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Robert Merrill, Metropolitan Opera baritone.

The Laymen's National Committee, Inc., the sponsors, said the theme of this year's observance is "The Bible Builds Bridges — Not Walls." The week has been observed over the years by representatives of most faiths, business, labor and service organizations and the Armed Forces.

This Is Where 'Double' Jobholders Labor

AFGE Parley Picks Griner as President

Seattle—John F. Griner, labor relations officer with the Railroad Retirement Board in Chicago, won the presidency of the Government Employes in a closely-contested election at the biennial convention here.

Griner, who had been called away from the convention before the election by a death in his family, came from behind to win a second-ballot victory over Adrian Roberts, a Labor Dept employe in Washington, D. C.

The final tally was 41,408 votes for Griner to 40,352 for Roberts, with 670 votes for other candidates.

Mrs. Esther F. Johnson won a fourth two-year term as secretary-treasurer, defeating two opponents on the first ballot.

Griner had the support of James A. Campbell, union president since 1951, who was ineligible for reelection under the age limit in the AFGE constitution. Earlier the delegates had voted unanimously to name Campbell president emeritus.

The new president has been a member of the AFGE's executive council since 1946. He has a law degree and worked in the railroad industry before entering government service in 1936, holding membership in both the Railroad Telegraphers and the Train Dispatchers.

During nearly 10 hours of balloting for the presidency of the 109,000-member union, an original six-man race narrowed into a contest between Griner and Roberts.

Notified by Phone

The weary delegates moved into a post midnight election for secretary-treasurer and it was 4:30 a.m. before the convention came to a close with the installation of officers and the selection of Dallas as the 1964 convention site. Griner, notified of his victory by phone, sent a message of thanks to the delegates and said he would go to Washington to take his oath of office.

Earlier, the delegates had turned down the recommendation of a special constitutional committee for a 25-cent per capita increase and had adopted a proposal barring paid staff employes running for national office unless they resign at least 30 days in advance of an election. An attempt to delete the 70-year age limit for national officers was defeated by voice vote.

The executive council, in a post-convention session, acted on a number of resolutions recommended by convention committees which did not reach the floor because of the long election session.

The council approved a legislative program calling for voluntary checkoff of union dues, a 35-hour workweek in the federal service and discontinuance of a government practice assigning military personnel to civilian duties. The council also declared opposition to contracting out work normally performed by federal employes and called for pay adjustments and optional retirement after 30 years of service regardless of age.

Bias Charged to Unaffiliated Union

For the first time in the history of the National Labor Relations Board, an unfair practices complaint has been filed against a local union on a charge of refusing to process a grievance for a Negro worker.

Charged with the violation is Local 1, Independent Metal Workers Union, unaffiliated, of Houston, Tex. NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman said the charge was filed by Local 2 of the same union, which has joint bargaining rights with Local 1 at the Houston plant of the Hughes Tool Co.

Ivory M. Davis, material handler employed by Hughes since 1942, filed a grievance when management refused to act on his application for apprentice training as machinist-toolmaker. Local 1 refused to process the grievance, Rothman's complaint alleges.

The NLRB complaint also alleges that under the contract, jobs have been divided into two classifications, with Negro employes "by tacit understanding" employed only in the second or lower-paid group.

Catholic Paper Supports Labor on 35-Hour Week

The following editorial appeared in the Sept. 7 issue of the Catholic Star Herald, the official publication of the Camden, N. J., diocese:

Over the Labor Day weekend a concerted appeal was made by organized labor for a 35-hour week. In the light of new developments in automation this seems a reasonable request. With machines doing so much of our work, why should people work the same hours while producing much more and thereby create more and more idlers and unemployed? Rather than that, a shorter workweek will create more jobs if management is willing to share its growing profits from the blessing of automation.

Work is good for man, but economic labor is not the only kind of work. There are artistic and educational and spiritual endeavors that can be undertaken in a more leisurely society. There is nothing unspiritual, then, about a 35-hour week. God said man would sweat to earn his bread, but God did not say man must sweat around the clock.

Finally, let us never forget a cardinal principle of economic life: workers are consumers. Thus, the more consumers, the more business there will be. Indeed the growth of employment through a 35-hour week can only be beneficial to men's bodies and souls. We're for it.

TUC Congress Votes Study of Basic Goals

Blackpool, Eng.—The first steps toward reorganizing the British Trades Union Congress and spelling out the goals toward which it should strive in a modern industrial economy were approved by nearly 1,000 delegates to the 94th annual congress here.

The congress passed a series of motions directing the general council—the TUC executive body—to conduct inquiries into a number of pressing issues which confront the British labor movement. They were:

- A complete and basic study of the purpose and structure of the TUC and its affiliates. This would determine if the makeup of the TUC, with 182 member unions, reflects the structure and conditions of British industry, or should be revamped to meet them.
- A determination of the objectives of the TUC's economic policies, and of the goals of economic planning in Britain. This would include relations on economic issues between the TUC and Conservative governments that may be in power, as at present.
- Measures to improve health, safety and security provisions for workers, and to meet the problem of technological unemployment.

The surveys are expected to take two years. After a year for study purposes, the general council is scheduled to consult with individual unions about their structures and on the balance of power between the general council and the TUC.

Before discussion of the project started, TUC Gen. Sec. George Woodcock, who will be responsible for the inquiries, posed the question by asking the delegates:

"What are we here for?"

In another economic action, the congress approved with little dissent the general council's decision to name six representatives to the National Economic Development Council, the government's first move toward national economic planning.

Council Backed on Policy

The general council received overwhelming support for its condemnation of the government's efforts to create a national income policy by trying to regulate wage increases during the past year and by proposing establishment of a national incomes commission to inject the "national interest" into wage negotiations.

Woodcock said the TUC would not support any formal government measures to control wages, and that if they are to be controlled it can only be as part of a comprehensive plan for the whole country.

The objectives of the proposed studies were not considered in detail. Gen. Sec. Frank Cousins of the Transport & General Workers, Great Britain's largest union with 1.3 million members, emphasized during the discussion on health, safety and security that compensation for victims of technological unemployment and financial security during retraining periods were essential. The problem is intensifying as reorganization of coal mines and railroads proceeds.

The congress also backed the general council's policy of postponing any decision on the issue of Britain's entry into the Common Market, pending the outcome of negotiations now going on. It voted down by nearly 3 to 1 a resolution opposing Britain's joining and demanding an election before a decision is made. There was no motion favoring entry.

The action left the parliamentary Labor Party, which is regarded in some degree as the child of the TUC, free to make up its own mind on the issue without any direction from the TUC.

Compromise on Party

Differences in attitudes toward the Labor Party by manual workers' unions, which favor it strongly, and those of white collar workers, which are uncommitted, led to a compromise on the key political issue. The congress passed one resolution emphasizing that TUC affiliation does not involve political party attachments. Then it passed another urging closer liaison between unions and the Labor Party at the local level.

The attention of delegates was concentrated so strongly on economic issues that scant attention was paid partisan political issues, such as defense policy and disarmament.

Cousins, who in the past has led opposition to Britain's possession of the atomic bomb, persuaded the delegates to go against the general council and pass a motion opposing American Polaris missile bases in Britain.

Resolutions calling for unilateral disarmament, for recognition of the Communist East German government and for the opening of negotiations between the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions were easily defeated.

At Bricklayers' Convention:

Leadership of Free World Rests on U.S., Meany Says

Labor must use its influence on public opinion to see that America "keeps its place at the head of the free world" and stands ready to deter Communist aggression wherever it may rise, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Bricklayers at the union's 67th convention, held in Washington, D. C.

On the domestic front, labor's No. 1 job is to "see to it that our own members register and vote," Meany said, and its No. 1 problem is the question of unemployment.

Advising the convention to keep working ceaselessly for ways of helping "put America back to work," the federation president said "We just cannot keep the leadership of the free world if we are going to have an economic collapse here at home." That would be as disastrous, he said, as "a defeat on a battle front" because it would weaken this nation and the whole free world.

The delegates applauded when Meany called for an education for every boy and girl regardless of their parents' ability to pay, and when he said "we should be against race discrimination because it's wrong" and not just because of its impact on other nations.

Union Pres. John J. Murphy presided at the five-day gathering, held in the nation's capital for the first time in 75 years.

In reporting union progress since the 1961 convention, Pres. Murphy and Sec. Thomas F. Murphy brought delegates up to date on the status of legislation supported by the union, the program for training apprentices, and the financial growth of the organization.

Pension Fund Proposed

Referred to committee for recommendations were proposals to establish a pension fund providing benefits for every member, and resolutions on situs picketing and the promotion of masonry materials as a means of providing jobs for union members.

Pres. Murphy told of a visit he paid July 17 to the White House to acquaint Pres. Kennedy with the advantages of masonry construction against thermonuclear fallout and said that as a result, arrangements were made for meetings with the heads of several government agencies who agreed to further studies on the use of sturdier materials in bomb shelters and government buildings.

Subordinate unions should make every effort to promote craft materials in state, city and county construction programs, Murphy said; to cooperate with other industry groups in local promotions; and to assert jurisdiction over the installation of prefabricated material.

Convention speakers included Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers; Pres. William Peitler of the Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers; Rep. John E. Fogarty (D-R. I.); Mrs. Marie McGuire, commissioner, Public Housing Administration; Exec. Dir. William E. Dunn of the Associated General Contractors, and other industry spokesmen.

Pres. Murphy reiterated support for a situs picketing bill now pending in Congress, school aid and construction, comprehensive housing, medical care for the aged under social security, and other measures. A "massive effort" is needed, he said, to provide decent homes for the ill-housed and additional housing for expanding communities. Needed now, he said, is a minimum rate of construction of 2.3 million housing units a year.

Cut in Workweek Urged At IBEW Convention

improvement programs sponsored by the union—some 50,000—and in the ability of the union to meet the training needs necessary to supply highly-specialized personnel at missile bases.

"However, this effort is not enough," he asserted. "The industry is changing so rapidly we must keep up with it or we shall be left behind."

The delegates were to vote later on an increase in per capita payment, proposed by the officers, to expand the skill training and education programs and build other union services.

Shorter Workweek Sought

On the bargaining front, Freeman recited the progress of labor since the time of 14 or 16-hour workdays, but declared that the IBEW adheres firmly to the theory of the late Samuel Gompers that:

"Whenever a single man or woman seeks work and there is none available, the hours of labor are too long."

"Our members are out of work," Freeman said. "Automation has taken many jobs. A shorter workweek would create more jobs and pump more buying power into the economy."

Also vital to the progress of the union, he observed, is the continued growth of the organization in numbers.

"We are going to have to organize in spite of opposition encountered," he said. "We are going to have to make better union members of the members we have."

Now representing some 770,000 members, the IBEW has grown from about 63,000 since its last meeting in Montreal in 1923.

Schnitzler Cites Joblessness

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, addressing the delegates, said the Federation's Executive Council was pressing labor's drive for a shorter workweek because other approaches have failed to solve the pressing problem of high unemployment in the United States, currently 5.8 percent of the total work force.

Schnitzler said labor would be happy to accept continuance of the 40-hour-week standard with full employment, as Pres. Kennedy advocates, but so far "there hasn't been anything done to reduce this army of jobless workers."

"Time has run out," he declared. "We can no longer wait. That is why the trade union movement has decided to tackle the problem itself by pressing for the 35-hour week with no reduction in pay."

He lauded the Kennedy Administration's overall program as being in harmony with labor's own goals, but emphasized that the AFL-CIO would continue to exercise its right to disagree with the President.

The delegates unanimously re-elected Freeman to another four-year term along with other top officers—Sec. Joseph D. Keenan and Treas. Jeremiah P. Sullivan.

Scheduled to address later sessions were Canadian Labor Minister Michael Starr, Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress, Dir. James McDevitt of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, and Keenan.

Per Capita Rise Voted By Oregon AFL-CIO

Salem, Ore.—Delegates to the Oregon State AFL-CIO convention here voted overwhelmingly for a 50-percent increase in per capita payments for legislative and get-out-the-vote activities—and by nearly as large a margin voted down their executive board's recommendation to endorse Republican Gov. Mark Hatfield for re-election.

The vote to raise the monthly per capita from 10 cents to 15 cents was 234-11. Although it does not take effect until Jan. 1, State AFL-CIO Executive Sec. James T. Marr told the delegates:

"You can rest assured that this vote of confidence will be reflected immediately—especially in the effort we will make throughout the state between now and the Nov. 6 election."

By a 225-57 vote, the convention decided to make no endorsement in the gubernatorial race. The executive board earlier had voted 14-4 to propose recommendation of Hatfield over his Democratic opponent, Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton.

Delegates opposing an endorsement argued that Hatfield "will be campaigning with and for" the Republican opponent of Sen. Wayne Morse (D), who was unanimously supported for re-election. The four Democratic congressional candidates were voted convention endorsement. In other major action, the State AFL-CIO:

- Voted 186-44 to elect officers and board members at conventions, beginning in 1963.
- Declared opposition to a proposal on the state ballot this November which would apportion some seats in the legislature on the basis of area and weaken the present apportionment on the basis of population.

British Union Expels President

London — The new anti-Communist executive council of the Electrical Trades Union has expelled Frank Foulkes, president for the past 17 years, in its continuing purge of leaders charged with bringing the union into disrepute.

Foulkes, who presided over the session at which he was ousted, was one of several men found guilty last year by the High Court on charges of conspiracy to violate the union rules and of ballot rigging.

The action was brought by union members who claimed their rights had been violated by the conduct of Foulkes and other officials they named.

Hollander Also Steps Up:

Corbett President of N.Y. State AFL-CIO

New York—Raymond R. Corbett has been elected the new president of the New York State AFL-CIO. By unanimous vote, the fifth annual convention elected Corbett, an official of the Iron Workers and legislative chairman of the state body, to replace Harold Hanover, who is taking a state appointment.

Louis Hollander was elected secretary-treasurer to succeed Harold Garno. A vice-president of the Clothing Workers, Hollander had been chairman of the state body's executive council and of the state COPE. Garno becomes a special assistant to Hollander.

In making these changes, the delegates cut down the number of paid offices from four to two. In addition, they voted an increase in the per capita from 2 cents to 3 cents per member per month.

The convention heard AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler criticize Congress for "never having enough time" to investigate embezzlements by bankers and other bank officials."

He cited official statistics showing that bank embezzlements reached a figure of $10.1 million in 1960 and that despite the pledge by national banking spokesmen to see that such stealing would be reduced, embezzlements went up in 1961 to $12.9 million.

Further, he said, 427 bankers and bank employes were convicted in 1961 for stealing depositors' money, approximately 300 others are awaiting trial or are being hunted on charges of embezzlement.

'Never Time' for Probe

"Congress never has enough time," he said, "to investigate this continued stealing but if a union official is accused, Congress has the time to investigate that."

Turning to problems facing the labor movement, Schnitzler said:

"I don't know of an Administration prior to the present Kennedy administration which has been so favorable to the labor movement."

He cited, as an example, the reform by the present National Labor Relations Board of past policies that seemed hostile to labor organizing and said, "We can now organize without interference by employers."

Unemployment, despite all that has been said, is still over 5 percent of the total work force and has been at that or higher figures for 58 consecutive months, Schnitzler pointed out, adding:

Press for 35-Hour Week

"The President says he wants full employment at a 40-hour week. We go one step further. We have not seen anything accomplished about unemployment and we must now press forward for a national 35-hour week."

The convention also heard addresses by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and the city's Mayor Robert F. Wagner. The governor pledged that the state campaign to attract business would in no way lead to inviting companies which have a reputation for exploiting labor.

"Let them go elsewhere," Rockefeller said.

He said the slogan of his administration—jobs, housing, education and equal opportunity for all—was being fulfilled. The State Job Development Authority had as its goal the creation on half a million new jobs during the next four years, he said, and the state is financing cooperative housing. A state construction fund would make possible, he said, the doubling of higher education facilities in the years ahead, and the fight for civil rights by legislative enactment is being pressed.

Wagner discussed the findings of a New York City labor market study showing that the demand for unskilled labor will continue to decline in the years ahead at an increasing rate, while workers with specialized skills will be in growing demand.

By 1970, one out of every three workers in the city will be a woman, against the present one out of four, Wagner added, and one out of every five workers, instead of every seven, will be under 25 years of age. This will mean more than ever, he said, that "discrimination on the basis of race, in regard to employment and promotion, must go, because we can't afford the cost in delinquency and crime which results when talent is frustrated and oportunity denied."

Puerto Rican and Negro workers will increase substantially and by 1970 will account for almost three out of every 10 workers in the city, he said.

Probe of ILGWU Rapped

Among the resolutions adopted was a declaration criticizing the House Labor subcommittee investigation of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union which, the convention said, constitutes a "direct attack on the entire labor movement."

The resolution charged the investigators had assumed that the ILGWU was guilty of charges made and that they allowed the "expert" testimony of a staff member which "the investigators themselves found too outrageous to accept."

DESPITE LOSS of uniforms and many instruments in a Denver hotel fire, the Seattle Letter Carriers' band marched proudly in street clothes in the union's convention parade. Local high schools and the Salvation Army loaned instruments so that the show could go on as scheduled.

Letter Carriers Convention Bids Farewell to Retiring President

Denver—There weren't many dry eyes among the 3,000 delegates to the Letter Carriers convention here as William C. Doherty handed over the gavel he had wielded for 21 years to the new president, Jerome J. Keating.

The band played Auld Lang Syne, a warm telegram from Pres. Kennedy hailed the union's accomplishments under Doherty's "inspired leadership," the retiring president finally gave in to repeated requests and sang his "theme song," Beautiful Ohio, and Keating led the delegates in the traditional "letter carriers' cheer"—a rousing Hip, Hip, Hooray—for their president emeritus.

While tributes to their retiring president set the tone for the convention, the delegates plowed through scores of resolutions and committee reports, and approved:

- A report of 100 percent success in the union's long campaign to eliminate the last of the dual Negro and white locals which once were commonplace in the South. Despite the loss of two locals which disaffiliated rather than accept the union's order to merge, total membership in the 19 cities affected showed a net gain after desegregation, the committee reported.
- A resolution critical of establishment by the Post Office Dept. of a new higher-grade position of carrier-technician "unless and until seniority can be the primary consideration in appointment." NALC officers had cooperated with the Post Office in testing the new program on an experimental basis and had asked the convention not to go on record against the project until the pilot program could be fully evaluated.

After the convention action, Keating named an 11-man committee, including both opponents and supporters of the plan, to seek improvements which would eliminate objections raised to the program.

- Salary increases for the NALC's secretary-treasurer and assistant secretary-treasurer from $15,000 to $18,000 a year; an increase for field directors from $9,000 to $10,000, and an additional $3,000 for the chairman of the executive board.
- Selection of Miami as the 1964 convention site, by a 4,618 to 4,156 vote over Milwaukee.

The delegates rejected a series of constitutional proposals by the Oklahoma City delegation to organize the union on regional lines, with regional election of field directors.

Among the convention speakers were Carl Stenger of Germany, president of the Postal, Telegraph & Telephone Intl., William Norton of Ireland, former PTTI president, and spokesmen for delegations of foreign visitors from Japan and Central and South America.

The Japanese delegation made a personal collection of $50 for the disaster fund set up to aid NALC delegates who suffered heavy losses in a fire at the Albany Hotel, where 450 delegates were staying.

BSEIU Strikes Marshall Field

Chicago — The executive board of the Chicago Federation of Labor & Industrial Union Council has voted unanimously to give full support to a strike of Building Service Employes Local 372 against the Marshall Field & Co. department store.

Pres. William A. Lee said the board urged all affiliated unions and their 500,000 members to support the strikers in their "fight for increased wages and improved working conditions."

The walkout started Aug. 23 when management refused to improve wage benefits. An earlier contract expired July 24, but was extended by agreement to Aug. 15 to give time for a settlement. The union, which for several years has represented some 1,000 service, restaurant and packaging workers, is picketing the main store, the nearby men's store and two warehouses.

Senate-Passed Tax Bill Tagged as 'Giveaway'

New York—The Senate-passed tax bill is a "billion-dollar giveaway" that makes the Teapot Dome scandal "look like small potatoes," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the New York State AFL-CIO convention here.

The giveaway, he declared, will benefit big business, the "expense-account aristocracy, coupon clippers and business lobbyists," and the American business firms "exporting jobs to their overseas subsidiaries."

Biemiller indicated the AFL-CIO would oppose the bill unless some of the provisions of the Senate bill were dropped or modified in conference committee.

Biemiller cited these "giveaways" in the Senate bill:

- The Senate's refusal to go along with the Administration and the House bill for a tax-withholding system on income from dividends and interest to catch about $900 million of unpaid taxes.

"The working man has to pay his taxes," said Biemiller referring to the withholding system for wages and salaries, "but the fat-cats who own stocks and bonds get away too often without paying their fair share."

- The investment tax credit, estimated to give business a tax reduction of $1.3 billion. The tax credit plan, said Biemiller, "will not stimulate job-creating business expansion."
- The approval of business tax deductions for lobbying, which means "that Wall Street can send an army of big business lobbyists to the Capitol in Washington or to the state legislature in Albany and charge off to the taxpayers the expense of these expense-account aristocrats as a cost of doing business."

Loopholes Remain

Neither Senate nor House bill goes far enough in tightening up expense and entertainment loopholes in the tax laws and the Senate's version may even enlarge the current loophole afforded business, Biemiller said.

The Senate bill also gutted the provisions written into the House bill to stop the exporting of American jobs overseas by closing tax loopholes on American business operations overseas, he charged.

From the point of view of the justice and equity of the average American taxpayers, Biemiller concluded, "it is a terrible tax bill."

Officers Re-elected By Four Freedoms

New York—Officers and directors of Four Freedoms were reelected at the annual meeting here and plans were made to provide more hotels or other housing for retirees through the non-profit organization.

Returned for new terms as officers were Pres. William R. Steinberg, Vice Pres. Harry D. Stone, Vice Pres. Hoyt S. Haddock and Sec.-Treas. Jack M. Bronstein. Directors are Board Chairman Joseph Curran, National Maritime Union president; Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Reg. Director Martin Gerber, Auto Workers; Pres. Edward L. Wheatley of the Potters; Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg, Ladies' Garment Workers, and Steinberg.

Fire, Like Rain and Snow, Bows to Letter Carriers

Denver—Letter carriers, by tradition stayed neither by rain, snow nor dark of night from their appointed rounds, took in stride a four-alarm fire which gutted a hotel here where some 450 delegates to the union convention were staying.

Some of the delegates and their families lost all their belongings. Uniforms and instruments belonging to four letter carriers were damaged or destroyed by fire and smoke.

Before the last flames had been extinguished, the union had arranged for emergency housing for the dispossessed delegates. The next morning, although the city's stores were closed for Labor Day, the union arranged for a clothing store to reopen for emergency purchases. A special disaster committee headed by Vice Pres. Jerome Keating was set up to use the union's "full resources" to help the delegates and protect them against loss.

On the afternoon of Labor Day, as 5,000 union and auxiliary members paraded through downtown Denver in the traditional Letter Carriers' parade, the biggest cheers went to bands with members in street clothes, playing on instruments borrowed from the Salvation Army and local high schools, led by drum majorettes in housecoats and slippers.

Activity Mounts in Congress:

Public Works Bill Sent to White House

By David L. Perlman

Congress speeded a job-creating $900 million emergency public works bill to the White House and prepared to tackle a series of other major Administration and labor-backed measures during the few remaining weeks of the session.

A House debate on a bill authorizing purchase of United Nations bonds was under way as the AFL-CIO News went to press. In a letter to all congressmen, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller termed passage of the bill "essential to the continued success of the United Nations."

The Senate Finance Committee was reported nearly ready to bring out its version of the House-passed trade expansion bill and a new effort was under way to reach a House-Senate compromise on college aid.

A combination postage rate and government pay raise bill was being put in final form by a Senate committee, and efforts were being made to revive the temporary unemployment compensation program sidetracked earlier by a single vote in the House Ways & Means Committee.

Among the major controversial bills still to be acted on before Congress adjourns is a foreign aid spending bill threatened with heavy slashes by the House Appropriations Committee.

Administration leaders took no chances on further delays when the public works bill was sent back to the Senate after passing the House by a narrow 29-vote margin.

The Senate accepted it without the House provision for a $900 million immediate public works program—as contrasted with the original Senate bill providing $750 million immediately and an additional $750 million on a stand-by basis—and also decided not to correct a technical error in the House-passed bill.

Correction Rejected

By a 38-30 vote, the Senate rejected a Republican attempt to provide the correction and send the bill back to the House for concurrence. This, Administration supporters pointed out, would have permitted House opponents to delay and possibly kill the measure. The congressional intent was clear, they said, and any needed correction could be made as a rider to another bill. The Senate gave final approval to the measure by a 45-22 vote.

The bill, a modification of the original labor-backed Clark-Blatnik measure, is intended to create 150,000 new jobs in areas of heavy unemployment. The money, still to be appropriated, would be spent both on federal projects and on matching grants to states and cities to speed up construction of already-approved public works projects.

In conference — with its final terms uncertain—was an emasculated version of the tax revision program the Administration had sent to Congress last year. Also in conference, as a separate tax measure, were two versions of a bill permitting self-employed persons to claim tax deductions on money they set aside for private pension funds.

Loopholes Reopened

While the Senate weakened the House-passed overall tax revision bill by reopening loopholes, it tightened the House version of the self-employed tax bill so as to cut down the revenue loss to the government.

The House approved a three-year, $9 million program of federal grants for clinics and other health services for migrant workers and their families. A similar measure had previously been passed by the Senate. Still pending, and awaiting Rules Committee approval, are three other Senate-passed bills for the protection of migrant workers.

Also bottlenecked in the Rules Committee are three major labor-backed bills:

- Amendment of the Davis-Bacon Act to require that the value of fringe benefits be included in prevailing wage determinations.
- A Youth Opportunities bill to help provide jobs and training for out-of-school, out-of-work youngsters on both conservation work and in city social service projects.
- A mass transit bill, listed by Pres. Kennedy as a "priority" measure, to relieve traffic congestion.

Supporters of proposals to utilize waste steam from the Atomic Energy Commission's plutonium plant at Hanford, Wash., to generate electricity for the northwest won a major victory as House-Senate conferees on the Atomic Energy Commission bill voted approval.

In other action as the congressional pace stepped up, the House voted 367-6 for a labor-supported expanded housing program for the elderly, and final approval was given a bill granting the Justice Dept. new power to obtain documents from business firms in anti-trust investigations.

Labor Backs Ribicoff in Connecticut

Hartford, Conn.—Former Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff, Democratic candidate for the Senate, and the six Democratic nominees for the House were endorsed by delegates to the legislative, political & educational convention of the Connecticut State AFL-CIO.

In addition, the convention approved a 22-point legislative program for presentation to the 1963 session of the General Assembly, and on the national front called for the 35-hour week without a pay cut and an immediate reduction in the income tax in order to create more jobs.

The delegates acted on the endorsements after studying the views of the candidates, most of whom appeared before the convention.

Ribicoff was voted backing over Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, the GOP aspirant, despite the efforts of a group of supporters of Rep. Frank Kowalski (D) to block action. Ribicoff won the nomination at the Democratic state convention at which Kowalski received less than the 20 percent vote required to take the contest to a primary vote.

The convention endorsed Gov. John N. Dempsey (D) for re-election. In the contest for state treasurer, in which both parties for the first time in history chose Negro candidates, endorsement was given the Democratic nominee, Gerald A. Lamb, a Waterbury dental technician and president pro-tem of the city's Board of Alderman, over Republican William Graham, Hartford lawyer.

Roy Reuther, director of the AFL-CIO voter registration campaign, discussed the techniques of getting voters to register and cast their ballots.

LABOR'S SUPPORT of expanded federal programs to provide housing for the elderly was recently expressed at House hearings on bills introduced by Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.) Left to right: AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. George D. Riley; Alexander Bookstaver, director of the federation's Dept. of Investments; Rains, and Boris Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO's Housing Committee, who testified for the bills.

Kennedy Advisers Set Parley on Tax Policy

A hundred and fifty union, employer, government and university leaders will be invited to Washington in November to give their views on tax, budget and other fiscal policies, the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy has announced.

The tripartite committee said the November program will be on a somewhat smaller scale than the White House conference on economic issues which it sponsored last May, with most of the discussions taking place in 25-member round tables rather than in plenary meetings. The May conference, attended by some 250 delegates, witnessed a dramatic challenge by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Charles R. Sligh, Jr., of the National Association of Manufacturers to back up his claim that more profits for industry would create more jobs.

Sligh's reply — in August — brought a prompt retort by Meany accusing the NAM official of using a "statistical sleight-of-hand" to claim that corporation profits have been "squeezed."

The advisory committee's new executive secretary, Dr. Jack Stieber, former director of Michigan State University's School of Labor & Industrial Relations, told newsmen that no attempt will be made to reach a consensus of views. Instead there will be a summary indicating the areas of agreement and disagreement expressed by participants.

The committee, at its regular monthly meeting, held final discussion on a report on policies to ensure that U.S. products are competitive in world markets which is scheduled to be ready for submission to the President early in October. Also discussed, at an informal luncheon with Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, were the government's anti-trust policies.

Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges heads the committee under a rotating chairmanship arrangement with the Secretary of Labor, who chaired the group during its first year of operation.

Peace Corps Seeks Trades Instructors

The Peace Corps has announced that it needs technical and vocational teachers for service in school and community programs in Latin America and other areas.

In a statement especially for the labor press, Dir. Jules Pagano of the professional, technical and labor division said the corps needs all types of vocational and technical teachers including those qualified to teach carpenters, painters, plumbers, electricians, mechanics, machinists, bricklayers, iron makers, welders, sheet metal workers, air-conditioning repairmen, and radio and TV servicemen.

The statement listed 12 countries where more than 250 volunteers are conducting vocational and technical classes. It said such teachers do not have to be college graduates, but some projects require two or three years of training in a technical school. Many vocational and technical teachers in the corps are highly qualified technicians without formal teacher training.

The corps said volunteers should submit questionnaires about three months before they expect to be available. Other requirements are that they be at least 18, with no upper age limit; they must be U.S. citizens; married couples are eligible if both qualify and have no dependents under 18.

Pagano said volunteers receive an allowance for food, clothing, housing, medical care and incidentals, plus a termination payment of $75 for each month of service. Transportation and training are provided by the Peace Corps, whose postal address is Washington 25, D. C.

passed by the Republican state legislature. In the city's only other closely-contested congressional race, veteran Democratic Rep. Charles A. Buckley won renomination.

In primary elections in eight other states, incumbent governors, senators and House members won renomination unopposed or with relative ease, but a Minnesota Republican, veteran Rep. H. Carl Andersen, was beaten by a political newcomer, Robert J. Odegard. Andersen had been involved in a stock-sale transaction with the indicted Texas speculator, Billie Sol Estes.

Arizona—Sen. Carl Hayden (D) won Democratic renomination and will face Republican Evan Mecham, self-styled conservative who defeated Stephen Shadegg, also a conservative and twice campaign manager for Sen. Barry Goldwater.

Colorado — Republican newcomer John Love beat David Hamil, onetime Agricultural Dept. aide under Ezra Taft Benson, for nomination to oppose Democratic Gov. Stephen L. R. McNichols in November. Incumbent Democratic Sen. John A. Carroll and GOP Rep. Peter H. Dominick were unopposed for the Senate nominations.

Utah—Republican Sen. Wallace Bennett, a former president of the National Association of Manufacturers, beat off a challenge from Salt Lake City Mayor Bracken Lee, who terms himself even more conservative. The Democratic nominee is Rep. David King, running on a platform of support for the Kennedy Administration.

Minnesota—Democrats nominated Lt. Gov. Karl Rolvaag to face Republican incumbent Gov. Elmer L. Andersen who had no primary opposition. GOP Rep. Walter H. Judd, who once announced retirement plans but changed his mind, was renominated from the Minneapolis district, and will run against Democratic State Sen. Donald Fraser.

Wisconsin—Republicans nominated Philip Kuehn, a Goldwater supporter, over Wilbur Rank, a farmer who bucked the state GOP organization. The Democratic nominee is Atty. Gen. John Reynolds. Democratic Gov. Gaylord Nelson will run against three-term Republican Sen. Alexander Wiley.

Vermont—Former Rep. William H. Miller was upset for the Senate Democratic nomination by newcomer W. Robert Johnson, who will face longtime Republican incumbent George D. Aiken.

Rhode Island—Democratic Gov. John Notte, Jr., won renomination in a close contest with Mayor Kevin K. Coleman of Woonsocket. The Republican nominee is State Rep. John Chaffee.

Washington — Veteran Democratic Sen. Warren G. Magnuson was renominated over token opposition. The Republican nominee is Richard G. Christensen, 32-year-old newcomer.

New OASI Booklet Shows Fund Solvent

Charges by opponents of the social security system that its trust funds are "insolvent" or are being used "for other purposes" are refuted in a new booklet published by the trustees of the funds.

A simplified treatment of the trustees' annual report to Congress last February, the booklet reports that income to the trust funds into the long-range future is expected to be enough to cover all the costs of the old-age, survivors and disability program.

Copies of the publication may be obtained from any social security district office, regional office of the Labor Dept. or district office of the Internal Revenue Service.

Senate Passes Trade Bill As Congress Steps Up Pace

"YOUR OWN FREEDOM is not secure if your neighbor is not free," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the first graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. He urged the 43 young Latin American union leaders to use the union-building techniques they have learned to raise the standard of living for working people in their own countries. (See story Page 4.)

Kennedy Program Begins to Move

Pres. Kennedy put together a string of major legislative victories, including Senate passage of his top priority trade expansion bill, as Congress stepped up its end-of-the-session pace.

The President met a sharp setback, however, as the House turned down a compromise federal aid to colleges bill which would have provided $2.3 billion in grants and loans over a five-year period.

Coming up was one of the hardest tests Administration leaders have faced this year—an attempt to save the foreign aid program from bone-deep slashes made by the powerful House Appropriations Committee.

On the same day that the Senate passed the trade bill, 78-8, it sent another Administration "must" bill to the White House by accepting the House version of the United Nations bond purchase bill.

The House, which earlier this year rejected the Administration's farm bill, voted 202-197 to approve a conference compromise which salvaged many key provisions of the President's program.

Earlier the House reversed a previous turndown and approved a plan to allow a group of public utilities to use waste steam from an Atomic Energy Commission plant at Hanford, Wash., to generate electricity.

Rollcall on College Bill

House rejection of the college aid bill by a 214-185 vote dashed hopes that a conference agreement breaking a months-long deadlock would signal the first major step towards the large-scale federal aid to education program sought by Kennedy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had urged approval of the conference report, hailing it as "a tre-

Senate Tax Bill Scored By Meany

House and Senate conferees have been told by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany that labor will urge defeat of the pending tax revision bill if it emerges from the conference committee as "merely a replica" of the Senate version.

In a letter to the conferees, Meany said the AFL-CIO regards these three provisions as a minimum:

- Restoration of withholding taxes on dividend and interest income.
- Adoption of the House language on expense account racketeering.
- Extension of taxation of overseas earnings beyond tax havens.

If the conference bill does not include these minimum provisions, on balance the bill will not be worthy of support," Meany wrote. "Instead, we shall propose to Congress that the measure be defeated and that its few constructive measures be incorporated next year into the overall

At Steelworkers' Convention:

'Social Obligations' Urged on Business

By Eugene A. Kelly

Miami Beach—The time has come, Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald told 3,000 delegates to the union's 11th constitutional convention here, for business to face up to its "social obligations" by joining labor to combat unemployment, bolster the U.S. and Canadian economies and thwart the advances of communism.

Asserting that labor and government cannot do the job alone, McDonald urged business leaders to look beyond their tax problems, to stop greeting new ideas with cries of "government spending," and to help solve the problems caused by automation, unemployment and lack of economic growth.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, stressing a similar theme, told the convention that the nation is not in a depression or close to it. But despite the high rate of employment, Johnson said, 3.9 million people remain jobless and "many of our finest plants are producing at less than capacity."

Johnson, assuring the convention that the Kennedy Administration has "no intention of learning to live with unemployment," called for unity of effort to defeat the challenges of communism and joblessness. He congratulated McDonald and other officers for their contributions toward peace and recovery and was given a warm welcome by the delegates.

Delegates from more than 2,900 union locals here to help shape the

'Church Burners' Hit By Maritime Trades

The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. has condemned "hate mongers and church burners" in a telegram to the Rev. Martin Luther King, and made a cash contribution to repair damage done by vandals and to carry on the Negro voter registration campaign.

Pres. Paul Hall and Executive Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin wired King that the contribution was "a token of our feeling" against "church burners who are attempting to intimidate American citizens peaceably seeking to exercise their rights as citizens in Georgia."

Labor Must Vote, Meany Tells Parley

By David L. Perlman

Labor must fight with its votes and its bargaining power for programs to "send America's workers back to work," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told delegates to the Carpenters convention.

The "immediate problem," he said, is to get union members to register and vote in the "very important election" this November.

No. 1 Problem

Meany termed continued high unemployment the nation's "number one domestic problem" and he said the AFL-CIO's drive for a 35-hour workweek is aimed at creating 5 million new jobs and taking up the slack in the economy.

The 2,000 delegates and guests, meeting in the Washington, D. C., National Guard armory, broke into applause at Meany's reference to the 35-hour week and at Carpenters Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson's reply that the union will take a leading role in the reduced-workweek campaign.

Hutcheson was unanimously elected for a new four-year term as president after delegates greeted his nomination with a half-hour

World Labor Warns UN on 'Troika' Proposal

United Nations, N. Y.—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has warned that the renewed proposal of the Soviet Union for the establishment of a "troika," or three-man executive, to rule the United Nations was a maneuver "to paralyze the world organization or to transform it into a cold war weapon of one world power."

Representing the national labor organizations of 109 countries and territories, with a combined membership of 56 million, the ICFTU embodied the warning in its submission of proposals for consideration by UN member states during the 17th session of the General Assembly.

The ICFTU is a non-governmental organization recognized by the UN, with full consultative status.

In a section dealing with strengthening the UN structure, the ICFTU called for public exposure of those governments which "obstruct the execution of decisions and resolutions for which they have voted or which refuse to meet their proper finan-

Workers Urged to Sound Alarm:

Trend to Rail Mergers Scored As Inviting Federal Takeover

New York—Railroad workers here were urged to help make Americans aware of the danger of growing power through mergers of major carriers before threats to the public interest lead to government operation.

Led by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), who is chairman of the Senate Anti-Trust & Monopoly Subcommittee, officers of the Railway Labor Executives' Association called on some 1,500 workers at a metropolitan railway employes rally to carry the message of curtailed-service threats and possible danger to public safety to small towns and cities across the nation.

The senator, sponsor of a bill which would call a moratorium on Interstate Commerce Commission approval of mergers by railroads with more than $200 million in assets, described railroad owners' efforts to revise work rules for employes and to consolidate their own companies as "an attempt to tear up the tracks" from under thousands of wage earners.

Citing the proposed consolidation of the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroads as a prime example, Kefauver called the trend toward merger one of the great issues of today.

"What we have here is not the weak joining the weak to grow strong but the strong joining the strong to grow stronger," he said. His remarks were spontaneous, despite the fact that he had a prepared speech. In both the prepared text and his impromptu talk, Kefauver deplored the fact that railroads are attempting to effect money savings at a time when the economic growth of the nation is a vital need.

'Counter-Mergers' Seen

Pointing to the proposed mergers of both the New York Central-Pennsylvania Railroads and American-Eastern Airlines, he declared:

"There is little doubt in my mind that approval of these two mergers will lead to vast counter-mergers, resulting in a massive concentration of economic power in the hands of a few companies and in the loss of vital competition and independent business action which are the basic ingredients to a healthy private enterprise economy."

He expressed the conviction that these consolidations would trigger additional concentrations in the trucking and water carrier industries, and termed such merger plans as "negative business thinking which places the maximumization of profits above the basic transportation standards of competition, service adequacy and community growth."

Kefauver was joined by George M. Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks and a vice president of the AFL-CIO, in his warning that railroad mergers might lead to government operation.

'Troubles Within'

Harrison noted that the New York Central and Pennsylvania account for 17 percent of all gross railroad business in the country, and that facts substantiate they are in good financial condition. He suggested that the proposed merger "is only a sample of what is contemplated in the West."

"What we need is to expand the transportation facilities of our country," he said. "The trouble with the railroads is within them, not without. It is management's concern with immediate profit. Management, out of one side of its mouth, asks for government aid and out of the other side blames government restrictions for its own failings."

He held that the future would be brighter if large railroad owners "would get back to operating railroads instead of just going along with the financiers in manipulating them."

Gilbert drew cheers and applause when he vowed he would never sign a report drawn by a Presidential Railroad Commission which calls for heavy lay-offs of railroad firemen, brakemen and other operating employes.

"The Presidential Railroad Commission's report should be looked on for what it really is—the forewarning that binding arbitration is eating away at the collective bargaining process and the right to exercise economic strength in securing social justice," he declared.

Van Arsdale pledged the full support of New York City's united labor movement, which comprises 1 million organized workers.

A message from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed hope that the rally would help dramatize to the American people "the urgent necessity for vigorous action" at once.

Meany declared that "the record proves that the merger mania has not only thrown thousands of railroad workers out of their jobs but has slashed essential rail service and weakened our national defense." He added that the New York Central-Pennsylvania merger "would climax this inexcusable violation of the public interest" and held that it should be resisted "with every source at our command."

Another message, from Arturo Jauregui, general secretary of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), pledged "fullest and most complete solidarity of the entire democratic labor movement throughout the Americas . . . in your battle to preserve safe and humane working conditions and an efficient railroad system for the benefit of shippers and passengers."

Arbitration Slated In Railroad Strike

The Railroad Telegraphers and the Chicago & North Western Railway have agreed to a request by Pres. Kennedy to submit to binding arbitration the issues in their dispute over job protection.

The three-weeks-old strike continued, however, as the parties met with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz in an effort to pin down the precise questions to be submitted to the arbitration panel.

ORT Pres. George E. Leighty said the union had agreed to arbitration even though it felt it might prove more time-consuming by diverting negotiations away from "substantive issues."

Price Fix Indictment Hits Brass Tube Firms

Hartford, Conn.—A federal grand jury here has indicted 11 of the nation's largest manufacturers of brass mill tube and pipe on criminal anti-trust charges alleging a six-year price-fixing conspiracy. Also named as defendants were seven high-ranking corporation executives.

The indictments, culminating an 18-month investigation, charged that prices in the industry were set during secret meetings in hotel suites and in a private club. The method of price-fixing described in the indictment strongly resembled the operation of the electrical equipment industry's price conspiracy, which resulted in fines, jail sentences and a series of civil damage suits.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the 11 companies annually sell about $360 million worth of brass tube and pipe, accounting for approximately 90 percent of the domestic market. The tube and pipe are used in the construction, auto manufacturing, air conditioning and appliance industries.

The indictment charged that electricity prices paid by consumers are higher than they should be because of the price-fixing conspiracy.

Charged in the indictment were:

- Anaconda American Brass Co., and its vice president, Justice Lockwood.
- Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp., and its president, Edgar P. Dunleavy.
- Chase Brass & Copper Co.
- Revere Copper & Brass, Inc.
- Cerro Corp., and its vice president, Richard H. Lewin.
- Bridgeport Brass Co., and Richard L. Allen, vice president.
- Scovill Mfg. Co., and Maurice Liston, Jr., sales manager of the mills division.
- Calumet & Hecla, Inc., and John M. Dumser, former marketing director of Wolverine Tube Div.
- Mueller Brass Co., and Alfred C. Dappert, vice president.
- Triangle Conduit & Cable Co.
- Progress Mfg. Co.

Senate Okays Willard Wirtz In Labor Post

The Senate has unanimously confirmed W. Willard Wirtz as Secretary of Labor, succeeding Arthur J. Goldberg, who resigned as a result of his nomination to the Supreme Court by Pres. Kennedy.

Wirtz, a Chicago attorney and widely-experienced mediator and arbitrator, had served with Goldberg as Under Secretary.

In a letter accepting Goldberg's resignation, Kennedy wrote warmly of him as having been "a wise and invaluable member of the innermost councils" of the Administration. "Your voice, counsel and tireless efforts will be sorely missed."

However, the President continued, "You shall bring distinction to our highest court for many years after this Administration has gone; and I did not feel that I could deny our country and constitution those benefits of your talented service."

Listing Goldberg's achievements in exactly 20 months in the Cabinet, Kennedy cited his "judicious laboring" for industrial peace and economic stability, and his contribution in helping obtain passage of new legislation on minimum wages, unemployment compensation, welfare and pension plans, manpower retraining, distressed areas, migrant workers.

"While the constitutional separation of powers now rightly alters our relationship," the President said, "you will always remain in the esteem and affection of us all."

Machinists Increase Scholarship Gifts

The Machinists will award at least seven $1,000-a-year college scholarships to IAM members or their children in 1963, Pres. Al J. Hayes has announced.

He said the union had received more than 1,000 applications for the five scholarships awarded this year. Increased contributions by IAM locals, councils and auxiliaries have made possible an expansion of the program, Hayes said.

H. C. Murphy Gets Labor Dept. Post

Hugh C. Murphy of New York, a member of the Bricklayers who formerly was chairman of the apprenticeship committee of the union's New York State conference, has been named assistant director for skill development of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

The Labor Dept. also announced the appointment of Ansel R. Cleary, one of the original experts who in 1938 organized what is now the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, to be deputy director of the bureau.

Hanover Appointed State Industrial Aide

Albany, N. Y.—Harold C. Hanover, last president of the State AFL and first president of the State AFL-CIO, has been appointed an assistant industrial commissioner in the New York State Dept. of Labor.

Survey Foretells Rise In Production, Not Jobs

The dark side of automation—the displacement of wage-earning workers by machines—may be thrown into sharp focus in the next few months if the conclusions of a Wall Street Journal survey are borne out.

The Journal polled 67 manufacturers, "who make everything from pencils to steel rolling mills," and found that while many plan to boost production in the last quarter of the year, most intend to do so without hiring any more workers. They will produce "either by pushing highly automatic machinery harder, or by working present employes longer hours, putting them on overtime if necessary."

"The upshot," the Journal said, "may well be the seeming paradox of rising industrial production over the remaining months of 1962 with no significant reduction in what Washington economists consider an uncomfortably high unemployment rate."

Joblessness rose to a rate of 5.8 percent in August, the 58th consecutive month above 5 percent, according to Labor Dept. reports.

The Journal noted that while factory employment is only one component in the overall rate of joblessness, it is the source of the greatest fluctuations.

"And it's in the period after Labor Day, when industry usually gets a lift from the ending of the vacation season, that factories often start significant hiring," the article added.

New Hirings Limited

Of the 67 companies polled by the paper, however, 32 said they planned no new hirings or callbacks in the immediate future, and eight others foresaw cutbacks in their work forces.

Only 16 firms said they planned "greater-than-seasonal" hiring and eight of these were in the aerospace and electronics industries where defense contracts were given as a major reason.

In some cases where workers have been on short time, the Journal reported, manufacturers will be able to increase output simply by returning to the 40-hour workweek. In others, notably the automobile industry, major producers frankly intend to avoid new hires by relying on overtime, the paper found.

"Most frequently, however, factories are stepping up output without major new hiring by getting more production out of each worker," the Journal roundup stated.

"In industry after industry, production managers say increased efficiency now allows them to turn out more goods than before the 1960-61 recession with few, if any, more workers."

Machines to Do It

One major chemical producer told the Journal that achieving maximum output without new hiring is "just a matter of opening up a valve a little more." And an eastern paper maker said more paper is "simply a matter of running the paper-making machines faster and longer."

"While this trend to more output per worker cuts across much of the economy, the forces tending to increase employment have a more spotty effect," the survey found. "Generally, they involve only particular industries or particular companies."

Lockheed Still Holdout:

2 Aerospace Firms Accept Union Shop

Agreement by North American Aviation and the Convair division of General Dynamics Corp. on the union-shop issue brought a breakthrough in deadlocked negotiations between the aerospace companies and two unions, the Auto Workers and the Machinists.

The agreement forestalled a strike against at least those two firms, but the Lockheed Aircraft Corp.—major holdout against the union shop—still faced, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, a Sept. 22 strike deadline of IAM members.

Other Talks Continue

The UAW was continuing to bargain with the Ryan Aeronautical Co., which had indicated it would go along with industry leaders on the union shop question. On the West Coast, the IAM and Aerojet-General Corp., where a union shop already exists, are pressing talks on other issues.

Pres. Kennedy himself announced the agreement "in principle" between North American and the aerospace division of the UAW. He said it was based on the recommendations of his special three-man board, headed by Dr. George W. Taylor, which called for a vote among employes with a two-thirds majority required to validate the union shop. Negotiators for the UAW and the company had been meeting in Washington with Dir. William Simpkin of the Federal Mediation Service.

The Convair agreement with the IAM was announced earlier at San Diego, Calif., where it was reported the company also had accepted the White House board's recommendation of a two-thirds ratifying vote.

At his news conference a week earlier, Kennedy noted that most major industrial firms had accepted the union shop many years ago. He pointed out that both the UAW and the IAM had agreed to go along with the panel's recommendation, despite their disappointment over the proposed wage settlement. The President added:

"I would hope the companies would accept it, because if there is a strike, the responsibility for such action would be very clear, I think, to the American people."

The President's comments were scheduled to appear Sept. 21 in full page advertisements jointly sponsored by the UAW and IAM in major newspapers in several cities across the country.

3-Step Raise

Although details of the wage settlements with North American and Convair were unavailable as the AFL-CIO News went to press, Kennedy said the agreements were in accord with the basic guidelines of his aerospace board, which proposed pay increases totalling 17 to 25 cents an hour in three steps during a three-year contract.

A UAW source described the North American agreement as "a good settlement," but said the parties had agreed no details would be released until it was ratified by the membership.

Earlier, the IAM had reached agreement with Lockheed covering 10,700 employes at the company's plant in Marietta, Ga. The union shop was not at issue because of the state's so-called "right-to-work" law barring union security agreements.

Meanwhile, both the IAM and the Boeing Co.—the nation's largest defense contractor—acceded to the President's request for a 60-day truce as separate contract talks collapsed in Seattle. Kennedy appointed another three-man board, headed by Saul Wallen, to attempt to work out the issues in the dispute.

Bookbinders Add New Voting Dates

The Bookbinders have announced that a referendum on international officers originally scheduled for Oct. 8 only may be held by local unions on Oct. 5, 8 or 9.

Two offices are being contested in the referendum. Candidates for president succeeding Joseph Denny, retiring on pension Dec. 31, are John Connolly of Norwood, Mass., and Jacob Neumeyer of New York City. Competing for fifth vice president are Betty Whittaker, Toronto, Ont., and Jane Dailey, Detroit. Sec.-Treas. Wesley A. Taylor and five vice presidents are unopposed.

All Bookbinder locals will vote at November meetings on four amendments to union laws—a proposed increase in per capita tax of 10 cents a month, and three other proposed changes.

NLRB Sets Rule for 'Information' Pickets

The National Labor Relations Board in a 3-2 decision has devised a test for determining under what conditions informational picketing by a union is unlawful.

The test is whether or not such picketing seriously "interferes with, disrupts or curtails" operation of the employer's business by producing strikes or interruption of deliveries.

By the same 3-2 vote the board, applying the test in four cases, dismissed unfair labor practice charges against three unions and found three other unions had lost the protection of the "informational picketing" provision of the labor law.

The majority dismissed complaints against Retail Clerks Locals 324 and 770, Los Angeles, for picketing Barker Bros. Corp. and Gold's Inc., Los Angeles furniture stores, and against Retail Clerks Local 57 for picketing Hested Stores Co., Great Falls, Mont.

Union picketing did not disrupt the stores' business even though a few deliveries were halted or delayed, the majority found. In the Great Falls case the labor board set aside an election the Clerks lost on the ground that an expedited election was improperly ordered.

In two companion cases, Hotel & Restaurant Locals 402 and 500 were ordered to stop picketing Joe Hunt's Restaurant, La Jolla, Calif., and Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' Local 429 was directed to cease picketing Sam Melson, contractor on a school near Nashville, Tenn.

The Melson picketing delayed completion of the construction job by several weeks, the board ruled, and the restaurant picketing halted liquor deliveries for 2.5 months.

The majority vote in each case was cast by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. Dissenting votes were cast in each case by Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom, who held that in all four cases the picketing was not primarily informational but was for organizing purposes and thus was not protected activity.

Akron Passes 'Anti-Scab' Ordinance

Akron, O.—A labor-sponsored ordinance restricting the use of strikebreakers has been approved by the Akron City Council and signed by Mayor Edward Erickson (D).

The ordinance, similar to anti-strikebreaking measures enacted by a number of cities and states, was introduced by Councilman Joe Costello, a member of Local 182 of the Typographical Union. Costello, a first-term councilman, told the council the ordinance will help promote industrial peace and could prevent development of labor disputes.

Persons or firms not directly involved in a strike or lockout are prohibited from recruiting strikebreakers to replace employes in the bargaining unit. It is equally unlawful for a person solicited by a third party to accept employment as a strikebreaker. A maximum penalty of 30 days in jail and $1,000 fine is set for each violation.

Approval of the ordinance by a 10-3 vote, more than the two-thirds needed for enactment as an emergency measure, made it effective immediately on the mayor's signature, without the normal 30-day waiting period.

Costello said there was no existing strikebreaker problem, but he said every industrial community faced a potential threat. He noted that strikebreakers have been used in recent years in newspaper strikes in Zanesville and Lima, O.

Union Picks H. P. Wharton As President

Hunter P. Wharton has been named president of the Operating Engineers to complete the term of the late Joseph J. Delaney, who died of a heart attack Sept. 9.

Wharton, the union's secretary-treasurer since 1958, was elected by the executive board at a special meeting in Washington, D. C. His term will run until the next convention in 1964.

Frank P. Converse of Cleveland, an international vice president since 1942, was chosen to succeed Wharton as secretary-treasurer. The board then elected Richard H. Nolan, regional director in the New York City area, as a new vice president.

Wharton, 62, has been a member of Pittsburgh Local 66 since 1926, and served as its business manager from 1936 until 1950.

He came to the union's headquarters in Washington in 1950 as assistant to the president, was elected vice president in 1957, and secretary-treasurer the following year.

Wharton has been active in the safety field and was recently elected chairman of the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council. He is also chairman of the safety committee of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Firm's Ban On Compromise Forces Strike

Bacchus, Utah—One thousand members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers have struck the Hercules Powder Co. here following the company's rejection of a compromise contract settlement recommended by Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The OCAW had agreed to go along with Simkin's proposal of a 9.5-cents-an-hour increase as the basis for settlement, but reverted to its original demand for 12.5 cents when the company refused to go higher than 8 cents.

The Hercules plant manufactures the A-2 Polaris missile and solid fuel propellant for the Minuteman missile.

Management has announced that it would attempt to continue operation of the plant at full capacity by using supervisors, clerical workers and technicians.

This, the union charges, would be "highly unsafe." It points out that the plant has a heavy stock of nitroglycerin and other explosives and that even with a full complement of workers on duty, three men were killed Aug. 23 in an unexplained explosion.

Unaffiliated Union Votes to Join BSEIU

Cleveland—Some 2,600 employes of the East Ohio Gas Co. have affiliated with the Building Service Employes in newly chartered BSEIU Local 555. Their union formerly was known as the Natural Gas Workers.

The union represents field workers and clerical personnel serving 900,000 East Ohio Gas customers. Units of the local are in Cleveland, Canton, Akron, North Canton, Warren, Wooster and Ashtabula, with one for smaller communities. John D. Nagle is president.

Rail Unionists Vie In Mayoralty Race

Hollow Rock, Tenn.—Rail labor couldn't lose in this community's recent election for mayor.

Maurice E. Flowers, an active member of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, won in a "friendly contest" with W. B. Molladay, a conductor.

Dubinsky Protests Distribution Of Embargoed Investigation Report

New York—Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers has lodged a vigorous protest over widespread distribution of an unauthorized statement by a House Labor subcommittee consultant charging the ILGWU with racial bias and undemocratic practices.

In a letter to Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), Dubinsky reminded the subcommittee chairman that at a hearing in New York he and other members of the House panel had refused to accept the testimony of Special Consultant Herbert Hill "because it was a statement of prejudiced and unproven opinions rather than statements of fact."

At the time, Zelenko said Hill's earlier distribution of the statement to the press prior to presenting it as testimony was "without permission of the committee or the chairman or without the knowledge of it." The committee refused to accept the testimony for the record until it was stripped of offensive material. Dubinsky had labeled it "untruthful, irresponsible, a gross exaggeration, unfair, imaginative and done in the spirit of revenge."

Nevertheless, the statement is now being circulated widely in its "original unaccepted form," including mailings to U.S. senators, Dubinsky wrote Zelenko.

He noted that although Hill prepared the testimony in his official capacity as a subcommittee consultant, the statement is being distributed on the letterhead of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Hill is the NAACP's staff labor secretary.

Dubinsky charged that Hill was "using his [subcommittee] post in an impartial inquiry in order to grind his personal axe at taxpayers' expense" and by his actions had made "his record of 'contempt' for Congress quite clear."

"If a congressional investigation may become a platform through which a staff member may vent his personal spite, not only in defiance of all the rules of fair play, but also in stark defiance of the committee itself, then the investigatory power of Congress will itself be put in question," Dubinsky wrote.

The ILGWU president has vehemently denied and rebutted the charges of bias and corruption brought against the union. He was scheduled to appear at further hearings of the subcommittee on Sept. 21.

Since Dubinsky's letter to Zelenko became public, Hill resigned as consultant to the subcommittee. Zelenko wrote Dubinsky that he had asked subcommittee counsel for an immediate investigation.

Taylor Given Key Post in Job Bias Unit

Pres. Kennedy has named a Detroit attorney, Hobart Taylor, Jr., executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

The appointment followed a recent report by Theodore W. Kheel, New York attorney and former president of the National Urban League, urging the appointment of a full-time executive vice chairman as "operating head" of the committee.

Taylor has been serving as special counsel to the committee since its establishment in April 1961 and was recently appointed special assistant to Vice Pres. Johnson, who serves as chairman of the committee.

He succeeds Stephen N. Shulman, executive assistant to the secretary of labor, who has been temporary executive vice chairman since the resignation of former Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman.

A native of Texarkana, Tex., Taylor grew up in Houston and earned degrees at Prairie View State College, Howard University and the University of Michigan.

The committee recently reaffirmed its policy of placing primary emphasis on "compliance and enforcement activities" as the key to its drive against discrimination in employment, although recognizing that "enforcement and persuasion are both essential."

NLRB Eases Bargaining Unit Curbs

The National Labor Relations Board, splitting 3-2 on four cases involving appropriate bargaining units for insurance agents, has approved petitions of the Insurance Workers for separate elections in district offices of three major insurance companies.

The companies in each case asked for units covering either the entire country, one region or one state.

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown agreed that smaller units were appropriate. Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented, as they had earlier this year in the Quaker City Life Insurance Co. case when the majority voted to abandon an 18-year policy of approving no units smaller than statewide.

The majority ordered elections within 30 days among debit agents at district offices of the Western & Southern Life in McKeesport and Wilkinsburg, Pa.; at nine Metropolitan Life district offices in metropolitan Cleveland, O., and two in Wilmington, Del.; and at three Cleveland and Lorain, O., offices of Equitable Life.

NEW PRESIDENT of Government Employes, John F. Griner, right, takes the oath of office from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Griner had been called away from the Seattle convention at which he was elected by a death in his family and his installation was postponed until he was able to come to Washington to take over as head of the 110,000-member union.

World Labor Warns UN on 'Troika' Plan

cial obligations to the UN."

Among the major issues before the current UN session, not the least is the financial bankruptcy toward which the UN is headed. By the end of the year, it will be $175 million in the red, largely because a number of member states have refused to pay their share of various UN operations, such as those in the Congo and Middle East.

In a section dealing with economic development, the ICFTU warned that insufficient attention is being paid to the "social implications of forced industrialization" by nations which treat "their workers as expendable raw material, as some anonymous factor of production rather than as human beings, equal members of society who by their skill and toil create its wealth."

Social improvement, the ICFTU emphasized, in developing countries "is a goal which cannot be subordinate to, nor even put on a level with, the economic goals, but must be the very meaning of economic development."

"Free independent trade unions are obviously the most reliable guardians of this conception," it stated.

Participation by free trade unions in economic development is necessary so that industrial evolution in the new countries will not "repeat the apalling blunders, the inhumanity which accompanied 19th and 20th century industrial development [and] imitate the degradation and exploitation of labor which is the price of industrialization in the totalitarian world."

The ICFTU also covered land reform, full employment, housing, international trade, peace and disarmament.

Human Rights Stressed

The document was submitted by Irving Brown, ICFTU representative to the UN.

The Intl. Court of Justice ruled last summer that UN members which default on their dues can be deprived of their right to vote. The United States, which has pledged to purchase half of a $200 million bond issue so the organization can pay its bills, is expected to press for Assembly enforcement of the World Court decision.

The ICFTU called upon the 108 member states to endow the UN with "effective machinery of investigation, surveillance, reporting and enforcement" of the human rights provisions of the charter.

"An end should be put, said the document, "to the application of double standards in regard to such principles as the maintenance of peace or the right of self-determination. Colonialism should be regarded and denounced as an evil in all its forms, no matter where it maintains its inhuman existence."

A new proposal was presented by the ICFTU for the preparation of a convention on the rights of political prisoners, comparable to the Geneva convention for protection of prisoners of war.

On colonialism, the ICFTU called for unification of the Congo and ending the Katanga secession, pressure to end colonial domination in South Africa, Southwest Africa, the Rhodesias, Angola, Mozambique and "all remaining forms of Portuguese and Spanish regimes or domination existing in Africa."

Red Colonialism Flayed

However, the ICFTU criticized as "one of the gravest shortcomings of the UN" its ignoring of "a new totalitarian kind of colonialism which originated in the USSR [and] continues to expand." It cited armed aggression by the Soviet Union against Hungary in 1956 and by Communist China against Tibet in 1959 as "the only occasions on which the UN tried to deal "with totalitarian colonialism."

TV Film Residual Pay Sets Record in August

Hollywood—Members of the Screen Actors Guild collected $758,000 through their union during August as payment for re-runs of television films in which they appeared.

Under the union's contract, the first time a television entertainment program is re-run each member of the cast receives a "residual" payment of not less than 35 percent of the union's daily minimum wage rate. The payment is 30 percent the second time the film is re-run and 25 percent for each of the next three re-runs. The daily minimum is currently $100.

Since the re-run payment was negotiated by the SAG in 1953, the union has collected $27 million for its members. The August payment is the largest single monthly collection during the nine-year period, according to Executive Sec. John L. Dales. A total of 8,149 checks was mailed to members.

The residual payments are in addition to use payments on television commercials, which are paid directly to the actor, and payments to actors for television use of features originally shown in movie theaters.

Meany Elected President:

Free Labor Institute Graduates 1st Class

Fight for freedom. Build strong and free trade unions. Raise living standards of working people. Take an active role in bringing about peaceful revolutions and social change.

With these urgings, 43 young Latin American union leaders became the first graduates of the new American Institute for Free Labor Development.

"Freedom," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the graduates, "is not something that you go to sleep on; it's something that you fight to preserve. It's something that ties you to your neighbors. Your own freedom is not secure if your neighbor is not free. . . . ."

Meany, who was elected President of the Institute at a board meeting, said it was the recognition that workers everywhere have common problems that led American labor to found the Institute.

Luiz Ordaz Rodriguez of Venezuela, responding for the graduating class, pledged that "we will not rest until the day we have established in our lands a real democracy where only social justice will prevail and where bread, housing, health, schools, land and freedom will be realities."

Pres. Kennedy, in a special message, said the institute symbolizes the fraternity of spirit of free men.

"The free man anywhere," he told the group, "seeks an end to poverty and deprivation everywhere; he seeks equality in opportunity for all persons and justice in the rewards a man receives for his labors on earth. Above all, he believes so truly in his own dignity that he cannot deny it to others."

In other highlights of the graduation exercises and banquet:

- Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, secretary-treasurer of the institute, told the graduates:

"You are the real freedom fighters and to do this job you must have strength and will and guts."

- Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO inter-American representative and executive director of the institute, said the training proram aimed to inspire an enthusiasm and conviction that, through service in the labor movement, the young leaders could serve their country and their fellow men.

"The institute is striving primarily," he added, "to develop this sense of dedication."

A dozen graduates already have assignments to set up training centers in Latin America, he revealed. Centers and training programs have been established or are planned, he added, for the Dominican Republic, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Central America, Jamaica, Surinam, Argentina and elsewhere.

- Teodoro Moscoso, U. S. coordinator of the Alliance for Progress, called on the graduates to support "peaceful revolutions" against poverty, disease and despair.

"It is absolutely imperative that we recognize that social change is demanded in Latin America," he declared.

Various speakers singled out for criticism totalitarian governments of Cuba, Haiti, Nicaragua, Paraguay, and hit at regimes which gained power through coups d'etats or "fixed elections."

AFL-CIO Announces Additions to Film List

Seven additions to the Films for Labor catalogue have been acquired by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education and are now available through the AFL-CIO Film Library.

The subjects range from basic trade unionism to world affairs and the films run from 14 to 30 minutes. Rental or service charge for each is $3. The titles and subjects:

This Union Cause (23 min.): A fast-moving history of the labor movement that sketches in major events and the leaders who helped build it. The picture reflects the drama and spirit of this dynamic struggle and is based on a series of paintings with a narrator providing continuity.

Depressed Areas (14 min.): This is the story of a West Virginia town, narrated by David Brinkley for NBC-TV, where the coal mine has closed and men who have spent 20 years or longer underground find themselves unable to obtain jobs. They live on unemployment compensation and surplus food, and look forward to retraining under the Area Redevelopment Act. This film presents no answers, but poses many basic problems of today.

The 4th Constitutional Convention of the AFL-CIO (22 min.): Highlights include excerpts from speeches to the 1961 convention by Pres. Kennedy, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, and AFL-CIO officers and members. Subjects discussed include legislation to reduce unemployment, health care for the aged, federal aid for education, civil rights and the AFL-CIO organizing program.

The Golden Age (30 min.): Prepared by the National Film Board of Canada, shows how three men face the day of retirement—and its aftermath. It provides the background for a basic discussion of various approaches to retirement, such as the need for planning, developing hobbies and other interests, and union-industry plans for cutting back work-time before retirement.

When I'm Old Enough . . . Goodbye! (28 min.): What happens when a youngster drops out of high school is dramatized in the story of an ambitious, friendly boy who leaves with high hopes of independence and ends up in a dishwashing job. The boy is not a delinquent and is willing to work hard, but in today's job market he is unable to compete because he lacks even a minimum of skills and education.

Next Year Is Now (28 min.): An average high school graduate attempting to enroll in a university finds that his financial resources are limited and his grades, though good, are not good enough to get him a scholarship. The film graphically shows the problems often confronting the children of working-class parents.

Test for the West (27 min.): The history of crisis-oriented Berlin, how it became a fragmented city with part of its people divided from their fellow-countrymen and occupied by foreign armies, is given in a film that traces Germany from a center of European culture in the '20s through the Hitler era and the postwar period.

The Sounds of Music Creep in Our Ears

CONGRESS OF STRINGS, held for the fourth year at Michigan State University under the sponsorship of the Musicians, drew these comely scholarship winners (from left): Karen Stoval, Atlanta; Erika Steiniger, Oxford, O.; Frances Upham, Tucson, Ariz.; Darlene Gray, Las Vegas, Nev.—all violinists—and Judy Trostle, Elizabethtown, Pa., who plays the violincello.

THERE WAS RECREATION as well as instruction, of course, and here John Samuels, Miami, and Mary Thorkelson, Minneapolis, take advantage of music to play cards by, as it is produced on the bass by Carole Musser of York, Pa.

UNDER THE BATON of Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, students at the AFM Congress of Strings go through one of a series of rehearsals for a public concert given at Michigan State and taped for TV.

SOME FINER POINTS of playing the double-bass are given a group of Congress of Strings students by Warren Benfield of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, who has been an instructor since the annual summer school first opened in 1959.

THIS JAM SESSION was not in the curriculum at the Congress of Strings, but Bruce Allard, who usually plays a violin, brought along some brass and that was that. John Samuels, Miami, is playing the bass; Alan Molitz, Somerville, N. J., another bass player, is doubling on the piano and Margaret Gruman, Independence, Mo., a violinist in the classroom, is the thrush.

IT'S A CRITICAL EYE that Mishel Piastro, conductor of the Longines Symphonette and noted violin instructor, uses to examine the craftsmanship of the old violin played by Hugh S. Loughram, a student from Baltimore.

The Final Round

THE 1962 PRIMARY ELECTIONS and nominating conventions are about over and the successful candidates are squaring away for the November showdown. If there has been any emerging pattern, it is that the voters will have a choice in terms of the basic issues. Both parties have selected candidates pretty much in line with the division in Congress between those supporting the Administration and the Republican-Southern Democratic coalition opposing the President.

The realization that the record of the 87th Congress will be critical in the fall elections has become apparent on Capitol Hill, where in a closing flurry the slow-moving legislators have finally acted on a number of key issues.

Passage of the public works bill, the Senate action on trade expansion, the conference report on federal aid for higher education are all indications that congressmen and senators are concerned with the record they place before the voters.

The final days of the 87th Congress may see more of the Administration's program winning approval, although in sharply modified form. But in many vital areas Congress either has failed to act or has rejected Administration proposals.

The issue in November, then, will remain unchanged—give the President a Congress that will move crisply and surely in support of a program to reduce unemployment, extend and expand social welfare programs, war on discrimination and build a strong nation that can lead the world to peace and freedom.

TO PRODUCE A CONGRESS dedicated to a liberal and progressive program, a Congress free of the stranglehold of the conservative coalition, a major effort is required on the part of the trade union movement.

This effort entails overcoming the normal lethargy and inertia of an "off-year" election by stimulating interest in the issues, by translating the complex and involved legislative matters into the context of the problems that ordinary Americans face on a day-to-day basis: unemployment, health care, education, decent wages, civil rights and a score of others.

It means also an aggressive register-and-vote drive at all levels of the labor movement so that union members vitally affected by the actions of Congress will be eligible to vote their convictions and will actually go to the polls to support their beliefs.

And a high priority should be given to contributions to COPE, for without necessary funds to present the issues clearly and simply to the voters, to aid them to become registered and to vote, to help candidates supporting labor's program with voluntary contributions, labor's campaign will fall short.

There is no more important job for the trade union movement between now and Nov. 6 than an all-out political education and action effort. The problems facing the labor movement today are more and more problems that require legislative and political solutions. If the labor movement is not adequately represented in the legislative halls, if the conservative coalition is not curtailed, these problems will increase in complexity and severity.

Msgr. Higgins Dissents:

NAM's Latest Attack on Unions Described as 'Serious Mistake'

This analysis of the National Association of Manufacturers' latest attack on unions and unionism was prepared by Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and appeared in his weekly column "The Yardstick":

A CRITICAL ANALYSIS of the impact of labor unions on the American economy was released by the National Association of Manufacturers on the eve of Labor Day.

Noting the widely held belief that unions are responsible for the improvement in the living standards of working people, the NAM study states flatly that this contention is unsupported by the facts. Entitled "Economic Implications of Union Power," the study asserts that union power, far from contributing to the welfare of American workers, has resulted in unemployment in many areas and industries.

The 64-page study, designed to provoke public discussion of the role of unions in today's economy, explores the effects of union power on employment, money wages and real wages.

As to employment, the NAM study argues that the weight of evidence demonstrates that union demands are likely to be made at the cost of jobs of members and non-members.

As to money wages, it contends that unions can force them up—beyond those prevailing and beyond what is economically feasible. "However, with the inevitable economic consequences of unemployment or inflation, it is a pyrrhic victory," the study says.

The trend in real wages has been upward during the entire course of the nation's history, the study contends, pointing out that this trend antedates the growth of unionism.

"The forces motivating these increases have been economic and impersonal—growth and competition," the study says.

The NAM study does not question the right of unions to exist.

"The right of voluntary association," it says, "is fundamental in our society and is not dependent on proof of the achievement of specific social purposes."

The study, however, not only questions but flatly denies the contention that unions are "necessary for the well-being of the organized segment of the population." It also denies that the interests of American workers would be jeopardized if unions were to be subjected to further restraints.

"We have not attempted in this paper," the authors point out in conclusion, "to establish criteria for differentiating the 'legitimate' activities of unions, in concrete cases, from their 'illegitimate' ones. The legislators, judges, administrators, lawyers and others who have to cope with those problems on a daily basis will find them as puzzling as ever.

"The question with which we have dealt is the one that is prior to such problems: Would we, in imposing restraints on the power of labor unions, run a grave risk of losing benefits that would otherwise accrue to America's working people?

"The answer is no."

IT MAY HAVE BEEN pure coincidence that the NAM chose to release this study on the eve of Labor Day. In any event, its critical tone and the peculiar timing of its release were certainly not calculated to add to organized labor's sense of security on the occasion of labor's annual holiday. The leaders of organized labor would be less than human if they did not interpret its publication on the eve of Labor Day as a call to arms, for what the study says, in effect, is that the working people of the United States can get along without unions and might indeed be better off without them.

My own guess is that the 17 or 18 million organized workers in the U.S. will resent this attempt on the part of the NAM to undermine their confidence in the effectiveness of their unions. And the fact that NAM's conclusions are buttressed with a battery of statistics will not make these conclusions any more palatable.

I would say that the publication of NAM's critical study of union power was a serious mistake. The NAM has every right to disagree with organized labor on specific issues, but to attempt to persuade the American people at this late date that unions are not necessary (and have never been necessary) and to couple this argument with a vague appeal for further restrictions is reckless to say the least.

The predictable result of the release of NAM's study will be a further hardening of attitudes between labor and management at a time when good faith cooperation is desperately required. One doesn't need to be a trained statistician to predict that this hardening of attitudes will be harmful not only to labor and management but to the public interest as well.

Morgan Says:

Commercializing of Astronauts Poses Problems of Principle

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

IN HIS SPACE SPEECH at Rice University in Houston, Pres. Kennedy observed that people may ask why spend all that money trying to land a man on the moon. Why, some say, choose this as our goal? "And," the President answered, "they may well ask why climb the highest mountain? Why, 35 years ago, fly the Atlantic? Why does Rice play Texas?"

Morgan

Well, it may not apply at Rice or Texas but a lot of big-time college athletes play football because they, in effect, are paid to. They get fat scholarships, other interesting emoluments and, sometimes, a college education as they do or die in a business-like way for dear old Siwash.

Commercialism has already reared its ugly head as a problem for the astronauts in the space program and the problem is likely to get bigger before it gets better. With all the money involved, with all the exciting copy stemming from the risk and adventure involved, it is bound to. And the astronauts themselves are only part of the predicament.

NASA, the space agency, estimates it will take $10 to $15 billion to put three men on the moon by 1970. Communities eye this enormous pie hungrily, pressuring their congressmen to wangle them a slice. In Houston the other day, during the President's whirlwind tour, Vice Pres. Johnson assured reporters the city will receive its "fair share of the space budget." Houston hasn't done badly so far. A brand new space center is being erected on its outskirts, cost: $120 million.

"Misgivings are aroused," said a New York Times editorial, "by evidence that pressures from different political, geographic and economic interests may be playing a role in the decisions that have been reached" about the number if not the location of our burgeoning space projects. The Vice President's remark, said the Times, was not reassuring.

"Many Americans," it added, "are wondering why the National Aeronautics & Space Administration felt it necessary to establish its press headquarters for the next Mercury manned space flight in a luxurious new motel (at Cape Canaveral) which is partly owned by the Mercury astronauts. Such incidents inevitably raise suspicions of favoritism in the space program's decision-making."

OTHER POTENTIAL incidents are already tailor-made. For the astronauts have also had their money—the lion's share of which comes from the half-million dollars they equally divide for having sold the accounts of their space exploits exclusively to Life magazine—invested in another motel in the Bahamas, conveniently near a well staffed U.S. tracking station, and in an apartment complex in Washington, D. C.

So generously grateful did Houston feel, understandably, for its new space center, that the Houston Homebuilders Association offered each of the seven original astronauts a $24,000 home "as a gift from the community." After a day of anguished soul-searching last April the astronauts turned the offer down. Actually they had already accepted it but the government belatedly intervened with a twinge of conscience in their behalf.

A main difficulty here lies not with the clean-cut, single-purposed astronauts themselves but is imbedded in the fact that the bulk of their financial affairs has been left with an unusually enterprising Washington attorney named C. Leo DeOrsey who seems to have approached his assignment with more emphasis on returns on principal than on the questions the operations raise about principles.

DeOrsey has (long and successfully) similarly guided Arthur Godfrey, a television performer, in investment ventures. But the astronauts are not performers. One trouble is that DeOrsey and the rest of us in the vast and admiring but demanding American public insist on treating them as performers with all the degrading aspects with which we spike our combination of hero-worship and crass commercialism.

The government has not yet satisfactorily come to grips with such big questions as what is fair pay for an astronaut; how much security should his family be provided in this extremely risky business; how much should he be allowed to commercialize his ventures, and how can a policy be hammered out that will be fair to all government employes on these matters, whether they are astronauts, diplomats or miscellaneous bureaucrats.

Washington Reports:

Congressmen Praise Program Of Aid for Migrant Health Care

A NEW PROGRAM of federal assistance for health care of the nation's migrant workers, passed by Congress and sent to the President for his signature, was praised by two members of Congress interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

It is the first step taken by Congress to improve the condition of these workers, the congressmen pointed out.

Rep. Tom Pelly (R-Wash.) commented that the program could not be called over-generous.

"Compare the $3 million a year provided by this bill," he said, "with the $7 billion that we spend for agricultural appropriations to try to improve the lot of the farmer. We provide adequate funds to look after a cow or hog, but when it comes to providing decent sanitation for human beings, like these migrant workers, we're hesitant."

Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N. J.), noting that the children of migrant workers often are unable to get schooling beyond the fourth grade, declared:

"OUR SOCIETY has moved to a point where a person who hasn't finished sixth grade is considered a functional illiterate. Obviously also, such persons are a drag on the economy of the whole country. They become unemployed. And they aren't educable to be trained for a new job if one opens."

Thompson advocated passage of another pending bill to provide federal aid to the states to help them set up facilities for the education of the children of migrant workers. The states themselves do not generally undertake such education because, he said, the migrants are not residents, and most states now have excessive financial burdens especially in real estate taxes, which they use as the main revenue source in paying for schools.

Another bill, among the 11 introduced in this session of Congress, would require the licensing of crew leaders, who contract with farmers for the services and payment of migrant workers.

Thompson and Pelly charged that many crew leaders exploit both the farmer and the workers, pocketing for themselves much of the wage the farmer proffers for migrants.

Pelly said that bills to protect migrant workers, four of which are now held up in the House Rules Committee, have not been reported out because the migrant workers have no votes and no lobby.

"What we need is better knowledge of the facts on the part of the public," he declared.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IN FOUR MAJOR industrial states, Republicans have put up candidates for governor generally conceded to be formidable. In all four states—Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and California—the Democrats now hold the statehouses. These races for governor are among the most important of the upcoming elections.

The GOP has nominated Rep. William W. Scranton, a first-term member of the House, in Pennsylvania, to run against the recently resigned Democratic mayor of Philadelphia, Richardson Dilworth. Scranton is a scion of the family after which the city of Scranton was named; he is young, energetic, and the kind of candidate the Republicans like to think of as helping give a "new image" to the party.

Dilworth, of course, is one of the two Democratic leaders who built the reform organization that rescued Philadelphia from more than a half-century of entrenched misrule by an Old Guard GOP machine. (The other is Sen. Joseph S. Clark, who is running for re-election this year.) Dilworth has a fine personal record, he is a tested administrator, a liberal. The Republicans are hoping that charges of returning mismanagement in the city will damage his chances for election.

In Ohio, Democratic Gov. Michael V. Di Salle is seeking a second term. His Republican opponent, James A. Rhodes, is not very high on the political totem pole in his present office—that of state auditor—but he is a celebrated Ohio vote-getter, the only candidate for statewide office who survived the Democratic sweep of 1958.

MICHIGAN IS THE BATTLEGROUND from which the automobile maker, George Romney, hopes to begin his rise to national political prominence. His Democratic opponent, Gov. John B. Swainson, surprised a good many people when he won two years ago as successor to six-term Gov. G. Mennen Williams, and he has fought hard with the GOP-dominated legislature to modernize the state's laws and liberalize its social system.

Romney, of course, has the state's one-party press solidly in his corner. He has the advantage of a legend ("He put over the Rambler in defiance of the Big Three auto companies"), and he is seeking to act like a mugwump Republican rather than an Old Guardsman.

The biggest battle of all is in California, where former Vice Pres. Nixon is trying to project himself back into the political scene by defeating Democratic incumbent Edmund G. Brown, running for a second term after a record of highly constructive leadership since 1958.

IF THIS TURNS OUT to be a Democratic year—and that depends very largely on whether labor's own register-and-vote drive is effective—three and possibly four of the incumbent Democrats will certainly be re-elected.

If the turnout is small, if the voters show apathy, the GOP could win three or all four of the governorships.

The effects would be profound. Not in the old-fashioned sense in which it used to be a truism that the party controlling the statehouse also controlled the election machinery, and could manipulate it for party advantage, but in the effects on the Republican nominating convention of '64.

A California Republican convention delegation dominated by Nixon would be very different from a delegation selected by whatever leaders were left in the event of a Nixon defeat. A Michigan delegation under Romney would be managed by Romney. A Pennsylvania delegation controlled by Scranton as governor would be seeking national preferment for Scranton. In Ohio, Republican National Committeeman Ray Bliss probably will control the delegation whether Rhodes wins or loses, but the GOP would naturally be encouraged at a victory.

In reverse, a Democratic triumph in holding the governorship would point very powerfully to a large-scale victory in the presidential year.

AMERICA'S MIGRANT WORKERS got the first step toward federal protection when Congress passed a health bill but much still needs to be done, according to Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N. J.), left, and Rep. Tom Pelly (R-Wash.), heard on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

The Cost of Food Is Just About What the Housewife Makes It

By Sidney Margolius

THE U.S. AGRICULTURE DEPT. keeps repeating that food is a bargain. It releases constantly advice that one hour of work in a factory now buys, for example, 2.2 pounds of round steak compared to 1.8 pounds in 1939, and only 1.2 a half-century ago.

It is perfectly true that many agricultural foodstuffs as sold by growers to processors and manufacturers are a bargain. In 1960 the farmer got only 39 cents of the dollar you pay for food compared to 49 cents in 1951. It is also true that even at retail, some basic foods are relatively not expensive (except for the high meat prices we have had to live through this summer).

But today's meals are expensive because we do not buy the same foods as 23 years ago, let alone 50, or in the same-containers. We buy highly-processed "convenience" foods in small containers.

Of every $20 we spend for groceries today, we pay from $1.50 to $2 for the packaging, and sometimes the package actually costs as much as the food itself. The Agriculture Dept. says that smaller packages "meet the food needs for one meal, and thus reduce waste."

This approach to high-priced convenience foods and small packages serves the interests of food processors, not farmers or consumers. To take one example, the dry cereals packaged for individual servings cost you a little over 4 cents an ounce, or about 65 cents a pound. For that price you can feed your children meat, eggs, milk, cheese and other high-nutrition foods at even less cost.

The farmer, of course, gets no more whether you pay 2 cents an ounce for cereal in a large box, or 4 cents in an individual box. In fact, if he gave the grain away, you would still pay almost the same price. The farmer gets 2.4 cents for the corn in a large box of cornflakes selling for 26 cents, and the same 2.4 cents if that amount of cornflakes is sold in small boxes for approximately 40-50 cents.

TOO MANY FAMILIES need to shop more carefully. The effect of self-service supermarkets often is to encourage impulse buying of expensive foods. This is why many families complain of high food bills. Food spending increased about twice as fast as food prices in one recent period.

For example, the Indiana Experiment Station found that fewer than half of today's shoppers make any definite meal plans in advance. The rest decide in the store what to buy among a wide variety of items, new products and new packages.

While eight out of 10 housewives said they believed a "good homemaker" would use a prepared list most of the time, many still shopped without one. Significantly, the Indiana survey found higher-income housewives are most likely to use shopping lists. Nor is it husbands who succumb to impulse buying, as it is popularly supposed. One survey found men more likely to buy from a list.

Having thus surrendered planning, our shopping has become increasingly determined by package and display designers, who have learned how to lead us in a predetermined traffic pattern through the aisles, stop up at certain displays, and if we handle, probably buy. They lead us in the pattern they desire chiefly by strategic placement of demand items such as bread, beef, paper products, the Agricultural Marketing Service reports.

Retailers themselves are convinced that women are not seriously interested in shopping on an economical, nutritional basis. When stores try to advise customers what to serve for best nutrition, they meet almost complete indifference, Robert Muller, editor of Progressive Grocer, once told this reporter.

Joblessness Is 'Dynamite'

Bills Backed to Lift Work for Idle Youth

"IDLE YOUTH Is Social Dynamite," is the warning sounded by more than 50 major national organizations which are deeply concerned that the nation support a work and training program for unemployed American youth, even though they are not working for any particular bill.

To list some of the organizations supporting this effort is to give the measure of its importance: the U.S. Conference of Mayors, AFL-CIO, Child Welfare League of America, National Council of Churches of Christ, National Council of Negro Women, National Council of Jewish Women, American Legion, Auto Workers, Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, National Association of County Officials and the National Committee on Employment of Youth.

In a pamphlet picturing the immense jobs these idle young Americans could be doing, the National Committee on Employment of Youth retells the story of the Civilian Conservation Corps which left so great a mark on the American scene during the great depression of the Thirties.

It points out the billions of dollars of U.S. timber that are now being lost to insufficient fire-fighting personnel and insufficient pest control. It tells of the vast area of Alaska's undeveloped forests that might be put to productive use; the work that needs to be done in national parks and forests; the great national and local recreation areas that could be improved.

It tells also of the job training that might be extended to jobless youth: plumbing, painting, baking, welding, radio repair, surveying, carpentry, automobile repair, masonry and woodwork among a long list of skills and crafts. And it outlines the job that needs to be done in public service such as hospitals, libraries, schools, playgrounds, public housing projects, settlement houses and public information centers, all of which are understaffed and in need of help.

The committee's answer is contained in bills now before the House and Senate. They would put young men and women to work under a government program both in the country and in the city. They would receive minimum pay, would continue their education, would be taken from the rural and city slums where jobs are scarce and idleness is on the increase.

Only recently the Governors' Conference on Youth Employment developed many facts that leave no doubt as to the need of remedial action in this area.

"No wooden horse ever rolled into Troy was more dangerous or explosive than what we are harboring among our unemployed youth," said former Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg.

"The price tag on ignorance is the highest price tag of all," said George T. Wilkins, Illinois superintendent of public instruction, in telling the shocking story of school "drop-outs" condemned to poverty and unemployment because of lack of training.

Pres. Kennedy has listed the Youth Employment bill as vital in his recently announced six-point program to help expand the economy and add to employment.

"You know, in this country today we have 1 million boys and girls out of school and out of work," he said. "In the next eight years we are going to have 8 million boys and girls who are going to be around looking for work. They are going to be unskilled and they may have trouble finding jobs.

"The youth employment opportunities bill would give them a chance to work in our forests, in our parks, and I think it is better than having them standing on a street corner without hope."

This is the story of the "social dynamite" that is lying around in our country, ignored and neglected. Congress has an opportunity to do something about it. It can be hoped that it will heed Kennedy's call for action.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Lie About It When You Get Back If You Want to Enjoy a Vacation

By Jane Goodsell

SO YOUR SUMMER vacation is over and here you are, back home again with your flattened bank account, your overgrown yard and your peeling sunburn.

But to make up for these woes, you have a headful of happy vacation memories. You've seen a lot and learned a lot, and you can't wait to tell your friends about your trip. You imagine yourself, like Lowell Thomas, holding audiences spellbound as you recount the adventures you have had and the sights you have seen. Surely, your friends are eager to hear all about it.

You think so, huh? Listen, if I know those friends of yours, they don't give a hoot about your impressions of the World's Fair. And unless you are prepared to tie and gag them, they aren't going to sit still while you run off those color movies you took of Old Faithful.

There is one exception, one type of person who displays a genuine interest in hearing about your trip. And that's somebody who's been there (wherever you went) himself. Eyes alight with eagerness, he buttonholes you to say, "Hey, I hear you went to Cooper's Landing this summer. I went there last year. How'd you like it?"

At last you have found somebody who's really interested. Gratefully, you launch into an animated description of the ferry boat ride you took around the bay. Before you've even told how much your tickets cost, he interrupts to ask, "Did you eat at Jake's?"

You say no, you didn't eat at Jake's but you had dinner at a marvelous place called Mario's where you had the most wonderful fried crab legs.

He interrupts again, shaking his head sadly. "Too bad you didn't eat at Jake's," he says. "It's the only really good place at Cooper's Landing. Of course you stayed at the Lakeshore, didn't you?"

You admit, shamefacedly, that you didn't, and he looks shocked. "But the Lakeshore is Cooper's Landing," he says sternly.

AND SO IT GOES. According to him, you picnicked in the wrong place, fished in the wrong spot, skipped all the highlights and, in general, missed everything there was to see, do, eat and buy at Cooper's Landing. By the time he's through with you, you'll feel that your entire vacation was a bust, a veritable disaster of poor planning and missed opportunities.

As I see it, there are two ways to deal with this situation. One way is to tell a simple lie: say yes to everything. Don't admit that you missed a thing.

The other solution is to tell a complicated lie. Tell him you stayed at his favorite spot, ate at that place he thinks is so wonderful and saw all the sights that made such an impression on him. But (and this is the really fun part) tell him you didn't think they were so hot.

"Oh, Jake's is all right," you can say, "for the run-of-the-mill tourist, but Mario's is really something special. It's the only really good place at Cooper's Landing."

Convention Roars Approval:

IBEW Votes to Push Political Programs

Montreal—The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers wound up its 27th convention here with rousing approval of a stepped-up program of political activity keyed to local-level voter registration and education.

Sec. Joseph D. Keenan urged each of the nearly 2,500 delegates to become "a committee of one to get this registration job done."

Earlier, the convention had amended the IBEW constitution to set up in each local the position of "registrar" to lead voter registration drives among the membership and keep them informed on legislative and political matters.

Two Months to U.S. Election

Keenan reminded the delegates that only two months remained before the congressional election in the United States, but noted that many states still had their registration books open.

Labor, he said, can count on only about 195 Democratic and Republican congressmen for consistent support of progressive economic and social welfare legislation.

"If we can pick up 15 to 20 more votes in the next few months, we will then be able to go into the next Congress for relief," Keenan declared.

American labor, he said, is "the people's lobby."

"We are the ones who are carrying the fight for medical care," he added. "We are the ones who are fighting for better aid to education. We are the ones fighting for better homes. . . .

"We have taken upon ourselves great responsibility. If we do our jobs between now and next November, I am sure we will get the people we need, and we will then be able to take a part in enacting the laws that are necessary to keep our country strong."

Responding on the spot to Keenan's appeal for full participation in the dollar drive of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, the delegates contributed more than $2,800 in a collection for COPE.

In another major address, Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Claude Jodoin returned to a theme stressed by IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman in his keynote address, declaring that the impact of automation is making the industrial revolution of the 18th and 19th centuries "look like a comparatively minor affair in history."

Jodoin noted that it has been less than 10 years since labor was told not to worry about the loss of jobs through automation, that more jobs—not less—would be the end result. But since then, he observed, "we have had more and more automation and more and more unemployment."

He called on labor to reinforce its unity in facing the challenges, and asked:

"Unless we can use these great developments for the good of the people, how can we justify the claim that democracy is the best way?"

The delegates subsequently called on locals to press for a 32-hour workweek standard, without reduction in pay, to cut into the high rate of joblessness "being accelerated by vast technological changes."

Other Major Actions

In other major actions the convention:

- Approved an increase of 60 cents to bring the monthly per capita payment to $1.50, exclusive of allotments to the pension fund. In urging the increase, all of which will go into the general fund, officers cited the need for expanding the organizing staff and enlarging the union's training, education and public relations programs.
- Upheld the IBEW executive council decision expelling two officers of Baltimore Local 28 and imposing lesser penalties on others for their part in a strike defying an express refusal of sanction by the international president. The local's charter was revoked during the walkout.
- Re-elected all officers with two exceptions. Stanley Thompson of Red Lodge, Mont., was elected vice president from the 8th district, and H. W. Schmidt of Miami, Fla., was chosen to represent the 4th executive council district.

Carey Urges 'Fresh Start' At IUE Parley

Cleveland—Pres. James B. Carey called on the delegates to the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers 10th convention here to lay the groundwork for "a new beginning, a fresh start, for this great union we have built.

The emphasis, he declared in his report, must be on increasing the union's membership growth and its bargaining effectiveness. In the past two years, he said, there has been a lag in the percentage of workers voting for IUE in representation elections compared to the record of the trade union movement generally.

He pointed also to the fact that in the electrical and electronics industry, 62 percent of the white collar workers are nonunion and "serve to depress wages, benefits and protections for the entire white collar working force."

Carey told the 682 delegates that the "new beginning" rests on settling decisively the internal disputes and friction in the union.

Steelworkers Hear McDonald Urge Business to Create New Jobs

future for 900,000 employed USWA members, close to 100,000 retired and 325,000 unemployed members, heard a message from Pres. Kennedy shown by sound film on 40 movie screens erected in the aisles of this city's cavernous convention hall.

They cheered speeches by Leader T. C. Douglas of Canada's New Democratic Party, Pulitzer Prize-winning author James A. Michener, Pres. Yoshinobu Kadoma of the Japanese Steelworkers Union, and others.

The union's officers reported that in spite of declining jobs in the industry, the USWA added more than 200 new locals in the last two years, made great strides in Canada, increased its net worth $112,041 in the six months ending last June 30, and now has 2,977 agreements with 2,350 companies in the U.S., Canada and Puerto Rico.

In his vigorous keynote speech, McDonald cited the primary union problem as one caused by a lack of growth in the economy and too-rapid automation. All segments of the economy must join to find jobs in the next 10 years for an estimated 26 million persons, made up of those displaced from the work force and those seeking their first job, he warned.

"Our government and the labor movement," McDonald said, "have been working diligently on this problem but it seems to me that we cannot do this job alone. It seems to me that the time has come when business must take over its social obligations."

Jobs in the U.S. and Canada lie in the business community, and new jobs must be found by that community, he declared.

Pointing out that business spends millions of dollars a year in attempts to hamper or destroy American unions, he advised businessmen to "desist in this effort" and "spend these millions in building plans of progress to help America grow."

Communist Peril Cited

Urging unity of effort because of the Communist peril, McDonald said "it just seems to me if we can do some real united planning, if we do build America and Canada economically strong, and if we do build a strong free world through proving by word and deed that democracy is the best way of life for all mankind," the effort can succeed.

The perils of communism are not to be laughed away, he went on, pointing to Cuba and the fact that the people of Florida are upset by a threat that lies only 90 miles away.

Johnson drew a standing ovation after telling the convention that in his recent trip to the Middle East he found a "deep reservoir of respect and affection" for the U.S. and "virtually no appeal" from communism. The people, however, are no longer "content to live in poverty, ignorance and disease," he warned.

"This means that our system must work," Johnson asserted, pointing out that "we cannot hold ourselves forth as the hope of the world unless our own house is in order" and that the most important adjunct of U.S. foreign policy is "our own economic strength and our own prosperity."

'Portable Pensions'

Michener, Democratic candidate for Congress in Pennsylvania's 8th District, was assured by McDonald that he could count on the support of union members in his first campaign.

Douglas spoke of the economically ironic spectacle of prices rising while surpluses pile up and joblessness mounts, and cited recent efforts of major steel firms to hike prices.

"You were more fortunate in the U.S. than we in Canada because you had a young and aggressive President who took decisive steps to halt an unjustifiable increase," the former Saskatchewan premier said, adding that "we must bring pressure on government at every level for full employment".

In Canada, he said, labor will fight hard for "universal portable pensions" for workers who move from one job to another.

Major business of the convention was defined by McDonald and the other top officers—Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel and Vice Pres. Howard R. Hague—as formulation of an action program designed to help provide more jobs and to bring the benefits of union organization to technical and professional steel workers.

Kennedy Sound Film Greets USWA Parley

Miami Beach—Pres. John F. Kennedy assured delegates to the Steelworkers' convention here that members of his Administration are "as committed to the welfare of your membership today and in the future as we have been in the past" and promised "every possible step to make sure that the steel industry and the workers" are moved steadily forward.

Kennedy's voice and image reached convention delegates through the medium of a sound film photographed and recorded at the White House Sept. 6. He said he had already been invited to the 1964 convention by Pres. David J. McDonald, who appeared in the film also, "and I will be with you then."

The moive was filmed by Robert Post, TV and film producer who died of a heart attack here Sept. 16. Kennedy sent a separate message of regret to the union, and McDonald said the movie might serve also as a memento.

Kennedy congratulated the USWA for completing major steel negotiations without a work stoppage last April and hailed the settlement as "an example of the kind of responsible unionism with which the USWA has long been identified."

Noting that the nation has much unfinished business, the President said "We seek the support of a House and Senate that will join this effort and not prevent us from taking action on vital measures which make the difference between prosperity and recession—between a man having a decent job and not having one."

"We ask your help," Kennedy told the convention, in electing a House and Senate committed to progress and "not one that wants to sit still and look to the past rather than the future."

James Brindle Of Auto Union To Head HIP

New York—James Brindle, director of the Auto Workers' Social Security Dept., has been elected president and chief executive officer of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

Directors of HIP, a non-profit medical service plan which serves 630,000 persons in the New York City area, chose Brindle to succeed Dr. David P. Barr.

Brindle has been active in the health care field, serving as a board member of the Greater Detroit Area Hospital Council, vice president of Metropolitan Hospital in Detroit, a member of the research advisory committee of the Michigan Blue Cross organization, and a board member of the Tuberculosis & Health Association and the Visiting Nurse Association of Metropolitan Detroit. He is also a fellow of the American Public Health Association and an advisory committee member with the U.S. Public Health Service.

Before joining the UAW staff, he had served as state director of the Bureau of Public Assistance in Pennsylvania and as an official of the U.S. Surplus Property Administration in Washington.

CARPENTERS' CONVENTION, meeting in National Guard Armory in Washington, D. C., hears AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany call for stepped-up register-and-vote campaign to elect a Congress in November which will pass job-creating legislation. Seated behind Meany is Carpenters' Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson, elected by acclamation to a new four-year term.

demonstration and filed to the platform to shake hands.

Also elected without opposition were the union's other general officers, Vice Presidents John R. Stevenson and Finlay Allan, Sec. R. E. Livingston and Treas. Peter E. Terzick.

Delegates were scheduled to ballot on two executive board positions which were contested. Eight other incumbent board members were re-elected without opposition.

Headquarters Dedicated

The opening convention session —the first in 50 years to be held in Washington—marked the formal dedication of the new Carpenters headquarters building near the Capitol, described by speakers as "a monument to craftsmanship at its highest . . . beautiful and practical."

Hutcheson brought the delegates to their feet in a keynote speech in which he said the labor movement and the nation must go forward on the economic, political and world fronts.

"We are disenchanted with waging a constantly defensive struggle," he declared. "We are weary of retreat. We are disgusted with being pushed around.

"It is becoming increasingly clear that some of the mossbacks in Congress and in big business are engaged in a sit-down strike."

There is "no possible justification," he said, for the defeat in Congress of social security health care and a broad program of federal aid to education.

Questions Posed

Noting that the nation's population growth "will require tremendous expansion in the next decade of construction and production," Hutcheson asked:

"Well, what are we waiting for? Guaranteed profits? Where is the business enterprise and daring which made this nation great?"

Meany told the delegates that the "immediate problem" of the labor movement is to get union members to register and vote because "we have got to change the complexion of Congress in order to get legislation that will put our people back to work."

The battlefield at home, he said, "whether we like it or not, is now the political area."

In other major speeches:

- Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. termed the union's new headquarters a symbol of "the triumph of labor in a free land." It was made possible, he said, because the union's founders 81 years ago, "although far too poor to afford a headquarters, were truly rich in spirit."
- AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the convention that the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan has "taken out of the area of conflict" many of the labor movement's problems "and it is possible for us now to do the organizing job."

Labor, he said, must do better in "telling our story" about the many contributions made by unions and union members to community and charitable projects.

- Metal Trades Dept. Pres. B. A. Gritta reported on a major organizing campaign launched by crafts affiliated with the department at federal installations employing 1 million blue collar workers. "Very shortly," he predicted, local metal trades councils will win exclusive recognition and bargaining rights at all naval shipyards.
- Maritime Trades Dept. Pres. Paul Hall said the impact of wage increases negotiated by the Carpenters has benefited all labor "and set a goal for every other organization to shoot at."

In the formal officers' report, Hutcheson noted that the union membership had dropped during the past four years because "new techniques and new machinery, month by month, have been chipping away at the number of man-hours required to do a given job, or to erect a given building.

"While construction dollar volume has remained high," he said, "the employment situation for our members has not kept pace . . . Unfortunately, I see no reversal of this trend in the immediate future."

Hutcheson said that while most large employers have been organized, "there remains a vast pool of small operations that need organization." He singled out the residential housing field as one which "must be organized if our brotherhood is to grow and prosper."

By-Election In Canada Set For Oct. 22

Ottawa, Ont.—Prime Minister John Diefenbaker has set Oct. 22 for the federal by-election in Burnaby-Coquitlam riding, in British Columbia, through which National Leader Thomas C. Douglas of the New Democratic Party hopes to reach Parliament.

The seat was won overwhelmingly by Erhart Regier of the NDP in the same election on June 18 in which Douglas was defeated in Saskatchewan. Regier resigned to give Douglas the opportunity to run again. The Social Credit, Liberal and Conservative parties are expected to nominate candidates and at least one independent has indicated he will run.

Meantime, the NDP delegation in Parliament, which opens Sept. 27, has reserved a seat for Douglas. Bert Herridge, from the Kootenay East, B. C., riding, is expected to serve as the party's temporary House leader.

In a British Columbia provincial legislature runoff election on Sept. 4, the NDP increased its representation from 15 to 16 when Mrs. Margaret Hobbs, of Revelstoke, won over Social Credit and Liberal opponents. She succeeds her late husband, George Hobbs, who died early this year of a heart attack.

Pay Hike Also a Goal:

Porters Push Drive For 40-Hour Week

Montreal—The Sleeping Car Porters have intensified their drive for a shorter workweek of 40 hours plus application of the 10.28-cent hourly wage settlement won by the non-operating rail unions.

Nearly 100 delegates to the BSCP's triennial convention here endorsed the combined wage-hour drive on four employers—the Pullman Co., New York Central, Rock Island and Soo Line—and called for strike action if necessary to achieve the goal.

The delegates also approved a special $25 assessment to finance the fight.

The four railroad companies refused to put the wage increase into effect unless the union agreed to accept a "moratorium" on its bid for shorter working time.

In his keynote address, BSCP Pres. A. Philip Randolph said the union thus found itself "engaged in the major struggle of our life and history."

Randolph declared that while the Porters were demanding the cut in hours, as a matter of economic justice, to meet the 40-hour standard enjoyed by most of the labor movement, the prime objective of the drive was job stabilization and protection.

48-Hour Week

BSCP members now work 205 hours a month, or about 48 hours a week. Their goal of a 173-hour month would give them the equivalent of 40 hours a week and, Randolph estimated, create a need for about 1,000 additional jobs.

This would scarcely make up for the estimated 50 percent reduction in porters and attendant personnel by the Pullman Co. over the past five years, with comparable losses on railroads in the U.S. and Canada which have cut BSCP membership to about 10,000, Randolph observed.

He attributed the job displacement to a loss of "competitive vitality" among railroad management and the takeover by "financial adventurers" who have slashed passenger operations drastically and abolished or consolidated railway districts and agencies.

The two-pronged BSCP drive, he declared, is simply a move "to catch up with the parade of rail workers fighting to make more jobs by reducing the worktime."

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, addressing the convention at its mid-point, outlined the progress of the federation's Civil Rights Committee under the broad anti-discrimination program adopted at the 1961 AFL-CIO convention.

Schnitzler, who is chairman of the committee, said the AFL-CIO leadership under Pres. George Meany is making every effort to implement that policy and is "determined to wipe out discrimination" wherever it exists on the job, in the trade union movement or in any other sphere.

The Civil Rights Committee, he said, had been heartened and encouraged by the number of AFL-CIO affiliates which have shown a spirit of cooperation toward achieving this goal.

Resolutions adopted by the delegates in the civil rights area supported the Albany, Ga. movement for equal rights, endorsed the programs of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urged stepped-up efforts to get Negroes to register and vote, deplored the slow progress of school desegregation, called for creation of a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission, condemned all forms of racial and religious bigotry, and called on the Labor Dept. to withhold federal funds from state employment services practicing racial discrimination in job referrals.

Randolph, First Vice Pres. Milton P. Webster, Sec.-Treas. Ashley L. Totten and all other vice presidents were re-elected.

Job-Creating Program Adopted by Bricklayers

Vigorous promotion of the use of masonry materials in homes, office buildings and fallout shelters, plus all-out support of a national home-building program at the rate of 2.3 to 2.5 million housing units a year, has been voted by the Bricklayers.

Meeting in Washington, D. C., for their 26th biennial convention, delegates took action designed to provide increased job opportunities for the trowel trades.

Endorsing the recommendations of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the federation convention in Miami on the need for more and better housing, the convention urged "a massive effort to provide decent homes for the ill-housed" and to provide additional housing for rapidly expanding populations in the U.S. and Canada.

Convention delegates vigorously debated and then defeated a proposal to raise dues 50 cents a month to finance a pension plan providing $10 a month for every member retiring after 40 years of good-standing memberhip.

They also donated $1,374 for COPE in a floor collection and took the following actions, among others:

- Authorized the executive board to consider an increase in the death benefit allowance, now $1,500, to provide liberalized allowances in the face of increasing mortuary expenses.
- Adopted a committee recommendation that the international per capita tax be kept at $1.75 a month.
- Urged officers to do all in their power to persuade the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. that a 1963 legislative conference should be held in Washington.
- Instructed officers to add a trade education page to the union Journal to keep members informed of changes in design and technique.
- Asked "vigorous stimulation" of sound apprentice training programs.

The convention approved continuation of the union's college scholarship program under which children of members may receive up to $1,500 a year for four years; amended the constitution to provide for two weeks of paid vacations for officers; urged the federal government to curb immigration along the Mexican border because the "loose enforcement of regulations is creating a legion of displaced American workers," and adopted a series of resolutions urging members to register and vote and to support the legislative programs of local and national AFL-CIO bodies.

Pres. John J. Murphy, in a keynote address, called on locals and conferences to work for the use of masonry materials in government buildings and to oppose the use of substitutes, including metal skin and glass.

Murphy recommended and the delegates agreed to work for legislation favored by building trades unions on common-site picketing, school aid and construction, housing, depressed areas aid, medical care for the aged under social security, improvements in minimum wage laws, airport modernization, support of accelerated construction of the interstate highway system, and corrective amendments to the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts.

Walsh Again President of Stage Hands

Las Vegas, Nev.—The Theatrical Stage Employes elected Richard F. Walsh to his 11th two-year term as president of the union before closing out their 46th biennial convention here.

The 1,200 delegates also returned to office Sec.-Treas. Harland Holmden and eight vice presidents. Newly elected as vice president representing Canadian membership was A. L. (Pat) Travers of Toronto.

Named to fill vacancies as delegates to the next AFL-CIO convention, along with Walsh and Holmden, were Richard Hancox and Fred Jiencke. New delegate to the Canadian Labor Congress is James Munro.

Milwaukee Celebrates Merger Anniversary

Milwaukee — The Milwaukee County Labor Council will celebrate the third anniversary of the merger of the former AFL and CIO central bodies on Oct. 17 with an open house affair featuring music, dancing and refreshments.

Burdon Lashes Coalition:

Rubber Workers Convention Emphasizes Political Action

Long Beach, Calif.—The problems of automation won't be solved by collective bargaining alone, Rubber Workers Pres. George Burdon told 600 delegates at the opening session of the 23rd URW convention here.

"We need to be active politically so that we will be in a position to press for new legislation that will help cope with this key need of providing millions of new jobs," he declared.

"Politics must be our concern. It affects the way we live, our job security and the future of our children. We can't leave politics to the politicians; its time the American people put politics in their own hands."

Burdon lashed out at the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in Congress, charging that this faction has "cut Pres. Kennedy's program to shreds."

"We must let the President know we support this program by doing a job at the polls in the November election," he went on." This means electing a Congress that will support much-needed legislation.

"These conservatives think everything that is good for the people is bad. We have the tools to bring about a change that will give Kennedy a Congress that will support this program for federal aid to education, adequate housing, medical care for the aged under social security and other vital legislation."

Burdon also called on the delegates to become more active in community affairs. He said:

"Union members have a deep sense of responsibility about people helping people. When we, as unionists, are active in community services, we are living up to the true spirit of the trade union movement."

Burdon pledged that the URW will continue to give high priority to organizing. "We've had some successes in the last two years," he said. "But we aren't satisfied and we'll be doing all we can to build organization in the future."

'Include Your Families'

Mrs. Marcella Beatty, executive secretary of the AFL-CIO Auxiliaries, called on the delegates to "include your families in your union affairs, because you need their help in your programs to raise the living standard for all."

Also, acting on the recommendation of the Laws Committee, the delegates:

- Turned down a proposal to raise maximum monthly dues to $7. The dues range stays at $4 to $5.75 for established locals.
- Approved allowing a new local union to have a $3 monthly dues schedule for the first year after it receives its charter.

The delegates were scheduled, later in the five-day convention, to hear addresses by newly-appointed U.S. Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther.

Stereotypers to Raise $1 Million for Defense

San Antonio—The 59th annual convention of the Stereotypers, expressing concern over the lurking dangers of unemployment through automation, passed a resolution to fatten the reserves in the union's defense fund.

A shorter workweek proposition, urging an eight-hour day for four days a week, was withdrawn in the face of anticipated heavy opposition and never went to a vote. Opponents suggested that the shorter hours as a national rule might weaken the bargaining position of locals and conceivably result in lower weekly wages. Members of the union now work a maximum of 37.5 hours, time in excess being at the overtime rate.

Advocates argued that many union members, especially those on night shifts, now work only 32 hours a week and that eventually the shorter workweek would be a necessity in the face of more and more automation.

The defense fund proposal would provide for a fund of $1 million, to be built and maintained near that level by assessments, and will go to a referendum vote.

In other moves of significance, the 131 delegates passed a rules change that will set up a system of relating apprentices to the number of journeymen in a union shop, but voted down an amendment which would have prohibited local unions from admitting new apprentices unless authorized by the international executive board. The present rule permits locals to bargain with employers on the number of apprentices.

In other actions, delegates adopted a resolution granting equal rights on the executive board to the Canadian vice president; exempted specified retired members from financial payments, and bestowed the title of secretary-treasurer emeritus on retiring Sec.-Treas. Joseph L. O'Neil.

Union Pres. James H. Sampson noted that unemployment in the industry is not a major problem at present and declared the union is doing everything in its power to assure that it doesn't become one in the future. Joblessness is more prevalent in the electrotyping trade than in stereotyping, where automation has made comparatively small inroads, he said.

Widespread use in the future of machines that can be operated by one or two men, taking the place of equipment now requiring the attention of as many as four men, may cause unemployment problems in the future, Sampson pointed out.

Membership in the union has dropped from 11,051 in 1960 to 10,441 this year but delegates attributed the decline more to members quitting or retiring than to loss of jobs through automation. An equally severe blow to membership has occurred through large newspaper suspensions and mergers during recent years and the loss of a number of electrotype plants.

Drive to Aid D. C. Center For Culture

Newport, R. I.—A campaign to raise $30 million through public subscription to build a National Cultural Center in Washington was launched here by Mrs. John F. Kennedy.

The First Lady and Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower are honorary co-chairmen of the center. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is a member of the board of trustees, the governing body.

The center will be built on land set aside by Congress with the provision that construction must be financed privately. Architectural plans drawn by Edward Durell Stone call for a 1,200-seat theater, a 2,750-seat symphony hall and a 2,500-seat hall for opera, musical comedy and ballet. No adequate facilities for the performing arts now exist in Washington.

A major fund-raising effort will be a closed circuit telecast Nov. 29 featuring stars from all branches of the performing arts with Pres. and Mrs. Kennedy as hosts. Showings will be sponsored by cultural groups in cities throughout the nation, either at dinner or after-dinner affairs, with proceeds going to the center.

Meany has urged state and local central bodies in areas where the telecast will be shown to cooperate as fully as possible to make the programs successful.

Price Fixing Charged to Canadian Box Makers

Ottawa, Ont.—Prices have been kept "needlessly high" in Canada's cardboard box industry through a "long history" of price-fixing, the Restricted-Trade Practices Commission has said in a report on its study of a third monopolistic industry.

The commission was set up by the federal government to examine restrictions on competition through price fixing, undue pressure against competitors, or agreements with retail stores.

It proposed that tariff protection for the cardboard box industry be repealed and the Canadian field be opened to competition from the United States. It disclosed the existence of a common pricing system which, it said, was based on a "ready reckoner" cost manual issued by Container Statistics, Ltd., of Toronto. President of the firm is Fred C. Hayes, who was price control administrator for the industry during World War II.

Named by the commission were Pacific Mills, Ltd., of Vancouver, B. C., now Crown Zellerbach Canada, Ltd.; MacMillan & Bloedell, Ltd., Vancouver, since merged with the Powell River Co.; Canadian Intl. Paper Co., Montreal; Bathurst Containers, Ltd., Bathurst, N. B., and Minas Pulp & Power Co., Hantsport, N. S.

In previous reports the commission disclosed monopolistic practices by the packing industry and by oil companies with service stations. The government, however, has made no recent attempt to enforce anti-trust laws through the courts.

Time Warning Sounds for AFL-CIO Scholarships

The children of union members and others interested in AFL-CIO merit scholarships must make arrangements to take examinations during the junior year in high school, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin has reminded parents.

The scholarships are awarded on the basis of the tests conducted annually by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. in March, and high school juniors should be sure to consult their counselors about the examinations, Rogin stressed.

"Not all children of union members will or should want to go to college," he added. "Apprenticeship programs and training in other worthwhile employment exist and should be investigated by those who feel they do not desire a college career.

"For those students who want to go to college and whose parents are interested in college careers for their children, the junior year is the time to make sure that the proper academic program is followed in school and to start investigating the kinds of college which are available. In most high schools the student counselor has this information and can provide it to the students or parents. The counselor should also be able to supply information on scholarships and other financial aid."

Some unions, Rogin said, schedule special meetings for their members with experts who go into the availability of colleges, financing and other concerns for potential students.

The AFL-CIO annually awards six scholarships which are worth up to $1,500 a year for the four college years. Detailed information is available from the federation's Dept. of Education. In addition, international and local unions and central bodies give more than $500,000 a year in scholarship awards.

Delegates' Fund Voted By Asbestos Workers

Atlantic City—The Asbestos Workers voted in convention here to establish a national health, welfare and pension plan and a delegates' expense fund for future conventions.

Two hundred and forty delegates from 102 local unions re-elected Pres. C. W. Sickles, Sec.-Treas. Albert E. Hutchinson and seven vice presidents for five-year terms; revised the constitution and bylaws, adding a new trial section; and adopted a change by which local union officers must be elected by a majority of votes cast instead of a plurality.

The convention pledged support of the AFL-CIO legislative program and voted to leave unchanged the ratio under which asbestos unions train one apprentice or "improver" to every four journeyman workers.

A proposal to establish a pension and welfare plan for full-time international union officers and staff members was approved, as was an "open end" plan for members of local unions when locals qualify for admittance.

The executive board was authorized to administer a fund which will guarantee full convention representation to all locals in the future. Effective Jan. 1, 1963, two assessments were authorized—30 cents a month per member for the delegates' expense fund and 20 cents per month for the pension-welfare plan covering officers and staff.

With only two officers contested, these vice presidents were returned to office: Hugh E. Mulligan, Chicago; George Rider, New York, N. Y.; Malcolm Detlefs, Detroit; Andrew T. Haas, Philadelphia; Michael H. Nichols, Toronto; Brooks Baker, Houston; J. Wayne Kelly, San Francisco.

Building Trades Saluted In Concert Hall Opening

New York—In tribute to the skill of the workmen who built Philharmonic Hall, the huge new auditorium at Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, officials of the center invited nearly 1,000 building trades craftsmen and their families as the first audience.

The scheduled occasion was the first open rehearsal in the hall of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra on Sept. 21.

The New York Herald Tribune, in an editorial, likened the event to the medieval custom of thanksgiving services joined in by artisans and laborers upon completion of a new cathedral.

Lincoln Center's recognition of the plumbers, pipe fitters, electricians, carpenters and other building tradesmen who built the new concert hall is "equally fitting," the Herald Tribune said.

"True, Lincoln Center isn't exactly a cathedral, but in its way it is a kind of temple of art, somewhat different but no less important than the edifices of commerce which thrust their spires into the heavens and give New York City its characteristic skyline," the editorial continued.

"Especially, Lincoln Center is being built for, as well as by, the plumbers, pipe fitters, electricians, stenographers, housewives, students, business men, doctors, lawyers and Indian chiefs, if any, of the world—in a word, for everybody. And to have the first sounds played by an orchestra within its walls fall upon the ears of those directly concerned with its construction makes for poetic, not to mention musical, justice.

"So by all means let the plumbers and pipe fitters take precedence. The rest of us will eagerly await our turn."

Opening of the concert hall to the public was scheduled for Sept. 23.

Trade Expansion Bill Passed by Senate

mendous step forward for the cause of higher education."

On the key vote, 84 Democrats, mostly southerners, joined 130 Republicans to vote to reject the conference report and send the bill back to committee. Supporting the conferees were 156 Democrats and 30 Republicans.

In other major developments:

- An industrial security bill, which labor strongly opposed as an unjustified curtailment of the rights of workers in defense-related industries, failed to pass the House under a suspension of the rules procedure that required a two-thirds majority.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller had written all congressmen protesting features of the bill which would deny workers the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses and appeal adverse decisions in the courts. The vote for passage was 247-132.

- House-Senate conferees agreed on a bill granting tax deductions for contributions to pension funds by self-employed persons, after knocking out some of the restrictive amendments inserted by Senate liberals in an effort to prevent the bill from becoming a bonanza for the wealthy. There had been speculation that the President may veto the measure.

- A congressional resolution expressing this nation's determination to prevent Cuba from using force or threats of force against any nation in the hemisphere, or becoming a base for a military threat to the United States, passed the Senate 86-1, and was scheduled for quick House approval.

The resolution also pledges the United States "to work with the Organization of American States and with freedom-loving Cubans to support the aspirations of the Cuban people for self-determination."

- The Senate Judiciary Committee put off an immediate vote on whether to support its Anti-Trust subcommittee's recommendation that a group of major steel companies be cited for contempt for failure to furnish cost data needed for the subcommittee's price investigation.

Although the steel officials had refused to appear before the subcommittee, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), they took their case before the full Judiciary Committee which served in effect in a highly unusual role as a court of appeals.

The industry executives admitted to the committee that the information they refused to furnish was identical with data they voluntarily submitted to the government during World War II in an effort to get approval for a price increase.

Squeeze for Trade Bill

Despite the overwhelming vote for final passage, the trade expansion bill narrowly survived a protectionist attempt to retain the "peril point" provision of the present tariff law. This directs the Tariff Commission to make a finding of the tariff rate necessary to protect each domestic commodity.

The peril point amendment, sponsored by Sen. Prescott Bush (R-Conn.), had solid Republican support and the Administration had to scrape for votes to defeat it 40-38.

As a substitute for a high protective tariff, Kennedy's trade bill provides for federal adjustment aid for workers and businesses adversely affected by lowered tariffs.

The Senate rejected by big margins two attempts to kill or weaken this adjustment program, which the AFL-CIO had said was essential to labor's support of the bill.

A motion by Sen. Carl T. Curtis (R-Neb.) to eliminate the entire assistance program was beaten, 58-23. The Senate then rejected, 51-31, a move by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) to limit the amount of adjustment benefits paid displaced workers to the level of unemployment compensation in the states where they live.

The trade bill provides readjustment allowances to a worker equal to 65 percent of his average weekly wage, with a ceiling of 65 percent of the national average manufacturing wage. This would be payable for 52 weeks, with additional entitlement for persons undergoing retraining or workers over the age of 60. The Senate changed the House-passed bill to provide federal payment of the full amount of worker adjustment benefits.

With other Administration measures beginning to move, Kennedy welcomed the new signs of life for his program.

In a news conference, he indicated he had high hopes for bills long dormant.

UNION LABELS of all the unions with members working on construction or operation of the Seattle Fair, where AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany spoke on Labor Day, are displayed at the foot of the Needle. Not a minute of time has been lost because of strike or lockout since the first shovel of earth was turned.

Meany Urges Stronger Tax Revision Bill

tax reform and reduction effort promised by the Administration."

Meany noted that the AFL-CIO had supported Pres. Kennedy's tax proposals "despite the inclusion of the costly and unjustifiable investment tax credit."

Subsequently, he recalled, labor had backed the House Ways & Means Committee bill, though it "ignored or weakened several of the President's important loophole closing proposals," in the expectation that a "vigorous Administration effort" would produce a better Senate version.

"The frustration of our expectations is now history," he went on. "The Senate measure makes a mockery of the President's original proposal. Face-saving Treasury apologetics notwithstanding, this bill incorporates only a tragically inadequate fragment of the President's original loophole closing proposals . . . Only the investment tax credit bonanza for business remains essentially intact."

The President's program, Meany pointed out, besides closing "glaring loopholes," would have resulted in an annual revenue gain of $600 million and thus "increased the possibility of obtaining the substantial tax cut next year which our low and moderate income families so urgently need and deserve." In contrast, the Senate bill would cause a $210 million revenue loss.

Edward Kennedy Wins Huge Bay State Margin

Massachusetts Democrats gave Edward M. Kennedy an overwhelming victory over State Atty. Gen. Edward J. McCormack, Jr., for the party's senatorial nomination, and the Republicans in a much smaller party turnout chose George Cabot Lodge over Rep. Laurence Curtis as GOP nominee.

In New York, the Republican State Convention renominated Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and Sen. Jacob K. Javits for second terms.

Morgenthau Nominated

New York Democrats at the party's state convention chose as candidate for governor Robert M. Morgenthau, son of former Sec. of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau and until recently U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York. The senatorial candidate to oppose Javits is James B. Donovan, Brooklyn attorney who negotiated the release of Francis Powers, the U-2 pilot captured by the Soviet Union.

The Democratic nominee for state attorney general is Edward R. Dudley, borough president of Manhattan—first Negro to be chosen to seek a state office of that rank. He will face incumbent Republican Louis J. Lefkowitz.

Rockefeller is expected to campaign hard not only for a victory and a second term but also to roll up a large plurality as a foundation for his expected drive for the GOP presidential nomination in 1964.

Faces Challenge

He faces a challenge to his plans from a new Conservative Party, made up of GOP voters who think the governor is too liberal, which will field a ticket if enough signatures can be gathered to place it on the ballot.

Morgenthau and Donovan have also won the nomination of the Liberal Party.

The size of Edward Kennedy's margin over McCormack stunned political observers. The President's 30-year-old brother won 69 percent of the Democratic vote despite the fact that McCormack, nephew of House Speaker John W. McCormack, waged a vigorous statewide battle. The unofficial complete returns showed 559,251 for Kennedy, 247,366 for McCormack.

Lodge's victory over Curtis was smaller, 245,210 to 197,660. Lodge is a son of the 1960 Republican vice presidential nominee, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., who also served in the Senate. A third candidate, Harvard Prof. H. Stuart Hughes, is running for the Senate as an independent. The Massachusetts candidates for governor are incumbent Republican John A. Volpe and Democrat Endicott Peabody.

Labor, Kennedy Lash Cuts in Foreign Aid

The AFL-CIO has warned Congress that the "appalling cuts" made by the House Appropriations Committee in foreign aid spending would substantially "increase domestic unemployment" and undercut efforts to help less developed nations build their economies and remain free.

The committee's $1.1 billion cut was flatly denounced as "irresponsible" by Pres. Kennedy.

"To mutilate the aid program in this massive fashion," the President warned, "would be to damage the national security of the United States."

The committee heavily chopped funds authorized by Congress earlier this session for loans and grants to underdeveloped nations, for the Alliance for Progress program in Latin America, and for money to operate the Agency for International Development, which supervises the program.

There were indications the Administration would make its fight for restoration in the Senate.

Labor's support of efforts to restore the 25 percent slash in aid funds was emphasized by Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller in a letter to all congressmen on the eve of House debate.

Biemiller warned that the cuts would "do almost the same amount of harm to the U.S. economy as the recently-passed public works bill does good."

He pointed out that while the public works bill "will pump $900 million into the economy," the aid cut would take the same amount out since "about 80 percent of all foreign aid funds are spent for products and services in the United States."

Union Bodies Aid Students At Antioch

Yellow Springs, O.—Three trade union bodies are giving assistance to four students at Antioch College, liberal arts institution known for its experiments in education.

Benjamin Burkert, San Francisco, received a scholarship for part of his freshman year from the California AFL-CIO. Mrs. Judy Bass Winter, Plainview, N. Y., a fourth-year philosophy and religion major, is attending Antioch on a full Joseph N. Curran scholarship awarded her by the National Maritime Union.

The NMU in addition is a cooperative employer in Antioch's program of combining classroom training with job experience and has given a job as an administrative assistant in its pension and welfare work in New York City to Dan Halas, Cleveland, senior majoring in literature.

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has employed David Crippens, Nashville, Tenn., and assigned him to assist the United Federation of Teachers in New York.

Mrs. Winter is the daughter of George Bass, a member of the NMU since 1944, who won her $2,500-a-year scholarship in competition with NMU members and their children in 28 states.

Actors & Artistes Vacate Bright's Post

Hollywood, Calif.—The international board of the Actors & Artistes, parent body of all AFL-CIO theatrical performers' unions, has declared vacant the office of first vice president, formerly held by Jackie Bright.

The action came at the AAAA board's quarterly meeting and followed the Variety Artists' suspension of Bright as AGVA administrative secretary until he clears himself of charges made against him before the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.).

ILO Metal Trades Committee in Session

Vice Pres. Maywood Boggs of the Boilermakers and Woodrow Ginsburg, research director of the Auto Workers, are in Geneva as U.S. worker delegates to the seventh session of the Metal Trades Committee of the Intl. Labor Organization.

Rudy Faupl, this country's worker delegate to the ILO itself, is also attending.

Employer, Detective Agency Consent:

U. S. Court Orders Labor Spy Report

A federal court has ordered a Chicago rug manufacturer and a detective agency hired to spy on the firm's workers and their union to comply with the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

The Olson Rug Co., Inc., and the Illinois Detective Agency were ordered by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia to file an employer report and a consultant report, respectively, with the Labor Dept. as required by the law. The court orders came after the two firms entered into consent decrees to file the reports.

The case represents the first federal court enforcement of the Landrum-Griffin Act's reporting requirements with respect to either employers or consultants.

The case arose out of a complaint filed by the Textile Workers Union of America that the company had hired the detective agency to infiltrate the union's bargaining committee and obtain information on TWUA activities.

Refused To Comply

A Labor Dept. investigation determined that the activities of Olson and its hired detective agency were both reportable under Landrum-Griffin, but both refused to comply.

A civil suit was filed against the defendants by the secretary of labor, then Arthur J. Goldberg, on Apr. 25, 1961, charging the two firms with failing to report the "agreement or arrangement whereby the . . . agency undertook to supply the company with information concerning the activities of employes . . . in connection with a labor dispute."

The court order stemming from the secretary's suit directs Olson to

City Votes In Georgia Oust Davis

Atlanta — Georgia Democrats threw out nine-term Rep. James C. Davis in a party runoff primary here, choosing for the Democratic nomination in this state's 5th Congressional District a political newcomer, 35-year-old Charles L. Weltner.

The veteran Davis, a power in Congress because of seniority and a long-time assertive segregationist, lost when voters in heavily-populated Fulton County for the first time in a half-century got their ballots counted on the same basis as those from nearby DeKalb and tiny Rockdale Counties.

Under the former Georgia county-unit system, which was outlawed earlier in the year by a federal court, Davis would have been declared the winner, with eight "unit votes" from the small counties and only six from Fulton County.

By the popular vote, Weltner beat Davis 75,000 to 61,000 despite rather narrow Davis margins in DeKalb and Rockdale Counties. In the first primary two weeks earlier,

NLRB Sets New Policy:

Interest Ordered On Back Pay Awards

By John Barry

The National Labor Relations Board has established a new policy requiring interest payments by employers on back pay awarded unlawfully discharged workers.

The board laid down the policy in a precedent-setting decision adding interest of 6 percent a year to the back pay of an employe discriminatorily fired for union activity.

"We believe that in adding interest to back pay awards the board is bringing its practice into conformity with general principles of law, is achieving a more equitable result, and is encouraging compliance with board orders," said the majority decision, signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented solely with respect to the requirement that interest be paid.

Second Policy Ruling

The board was unanimous in finding that the Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., Hawthorne, Calif., had discriminated against Mark G. Harrigan, a member of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters. Harrigan was fired after he had filed union charges against a fellow member who was a company foreman.

The ruling was the second this year in which the board reversed previous policy in the back pay area in an effort to establish proper remedies in cases of illegal discharge.

Pay Policy Changed

In May it began ordering full reimbursement of employes in cases where a trial examiner had found no unfair practices but was later reversed by the board. Previous policy had been to reduce back pay for the period between the trial examiner's report and the board's

1.5 Million Would Get 2-Step Hike

The Senate has voted to raise the pay of more than 1.5 million federal employes and the pensions of nearly 600,000 persons on the civil service retirement rolls. The vote was 72-3.

AFL-CIO postal and government employe unions hailed the Senate bill as a major improvement over the Administration's original pay proposal. It provides bigger increases for lower-paid employes and takes effect in two steps over a 15-month period as contrasted with the three-stage, 39-month period originally proposed.

Despite disagreement over distribution of the $1 billion raise, union spokesmen had emphasized in congressional testimony their satisfaction that for the first time a President had proposed to Congress a substantial government pay hike.

Postal workers under the Senate bill would receive an average 8.6 percent increase immediately and a 2.6 percent raise effective Jan. 1, 1964. The dollar total averages $584.

The raise for the 1 million classified (white collar) employes varies considerably with grade level, but averages 5.5 percent immediately and 4.1 percent for the second stage. The average dollar increase is $603.

Retirees and persons receiving survivorship benefits under the civil service retirement system would be given an immediate 5 percent increase in benefits and a cost-of-living escalator clause providing automatic increases with every 3 per-

Meany Hails King On Rights Gains

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has congratulated the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and its president, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., for their contributions "to the long strides our country is taking toward the full realization of its principles."

Reiterating organized labor's determination to help combat discrimination, Meany declared in a telegram to Dr. King during a 4-day national convention of the conference in Birmingham:

"In the six years since your organization was founded, truly remarkable gains have been made

Schnitzler Group Asks Federal Ban On Wage Bias Against Women

Wage discrimination against women workers should be prohibited by federal law, a study group headed by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler has proposed in a report for the President's Commission on the Status of Women.

Pending enactment of such a law, the group said, serious consideration should be given by Pres. Kennedy to an executive order forbidding wage discrimination against women workers by employers holding government contracts.

The Schnitzler group was one of five that met in Washington, D. C., to prepare recommendations for a commission meeting scheduled for Oct. 1-2.

More than 250 representatives of labor, management, government and civic groups attended the one-day conference sponsored by the Commission's Committee on Government Contracts.

Schnitzler reported the following consensus of his study group on compensation of woman workers:

- A double pay standard exists in many U.S. firms whose women workers get less pay than men for similar work.
- Several million U.S. women earn less than $1 an hour.
- Equal pay laws exists in 22 states but many such laws are not vigorously enforced.

No opposition was expressed in the panel, Schnitzler told the conference, to the principle that equal pay should be provided for equal work. Some women are benefited by union contracts calling for equal pay, a single pay structure, or promotion clauses emphasizing seniority or ability, he said, but fewer than 4 million of 24 million woman workers are protected in this fashion by union contracts—only about 16.5 percent.

PRES. DAVID DUBINSKY of the Ladies' Garment Workers testifies in refutation of race-discrimination charges filed against the union with a special House Labor subcommittee set up under the chairmanship of Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.). Dubinsky previously had protested that a report prepared by one staff assistant was being circulated to senators despite the subcommittee's refusal to receive it.

Accusation 'Based on Malice':

Dubinsky Again Repudiates Charges of Discrimination

Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers, appearing a second time before a special House Labor subcommittee, sharply repudiated charges that the union denies equal opportunity to workers of all races and languages to be trained for better-paying jobs or to hold high union office.

A committee "so-called expert," Dubinsky said heatedly, got his figures "from the sky, from his imagination," when he alleged only four or five "non-white" members were eligible for the ILG general executive board and "virtually none at all" for the two top offices.

Dubinsky hit as "stupid and ridiculous . . . based on malice" the charge that only one-fifteenth of 1 percent of the ILG's entire membership is eligible for the executive board.

The ILG president introduced a letter from the High School of Fashion Industries — jointly backed by labor, management and New York City funds—showing that of 1,900 day school students being prepared for "better-paying" jobs, 40 percent were Spanish speaking of Puerto Rican origin, and 30 percent were Negroes.

Of the 3,000 night-session students, he said, records are not kept on race and ethnic groups but a safe estimate was that about 90 percent of the students were Negro or Puerto Ricans.

He presented figures to show that in the union's own Leadership Training School, about one-third of the students are from Negro and Puerto Rican groups. He observed that the ILG invests about $6,000 in training each student and that after a year of training, each graduate is assured a job as a business agent or organizer.

Hill Resigns

Most of the charges to which Dubinsky replied were made by Herbert Hill, until recently a subcommittee part-time staff member, who has now resigned. Hill is labor secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Employment of Hill by the subcommittee was labeled as "obviously a conflict of interest" by Chairman Omar Burleson (D-Tex.) of the House Administration Committee.

In a letter to Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) of the full Labor Committee, Burleson noted that the committee had 20 "contract" staffers or consultants, five times as many as any other committee, and threatened to cut off their pay.

On a further Hill charge that the ILG has a public image "well nurtured for years by a very extensive and well-financed public relations campaign," Dubinsky retorted that not a penny of union funds had been spent on such purposes.

ILG expenditures of $1.2 million between 1959 and 1961 through an advertising firm involved solely a union label campaign to promote the industry, he declared.

Funds were raised for that purpose, he pointed out, by approval of the ILG convention, with employers in return promising to use the union label.

"Label, label, label. Every ad is label. Buy garments with the label. That is the purpose," he stated.

On the charge involving eligibility for union office, Dubinsky pointed out that all members have a right to vote after three months of membership; must be five years in good standing and three years a paid officer to run for the executive board; must be 10 years a member and five years a paid officer to become eligible for the presidency or secretary-treasurership.

These rules have been in the ILG constitution in the main since 1924, he remarked, and apply to all alike. Restrictions on qualifications for membership in the House and Senate, he pointed out, are written into the U. S. Constitution, and there is an age restriction on eligibility for the presidency.

In other developments involving the Zelenko subcommittee investigation:

- Frank R. Crosswaith, an ILG organizer and chairman of the Negro Labor Committee, declared that those who accuse the ILG of discrimination are following "the usual path of extreme reactionaries by recklessly attacking one of the most advanced, one of the most idealistic and one of the most progressive sections of the American labor movement."
- Ruperto Ruiz, investigating commissioner for the New York State Commission for Human Rights, advised ILG Cutters' Local 10 that he is reopening the Ernest Holmes case. He said a finding of last June of "probable cause" to file charges of discrimination against ILG member Holmes was not final and resulted only from the failure of the local to appear with data.

NLRB Confirms Rule In Subcontracting Cases

A management decision to subcontract maintenance work without consulting the union involved has again been held an unfair labor practice by the National Labor Relations Board.

By a 2-1 vote the NLRB reversed a 1961 decision, issued before the Kennedy Administration members took office, and ordered the Fibreboard Paper Products Corp., of Emeryville, Calif., to bargain collectively with Steelworkers Local 1304 on wages, hours and working conditions of maintenance workers and to reinstate workers it laid off in 1959.

The new majority thus adhered to the policy laid down in its recent Town & Country Mfg. Co. decision, saying the issue in Fibre board is not whether management is free to subcontract work in the interest of more efficient operation but whether the law requires it first to engage in collective bargaining with the union.

Citing a Supreme Court decision and other court and board decisions, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member John H. Fanning also directed the company to:

- Halt subcontracting work unilaterally or "otherwise unilaterally changing the wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment" of unit employes without first bargaining with their union.
- Reinstitute the maintenance operation previously performed by its employes represented by USWA Local 1304.
- Offer laid-off employes reinstatement to their former or "substantially equivalent" positions and make them whole for any loss of pay.

When the former board decided Mar. 27, 1961, that the law had not been violated, the majority did so on the ground that Fibreboard's decision to subcontract its maintenance work was "a management prerogative having no impact on the conditions of employment" within the unit and hence need not have been discussed with the union.

Fanning dissented at that time, and in the latest decision joined McCulloch to make a new majority, with Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting.

This does not restrain an employer from deciding to terminate a phase of his business operations, the majority said, or obligate him to yield to a union's demand. It declared, however, that experience "has shown that candid discussion of mutual problems by labor and management frequently results" in their solution with benefit to both sides. Said McCulloch and Fanning:

"Such prior discussion with a duly designated bargaining representative" is all the law contemplates, "but it commands no less."

The majority referred to recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings on subcontracts in cases involving the Railroad Telegraphers and the Chicago & North Western Railway; Teamsters Union v. Oliver, and Steelworkers v. Warrior & Gulf Co. All held that subcontracting was a mandatory bargaining subject.

The Fibreboard case arose when the USWA, which had represented 50 maintenance and powerhouse employes for 22 years, notified management in 1959 of a desire to bargain on new contract terms.

On July 27 that year, four days before the contract was due to expire, management notified the union that it had decided to "contract out" the maintenance work and said "negotiation of a new contract would be pointless."

FTC Unballyhoos Santa's Little Helper

One of Santa Claus' "little helpers," the Ideal Toy Corp., has been charged by the Federal Trade Commission with exploiting children through deceptive television commercials.

The company's "robot commando" is not a robot and will not respond to spoken commands as the commercials "falsely imply," the FTC charged. In reality, the complaint said, blowing action—not the sound of a voice—is required to actuate the "robot commando" and its motions are governed by a manually set control.

The company has 30 of the remaining shopping days 'til Christmas in which to reply.

Fellowship Award Won by CLC Aide

Kingston, Ont.—Dr. Eugene A. Forsey, research director of the Canadian Labor Congress since the merger in 1956, has been appointed Skelton-Clark Fellow for 1962-3 at Queen's University here.

2 More Firms Settle In Aerospace Dispute

Los Angeles—Two additional contract settlements in the aerospace industry were announced here as the Auto Workers and the Machinists prepared to submit to their members the terms of earlier agreements with North American Aviation and General Dynamics' Convair Division.

In another key development, the Machinists acceded to personal appeals by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation Service for an indefinite extension of talks with Lockheed Aircraft.

Terms Undisclosed

The latest agreements came at Aerojet General Corp., where the IAM represents employes, and at Ryan Aeronautical Co., where the UAW has bargaining rights. Terms of the settlements were not immediately disclosed, but they were understood to follow generally the recommendations of a special White House panel, except that a union shop already existed at Aerojet and was not an issue in the negotiations.

It was the union shop formula proposed by Pres. Kennedy's special three-man board which broke the impasse in the current round of bargaining with the missile producers. North American and Convair were the first firms to agree to submit the issue to votes of their employes, with a two-thirds majority required to put the union security measure into effect.

Both firms have pledged a "hands-off" approach to the vote, but Ryan has announced it will campaign among its employes for rejection of the union shop.

UAW members at North American were scheduled to vote Sunday, Sept. 30, on whether to accept or reject the agreement. If they vote approval, unit-wide union shop balloting will be held Oct. 19.

If IAM members at Convair ratify the settlement, their union shop election will be held Oct. 23.

Extension of the Machinists' negotiations with Lockheed erased a Sept. 22 strike deadline the union had set against the firm which has adamantly held out against the union shop. Negotiators for the company and the IAM were to resume bargaining under the auspices of federal mediators.

Details of the wage settlements at North American and Convair were withheld by the unions pending membership ratification. A White House board recommended an increase of from 5 to 8 cents an hour the first year, effective last July 22; a hike of 6 to 8 cents the second year, and 6 to 9 cents the third year.

Meanwhile, another presidential board headed by Saul Wallen returned to Washington after hearings in Seattle on a separate dispute between the Machinists and the Boeing Co., one of the nation's largest defense contractors in the aerospace field.

A 60-day truce period urged by the President and accepted by the IAM expires Nov. 15. Boeing, too, has opposed a union shop vote among its employes.

Union Recognition Authorized by City

Rochester, N. Y.—The Rochester City Council has unanimously adopted an amendment to the municipal code authorizing the city manager to recognize unions as bargaining representatives of city employes and to enter into collective agreements with them.

The Rochester & Vicinity Labor Council has sent an official letter to Mayor Henry E. Gillette, a member of the city council, thanking him and the council for adopting the amendment, which had bipartisan support.

Bell Strike Suspended by Engineers

Buffalo—Intervention of a special panel of federal mediators led the Technical Engineers to suspend after two days a strike against the Bell Aerosystems Co. here.

Pres. Louis Longo of AFTE Local 205 said the strike would be suspended for one week as negotiations for an initial contract continued with the aid of the mediation panel, headed by Stephen I. Schlossberg.

AFTE Pres. Russell M. Stephens also was taking part in the talks.

Bell's production was partly halted when some 1,300 members of three Auto Workers locals refused to cross the picket lines set up by the 320 striking AFTE members. The company produces missile and space equipment under Defense Dept. contracts.

A major issue in the dispute is the union's demand for a return to salaried status, which the company abolished two years ago. Bell has offered hourly increases of 10 cents in wages and 8 cents in fringe benefits in each year of a three-year contract.

Wirtz on Labor Problems:

Current Issues Seen Tied to Lag in Jobs

By Saul Miller

Compulsory arbitration, "featherbedding" and the 35-hour workweek will recede as critical problems in labor-management relations if the country can achieve a full employment economy.

That was the keynote of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz' first address to a National Press Club luncheon, only an hour after being sworn in as a member of Pres. Kennedy's Cabinet.

The one answer that underlies the current problems of public policy and labor relations, he declared, "is simply that this economy has got to be put on a basis which will supply work opportunities for all of those who want to work and who have something to offer."

If there were a "full employment economy in this country," Wirtz said, "featherbedding would still be an irritation and an aggravation, but it would not be the terrible problem that it is today." The problem of compulsory arbitration "would be pushed again into the background, because there would be other ways of solving these problems," he said.

The 35-hour workweek issue, he added, "would disappear if there were full employment opportunities, and the unemployment insurance problem would not be the serious problem that it is."

The new secretary declared that "in this era of accelerated change . . . a job is no longer something which most people can reasonably expect to have or to perform the rest of their lives."

The country is "not doing a very good job" of approaching this problem, he said, because of words and phrases that "corrupt" the discussions in this area. Wirtz cited these:

Featherbedding: "It has become a scare word, an ugly word . . . that reflects people's not wanting to work. That is not it at all . . . There is a lot of featherbedding which is a reflection . . . of people's wanting very much to work and wanting enough to work that they will resort to the indignity of hanging on to a job which perhaps should not be there."

Compulsory arbitration: The debate in this area "is an attempt to get away from the question of what really causes the problems which get to such a severe stage that we have to consider what most of us would think of as the unfortunate possibility of compulsory arbitration."

Right-to-work laws: "That is a corruption of the English language which prejudices the consideration of the real problem involved."

Wirtz cited questions given third-year university graduate students which showed two-thirds in favor of right-to-work laws when the question used that phrase and two-thirds opposed to such legislation when the question was posed in terms of an employer and a majority of employes agreeing on a union shop without government interference.

The 35-hour workweek: "That proposal is honestly put. It is not a proposal for people to work less. It is not a proposal for people to make more money. It is a proposal that all the people of this country have an opportunity for a job. And on that basis it ought to be considered honestly."

Wirtz noted that he disagrees with the shorter workweek proposal.

Wirtz Is Confirmed, Henning Made Deputy

The two top offices in the Labor Dept. changed hands as W. Willard Wirtz was sworn in as secretary of labor at a White House ceremony and the Senate unanimously voted to confirm John F. Henning as under secretary.

Confirmation of Henning came less than a week after Pres. Kennedy had named the 46-year-old Californian to the post held by Wirtz before his advancement to the Cabinet. Henning has been director of the California Dept. of Industrial Relations during the administration of Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D), and previously served as research director of the State AFL-CIO.

Wirtz, who testified at Senate hearings on the confirmation of Henning only an hour before his own swearing-in ceremony, told members of the Labor Committee that the appointment had been greeted with "great pleasure, delight and anticipation" throughout the department.

Henning also was strongly endorsed by California's two senators —Democrat Clair Engle and Republican Thomas H. Kuchel—who appeared before the committee to testify to the nominee's "excellent reputation" among Californians from all walks of life.

Answering a question by Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), Henning said frankly that he does not agree with Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act—which permits states to ban union shop agreements—but that his personal views would not cloud his objective enforcement of all laws.

He said also that he believed that "both business and labor lose their liberty under compulsory arbitration" and that he ranked problems of automation as "the greatest industrial relations challenge."

Henning, the father of seven children, is a graduate of St. Mary's College and has been active in a wide range of civic, charitable, interracial and church activities in addition to his work in the labor-management field.

At the White House ceremony, attended by Pres. Kennedy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and other high-ranking government and union officials, Wirtz pledged his department's efforts "to improve the lot of all the American working people."

Goldberg Confirmed To High Court

Former Labor. Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg will be sworn in as an associate justice of the Supreme Court Oct. 1 when the court opens its fall term.

The Senate swiftly confirmed his nomination by voice vote after receiving a unanimous recommendation for approval from its Judiciary Committee.

The vote followed a bipartisan round of tributes to the new high court justice, led by the senators from his home state of Illinois, Everett M. Dirksen (R) and Paul H. Douglas (D).

Douglas predicted a distinguished career for Goldberg as a member of the high court.

"He is not afraid to be unpopular in defense of his convictions; and I know that he will serve with a high, single purpose the welfare of the nation," Douglas said.

Dirksen hailed "the character, the fiber, the patriotism, and fidelity of Arthur Goldberg" and supported his nomination "unequivocally."

The only note of dissent came from Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.), who without explanation asked that he be recorded in opposition.

Goldberg succeeds former Justice Felix Frankfurter, who retired last month. He is the second high court justice to be appointed by Pres. Kennedy, the first being Byron R. White.

Meany Asks Aid for Mobil Strikers, Council Votes $5,000 Contribution

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has voted to contribute $5,000 to the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers' strike against Mobil and other major petroleum companies and federation Pres. George Meany has urged all affiliated unions to come to the aid of Mobil strikers.

Meany, in a message to national and international unions, said he had been informed by OCAW Pres. O. A. Knight that several thousand union members have been on strike for varying periods up to five months at four Mobil refineries and two Mobil marketing outlets in Detroit and St. Louis.

In each case, Meany said, the union went on strike "reluctantly" when management demanded contract changes affecting seniority, grievance and arbitration procedures and job placements.

"In addition, Mobil is insisting on plant-by-plant negotiations, carried on by plant managers who really haven't authority to reach terms, while top company management refuses to meet," Meany asserted.

No progress has been made in negotiations recently, said OCAW Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer, and the union has felt the "full force of the economic power concentrated in the giants of the petroleum industry." OCAW members also are engaged in strikes against the Shell Oil Co., American Metals-Climax Molybdenum and the Koppers Co. The Shell strike involves three other unions.

Schafer said union members can help win the Mobil strike by turning in any Mobil credit cards they may have and by avoiding the purchase of Mobil products for the duration of the dispute.

Locals involved in the strikes have been struggling to defeat a "Big Petroleum" drive to break down contract provisions on job security. Financial support for the strikers has been continued.

Besides the OCAW, the AFL-CIO Metal Trades, the Operating Engineers and an unaffiliated union are involved in the strike against Shell installations at Pasadena, Tex., Wood River, Ill., and Norso, La.

Mobile Oil workers are on strike at refineries in East Chicago, Ind.; East St. Louis, Ill.; Trenton, Mich., and Casper, Wyo. Some 1,200 workers are out at the Climax, Colo., plant of American Metals-Climax Molybdenum, and 600 at the Kobuta, Pa., plant of the Koppers Co.

CPI Unchanged in August; Earnings Down Seasonally

The cost of living remained unchanged in August, the Labor Dept. reported, with the price index still at the July level of 105.5 percent of 1957-59 prices. However, some 18,000 workers, mostly in aerospace and chemical plants, will receive 1-cent-an-hour increases based on the rise in costs over a three-month period.

For the first time since July 1954, there was no rise in medical care costs. However, medical expenses were 2.6 percent higher than in August 1961; overall prices rose 1.2 percent during the same period.

The take-home earnings of factory workers declined seasonally, but were at record levels for the month. The after-tax and social security pay for factory workers with three dependents averaged $84.87, which is 66 cents less than in July but some $2.20 above a year ago. The decrease was attributed mainly to layoffs during model changeovers in the auto industry.

Labor Dept. price experts predicted a slight rise in the September index because of higher prices for food, gasoline and automobiles.

NLRB Orders Interest In Back Pay Awards

reversal. This, the board held, was in effect "benefiting the wrongdoer at the expense of the wronged."

In the Isis case, the NLRB majority said it was acting within its authority under the law and at the request of Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman to reconsider its policy on the payment of interest.

It noted that except in cases involving a large number of workers wrongfully denied pay for a long period of time, the payment of interest on back pay will be a relatively minimal burden . . . imposed on the wrongdoer."

Rodgers and Leedom declared in their dissent that an interest award "is beyond the authority of the board to grant" and is "a complete departure from the basic principles upon which board remedial orders have been based for more than 26 years."

They argued that, whatever its character or purpose, "interest" is an extension of the "back pay" permitted by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The majority, however, cited several court cases in which interest on monetary awards was granted under other statutes which did not specifically permit it or categorically bar it.

The decision emphasized that back pay granted employes in board decisions is considered wages lost as the result of an employer's wrong; it is "an indebtedness," not "a fine or penalty."

"Accordingly," the majority said, "under accepted legal and equitable principles, interest should be added to back pay awards to employes who have been discriminatorily separated from their employment."

N. Y. Teachers Ask Revision In State Aid

New York—The United Federation of Teachers has called on the legislature to change the state aid formula worked out last year with the help of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

The formula discriminates against the New York City school system in at least two respects, UFT Legislative Rep. Alice Marsh told a committee hearing called by Assemblyman Fred W. Preller:

- The city will receive less state aid per child for the 1962-63 school year than for the current year.
- Contrary to what the legislators understood, the city schools were not placed on a current basis for receipt of state aid. Next April the city will be forced, Mrs. Marsh testified, to borrow $61 million to make up for the delayed payment by the state.

The union spokesman urged the legislature to correct the law by putting New York City on a current payment status. In addition, a limitation on the amount of reimbursement per child that the city can receive should be removed and other corrections made in the formula, she said.

The law was enacted last year after a dispute between the governor, a Republican now running for re-election, and Democratic Mayor Robert Wagner over the formula. The Teachers appealed to Rockefeller to use his influence with the Republican-dominated legislature.

It was widely reported thereafter that the law had been amended to put the city on a current basis and give the city school system $13 million more in state aid, but the money will actually be taken out of next year's settlement unless the legislators act, the union said.

Gulf Coast Labor School Biggest Ever

Gatlinburg, Tenn.—Seventy repsentatives of 25 international unions from four states attended the Southern Labor School's institute for Gulf Coast workers, the largest it has ever held.

The students came from Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. Charles W. Houk, treasurer of the Tennessee AFL-CIO, Southern Labor School president, and Barney Weeks, president of the Alabama AFL-CIO and a member of the executive board, also attended.

The students discussed legislative issues, political education, collective bargaining and parliamentary procedure, under the guidance of union staff representatives and guest speakers. In addition, they viewed "The Awesome Servant." a motion picture on automation, at a special evening session.

The faculty included AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. George Guernsey; Marvin Friedman, AFL-CIO economist; Dir. Dan Powell of COPE Area 5; Education Dir. Byrl Whitney of the Railroad Trainmen; Assistant Education Dir. Stanley Rosen of the Textile Workers Union of America, and William Elkuss, western education director for the Clothing Workers.

Guest speakers included Jules Pagano, chief of the Technical, Professional & Labor Section of the Peace Corps and Dir. Leslie Dunbar of the Southern Regional Council, who spoke on problems of the South.

Boom Seen in Jobs for Physically Handicapped

A new program for improvement and expansion of state employment services affiliated with the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security will lead to increased job placements for the physically handicapped, Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has predicted.

The program, he said, will stress placement activities and add to efforts to find jobs not only for the physically handicapped but for the mentally restored and retarded as well.

Wirtz's announcement came as the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped, which cooperates with the department, was marking the 15th anniversary of the date on which it was first proposed by former Pres. Truman.

It was in 1947 that the former president added a postscript to a routine letter to the Secretary of Labor suggesting that private citizens, outside government, be asked to help develop in the U.S. a climate favorable to acceptance of the physically handicapped as workers.

Military separation centers and hospitals at the time were releasing many disabled veterans who because of employer prejudices were unable to find jobs.

'Revolutionize' Thinking

Truman proposed that public-spirited citizens undertake the task of revolutionizing the thinking of employers by inducing them to weigh the abilities — not the disabilities—of the men and women who were seeking jobs.

Under the leadership of the late Adm. Ross T. McIntire (Ret.), the support of organizations and individuals representing 30 million people was tapped to spread the doctrine, "It's good business to hire the handicapped." The AFL-CIO as an organization is a member of the committe and Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, is a vice chairman.

"After 15 years," the Labor Dept. commented on the anniversary, "there are dramatic results which contradict the early doubts of social psychologists that deep-seated prejudices and attitudes concerning the handicapped workers could be reversed in less than a generation.

"Over 4 million handicapped workers have been placed by the public employment service alone since the committee began its informational and educational campaign. Just last year the federal-state vocational rehabilitation program exceeded 100,000 successful rehabilitations for the first time.

"Today handicapped workers, when selectively placed according to their abilities, are proving themselves equal in every respect to their able-bodied co-workers."

Headed by Maas

Maj. Gen. Melvin J. Maas, disabled retired Marine, has been chairman of the President's committee since 1954.

The success of its work, he said, reflects the "enthusiasm and dedication" of volunteers "who recognize that the American way of getting things done is to over-estimate the social responsibility of your neighbors, and then be forced into adjusting your estimates upwards to match accomplishments."

The first week in October each year is observed as National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week, when the devoted volunteers give fresh impetus to their year-round duty of calling attention to the skills of handicapped workers.

The observance has been authorized by Congress and by presidential proclamation. In states and communities across the nation, governors and mayors have issued similar proclamations.

Unions Recognized By Naval Center

Portsmouth, Va.—The U.S. Naval Public Works Center here has granted exclusive recognition and collective bargaining rights to the 5th Naval Dist. Metal Trades Council.

The council, made up of AFL-CIO-affiliated crafts, will bargain for more than 1,600 blue collar workers. Recognition was granted on the basis of authorization cards signed by a majority of employes in the unit.

Meany Calls on Councils:

Union Push Urged To End Poll Tax

In a letter written on the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called on the federation's state bodies "to begin at once" campaigns to assure speedy ratification of the constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax.

The amendment, enacted by the present session of Congress, requires ratification by 38 states—three-fourths of the total—to become effective.

Stressing the urgency of the drive, Meany asked officials of the state federations to "keep me informed as to your efforts in reaching that objective."

Meany noted that organized labor had long fought for abolition of the poll tax simply through an act of Congress rather than the more complex method of amending the Constitution. He added however, that it was the outcome of the fight, not the method, that counted.

The AFL-CIO president urged each state federation to "take the lead in organizing a broad community effort to make ratification of the 24th amendment the first order of business when your state legislature next assembles."

"No activity could be more appropriate for the labor movement, historically dedicated to freeing mankind from every form of discrimination and oppression," he declared.

Meany recalled that the last previous amendment, giving citizens of the District of Columbia the right to vote in Presidential elections, had been ratified in less than two years.

"That record must be surpassed," he urged. "By the 1964 election, the last legal barrier to the free exercise of the franchise by all citizens, in all states, should be cleared away at last."

Meany Hails Long Strides In Rights Fight

and you should take pride at the role you have played in achieving them.

"All who truly adhere to the democratic faith are gratified at the progress we have made but all realize as well the distance yet to be traveled.

"Please convey to your convention the labor movement's unalterable dedication to the prompt establishment of fully equal rights for all Americans, in all areas. None of us can rest until that goal is reached."

At a news conference in Birmingham, Dr. King said the chief purpose of the convention was to "map strategy and intensify voter registration drives, public school integration and lunch counter integration not only in Alabama but throughout the South."

Lauding the Kennedy Administration's efforts to assure the admission of a Negro student by the University of Mississippi, Dr. King announced the conference would launch a "vigorous campaign" this year to break down segregation barriers at the University of Alabama and Auburn University.

"Alabama is still what we call a 'hard core resistance state'," he said. "And Birmingham is the last major city bastion of segregation."

Schnitzler Group Backs Equal Pay for Women

labor secretary who is executive vice chairman of the commission, reported that some 8.5 million woman workers would be affected by the equal pay bill now pending in Congress.

Pres. Kennedy in a message declared that "the nation needs the talents and energies of American women on all fronts," especially in maintaining the "strong economy so vital to our domestic life and so necessary to the conduct" of international affairs.

Wirtz a Speaker

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, in his first speech since his confirmation by the Senate, said a major obstacle to establishment of equal job opportunities for women has been the incorrect assumption that such opportunities already exist.

"Full employment for everybody who wants to work and has something to offer" is the country's need, he said, and he suggested that rather than talk about women taking men's jobs, the proper question is, "Do we have a sufficient number of adequately trained men and women to meet the exact job requirements" of the present economy?

Skill shortages still exist, Wirtz observed, particularly in research and development.

The President's Commission, appointed last December, is headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. Dr. Richard A. Lester of Princeton University, vice chairman, presided at conference sessions. Speakers included Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, with a message of greeting from Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges.

Schnitzler's work group included representatives of the Railway Clerks, Ladies' Garment Workers, Hatters, the AFL-CIO and its Industrial Union Dept.; National Education Association, several government departments, the National Federation of Business & Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., and six business firms.

NEW PRESIDENT and chief executive officer of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York is James Brindle, who has been director of the Auto Workers Social Security Dept.

Railroad Workers Rally to Save Jobs

PROTEST AGAINST growing threat to jobs in continuing mergers of railroads drew some 1,500 New York city metropolitan area rail workers to a huge rally at which their deep concern is reflected in the concentration in their faces.

MORE OF THE WORKERS who attended the rally, which was sponsored by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, are shown in this photo which also captures the feeling of concern for the future that besets rail workers from coast to coast as consolidations wipe out jobs.

NEXT GENERATION of railroad workers, or at least young hopefuls, was represented in audience. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a message cited danger of inadequate rail service to defense.

WOMEN WERE THERE because past mergers have often meant the disappearance of jobs other women's husbands had held for years. Special protests were voiced at the proposed merger of the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroads, which was seen as a prelude to further combines.

GOVERNMENT operation of railroads may be result of mergers, Pres. George M. Harrison of Railway Clerks warned.

PENNSYLVANIA STATION on the day before the protest rally was circled by cars bearing hand-lettered signs publicizing the meeting, with loudspeaker equipment (roof of center car) making sure that passers-by became aware of it. The threat of rail mergers to job security was emphasized both on the signs and at the rally itself, which was held in Manhattan Center.

BINDING government arbitration of rail disputes would erode bargaining, Pres. H. E. Gilbert, Firemen & Enginemen, said.

SUPPORT FOR BILL which would impose a three-year moratorium on Interstate Commerce Commission approval of mergers by railroads with more than $200 million in assets was urged by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), its sponsor, in his address to the rally. He called rails' efforts unilaterally to rewrite work rules a move "to tear up the tracks" from under jobs.

Wirtz As Secretary

THE NEW SECRETARY OF LABOR, W. Willard Wirtz, demonstrated his tremendous understanding of the complex and difficult area of labor relations in an era of relentless technological change in a speech to the National Press Club less than an hour after he had officially received his commission.

Brilliantly he swept away the semantic underbrush, tossed aside the tired slogans and the scare-words, and dealt with the problem as it exists: There are not enough jobs to go around.

Wirtz' long experience and background, his ability to penetrate to the nub of a problem and isolate it, his integrity and keen wit all bode well for the Labor Dept. and its role of looking after the welfare of the nation's workers.

Senate Double Standard

A SENATE COMMITTEE has demonstrated with remarkable clarity that the long-entrenched practices and traditions of a legislative body depend, finally, on whose ox is being gored.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, tightly controlled by the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition, has refused to vote contempt of Congress citations against four major steel companies for refusing to comply with subpenas to produce production cost data. The contempt citations were recommended by a Judiciary subcommittee on anti-trust matters, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.). The 10-5 vote by the full Judiciary Committee killed the subcommittee's plans for a full-scale investigation of steel pricing practices.

The use of subpenas and contempt citations by Senate investigating committees has drawn criticism over the years. There have been charges of fishing expeditions and seeking of information that had no pertinency to the Senate's basic lawmaking purpose. But in recent decades there is no record of a subcommittee's recommendation for a contempt citation being rejected, or of the Senate itself refusing to go along with a committee's recommendation.

But, then, the four top steel companies have not been previously involved, either.

Earlier this year the Senate, for the first time in more than 30 years, voted cloture to shut off debate on the controversial communications satellite bill. Senators who had refused repeatedly to invoke cloture on southern filibusters of civil rights measures this time voted to kill a filibuster by a handful of senators opposing private ownership of a space vehicle.

In the communications satellite fight the top companies in the electronics and communications industries were involved.

It is hard to escape the conclusion that Senate practices and traditions are generally inviolate except perhaps when the country's top corporate giants are involved.

Season's Greetings

THE REPUBLICAN-SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC coalition in the House greeted the opening of the nation's colleges and universities this fall by killing a compromise bill for federal aid to higher education.

The coalition's action adds one more reason—if any more are needed—why labor's register-and-vote campaign is a No. 1 priority for the trade union movement. There can be no progress for either labor or the nation until this obstructionist coalition is weakened. It can be done only at the ballot box on Nov. 6.

Dead Wood

Milwaukee AFL-CIO Leader Shows:

Extremists of Both Right and Left Fight 'Government By the People'

The following is excerpted from an article by J. F. Friedrick, president of the Milwaukee County Labor Council and president of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin, in the Milwaukee Labor Press:

INDIVIDUALS AND GROUPS on the extreme right, like Robert Welch and the John Birch Society and others, are deliberately seeking to mislead the public with the slogan that the United States is a republic and not a democracy.

With this slogan they seek to create two impressions; one, that in some mysterious way a republic is superior to a democracy, and two, that the founding fathers created the nation as a republic and that somehow the purpose of the founding fathers had been thwarted by converting the republic they created into a democracy.

Seeking to compare the term democracy with the term republic is as confusing as to compare brick with house. You can build a house of brick but you can also build it of wood, of glass, of steel, of stone, or a variety of other materials.

So a republic can be built out of a variety of differing social (political) concepts.

We have the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR), the Peoples Republic of China, the Republic of Cuba and the Republic of Hungary, and other Communist countries. In the light of this great variety of republics it seems to me to be only fair to ask our extremist friends what kind of republic do they have in mind when they prate that we are a "republic and not a democracy?"

The terms republic and democracy are not terms of opposition to each other but rather are complementary to each other.

Now what about the claim that the founding fathers of our nation favored the republican form but were opposed to democratic means as the basis for the operation of the republic?

The word democracy comes to us from the Greek, demos—people, krateo—rule. That is, rule of the people.

If the framers of the Constitution were opposed to rule of the people why did they start off the Preamble of the Constitution with "We, The People?" They did not say "We, The State," "We, The Congress," "We, The Representative." They said, "We, The People" and since they did not qualify it by mentioning any group or class, they must have meant all the people without distinction as to class or status.

THIS IS NOT SURPRISING for in the Declaration of Independence they said "When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another . . ." and again "We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal . . ."

How in the face of these words by the creators of the nation can anyone now logically maintain that the founding fathers were opposed to a government "of the people, by the people, for the people?"

Our extremists on the left are just as vehement in their opposition to a real, functioning democracy. While they prate about democracy and the rule of the people, in practice they rule by small cliques and ruthlessly suppress any kind of opposition to the clique. The "rule of the proletariat" is not rule by the proletariat, it is rule over the proletariat.

Our extremists of the right violently object to social welfare legislation on the ground that this is against the traditions of the country. Again they overlook the fact that the Preamble of the Constitution declares the promotion of the general welfare as one of the objectives of our government.

Opposition to social and welfare legislation is also often opposed on the ground that it makes people dependent upon government and thereby restricts their freedom and independence. Evidently the founders of the nation had no such fears for again going to the "Preamble" it reads in part "promote the General Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity . . ."

I worked in machine shops in Milwaukee before there was a Workmen's Compensation Law, an Unemployment Compensation Law, a Social Security Act. Did I and other workers feel more free and independent before these laws were enacted? Of course not.

What did these laws take away from us? They took away the haunting fears that if we were injured, unemployed or became too old to work, we would not be able to provide for ourselves and our families. By lessening these fears these laws gave us greater freedom and independence, for truly no man who is afraid is free.

Just as such laws in the past have increased the security of the people and thus in effect made them freer so the improvement and expansion of such legislation will enhance and broaden the "Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity."

UN Shouldn't Be Forced to Act 'Like a Beggar in the Street'

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

BEFORE THE WORLD SERIES engulfs us, a few words are in order about the United Nations. How fortunate it is, by the way, that this remarkable arena was not organized along the lines of an athletic contest. Somebody once remarked that if the planet was impatient to have World War III and get it over with its coming could be quickened by holding the Olympic games more frequently. It is hard to find a more belligerently passionate partisan than a sports fan and hell hath no fury like the wrath of a Dodger supporter spurned—or at least had none when the team grew in Brooklyn.

Morgan

But although the diplomatic equivalent of "kill the umpire" has echoed frequently through the great hall of the UN General Assembly and even shoes have been brandished, the organization has held its aplomb on the whole and grown in stature.

Cynics cry that it is at best no more than an international debating society or a centralized sounding board for the tom-toms of propaganda. Actually it has done a remarkable number of peace-keeping jobs and run a constant series of urgent international errands effectively over the last 17 years and this work is becoming increasingly important.

Admittedly the delegates do still incline to be enchanted with the sound of their own words too often. If they can bear to take some counsel from an American it is already available in the text of a speech delivered to the American Association of the United Nations in New York by Harlan Cleveland, assistant secretary of state for international organization affairs.

The General Assembly," he said, "is not an outdoor protest rally," but an indoor deliberative body. If it "gets the reputation of an organization whose main job is passing large, shining resolutions whose only discernible merit consists of the symbolism of protest," he warned, "then its growing power will be reduced—which would be bad for every country that is glad to be equal with every other country as a member of the General Assembly."

This equality business—in which, for example, the U.S. Assembly vote is equaled by Upper Volta's—has bothered the bigger powers. Indeed the still burgeoning Afro-Asian bloc can and does out-vote the western alliance.

Recently observers have noted a slight thawing in the glacial coolness of De Gaulle's France toward the UN and all its works. Judicious queries elicited the reply from the French delegation that with 16 former French African colonies now full-fledged members of the world organization, France must follow UN developments closely.

THE ADDED FACT IS that France still has important ties with and huge stakes in these "freed" countries which could easily be jeopardized if Paris continued a haughty attitude toward the one international body the new nations are finding so important.

Another incipient development is being watched with hopeful care. As some of our western allies become ex-colonial powers — notably the Netherlands and Belgium—they seem to approach larger world issues with a less defensive and parochial view. Conceivably this could be happening to France, too.

Still the growing community of interest can't run on good wishes alone. The UN which, as Cleveland noted, directly involves 55,000 people spending more than half a billion dollars of the world's money, has to be financed. This means that members must pay their dues. In July the World Court in an advisory opinion ruled, in effect, that member states are legally bound to pay the assessments decided by the Assembly.

This can clear the way to pressure states in arrears on special levies for such operations as the Congo and the Middle East UN force to pay up or lose their General Assembly vote.

There is bound to be a flaming row on this issue but in a major speech Chief U.S. Delegate Adlai Stevenson indicated the Kennedy Administration was preparing for some kind of showdown on it. Washington is in a much stronger position than it was before Congress passed the bill authorizing the President to buy $100 million of UN bonds. Stevenson asked the General Assembly to act to compel members to share all costs and keep the UN from acting "like a beggar in the street."

A vital companion action is to pressure the errant Tshombe of Katanga to come to terms with Leopoldville, as he has pledged, within a Congolese union. His cynical intransigence accounts for most of the $10 million a month the U.N. Congo operation costs.

Washington Reports:

Rail Merger Moratorium Urged Pending Development of Policy

"RAILROAD MERGERS should be held up until the President's committee to develop a national transportation program has had time to see just what the needs of the railroad are," Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Kefauver said the committee has not yet had time to study the matter, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not made an overall study.

Rep. John B. Bennett (R-Mich.) declared he favored disclosure of the actual ownership of the big transportation companies, as he was interviewed on the same program.

"I think ownership in the case of securities that are sold to the public ought to be open to the public," he asserted. "If the law prohibits this for railroads, I think it should be changed."

Kefauver is the author of a bill that would hold up rail mergers for two years. Bennett has introduced a joint resolution that would have the same effect.

"There never has been such a great influx of merger proposals presented to the ICC, and I think a moratorium is necessary," the Tennessee senator said.

Bennett cited the case of the merger of the Soo Line and the Duluth & South Shore in northern Michigan several years ago.

"THE IDEA WAS that it would be in the public interest, that it would improve service to the public," he said.

The theory was that "it would get cheaper freight rates and it wouldn't cost the jobs of any important number of people," he added.

"Just the reverse took place," he went on. "A whole lot of people have lost their jobs. They have stopped building new cars and have closed their shops. They have closed their offices, except for skeleton crews. They haven't improved their service to the public. And their financial condition has not improved."

"We know that the railroads have pulled out of communities, and they have gone down economically," Kefauver added.

Answering a charge that public ownership was implied in a moratorium proposal, he declared:

"I think it's the other way around. If the railroads discontinue service to a great many communities, if they are not available to meet our national defense needs and a growing economy, there will be so much public resentment the people will demand public ownership."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MISSING FROM THE 88TH CONGRESS next January will be one of the South's hardshell conservatives, James C. Davis, who has misrepresented his urban constituents in the House for 18 years.

The federal court decision knocking out the county-unit system for Georgia Democratic primaries settled the Davis hash. He would never have gained power through the seniority system if it had not been for the county-unit system; twice previously he has lost a majority of the Georgia 5th District popular vote but was "counted in" for nomination by the ridiculous gerrymander giving DeKalb and Rockdale Counties (total population, 1960 census, 267,354) four "unit" votes each, and Fulton County (population, 556,326) only six "unit" votes.

Davis kept his continuity of service, which means choice committee positions, by regularly carrying DeKalb and Rockdale, with their eight unit votes, while losing Fulton County (Atlanta). Even at a time when relatively few Negroes voted, Davis was considered a misrepresentative by citizens of Atlanta, a sensible and well-behaved people governed, it should be said, by moderate and responsible municipal officials.

The federal court decision immediately threw Davis into a profound silence in Washington. No longer did he use his power as ranking member of the House District of Columbia Committee to harass the administration of the integrated public school system and bring out sensational reports on crime rates among Negroes.

A great many Negroes now vote in Atlanta, thanks to better education, their own good efforts to improve their position and assert their rights, the awakened conscience of many southern white leaders, the moral influence of the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions and other federal activities.

When the entire population of the 5th District got a fair crack at Davis, they ended his career in Congress. They did it convincingly, giving a moderate on race issues, Charles L. Weltner, a bigger margin in the runoff primary than he had in the first contest involving four candidates two weeks earlier.

THE DAVIS RECORD in Congress showed a steady deterioration from concepts that were once at least moderately liberal. In the 10 years from 1947 through 1956, he was listed on COPE charts as having had 7 "right" votes as against 12 "wrong."

He regularly voted for strict controls on unions, against minimum wage improvements, against civil rights bills. But he voted for government pay increases, in favor of hospital construction grants, in favor of federal aid to the schools, in favor of an increase in income tax exemptions to aid low-income families.

In the next four years the record showed only 1 "right" vote as against 21 "wrong." He switched and voted against school-aid bills. He voted against depressed area legislation, against monopoly curbs, against stronger food and drug controls, against foreign aid, against the reciprocal trade bill, against a proposed reclamation project.

THE REFORM OF GEORGIA POLITICS has been a long time coming. Back in the early Forties, the liberal Helen Douglas Makin served one term in the House from the Atlanta district but was thereafter "counted out" by the unit system. The Supreme Court refused at the time to outlaw the manipulation of the vote.

Now the high court has said flatly that federal courts have jurisdiction over the issue presented when urban voters file complaints that they are denied equal protection of the laws by gerrymanders favoring sparsely populated counties and small-town rural legislative districts.

Georgia's people have taken in stride the federal lower court decision outlawing the county-unit system. It causes one to wonder whether, if Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett were not grandstanding, the integration of the University of Mississippi might not have been just as calmly accepted on federal court orders. There is no evidence in reports from the campus that the younger generation would riot and defy the law with the admission of a Negro to the student body.

SEN. ESTES KEFAUVER (D-Tenn.), left, and Rep. John B. Bennett (R-Mich.) have advocated a moratorium on rail mergers until the transportation situation has been properly studied. They were interviewed on the proposal on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Some Advice on How to Live With a Washing Machine

By Sidney Margolius

HOMEOWNERS PLANNING major repairs can find reduced prices this fall on several important types of fixtures and materials. Most notable are the lower prices now offered on plumbing and heating equipment and some grades of asphalt roofing.

In October, also look for the first reduced prices on women's and children's coats, starting with the Columbus Day sales.

The major dilemma of moderate-income families in recent months has been the lofty price tags on meat, with some cities reporting the highest beef prices in three years.

The food bargains this month are broilers and turkeys. These, together with main dishes based on cheese and fish, can help conserve use of red meat until more abundant supplies of beef and pork reach the markets later this fall. Stocks of frozen orange-juice concentrate are 66 percent above a year ago and prices are reasonable. Cranberries and pears also are in heavy supply.

Here are suggestions for getting best values in October buying opportunities:

Not only have prices of automatic washers steadily been reduced but the features have been improved. Most notably, several manufacturers have increased the capacity of their washers to meet the competition of the two 12-pound models which have gained popularity. Larger capacity not only is a time-saver but also enhances a machine's ability to get clothes clean.

Here are other useful features to look for in washers:

● Cut-off switches: both an "unbalanced load" cut-off switch to turn off the machine automatically if it starts to "walk," and a switch that cuts off the machine if the top is opened during the spin cycle, a safety feature if there are children who might investigate a washer while running.

However, because unbalanced-load cut-offs of the mercury-switch type would rust, some washers do not have this feature, although such switches now are more trouble-free on later models. Some models provide a safety cutoff for the lid, but not always the unbalanced-load cutoff.

● Either a self-cleaning lint filter or convenient access to the filter for easy cleaning.

● A water meter, increasingly found on moderate-price models as well as the deluxe washers, automatically adjusts the water level for small loads.

● The more rinses a machine provides, the more likely you will avoid graying or yellowing of garments. A cold rinse is considered a desirable feature to avoid "setting" wrinkles in synthetic-fiber materials, and also to preserve color of non-fast dyes.

● Generally the faster the spin provided by the "dry" cycle, the more water extracted, government economists point out.

AUTOMATIC WASHERS do require more care than any other appliance except TV sets. Pump repairs are most frequent. Repairmen find pins, coins, marbles, even wrist watches jamming pumps.

Premature motor failure generally is caused by overloading. An over-loaded washer never gets up full speed, and eventually the motor burns out. Overloading also strains the gears. Too much suds, or too high-sudsing a type for your model, add strain and cause leaks. The theory that lots of suds cleans better is a grand illusion. Too much increases the density of the water and reduces washing efficiency.

Unbalanced loads cause vibration and strain. A washer needs to be fed by the handful, not the armful, to distribute the load evenly and to keep small items from going over the side of the tub.

Timers often are damaged by forcing them backwards. Earlier automatics have a slip timer which can be turned back. But with many recent models, if you have turned the timer further than you intended, you must continue around by hand and start over. You can turn a timer forward as much as you want by hand in the wash cycle, but avoid even this in the rinse and spin periods.

If your washing machine seems to labor, try it with no other appliances operating at the same time on the same service line. Washers are affected by low voltage.

Housewives often call servicemen when wash doesn't come out clean. You get cleaner washes if loads are lighter than rated capacity. Also, balance loads between large and small pieces.

Angry women often send torn garments to service depots. Before you call for service, see if you are not overloading, or using bleach improperly. You may pay $6 or $7 only to have a serviceman pull out an ultra-violet light to prove you are using too much bleach or not dissolving it enough.

Keep the water supply to the washer turned off when not in use. Constant pressure may weaken the valves.

ANNUAL WHITE HOUSE meeting between Pres. Kennedy and leaders of united and community fund drives was attended by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (second from right), a vice president of the United Community Funds & Councils of America, chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee and president of the Communications Workers. Others standing behind the president, from left to right, are Lee H. Bristol, 1962 chairman of the United Community Campaigns of America; William Calomiris, chairman of the Washington United Givers Fund, and Albert R. Stevens, vice chairman of the United Community Campaigns of America. The picture was taken before Bristol's sudden death.

Community 'Reform' Asked:

Shift in View of Relief Called for By Perlis

New York—Major reforms in the administration of public assistance programs and in community attitudes toward the problems of the needy have been urged by AFL-CIO Community Service Activities Dir. Leo Perlis.

Perlis told a New York state investigating commission that development of adequate public assistance programs has been hampered by the widespread "myth" that "everyone, if he really wants to, can be self-reliant."

This, he said, has resulted in poverty, disability and misfortune being considered "degrading" and the "fault" of the needy. So much shame has been attached to the stigma of poverty, Perlis said, that many families are kept from applying for assistance on the basis of their need.

Although the commission's recommendations will be confined to the New York state situation, its report is expected to have nationwide influence in the welfare field. Its hearings have covered such controversial matters as work relief, residence requirements, voucher payments, fraud and rehabilitation efforts.

Residence Laws 'Paradox'

Perlis described residence laws "designed to keep the stranger from our door," as "a paradox in our American society" and "an affront . . . to Judeo-Christian morality." They are founded, he said, "on the same old myth that people would rather get relief than go to work."

"The opposite is generally true," he added. "People move to get better jobs—or just jobs."

Perlis also made these points:

● Public assistance does not make it difficult for industry to hire persons on relief rolls—except for "the sweatshop operator." The welfare load "goes up as employment goes down, and it goes down as employment goes up."

● Proper work relief, in useful employment, at prevailing wages paid in cash with protection for the rights of workers, can be a useful aid in rehabilitation. But when "made-work" is used for "punitive purposes," it is akin to "slave labor."

● Family guidance by trained social workers, rather than so-called "voucher payments," is the way to protect immature persons from dissipating their allowances.

● In most areas, welfare payments to the needy are below adequate levels, but at the same time little is being done about "unscrupulous landlords and physicians who get rich at the expense of the poor."

'Not Enough'

"It isn't enough for a welfare department to claim that it has no alternative but to pay exorbitant rentals to house relief families in rat-infested fire traps . . . and it isn't enough for a welfare department to pay for the medical care of the indigent without looking into methods, procedures and times of treatment and the fees collected by the physician."

● The much-publicized problem of illegitimate children being born to persons on relief roles, Perlis said, is a reflection of "the weakening of family life and our moral and social fabric."

"It has infected the college girl as much as the shop girl."

Perlis said state welfare programs should be directed by a single commissioner of social welfare—a technician, rather than a politician—who would be aided by a broadly-representative advisory committee.

Declaring that public lack of understanding of welfare needs and problems "is not only statewide but nationwide as well," Perlis urged creation of a high-level national committee to focus attention on these problems.

Life's Little Tragedies Gang Up And Make Things Really Grim

"SURE, I'LL GIVE YOU novocain if you insist on having it, but most people wouldn't need it for a little cavity like this. Matter of fact there was an eight-year-old boy here this morning whom I drilled on for an hour without giving him any anesthetic. Bravest little fellow you ever saw. Still, people are different and if you can't stand a little momentary discomfort, I'll be glad to . . ."

"Okay, I'll eat my broccoli, but I'll bet you anything it makes me throw up! Just you wait and see!"

"If it's that important to you to get the lawn mowed, I'll spend my one day off a week doing it for you. I was planning to go fishing with Herb, and we've been looking forward to it for months. But never mind. I'll call him up and explain that you're worried about what the neighbors will think, and . . ."

"Well, if you really insist on doing something to help, you could bring a casserole to serve 25 people."

"You're absolutely right not to have your grey hairs touched up. I mean, after all, why should you try to look younger than you are? You look your age and, personally, I admire you for not caring."

"IF YOU INSIST, madam, of course I'll refund your money. But I'd suggest that next time you read the directions before you use the product."

"Certainly, I can show you a black dress if that's what you want, but everything this season is color, color, color! The Paris collections showed almost no black, and dark colors are definitely out. But if it's black you want, I can probably find something . . ."

"Well ma'am, it's like this. If you've got to get that drain unplugged today, I guess I can get up there to fix it for you, but it sure won't be easy. You see, I've got this slipped disc in my back that slows me up, and my partner's sick in the hospital, and my wife's brother had an auto accident this morning, and my kid's going into the Army this afternoon. But as I say, if you've just got to get that drain fixed today, why I'll figure out a way somehow . . ."

Withdrawals Underway:

Labor Bares Right-Wing Funds Behind 'Americanism' Program

Los Angeles—The chairman of Los Angeles County's Board of Supervisors, the city's mayor and a prominent religious leader have resigned from a right-wing financed "Americanism" program which had been challenged by organized labor.

Ernest Debs, the supervisor, and Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin withdrew from the Bill of Rights Commemoration Committee following publication by the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor of the second in a series of special reports entitled "Mask for Reaction." The resignation of Mayor Sam Yorty followed a short time later.

Debs and Rabbi Magnin said the committee, financed since 1942 by Joe Crail, president of Coast Federal Savings & Loan Association, has gradually drifted toward the extreme right, with "unauthorized material" appearing in speakers' manuals.

In cooperation with the public schools, the committee ostensibly does no more than praise the Bill of Rights, sending out thousands of copies of the historic document and explaining its meaning to school children and the general public.

But some of Crail's personal political thinking has started to go into the explanations, and the county AFL-CIO, like Debs and Rabbi Magnin, said it wasn't sufficient to simply set up a special committee to screen material to be sent out.

In his letter to Crail, Debs said, "Your name is synonomous with Coast Federal Savings, and everyone knows that you pay for the printing of the Speakers Digest . . . and are chairman of the committee. . . ."

Chancellor Clark Kerr of the University of California also resigned recently from the committee, and more resignations are expected. Still a member is C. C. Trillingham, superintendent of the county schools.

The county AFL-CIO here explained its concern this way:

"Carrying forward labor's tradition of dynamic opposition to communism, fascism and all other forms of totalitarianism, the County Federation of Labor is currently engaged in a systematic program of examining and exposing to public scrutiny the activities of authoritarian extremist groups.

Anti-Communism a 'Cloak'

"Of particular concern are the increasing number of businessmen who have lately come to believe that they can safely indulge . . . political fancies under a newly discovered foolproof disguise — an ostensible fight against the Communist danger as a cloak for espousing an equally evil and perilous ultra-right reaction.

"In the forefront of this group in Southern California today appear to be the management heads of Coast Federal [which] disseminates ultra-right authoritarian propaganda and promotes turmoil and hatred in local communities."

While Crail denies he is a member of the John Birch Society, the county labor federation noted that in a recent Coast Federal Savings questionnaire testing "Your Americanism IQ", "points" were scored for those approving the Birch society.

In a similar manner the questionnaire showed its own "approval" of so-called "right-to-work" laws.

UN Suspect

And the "score" for Americanism went down if "approval" was voiced on a wide variety of other subjects, including minimum wage laws, the United Nations, extension of social security, federal aid to education, the Peace Corps and even the League of Women Voters.

As with apparently similar groups, Crail and his firm oppose calling this nation a "democracy," and the Bill of Rights Commemoration Committee has taken over this viewpoint.

Crail's firm, the nation's third largest savings and loan association with $525 million in assets, is estimated to spend about $250,000 a year on its self-described anti-communism programs.

The company has 38 speakers who operate from its Free Enterprise Dept., and sponsors 100 film showings a month to service clubs, churches, and Parent-Teachers Associations. Answering labor's criticism of his ultra-right position, Crail says:

"They're unwitting dupes of the Communists. They are just carrying out the Communist line. They're campaigning for the Democrats, I suppose."

This remark stirred up anti-Crail sentiment even among conservative Democrats who have been reluctant to criticize such a pro-American-sounding operation as the Bill of Rights Commemoration Committee.

The AFL-CIO here has asked for a federal investigation to determine if the company's "enterprise" expenditures are properly reported and are allowable as a tax-deductible business expense.

Crail says his program is "good business."

"Anti-communism builds sales," he said. "It's cheap advertising. You will sell more customers and get better performance from your employes . . . You will make money at it."

A GENERATION OF SERVICE to the cause of good labor-management relations was rewarded when Rev. Philip A. Carey, S. J. (center), director of the Institute of Industrial Relations in New York, was selected as first recipient of the Greater New York Union Label Award of Merit. Presenting the award, as Mayor Robert F. Wagner (right) looks on, is Union Label Council Pres. Moe Rosen.

'Suppression' Charged On Loan to Nixon

Los Angeles—A California Democratic leader has accused a Long Beach magazine distributor of "suppressing" the Aug. 16 issue of The Reporter magazine because it contained an article exposing new details of the $205,000 loan from Howard Hughes to the family of former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon.

Eugene L. Wyman, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, condemned the incident as "a new attempt by the Nixon camp to prevent the public from learning the truth about a highly questionable deal."

Wyman's charge followed disclosure by the Long Beach Independent Press-Telegram that the magazine distributor, Jack Drown, a long-time Nixon supporter, had kept The Reporter off newsstands in the area for nearly a month after its publication.

Drown, former vice chairman of the Los Angeles County Republican Committee and currently co-chairman of Nixon's campaign for governor in the Long Beach area, has replied that he moved copies of the magazine out as fast as he received them. His distributorship services southern Los Angeles County and Orange County as well as Long Beach.

Wyman, however, said Drown had failed to put the Reporter on sale after receiving it on Aug. 13. He said the distributor was thus "guilty of a contemptuous attack on press freedom, and Nixon must share the responsibility with him."

The Reporter article, the product of a year's investigation by Long Beach newspaperman James R. Phelan, traced the history of the loan from the Hughes Tool Co. to Nixon's mother as part of a futile attempt to save the drive-in restaurant business of Nixon's brother, Don.

Wyman said it "contains significant revelations" concerning Nixon's own part in the loan, which occurred shortly after his re-election as vice president in 1956.

"By keeping the magazine out of circulation" Wyman charged, "Drown apparently hoped to reduce Nixon's exposure in a transaction that could have direct bearing on Nixon's fitness to serve as governor."

Declaring that "the situation is an extension of the six-year cover-up" regarding the loan, Wyman asserted:

"The public—and the press of California—should ask: Would Nixon's political crony have suppressed the magazine if Gov. [Edmond] Brown [Nixon's Democratic opponent] had been the central figure in the expose?"

L-G Trustee Reports from Unions Cited

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz reported to Congress that the trade union movement "has cooperated completely" in voluntarily correcting violations of the trusteeship provisions of the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Wirtz' report, required under the law three years after its enactment, noted that the Labor Dept. has never had to go to court to get a trusteeship removed from over a subordinate union and that many national unions have amended their constitutions to provide greater safeguards against unnecessary suspensions of autonomy.

"With few exceptions since passage of the act," Wirtz told Congress, "parent labor unions have imposed trusteeships sparingly and only as a last resort in an effort to maintain the stability and security of their organizations."

Trusteeships existed in less than 1 percent of the unions when the L-G Act became effective, he said, "and now less than half" that percentage is involved.

While the law has been effective in preventing abuses in the imposing of trusteeships, Wirtz said, it has not "substantially hindered unions from establishing essential trusteeships."

The act, he said, brought about the termination of a large number of trusteeships. Of the 487 unions under trusteeship when it became effective, 46 retain that status.

In the two and one-half year period covered by a Bureau of Labor-Management Reports study that formed the basis for the report, a total of 777 trusteeships was reported. By Mar. 13, 1962, all but 187 were terminated.

Of the 70 organizations that reported trusteeships, 23 had only one in effect at any time during the study period.

'Double Standard' Seen In UN Vote on Hungary

By Arnold Beichman

United Nations, N. Y. — The 17th General Assembly of the United Nations is demonstrating that for many of the member nations, particularly those recently freed from colonialism, international morality is a one-way street.

There is one law for Portugal, South Africa, Holland, Britain and another for the Soviet Union.

This became apparent when the Assembly last week took up the matter of entering on the agenda what is technically known as "The Question of Hungary." This means simply whether the Assembly could merely debate the Soviet aggression against Hungary in the fall of 1956, which took 70,000 lives and imposed ironclad control over that ill-fated land when it dared to rebel against the Soviet Union.

Thirteen resolutions passed by the Assembly against the Soviet aggression have been flouted by Moscow, which has forbidden any UN mission to enter Hungary.

After long debate, the Assembly voted to inscribe "The Question of Hungary," introduced by the U. S. delegation, on the agenda so there will be a discussion.

The vote this year was 43 in favor, 34 against, abstentions 19. This compares with last year's vote on the same issue when it was 51 in favor, 15 against and 30 abstentions. Between last year and this year, the vote against merely discussing Hungary more than doubled. The vote "for" dropped 15 percent and the number of abstentions fell by one-third as more countries decided to vote against Hungary.

It was noted by comparing the two rollcalls that no country which voted against Hungary last year shifted its negative vote to a "yes" vote. Similarly, no country which last year voted "no" shifted its vote to an abstention. In other words, it was evidence of a growing unwillingness to deal with what the UN had earlier voted, in adopting a special report on Hungary, to condemn the Soviet aggression.

Burma, Cyprus, Greece, Iran, Liberia, Bolivia, Nicaragua and Portugal—which in 1961 had voted to inscribe Hungary on the UN agenda—were either absent when the roll was called this year or else abstained.

New Nations Opposed

Even more significant was the number of countries which last year voted to abstain but which this year voted "no," in other words against debating the Hungarian aggression. By and large, these countries were recently given their independence.

Those who shifted from abstention to the "no" column were Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Ghana, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Niger, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Egypt, Upper Volta, Dahomey.

With the exception of Sierra Leone, no former African colonial country now independent voted for Hungary. Not a single Arab country voted for Hungary, either. Laos, which last year voted for Hungary, this year shifted to the "no" column.

Only the U.S. spokesman, Charles Yost, spoke in favor of including Hungary in the agenda. The delegate from Communist Hungary and the Soviet deputy foreign minister spoke against inclusion. The only other country to side openly with the Soviet position was Indonesia, which has just won its battle against "western imperialism" persuading The Netherlands to cede West Irian to the UN and in time to Indonesia.

The Hungary vote was only one of many votes which will be taken at the UN in the next few months. However, observers regarded it as another example of the "double standard" which afflicts a large number of countries when they are confronted by so glaring an example of Soviet imperialism as the tragedy of Hungary or Communist China's aggression against Tibet which is not on the UN agenda this year.

Retired AFL-CIO Employe Dies at 67

James C. Gardiner, an employe of the AFL-CIO and the former AFL for 45 years prior to his retirement last year, has died here of lung cancer. He was 67.

He worked in the accounting departments of the two organizations and for many years was closely associated with Samuel Gompers, first president of the AFL. A native of Middlebrook, Md., he received a bachelor of laws degree from Columbus University and a master of laws degree from the National Law School here. He was a combat veteran of World War 1.

Surviving are a brother, Paul, of Rockville, Md., and four sisters, Mrs. Edmonia Hewitt, Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Marie Buttell of Washington; Mrs. George Archibald of Barnesville, Md., and Sister Mary Martha of St. Bernard's Convent, Baltimore.

Steelworkers Plan Ahead:

Delegates Eye Pay, Hours and Pensions

By Eugene A. Kelly

Miami Beach—The Steelworkers have set their sights in collective bargaining negotiations next year on an increase in wage rates and pension benefits and a reduction in the hours of work.

These goals and others must be sought, the union said in policy resolutions adopted unanimously by the 3,049 accredited delegates to the 11th USWA convention here, not only at the bargaining table but also by legislative enactment.

The convention, declaring that major improvements are needed in union social insurance programs, expressed the union's intention to continue seeking job protection, cushions against the hardships of unemployment, and increased living standards.

America needs policies, it said, designed to stimulate production and demand. It declared:

- Dynamic wage policies are essential.
- Broad public support for equitable tax provisions is needed.
- Programs designed to encourage expansion of housing construction, urban redevelopment, expansion of educational facilities and programs, comprehensive medical systems, new parks, recreational facilities, roads, bridges, airports and other essential improvements are required.

In sessions presided over by Pres. David J. McDonald, the convention reviewed the accomplishments of union programs over the last two-year period and hammered out goals for the next two-year period, which includes wage and pension reopening negotiations in 1963.

Delegates adopted reports containing these highlights:

- Continued increases in the productivity of steel workers and the rising cost of living require an increase in wages.
- Unless wages are raised, workers will suffer a reduced standard of living and the economy will suffer. This problem, the delegates said, requires full consideration by the USWA Wage Policy Committee.
- A reduction in working hours, sought repeatedly by the union, is a necessary step to enable the steel, aluminum, fabricating and mining industries to provide additional jobs. The method was not spelled out, but McDonald said he would favor a four-day workweek with eight hours per day to fit the needs of the industry.

Negotiators Commended

Recognizing that the level of pension benefits is inadequate, the convention commended its negotiators for providing a 1963 reopening of pension plan terms for review and adjustment of benefit levels and other provisions.

On the legislative front, the convention declared that the federal budget should be geared to encourage increases in sales, productivity and employment. The President should be given statutory authority to cut taxes temporarily when economic indicators point to a business decline, the delegates said, adding that a general tax rate reduction is called for with particular emphasis on lower income levels and elimination of loopholes.

A broad federal training program is needed for unemployed workers whose skills have become obsolete, the resolution declared. Provisions for relocating workers are necessary but jobs should be created in distressed areas whenever possible, it added.

The unemployment insurance system should be improved on a national basis by providing increased benefits for the duration of unemployment, another statement said.

The convention urged further investigation into the problems of automation. The task of meeting the challenge of change cannot be accomplished by any single group acting alone but will require maximum cooperation of labor, management and government, it declared.

"All will benefit," the convention said, "by an economy operating at peak performance."

Constitution Unchanged

The convention left unchanged most provisions of the union constitution including salary rates of officers, district directors and international representatives, which have not been increased since 1956.

Also unchanged is a clause permitting the executive board to raise dues by an amount not exceeding $5 a month during contract negotiations. An amendment permitting such an increase when reserve funds are less than $20 million, but not more than $25 million, was defeated by standing vote, 1,532 to 1,454.

The convention voted to raise the requirements for the number of seconds needed by candidates for top office or for district director.

New Term Voted Burke By Pulp-Sulphite Parley

Detroit — John P. Burke, who has headed the Pulp-Sulphite Workers since 1917, was elected to another three-year term as president and secretary of the 170,000-member union at its convention here.

The convention also approved a 25-cent monthly per capita increase recommended by the executive board, with 10 cents earmarked to bolster the defense fund.

Delegates voted down a proposal to have vice presidents elected by delegates from each region on a 10,820 to 4,531 rollcall vote which kept the convention in session until the early hours of one morning. The 11 vice presidents are now elected by vote of the entire convention. Also defeated was a proposal for mandatory 65-year retirement age for staff members and international officers other than president.

Resolutions adopted by the 1,000 delegates included strong statements of support for health care for the elderly under social security and for a shorter workweek.

Re-elected with Burke were Treas. Henry Segal, Auditor Keith Wentz, and 10 incumbent vice presidents. Wilfred Gagnon was elected as a new vice president to succeed Ralph W. Leavitt, who did not seek re-election.

Pres. Paul L. Phillips of the Papermakers & Paperworkers urged unity of unions in the industry.

"We've got to quit fighting each other and start fighting the employers," Phillips told the delegates.

Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther called on union members to help elect "a better Congress" which will pass more of Pres. Kennedy's program.

Labor's "top priority," he said, should be given to organizing the unorganized.

Second in ILPA Guide Series Ready

The ILPA Local Publications Guide, second in a series of handbooks designed by the Intl. Labor Press Association to help unions do a better communications job, is off the press.

The first handbook — on press relations — was a "smash" hit with almost 25,000 sold. The second is designed for local union editors. Pres. Bernard R. Mullady and Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester said they hope it will encourage more labor groups to tell their own story.

Copies may be ordered at 10 cents each from ILPA, 815 16th Street N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Court Orders Reports Of Labor Spy Funds

disclose in detail the date and amount of each payment it made to the detective agency, to whom each payment was made, a full explanation of each payment, and other related information.

The detective agency must file an initial report detailing the terms and conditions of its arrangement with Olson and the extent to which it was carried out. It must also identify all employes it was hired to spy on, and supply annual reports of its receipts from Olson, or any other employer, for labor relations "advice or services," together with statements of its expenditures in that connection.

Meanwhile, in a parallel proceeding brought by the National Labor Relations Board, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals early this year upheld the recommendations of a special master that Olson should be held guilty of civil contempt for labor-spying activities violating a court order to bargain with the TWUA, which had won a representation election at the plant in 1957.

At the time, however, the Olson firm had just been sold to another rug manufacturer, the Stephen-Leedom Carpet Co., which agreed to deal with the union. After some delay over completion of the sale, Leedom is now negotiating with the union for an initial contract.

The federal court orders against Olson and its detective agency were issued to enforce Sec. 203 of Landrum-Griffin, which requires employers and third parties to report to the secretary of labor within 30 days after the close of the fiscal year "any expenditure, during the fiscal year, where an object thereof, directly or indirectly, is to interfere with, restrain or coerce employes in the right to organize and bargain collectively."

Toronto Bars Low-Pay Plan For Nurses

Toronto, Ont.—The Metropolitan Toronto Council, seeking to establish a salary scale for nurses and occupational therapists, was shocked to find that the going rate in the Toronto area was less than the metropolitan government was paying its own unionized elevator operators and building caretakers.

The council rejected a proposed starting scale of $66 for general duty nurses, $69 for head nurses and $72 for university-trained occupational therapists. This was the proposal of the Ontario Hospital Commission for a new $6 million convalescent hospital.

The council noted that under a contract with the National Union of Pacific Employes, an affiliate of the Canadian Labor Congress, it is paying $76 a week to cleaners and $73 to caretakers in Metropolitan Toronto civic departments.

LABOR'S HELP has been asked for the proposed National Cultural Center, to be built on the banks of the Potomac River in Washington to provide facilities for the performing arts. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, a trustee of the center, has urged state and local central bodies to cooperate when a Nov. 29 closed-circuit telecast is shown in various cities to raise funds for the center.

Convention Raises Per Capita:

Carpenters See Vote Drive As Key to Labor's Survival

By David L. Perlman

Registration and voting were termed the "key to survival" of the labor movement in a report adopted unanimously by nearly 2,000 delegates to the Carpenters' convention in Washington, D. C.

The convention urged local unions to step up political education activities in the weeks ahead "so that we can support our friends on election day and do our utmost to defeat those who have little regard for our problems."

Earlier the delegates had heard AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller describe the legislative problems created by the defeat of 21 liberal House members in the 1960 elections and warn that future action on such issues as social security health care "depends entirely on what happens on the 6th of November."

The convention also:

- Approved a 25-cent monthly per capita increase recommended by the convention's finance and constitution committees.
- Voted "full support" to the AFL-CIO drive for a shorter workweek. The resolution pointed out that unemployment among building tradesmen "has been running nearly three times as high as the national average," with "no indications that this situation will improve of its own accord in the immediate future."
- Hailed the work of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training on the agency's 25th anniversary, and urged local unions to strive to increase the number of apprentices in training.

In the only contested elections—for two places on the executive board—Harry Schwarzer of Cleveland won re-election from the 3rd District, defeating Roy S. Trent, and William Sidell of Los Angeles won the 8th District post by beating Joseph Cambiano, the incumbent.

Earlier the convention had unanimously re-elected Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson, four other general officers and eight board members, all for four-year terms.

Biemiller said that despite the addition of Administration supporters to the House Rules Committee last year, the power of Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D-Va.) has kept the committee still "the biggest stumbling block" for progressive legislation. He pointed out that the labor-backed bill to modernize the Davis-Bacon Act, although approved 23-6 by the House Labor Committee, remains "tied up" in the Rules Committee.

In other convention addresses:

- Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) sharply rebuked legislators who "are so brave about fighting Nikita Khrushchev and attacking Cuba . . . [but] are right now cutting the heart out of the foreign aid program."
- Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) called for a comprehensive civil defense program, declaring: "I do not consider it a show of weakness to have a civil defense program to protect our people. I consider it an expression of the will and determination of the people of this country."
- Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) praised the AFL-CIO legislative program and termed the labor movement "the closest thing we have on a national level to a real people's lobby."
- Peace Corps Dir. Sargent Shriver emphasized that the Peace Corps needs "people who know how to work with their hands." The "great need," he said, "is not for some fellow with a Ph.D . . . but for a fellow who knows how to get out and do something in electricity, carpentry or automobile mechanics."

SLEEPING CAR PORTERS' drive for a shorter work month of 173 hours to meet the 40-hour-a-week standard enjoyed by most of the rest of the labor movement was the overriding topic at the union's triennial convention at Montreal. BSCP Pres. A. Philip Randolph is shown as he addressed the delegates. Seated at his left, behind the microphone, is First Vice Pres. Milton P. Webster.

Rubber Workers Adopt Guidelines for Biennium

Long Beach, Calif.—Guidelines for collective bargaining, organizing and political action for the Rubber Workers in the next two years were spelled out by delegates to the union's week-long convention here.

At the same time the three top officers were re-elected for two-year terms. Re-elected by acclamation were Pres. George Burdon, Vice Pres. Peter Bommarito and Sec.-Treas. Ike Gold. In addition, a 12-man executive board was also elected.

"Our union can hold its head high as a clean and democratic union," Burdon said in his acceptance speech. "And with this image we will grow."

He pledged an all-out push for improvements in working conditions and wages when contracts come up with the major producers of the rubber industry next spring.

Efforts to organize the unorganized will also be intensified, he said.

Delegates adopted a stepped-up political action program which calls for full-scale registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns; establishment of legislative and political education committees in each local; and intensified efforts in the COPE dollar drive.

Victor G. Reuther, head of the Auto Workers Washington office, told the delegates that "the trade union movement will be in jeopardy unless we are successful in organizing and bringing into our ranks white collar and technical employes."

Reuther substituted as a convention speaker for his brother, Walter, UAW president, who was unable to appear because he was in aerospace negotiations. Another scheduled speaker, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, also was forced to cancel because he was involved in the Chicago & North Western Railway negotiations on arbitration.

Pointing to the impact automation has made, Reuther remarked that only 76 percent of employes in the rubber industry are production workers now while in 1947 they made up 81 percent of the work force. He called for active cooperation by American unions with workers in foreign countries.

"Many large corporations in this country now have operations abroad," he said. "And that's why American workers must be interested and concerned about wages and working conditions in other parts of the world.

"These companies which have foreign plants are operating with a combination of modern technology and peon wages. And it's up to the American trade union movement to help these workers win better wages and conditions so that the companies won't be able to use their foreign plants as a club against us in negotiations."

The convention also:

- Adopted a resolution calling for placing a bronze plaque in memory of the late URW Pres. Sherman H. Dalrymple in international headquarters in Akron and the placing of a stone memorial at his grave.
- Called by resolution upon bargaining committees to attempt to negotiate pension improvements for those already retired.
- Took a strong stand in favor of fair employment opportunities and against discrimination of all types.

Rubber Union Gives Childs Scholarships

Long Beach, Calif.—Eight high school students have been named winners of Joseph W. Childs memorial college scholarships given by the Rubber Workers in honor of the union's late vice president, Pres. George Burdon announced during the URW convention here.

A $500 award is given to the child of a union member in each of the union's seven districts, the winners in this country being selected through National Merit Scholarship qualifying tests and, in Canada, on the basis of scholastic records and other data. The awards, made to students entering the final year of high school, are for the college year beginning in the fall of 1963.

In URW Dist. 1 the award was divided when Marilyn J. Anderson, Erie, Pa., and Nancy Kay Sparhawk, Akron, O., emerged from the examinations with identical marks. Other winners:

Edward J. Doherty, Holyoke, Mass.; Jean Marie Seitter, Chicago; Richard Alan Howard, Compton, Calif.; Michael J. Sekerak, Wallington, N. J.; Sam Houston Kernell, Jr., Memphis, Tenn., and Mary Carolyn Lavigne, Waterloo, Ont.

Fire Fighter Heads Seattle MD Group

Seattle, Wash. — Capt. R. H. Canavan, a veteran member of Fire Fighters Local 27, has been elected president of the King County chapter of the Muscular Dystrophy Association,

George Bundy, a retired fireman, is chairman of the association's annual campaign for funds,

Convention Draws Up IUE Contract Demands

Cleveland—The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers have made job and income security a major collective bargaining target in negotiations with the electrical industry next year.

The union's 10th convention adopted a series of resolutions spelling out the problems and the necessary contract improvements needed to secure a workable solution. These include:

- Fifty-two guaranteed pay checks a year on a salary basis with supplemental unemployment benefits up to a total of 70 percent of gross pay until a salary schedule is established.
- A planned reduction to an average 35-hour workweek with no reduction in weekly pay.
- A minimum wage increase of 3.5 percent a year with a minimum of seven cents an hour.
- To complete the job of "having 100 percent full union shop contracts in our industry."
- Improved insurance and health provisions including full payments of benefits by the employer.

The resolution on collective bargaining stressed the need for "unity with other AFL-CIO unions bargaining with the same company" and called for an immediate start on educating "our membership, the public and even the employers on the need for our program and to work consistently to win the support necessary to its achievement."

Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the convention that the UAW would support the IUE in its bargaining with the General Electric Co. so that "you can make GE catch up with the 20th Century." The IUE, he said, can win the union shop from GE and other companies in the industry just as the UAW and the Machinists have won it in the aerospace industry.

He warned the union that only if it is fully united can it "make General Electric say yes when it wants to say no [to bargaining demands]."

Political Action Backed

The convention resoundingly adopted a resolution calling for an all-out effort in the congressional elections to elect candidates who will support medical care for the aged through social security and called for a comprehensive campaign to secure such legislation when the 88th Congress convenes.

A 10-point program to achieve a full employment economy and a detailed foreign policy resolution calling for continuation of "our all-out struggle against the Communists and Soviet efforts at world domination and the destruction of democracy" also won overwhelming approval.

In addition to Reuther, the 682 delegates were addressed by Seth Taft, son of Charles P. Taft and a Republican candidate for the Ohio state legislature who read a speech prepared for the convention by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.) on the unemployment situation.

They also heard a presentation of the American Medical Association's case against medical care for the aged through social security by AMA Pres.-elect Edward R. Annis, and a discussion of civil rights problems by Whitney Young, executive director of the National Urban League.

Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) told the delegates that "equal treatment for corporation executives and working men alike is a bedrock necessity of economic democracy."

The anti-trust laws, he stressed, are "being regarded with winks and knowing smiles as if it were the Volstead Act of the 20s."

The basic question, he said, is one of morality.

"It is not the outstretched palm that forms the greatest threat to a free nation; it is the shrug of the shoulders," he added.

Auto Workers Urge World Ford Council

Detroit—Auto Workers employed by the Ford Motor Co. have endorsed a proposal for an International Council of Ford Workers to cope with new social and economic challenges posed by Ford's worldwide expansion into 32 countries.

Ken Bannon, UAW executive board member-at-large and director of the Ford Dept., said the action came in a resolution adopted unanimously by the union's National Ford Council. The council is made up of delegates from Ford plants across the country.

The resolution noted that Ford has increased its assets to more than $5 billion and described the company as one of a half-dozen which "determine the course of the world automobile industry."

It called on Ford workers throughout the world to strengthen their solidarity by organizing internationally "to enable us to bargain with our employer on the level where key corporation decisions are now made."

Citing the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Intl. Metalworkers Federation as instruments of world-wide trade union progress, the measure endorsed "wholeheartedly" the UAW's effort in the IMF "to bring into being an effective International Council of Ford Workers."

"This," the resolution said, "will enable Ford workers everywhere to join hands to increase organizational efforts, to harmonize wages and working conditions, to exchange information, to sponsor joint education programs, to coordinate bargaining activities, to achieve an international fair labor standard, and to maintain our advance toward our common goals."

Meany Denounces Tax Bill as 'Fraud'

Charges Compromise Misses Reform Goal

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has denounced the tax bill worked out by Senate and House conferees as "a fraud on the American people" and has called on Congress to defeat the measure.

Meany said the bill's only resemblance to the Administration's original tax reform proposals is the "mistaken and regressive . . . investment credit bonanza for business," which labor has opposed from the start.

"There has never been sound reason for that bonanza anyway, and it was acceptable only as part of a tax reform measure," he said in a statement.

In the conference committee "all the true reform proposals have been whittled away," he declared.

Meany sent the text of his statement by telegram to presidents of all AFL-CIO affiliates and state central bodies and asked them to get in touch with local members of Congress immediately to urge defeat of the compromise.

"True tax reform is still a crying need," his statement said. "But obviously that need has not been met or even approached in this bill. . . . We sincerely trust that the new Congress, making a new start in 1963, will evolve a measure that truly serves the national interest. Certainly this bill does not meet that test."

The final version of the bill resembled the emasculated Senate version much more closely than it did the House-passed bill—which the AFL-CIO had supported with the expressed hope that the Senate would strengthen provisions to close tax loopholes, including earnings of American firms abroad and expense account abuses.

Instead the Senate stripped from the House bill the key provision for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income, loosened restrictions on expense account racketeering and sharply weakened taxation of overseas earnings.

In a letter to the conferees, Meany had served notice that the AFL-CIO would urge defeat of the bill if it emerged as "merely a replica" of the Senate version.

To deserve support, he said, the conference bill should include "as a minimum":

- Restoration of withholding taxes on dividends and interest.
- The stronger House language on expense account abuses.
- Extension of taxation of overseas earnings beyond tax havens.

On all three points, the conferees failed to make significant improvements in the Senate bill and Meany declared that "to describe the bill in its current form as 'tax reform' is to perpetuate a fraud on the American people."

While the original Administration tax proposals would have made up most of the loss in revenue from the investment credit provision by closing existing loopholes, the conference bill would result in an estimated revenue loss of $545 million a year.

In other major developments as Congress drove forward adjournment, now expected by Oct. 5:

- Despite solid Republican opposition, the Senate approved and sent to the White House a compromise farm bill which Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman hailed as "a historic step." The bill sets up a new flexible price support program, beginning in 1964.
- Pres. Kennedy signed a bill authorizing construction of electric-generating facilities at the Hanford, Wash., plutonium production plant being built by the Atomic Energy Commission. Noting that the bill allows waste steam from the atomic plant to be used to generate 800,000 kilowatts of electricity, Kennedy expressed "great satisfaction" at the outcome of the long legislative battle.
- The House sent a heavily-slashed foreign aid appropriations bill to the Senate after House Democratic leaders dropped plans to fight for restoration of the $1.1 billion cut made by the Appropriations Committee.

As the Senate committee began consideration of the measure, Kennedy renewed his appeal for a stronger foreign aid program. In a television interview, he termed foreign aid "the best, the cheapest, the safest" way to fight the spread of communism.

- The Senate Judiciary Committee rebuffed its Anti-Trust subcommittee and bailed out a group of steel company executives who had defied a subpena by refusing to cite the steel officials for contempt of Congress.

The Kefauver subcommittee had said the price data was needed in the investigation of the industry's pricing policies, which had been requested by Kennedy at the time U.S. Steel and other industry leaders sought to raise prices. Six Republicans were joined by four southern Democrats in the 10-5 vote to quash the contempt charges.

- The House voted 384-7 for a resolution declaring this nation's determination to resist, with force if necessary, Communist aggression or subversion based in Cuba. The Senate had previously passed the Administration-endorsed declaration 86-1.

City Voters Oust Davis in Georgia Race

Weltner also was the leader, but two minor candidates polled enough votes to force a runoff.

Davis abandoned open segregationist appeals both here and in Washington, but Atlanta Negroes voted in exceptional numbers and apparently gave Weltner, campaigning as a moderate, his victory margin.

When Davis was found trailing in the first primary, full-page advertisements and radio-television appeals urging his renomination were sponsored by businessmen.

The veteran's voting record revealed him as one of the hard-core conservatives of the South on economic as well as racial issues. On the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education voting charts, he is listed as having had only eight correct votes against 33 wrong on key House rollcalls in the 14 years from 1947 to 1960.

Weltner will face Republican James O'Callaghan in the November general election, but is expected to win without difficulty.

Elsewhere in Georgia Democratic runoff primaries, J. Russell Tuten defeated Country Johnston for nomination for the House vacancy created by the retirement of Rep. Iris Blitch. A former statehouse aide, Zack Geer, beat Lester Maddox, a restaurant owner, for nomination as lieutenant governor.

AFL-CIO CHECK for $5,000 to support the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation's program to help increase food production and improve nutrition in the developing nations is presented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Harry W. Edwards, left, executive director of the privately-financed, non-profit foundation. The program is part of a five-year campaign by the Food & Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

$5,000 Given to Aid UN Attack on Hunger

The AFL-CIO has donated $5,000 to a worldwide drive aimed at eliminating hunger and malnutrition and has urged affiliated unions to join in supporting the work of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, a privately-financed group set up to cooperate with the United Nations Food & Agriculture Organization.

Executive Dir. Harry W. Edwards, who received the check from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, said the freedom from hunger campaign has as its goal the "permanent removal" of inadequate nutrition from the human scene rather than merely temporary relief of hunger.

Money will be used for projects pinpointed by the UN agency, with an emphasis on agricultural research, training, development of cooperatives and other self-help programs. Similar non-governmental "people-to-people" organizations have been set up by other nations with agricultural resources and knowledge to share with developing nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The foundation is headed by Farmers Union Pres. James G. Patton, and former Pres. Harry S. Truman is honorary chairman. Officers and trustees have been drawn from leaders in business, labor, agriculture and public life.

Program Endorsed

The AFL-CIO Executive Council at its August meeting strongly endorsed the program in the following statement:

"The Food & Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has initiated a five-year Freedom from Hunger Campaign on a worldwide basis. This program has, as its purpose, the promotion of support for research, educational and developmental projects designed to improve agricultural production and distribution in those large areas of the world where the majority of people do not have enough to eat.

"As the instrument of United States participation in this important program, the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, Inc., has been established. This non-profit, non-governmental organization relies entirely upon the voluntary support and contributions of private groups, organizations and individuals. It is now engaged in a national campaign to extend its base of support and to find sponsors for both general and specific projects that have been studied and recommended by the Food and Agriculture Organization.

"The AFL-CIO strongly endorses the program and objectives of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation and urges its affiliated organizations and members to give all possible support to its campaign against hunger and malnutrition in the underprivileged areas of the world."

Cleveland Musicians End Separate Locals

Cleveland, O.—Musicians Local 4 will be reunited with 200 members who left in 1910 to form a separate local for Negroes. A merger agreement, effective Oct. 1, was signed recently by Pres. Lee Repp of Local 4 and Pres. W. Franklin Simpson of Local 550.

Rwanda Becomes Member of ILO

Geneva—The African Republic of Rwanda became a member of the Intl. Labor Organization at the same time it was admitted to the United Nations, ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse has announced.

Minister of Social Affairs T. Bagaragaza of the newly-independent nation asked that the two admissions take place simultaneously in advising the ILO of his government's formal acceptance of the ILO's constitutional obligations.

He specified further that Rwanda remain bound by the obligations of the 15 ILO conventions ratified by Belgium before the liberation and made applicable to the territory of Ruanda-Urundi. The ILO now has 103 member-states.

cent increase in the consumer price index.

The Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee tacked the pay raise legislation on a postage rate increase bill which the House had passed last year. This will permit the combined measure to go immediately to House-Senate conference, where the Senate pay provisions are expected to be accepted There was a possibility the House might adopt the Senate amendments without going to conference.

Both the House and the Senate raised first class letter postage from 4 to 5 cents, air mail from 7 to 8 cents, and post cards from 3 to 4 cents. The two houses differed, however, on a number of rate changes affecting second class and third class mail.

There will be no increase in the postage costs of newspapers published by non-profit organizations, including unions and churches. The Senate committee bill would have raised the minimum postage per piece from the present one-eighth of a cent to one-fourth of a cent. This increase was deleted on the Senate floor on an amendment introduced by Sen. John Carroll (D-Colo.).

A major feature of the Senate-passed government pay raise is a provision for annual salary reviews based on nationwide surveys by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of salaries in private employment.

Pres. Kennedy, in sending his pay reform proposal to Congress early this year, stressed the Administration's long-range goal of "comparability" of government salary scales with pay rates in private industry. He pointed out that government pay, especially for executives, scientific and other professional employes, had fallen considerably behind private employment.

Meany On Committee

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, a member of a special presidential commission which considered government pay policies, concurred in recommendations for higher level pay raises but challenged the adequacy of the increases recommended for postal workers and other low-paid employes.

1,000 Areas Eligible For Works Projects

The Area Redevelopment Administration has estimated that 1,069 areas in the United States and its territories already are eligible for projects under the recently enacted accelerated public works program.

ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., who will coordinate the new program, said the total includes areas already under the ARA program, plus a number of others with relatively continuous substantial unemployment.

Jobless Rate 'Hangs High' —5.8 Percent in September

'Getaway' Fever Hits Congress

By David L. Perlman

Long-stalled Administration "must" bills began moving to the White House as Congress cleared its agenda in the hope of a quick adjournment.

The trade expansion bill, a two-step "catch-up" pay raise for government workers, drug safety legislation and a series of multi-billion dollar appropriations bills were either on the President's desk or seemed nearing final passage as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

In a signed editorial in the AFL-CIO American Federationist, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany calls on voters to "prove again" that they endorse the Kennedy program to "move the country forward" by electing candidates who support that program. (See full text of editorial, Page 6.)

A labor-backed equal-pay-for-women bill—once written off by most observers—was brought back to life by the Senate, though its ultimate fate still was uncertain. Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.), unable to pry the House-passed bill out of a Senate committe pigeonhole, successfully maneuvered its acceptance by the Senate as an amendment to an unrelated House bill.

Both houses gave final approval to a labor-opposed tax revision bill which had Administration support

Tips Under Social Security:

Hotel Workers Get Raise, Cut in Hours

New York—This city's 35,000 hotel workers have won a new five-year contract containing higher wages, shorter hours, and other important benefits including a proposed new method for putting workers who get part of their wages from tips under social security.

Believed unique is an agreement that for workers who depend on tips, the 185 hotels in the city's hotel association will pay half the social security tax on an assumed wage and tip income of $70 a week starting next June 1, pending approval of the plan by federal agencies. If the plan should be disapproved, the money will go into a trust fund to pay higher pensions or welfare benefits.

The new pact covering 10 locals of eight international unions, calls for wage increases in 1962 and 1963; shortening of the workweek to 35 hours for all workers except tip employes in lieu of a wage boost in 1964; and another salary hike in 1965. The contract also provides for a reopening on wages and hours in 1966.

Negotiations extending over an eight-month period were marked by a citywide referendum in which 22,000 workers voted to take a stand on uniform goals; a tentative agreement among negotiators which later was rejected by management trustees; and union dem-

13 Weeks of Vacation Won In Can Plants

Miami Beach, Fla.—The Steelworkers took a long stride towards shorter hours in new contracts negotiated here covering 32,000 employes of the nation's two largest can companies.

In a major employment security move, the agreements provide a 13-week vacation every five years for emloyes with 15 or more years' service at the American Can Co. and the Continental Can Co. More than 15,000 USWA members will be immediately eligible when the program goes into effect in 1964.

Pensions Hiked

The two-year contracts concentrate nearly all of the union's gains in the area of job and income security. In addition to vacation improvements, higher benefits are provided both for employes who retire under the regular pension program and those who retire early because of plant shutdowns or extended layoffs.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald termed the agreements "an unprecedented breakthrough . . . in the direction of providing the job and income security" needed for the nation's economic growth.

He praised management of the

Weary Legislators Set To Hit Campaign Trail

By Willard Shelton

Weary members of Congress, welcoming the prospect of adjournment after nine hectic months in Washington, prepared to head for their home states and one of the shortest political campaigns on record.

With the mood of the voters uncertain, and with only four weeks before the Nov. 6 elections, the legislators faced the prospect of hard, driving compaigns that would elect:

- 435 members of the House (a reduction of two from the temporary total of 437 created with admission of Hawaii and Alaska to statehood).
- 39 members of the Senate.
- 35 governors.

Jobs Drop More Than Seasonally

By Saul Miller

Persistent, high-level unemployment continued in September as the jobless rate remained unchanged at 5.8 percent of the labor force.

An increase in unemployment rates for adult women and teenagers and a larger than seasonal drop in employment were the major factors in the Labor Dept.'s monthly report.

Unemployment declined seasonally from August to September by 400,000, bringing the total jobless to 3.5 million, but the drop was not large enough to reduce the seasonally adjusted rate.

Seymour Wolfbein, the Labor Dept. manpower expert, said that while the 400,000 drop in unemployment and the decline in the long-term unemployed was encouraging, the jobless rate "hangs high at 5.8 percent."

In answer to a question, he said that if the rate of unemployment remains at 5.8 percent in Jan. 1963, the number of unemployed is anticipated at 4.7 million.

A breakdown of the 3.5 million unemployed in September showed that adult women and teenagers constituted more than half the total.

The jobless rate throughout 1962 has averaged about 5.5 percent of the labor force. It moved from 5.3 to 5.8 last month, the sharpest rise in 20 months.

The rate for the adult men in September dropped from 4.9 percent to 4.6 percent, but the rate for adult women moved upward from 5.8 to 6.1 percent and the rate for teenagers rose from 12.2 to 13.2 percent.

Job Total Drops

Total employment declined 1.1 million to 68.6 million. The usual seasonal decline is about 800,000. The Labor Dept. ascribed this drop to the "unusually large numbers of teenagers (who) left temporary summer jobs to return to school."

There was no appreciable change in persons unemployed 15 weeks or longer (906,000) but the number hunting jobs for 27 weeks or longer dropped from 593,000 in August to 477,000 in September. The September drop marked the first time in two years that those unemployed for 27 weeks or longer moved below 500,000.

Among the employed in September were 2.2 million non-farm

Job Displacement Benefits Won By Telegraphers in C&NW Strike

Job security protection in the form of cash allowances for workers displaced or "bumped" from their jobs has been won by the Railroad Telegraphers in an agreement on terms for ending a 30-day strike against the Chicago & North Western Railway.

Four job security issues on which no agreement was reached in negotiations were submitted for final and binding decision to three arbitrators slated to report Oct. 8. They are Sylvester Garrett, an attorney and arbitrator, ORT Pres. G. E. Leighty, and C&NW Board Chairman Ben W. Heineman.

The settlement, climaxing a five-year struggle by the rail union for protection against what it termed "job slaughter," went into effect only after "back to work" agreements had been negotiated by the C&NW with unions representing 15,500 other workers who had respected picket lines since the strike started Aug. 30.

Leighty said the Telegraphers cannot make a judgment on whether their struggle for job protection was successful until the arbiters have disposed of the four unsettled issues.

"But one thing we do finally have—a legally binding agreement on job security with Mr. Heineman," he said.

"This new agreement has been won by the united efforts of our striking members, backed by the solid sympathy of the other employes. They have never faltered."

The pact provides:

- Employes transferred because of permanent abolition of a position shall have a five-year guarantee that pay and working conditions are at least as good as before the transfer. If the new job is a lower-rated one, a displacement allowance will be paid.
- Workers whose jobs have been permanently abolished shall receive a furlough allowance equal to 60 percent of recent average earnings, to be paid for periods ranging from two to 60 months, based on seniority.
- Instead of a furlough allowance, workers may elect to take a lump sum separation or severance allowance to a top of 12 months after five years or more of seniority.
- All these provisions are retroactive to Jan. 22, 1958, "to the extent they can properly be applied retroactively."

Submitted to arbitration were issues involving the length of management's advance notice to the union if it decides to discontinue any position; how retroactivity shall be applied; rules governing a 40-hour work week guarantee for "extra board" men; and recommendations on pending ORT grievance claims against the C&NW.

Other rail developments:

The Railroad Trainmen, which had set 6 a. m. Oct. 5 as deadline for a strike of 2,500 members against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, agreed to call off the walkout during mediation by the National Mediation Board.

In Chicago, a U.S. District Court judge overruled BRT objections and issued a "no strike" order to run at least 20 days on the Santa Fe Railway, where work rules are in dispute.

Also in Chicago, chief executives of nine railroads formed a central committee to handle all labor relations with J. E. Wolfe, veteran negotiator, as head of the new National Railway Labor Conference. The roads are the New York Central, Pennsylvania, Delaware & Hudson, Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard Air Line, Chesapeake & Ohio, Illinois Central, Santa Fe, and C&NW.

10.2-Cent Hike Averts Strike By OCAW

Chicago, Ill.—Agreement on wage and fringe benefit improvements valued at 10.2 cents an hour has averted a strike by 4,800 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers at four major plants of the Corn Products Refining Co.

In anticipation of the scheduled walkout, the company had already shut down plants in Argo and Pekin, Ill.; Kansas City, Mo., and Corpus Christi, Tex., when the agreement was reached.

Terms of the settlement, announced here by OCAW Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer and Fenton W. Holm, the company's industrial relations manager, include a direct wage increase of 8.5 cents an hour, improved vacations and sick leave, and optional retirement at age 62. The two-year contract will be reopenable at midterm for further wage negotiations.

A day earlier, the union also reached agreement on renewal of its contract covering 800 employes of American Maize Products Co., Hammond, Ind., with gains totaling 10 cents an hour.

The two companies are major producers in the "wet milling" industry, which refines vegetable oil products from corn.

Chain Unit Rule Revised By NLRB

The National Labor Relations Board has revised a 14-year-old rule preventing unions from organizing only one store in a retail chain and requiring statewide or divisionwide units

Four board members approved the petition of Retail Clerks Local 1262 for an election at the Edison, N. J., store of Save-On Drugs, Inc., a wholly owned subdivision of the Kroger Co. Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented.

The employer opposed a one-store election arguing that the proper unit should take in all appropriate employes in nine New Jersey and New York stores, or all Save-On stores in New Jersey.

The majority upheld the union, applying to retail chain operations the same policy that covers multi-store enterprises in general. Experience has shown, the majority said, that the old policy frequently impeded the rights of retail chain employes to the self-organization guaranteed by the law. Future policy will be determined in the light of specific facts in each case, it said.

In the Save-On case, the board listed these factors in support of a one-store unit: geographic separation of the Edison store from other stores in the chain; substantial authority centered in the store manager; minimal interchange of employes with other stores; the absence of a bargaining history for any of the employes; the fact that no labor organization is seeking to represent employes on a broader basis.

By Referendum Vote:

New York Teachers Ratify First Contract

New York—Teachers in New York City schools have voted, 8,698 to 920, to approve the first contract agreement ever negotiated by their union and the city's Board of Education.

The referendum results were hailed by the United Federation of Teachers as a "vote of confidence" in the union and the negotiators who led the long fight for a single bargaining agent offering contract protection for all 40,000 teaching employes.

"We hope the School Board will ratify the contract speedily so its terms can be put into effect without delay," said Al Shanker, union secretary and assistant to Pres. Charles Cogen.

The next step for the union will be to begin preparation for next year's contract negotiations, Shanker said.

The referendum was conducted by the union among all its members and ballots were counted publicly at UFT headquarters.

The new contract is a seven-page document agreed to in eight months of bargaining. It provides a salary schedule ranging from $5,300 a year for beginning teachers to $10,445 after 15 or more years of experience, providing raises for all educational department employes.

Other benefits include exclusive representation rights for the union, and an agreement that more teachers and teaching aides will be employed to reduce the teaching load and to free teachers of clerical and "police" chores. It adds improvements in death benefits, sick pay, and other benefits.

The contract contains a no-strike clause which expires next June 30.

The UFT won the right to represent all teaching employes in a citywide referendum last December by a vote of 20,045 for UFT to 9,770 for the hurriedly-formed Teachers Bargaining Organization, 2,575 for the Teachers Union of New York, unaffiliated, and 662 for no union.

In one of the nation's biggest bargaining elections in many years, more than 33,000 teachers cast ballots. More than 60 percent of the voters picked the UFT.

The victory climaxed several years of struggle to weld all teacher groups into one strong unit. The period of struggle included two brief walkouts by union teachers.

Pilots Settle Strike At Southern Airways

The Air Line Pilots have ended a 27-month strike against Southern Airways and signed a new agreement under which 140 strikers will be recalled to duty without discrimination or penalty.

The settlement was hailed by the ALPA as a "very good" conclusion. Southern pilots struck June 5, 1960, over contract terms. They reached agreement the following month on economic issues, but the walkout continued because management insisted on "super seniority" for non-strikers.

Under the settlement 22 pilots have been called back for retraining, required by aviation laws, and the others will be recalled in order of seniority. Wage increases and other improvements previously agreed to are included in the pact, which also calls for retention of seniority and sick leave rights for the strike period. All strikers not restored to flying status within 180 days are entitled to draw their base pay.

The settlement followed a Civil Aeronautics Board order requiring Southern to offer reinstatement with full seniority to the strikers and to bargain in good faith with the union.

Settlement of two other disputes also was reached by the Pilots—with Trans World Airlines and Pan American World Airways—in line with procedures recommended by Pres. Kennedy and former Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg for agreement on disputed contract issues, including the makeup of jet plane crews.

In the TWA settlement Dr. Nathan P. Feinsinger, named to assist, announced that agreement has been reached by both the Pilots and Flight Engineers.

The parties agreed in collective bargaining on this formula for settling the crew complement issue:

- Flight engineers who become qualified as pilots will have first right to bid for the third crewman's position on turbojet aircraft, and also for pilot or copilot positions.
- In the future all jobs including that of the third crewman will be filled by pilots, who shall be given job and pay protection.
- Ultimately all crewmen will be members of the same union and talks toward that end shall continue.

The pilots struck TWA briefly last May and won an 8 percent retroactive pay raise and other benefits for some 1,200 employes but negotiations continued over management's proposed reduction of cockpit crews. A disputed point was whether pilots or flight engineers should fly as third crewmen.

ALPA said the agreement with Pan American covered pay rules, working conditions and crew complement. The Flight Engineers have not settled with the airline.

NLRB Applies Interest Rule On Pay Cut

The National Labor Relations Board has applied its new 6 percent interest rule to an employer who refused to bargain with a union and unilaterally cut the pay and changed the working hours of four employes.

In a 4-1 vote the board ordered the Continental Bus System, Inc., to halt its refusal to bargain with Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes Local 1468, representing bus terminal employes in Grand Junction, Colo.; to revoke pay and hour cuts put into effect in September 1961; and to reimburse four workers for loss of pay since that time, plus interest at 6 percent.

The ruling was the third this year in which the board has reversed previous policies in the back pay area.

In May it began ordering full reimbursement of employes in cases where a trial examiner had found no unfair practices but later was reversed by the board. The second ruling last week, also in a discharge case, added 6 percent interest to the penalty on grounds of equity. The latest decision was reached with only Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting.

Subject to Ratification:

UAW, Kohler Sign Contract; Some Issues Still in NLRB

Kohler, Wis.—For the first time in nearly nine years, Kohler Co. workers will have the protection of a union contract.

The company, whose name had become synonymous with union-breaking during bitter struggles on the picket lines and in the courts, reached agreement with the Auto Workers on a one-year contract covering some 3,000 production workers—including both veterans of the UAW strike and the replacements hired by the company in an effort to break the walkout.

The agreement, which is subject to ratification by UAW members on Oct. 7, was hammered out during 24 days of bargaining. Company negotiators returned to the bargaining table after the U.S. Supreme Court last June refused to review a decision holding the firm guilty of unfair practices and ordering reinstatement with back pay for most of the strikers.

Details of the settlement were withheld until the ratification.

While the strike began on Apr. 5, 1954, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia found that the Kohler dispute had its roots in "the employer's antecedent unfair labor practices." These dated to the early 1930's when Kohler set up a company-dominated union and met with tear gas and the use of the state militia an organizing drive by a former AFL directly-chartered federal labor union.

A National Labor Relations Board decision, which the court upheld, found that the strike had been converted from an economic strike to an unfair practices strike in June 1954, when the company granted a wage increase to strikebreakers superior to the "take it or leave it" proposal it had made to the union.

Therefore, the NLRB said, the strikers were entitled to reinstatement except for 77 it found had engaged in "misconduct."

The appellate court upheld the basic NLRB decision, but went further and ordered the labor board to reconsider its findings on the 77 denied reinstatement in view of the company's long past history of anti-union provocations.

This issue is still pending before the board and the NLRB general counsel has urged it to order reinstatement of the dismissed workers.

Final Two Years In Courts

Four years of hearings preceded the NLRB's finding on Sept. 1, 1960. Then came the court review and the appeal to the Supreme Court before the legal issues had been finally resolved.

Earlier, during 1958, the strike became a political issue as Republican members of the McClellan special Senate subcommittee engaged in a partisan effort to pin the blame for disorder on the picket lines and in the community on the UAW.

Testimony by committee staff investigators revealed that shortly after the UAW was chosen bargaining representative at Kohler, the company stocked an arsenal of machine guns, tear gas and other weapons.

Throughout the dispute, union members over the nation backed the Kohler strikers with a boycott of Kohler plumbing and bathroom fixtures.

Despite the length and tension of the dispute, UAW officials declared after the Supreme Court had cleared the way for renewed negotiations that the union hoped "the bitterness of the past can be released by a positive, constructive and responsible relationship as we face the future."

Can Contracts Set Up 13 Weeks of Vacation

two companies for joining with the union "in a new phase of industrial pioneering." Noting that the agreement was reached "without outside pressures of any sort," McDonald commented:

"This was free collective bargaining in its truest sense."

The only wage feature of the contract eliminated what the union termed "the last vestige of the so-called Canadian differential" in Continental Can plants and provided increases averaging 30 cents an hour to reduce the wage differential in Puerto Rico.

Regular Vacations Bettered

In addition to the extended vacation every five years, employes with 10 years of service get regular annual vacations increased from two and one-half weeks to three weeks. The regular vacation is included in the 13-week provision, providing an additional 10 weeks every fifth year for those with 15 years of service.

Employes who retire before the extended vacation provision goes into effect on Jan. 1, 1964, will receive a special retirement allowance equal to either nine or 10 weeks additional pay, depending on the date of retirement. This will be addition to the 13-week retirement benefit contained in present contracts and continued in the new agreements.

Regular company pensions will be raised by increasing the previous formula of $2.75 per month for each year of service to $3.25 per month. Early retirement benefits because of shutdowns or layoffs are raised to $5 per month for each year of service until the retiree receives full social security payments.

Other contract gains include:

- A full year of hospital care under the non-contributory insurance program compared with a previous ceiling of 120 days.
- Doubled sickness and accident benefits, raising the maximum benefit period from 26 weeks to 52 weeks, with a $6 increase in average weekly payments.
- Improvements in supplemental unemployment benefits equal to those negotiated in basic steel contracts last spring.

Negotiations with the two companies got under way in late August and were resumed Sept. 24 in Miami Beach at the close of the USWA convention.

McDonald served as general chairman for the separate but concurrent negotiations, with USWA Dist. 30 Dir. James Robb heading the Continental Can talks and Dist. 25 Dir. Albert Whitehouse in charge of the American Can negotiations.

The final agreements were reached on Sept. 30, a few hours before the old contracts expired.

McDonald predicted that the new contracts "will have far-reaching future significance in demonstrating that there is no barrier to social progress where there is a sense of mutual responsibility among principals at the collective bargaining table."

Aerojet Strike Parley Moved to Washington

Talks aimed at settling a strike of 9,000 members of the Machinists at West Coast plants of the Aerojet-General Corp. moved to Washington as Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz called union and management negotiators to meet with him.

Two IAM locals—Lodge 946 at Sacramento and Lodge 1893 at Azusa, Calif.—voted to reject management proposals for changes in contracts that expired May 28. Members said they are entitled to a better economic "package" than one offered by other aerospace employers because their contract already contains the union shop, a major objective of other union locals.

Wirtz urged an end to the strike, saying Aerojet production of missile components is "absolutely essential" to national defense. Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara also urged a quick settlement. He said any delay would be "intolerable."

Efforts to settle the walkout came as contract talks continued between IAM representatives and management of Boeing and Lockheed aircraft firms. A presidential board headed by Saul Wallen is due to submit recommendations for a Boeing settlement by Oct. 15.

Issues at Lockheed and Boeing include the union shop, wages, and improved layoff, promotion and recall language. The Lockheed contract has been extended indefinitely while talks continue.

In Paterson, N. J., members of two Auto Workers' locals rejected company contract proposals and voted to give a 40-day strike notice to the Curtiss-Wright Corp.

7 Oil Workers Get $53.92 Each in Dispute

Memphis, Tenn.—Seven members of Local 3-631 of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers will receive $53.92 each as the result of settlement of a job dispute at the Delta Refining Co.

AFTRA, TV Station Settle in New York

New York — The Television & Radio Artists have reached a contract agreement to settle a 13-day strike at WNDT, new educational television station.

The agreement includes a provision that an election will be held in six months to determine whether AFTRA shall represent non-professional performers, not including classroom teachers who are covered by a contract between the United Federation of Teachers and the New York City Board of Education.

The station went on the air Sept. 16 for its first telecast but stopped broadcasting until a setttlement was reached.

Wilson (center), chief of the AID Industrial Techniques Training Branch, to Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis (right) of the department. At left is Edward H. Pay Raise, Cut in Hours Won by Hotel Workers

onstrations at 21 major hotels that brought a change of heart by the employer group.

The new agreement was ratified by the wage policy committee of the AFL-CIO Hotel Trades Council, representing the 10 locals involved, and was signed by Council Pres. Jay Rubin and employer officials in the office of Prof. Herman A. Gray, the hotel industry's acting disputes chairman.

Workers in mechanical departments will get $3.50 weekly raises retroactive to June 1, 1962, and similar increases in 1963, 1964 and 1965. They won the 35-hour week on June 1, 1960, under a previous agreement.

Cooks and bartenders also won a $3.50 increase for 1962 and 1963. They will go on 35 hours starting June 1, 1964, in place of the present 40-hour week, at the same base pay. In 1965 their wages go up by another $3.50.

Other groups of workers will get increases ranging from $2 to $2.50 this year, similar amounts in 1963 and 1965, and will go on the 35-hour week in 1964.

Tip employes will remain on the 40-hour week for the term of the contract but will get pay increases in each of the next four years in addition to their new social security or pension-welfare status.

The decision to inaugurate the 35-hour week in 1964 will benefit 23,000 additional workers, Rubin said. The pact covers members of Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 6; two locals of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Operating Engineers Local 94; Building Service Employes Local 144; Firemen & Oilers Local 56; and locals of the Office Employes, Painters and Upholsterers.

AFL-CIO unions have tried for several years to get social security benefits for tip workers but Treasury officials customarily took the position that there is no effective way to verify tip income, according to hotel workers. Tips are taxed as income but have not been treated as part of wages covered by social security laws.

Kennedy Invokes T-H In ILA Dock Strike

Pres. Kennedy moved to end a walkout of 75,000 East Coast dockworkers by instructing the attorney general to apply for a Taft-Hartley injunction ordering the strikers back to work.

The President used his strike-stopping powers to bring about an 80-day "cooling off" period after a report by a fact-finding board said neither side has "engaged in productive bargaining" and that the issues are "difficult but not insoluble."

ILA members walked out at midnight Oct. 1 after failing to get acceptable terms for a new contract from members of the New York Shippers Association and other employer groups. Other maritime unions respected their picket lines in East and Gulf Coast ports.

A key issue is the size of dock crews. The employers demand contract provisions involving worker productivity and reduction in the size of crews, now averaging 20 men. The union has opposed job-destroying measures without adequate protection for displaced workers.

Executive Vice Pres. T. W. "Teddy" Gleason of the ILA said the union will argue against imposition of a T-H injunction but will cooperate with the President in all reasonable efforts to settle the dispute.

The union will not agree to any loss of jobs without proper indemnity for those whose jobs are destroyed, he said.

Gleason said "we're locked out because of the machinations of the shipping associations," and added that "the operators have always figured the government was going to bail them out" in negotiations.

"The only time we become vital to the country is when we're going on strike," he said.

Pressmen Induct Vice President

Pressmen's Home, Tenn.—Former Pres. Clarence G. Schroeder of Detroit Local 2 has been sworn in here as a vice president of the Printing Pressmen & Assistants.

Schroeder was elected in a referendum to fill out the unexpired term of Alexander J. Rohan, who recently became secretary-treasurer of the union. He has been a member of the union since 1923, president of Local 2 since 1956 and a full-time union representative since Jan. 1, 1961.

MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT & TRAINING Advisory Committee meets with Pres. Kennedy, Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, Health, Education & Welfare Sec. A. J. Celebrezze, and, at Kennedy's left, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. Labor representatives on the 10-member committee are Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, next to Wirtz, and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, the latter of whom was unable to be present. Other members of the group are Chairman Eli Ginzberg, Columbia University; William G. Caples, vice president of Inland Steel Co.; Felix Larkin, executive vice president of W. R. Grace & Co.; William H. Nicholls, Vanderbilt University; Mrs. Louise G. Daugherty, superintendent of Chicago School District No. 11; M. D. Mobley, executive secretary of the American Vocational Association, Inc.; Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr. of Atlanta; Upshur Evans, president of the Cleveland Development Foundation.

Kennedy Tells Advisers:

Training Act 'Potent Tool' in War for Jobs

The Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962 is "a potent tool" for use against unemployment and for the promotion of a highly skilled labor force, Pres. Kennedy told the 10-member National Advisory Committee recently appointed under the act.

The President greeted committee members personally following their first meeting. They had been sworn in earlier by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

Labor representatives are Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fittres and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers. Both are AFL-CIO vice presidents.

Kennedy described the act as "one of the most important measures ever passed by Congress to foster the nation's technological development, strengthen our domestic prosperity and maintain our position of leadership in the world."

It "attacks one of the basic causes of long-term unemployment," encourages "sound manpower planning based on research," and will help "eliminate waste of our human resources," the President said.

The first major legislation enacted by the current session of Congress, the act represents a large-scale federal effort to salvage manpower lost to the nation through automation, technological change and inadequate education.

It had the solid support of organized labor and was a key element of broad-ranging proposals by the 1961 AFL-CIO convention to cope with increasing displacement of jobs by machines.

Heart of the act is a three-year program of training and retraining financed by $435 million in federal funds, plus matching state grants in the third year.

Unemployed heads of households are the chief beneficiaries. If qualified for retraining in skills for which there is a demand, they will be eligible for up to a year of school or on-the-job training and for subsistence payments keyed to state unemployment insurance benefits. Lesser subsistence amounts would be given on-the-job trainees who earn some wages and to youths of 19-21, for whom up to 5 percent of the appropriation is earmarked.

The act, which took effect last July 1, has already led to the initiation of 138 training programs in 20 states.

The role of the advisory committee under the act is to aid in the establishment of labor-management-public committees at plant, community, regional or industry levels and to provide assistance to such groups as well as to established organizations in the field of manpower training and research.

Named to head the committee was Eli Ginzberg, director of the Conservation of Human Resources Project at Columbia University.

Other members, besides Schoemann and Beirne, are William G. Caples, vice president of Inland Steel Co.; Felix E. Larkin, executive vice president of W. R. Grace & Co.; William H. Nicholls, chairman of the Economics Dept. at Vanderbilt University.

Also, Mrs. Louise G. Daugherty, superintendent of Chicago School District No. 11; M. D. Mobley, executive secretary of the American Vocational Association; Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., of Atlanta; Upshur Evans, president of the Cleveland Development Foundation.

Curb Asked for Nations In Soviet-Cuba Shuttle

Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, testifying before the House Select Committee on Export Controls, vigorously urged the U.S. government to cut off cargoes it controls from ships of nations whose merchant fleets are carrying Soviet military supplies to Cuba.

Curran said the Cuban situation had made clear "the folly" of government policies since the Korean war which he said have encouraged the buildup of a huge fleet of "runaway flag" vessels controlled largely by U.S. financial interests but sailing under foreign registry, to the detriment of the American flag merchant marine.

"Ships flying these 'runaway flags' have been part of the Soviet shuttle to Cuba," he declared. "Some of the ships in that traffic were built in the U.S. and were transferred out of U.S. jurisdiction to one of the 'runaway' flags, although now by subsequent transfers they may be under some other registry."

In other testimony before the committee, headed by Rep. A. Paul Kitchin (D-N.C.), Executive Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. said Congress should ask the President to "apply economic pressure," including the suspension of U.S. aid if necessary, on any country building merchant ships for the Soviet Union.

Under Construction

McGavin said 23 Russian tankers are under construction in Yugoslavia, 18 in Japan, 6 in Italy and others in Sweden, Denmark and West Germany.

Curran in his testimony called for immediate federal action to:

- Halt the transfer of American-built ships to foreign registry.
- Strengthen the cargo preference laws to assure American ships "a fair share of American cargoes."
- Build a merchant fleet for the nation "which befits its position of world leadership and its worldwide responsibilities."

World Boycott Urged

Curran earlier had appealed for a worldwide boycott by free world merchant seamen and longshoremen against manning and loading ships taking part in the Soviet-Cuba traffic. He urged an emergency meeting of the seafarers and dockers sections of the International Transportworkers Federation to organize such a boycott.

The NMU called off picketing of a West German ship in Corpus Christi, Tex., when the German embassy assured the union and the State Dept. that its government was acting to "practically exclude" shipments of objectionable cargoes to Cuba.

So far, only West Germany and Turkey have heeded U.S. pleas to NATO nations to restrict their ships from the Soviet-Cuba trade.

Port Unions Seek to Bar Red Bloc Ships

Houston—Unions affiliated with the West Gulf Ports Council of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. tied up a Yugoslav freighter, protesting against use of ships involved in Communist bloc trade carrying U.S. government sponsored cargoes.

The Gulf Council's picket lines were respected by members of the Intl. Longshoremen's Association, the Inland Boatman's Union of the Seafarers and the Masters, Mates & Pilots.

The Yugoslav ship Drzic had carried Russian grain to Cuba and had arrived in Havana to pick up 13,000 tons of flour for the United Arab Republic under the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture's surplus commodity program.

SIU Port Agent Paul Drozak said that the MTD unions were concerned over the movement of U.S. aid cargoes by foreign flag ships, particularly those which have engaged in Communist trade, when U.S. flag ships and seamen are idle.

The port council has requested the President and the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce to halt the loading of the Yugoslav ship.

5 Honored for Aid In Training Plans

Providence—Five labor and industry representatives received certificates at a ceremony here for cooperation with the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training in promoting training programs. Those honored were:

Pres. Thomas F. Policastro and Sec.-Treas. Edwin C. Brown of the Rhode Island State AFL-CIO; Pres. Jerome Kearney, Rhode Island Building & Construction Trades Council; Chairman Joseph P. Cuddigan, Plumbers Joint Apprenticeship Committee; and Chairman George R. Frankovich, Rhode Island Apprenticeship Committee.

State Supervisor Edward L. Fleming of the bureau expressed thanks for industry and labor cooperation in skilled trades training.

3 Union Aides To Speak on College of Air

Three representatives of labor organizations are among the 53 guest speakers, including President Kennedy, who will appear on the College of the Air on the CBS television network and a number of educational TV stations.

The 32-week credit course on "The American Economy" will present Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers on Lesson No. 107, Union Goals. Guest lecturer on Lesson No. 111, Do Unions Breed Inflation? will be Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

The program started Sept. 24 and is shown five days a week at 6:30 a. m. with Dr. John R. Coleman of the Carnegie Institute of Technology as teacher.

NLRB Jurisdiction Over 'Runaway' U.S. Shipping Backed by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has asked the Supreme Court to uphold a National Labor Relations Board ruling that seamen on an American-owned and controlled vessel flying a foreign "flag of convenience" are entitled to protection of U.S. labor laws.

In a brief supporting an appeal by the National Maritime Union and the NLRB from an adverse lower court decision, the AFL-CIO said the regulatory power of Congress over American commerce cannot be evaded "by the change of an ensign on a fantail."

At issue is whether seamen on a fleet of "banana boats" operated by a subsidiary of United Fruit Co. will have the right to vote for their choice of collective bargaining representative in an election sought by the NMU.

The NLRB had ordered an election in 1961 after finding that the United Fruit "runaway" fleet is in fact substantially a part of U.S. commerce, even though flying the flag of Hondurus, and therefore should be subject to U.S. labor laws.

United Fruit and a Honduran union which the NMU has labeled a "company union" filed a series of court actions to block the election, and the case wound its way up to the Supreme Court. At the lower court level, the State Dept. backed the position taken by United Fruit Co. and the Honduran government's protest against the NLRB assumption of jurisdiction.

In its "friend of the court" brief, the AFL-CIO pointed out that "the NLRB is not violating international or maritime doctrine . . . because the board has expressly recognized that the foreign-flag ship over which jurisdiction is exercised retains its foreign nationality, just as does a resident alien in a bargaining unit in a Detroit automobile plant."

Declaring that the NLRB's order of an election is not normally subject to court review, the AFL-CIO brief added:

"If congressional labor policy interferes with what certain executive departments of the government have become convinced is sound as a matter of defense and foreign policy, that is something for them to take up with Congress, not with this court."

The State Dept.'s attitude toward flags of convenience, the AFL-CIO said, "appears to bear more the earmarks of international politics than of international jurisprudence."

Historic congressional policy, the AFL-CIO noted, has been to encourage the development of an American merchant marine. Despite this policy, the percentage of shipping carried by "runaway" American-owned ships flying foreign flags has risen steadily, the federation emphasized.

During 1960, only 16 percent of all U.S. water-borne exports were carried in American-flag ships, and only 7.5 percent of imports.

Somerset Elected Film Council Head

Hollywood, Calif. — Pat Somerset, executive of the Screen Actors Guild, has been elected president of the Hollywood AFL Film Council, composed of unions representing more than 24,000 employes in the motion picture industry.

Intl. Rep. Phil Fischer of the Musicians was named vice president. Sec. H. O'Neil Shanks, executive secretary of the Screen Extras Guild, and Treas. Edwin T. Hill were reelected. Ralph Clare, Elmer Ellsworth and Al Erickson were reelected trustees.

Canada Carpenters Urge Jobs Program

Vancouver, B. C. — Establishment of a commission to plan for a "Canada with full employment" has been urged on British Columbia members of Parliament and on the provincial legislative assembly in letters from officers and members of Carpenters Local 452.

Adoption of the resolution, which will be presented to the convention of the Provincial Council of Carpenters later this month, was prompted by the local's belief that "all indications point to a record number of unemployed this winter."

'Poetic, Not to Mention Musical, Justice'

BUILDING TRADESMEN and their families made up the first audience in the new Philharmonic Hall at New York's Lincoln Center for Performing Arts. In tribute to their craftsmanship they were invited to the first rehearsal of the New York Philharmonic.

PHILHARMONIC HALL is shown in the late stages of construction in this exterior photograph. Built at an estimated cost of $15.4 million, the concert hall with its 2,646 seats ends a long search by the New York Philharmonic, America's oldest orchestra, for a permanent home. In summer, the air-conditioned hall will be adapted to "pops" concerts.

THE SOUND OF MUSIC entrances the audience made up of union members who built Philharmonic Hall and their guests. The New York Herald Tribune compared the occasion to the medieval custom of thanksgiving services by artisans who built the great cathedrals of Europe. "To have the first sounds by an orchestra within its walls fall upon the ears of those directly concerned with its construction makes for poetic, not to mention musical, justice," said the paper.

LOCAL 1087 GLAZIERS Al Propper and Joel Schwarz complete the installation of a plate glass window even as the orchestra was in the final stages of rehearsal.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN rehearses the orchestra and the galaxy of opera stars who were to highlight the opening night performance at Philharmonic Hall. Design of the concert hall was guided by acoustical studies of 60 other halls around the world and includes 136 panels or acoustical "clouds" suspended from the ceiling to reflect both sound and light. Unwanted sounds have been kept out by insulation and by resting foundations on lead and asbestos pads.

An Example to Industry

THE NATION'S LARGEST employer—the federal government—has set an excellent example this year for private industry and business in labor-management relations.

It started with Pres. Kennedy's executive order for formal recognition of government workers' unions and establishment of procedures for handling grievances and other problems.

It continued with the President's proposal to Congress, on the basis of a special commission study, for a substantial pay increase for postal and classified workers. Congress built on the President's proposals and seems near passing a measure to give 1.5 million government employes what amounts to an average 10 percent pay increase over a two-year period.

The effect of the President's and the Congress' action is to bring a new sense of dignity to government employment and a measure of justice and equity to government workers who for too long have lagged behind the general movement in wages and salaries.

Mississippi Tragedy

THE TRAGEDY in Mississippi is compounded of many factors—the poverty of so many of its people, the rabble-rousing and race invective Bilbo tradition, its high rate of illiteracy—all culminating in a politics of frustration that led its governor deliberately and unlawfully to block the orders of a federal court.

Pres. Kennedy's address to the nation on the crisis in Mississippi brought the issue into clear and powerful focus. He said:

"If this country should ever reach the point where any man or group of men, by force or threat of force, could long deny the commands of our Constitution, then no law would stand free from doubt, no judge would be sure of his writ and no citizen would be safe from his neighbors."

We agree also with the President's assessment of blame in the wider area of race relations when he said:

"Neither Mississippi nor any other southern state deserves to be charged with all the accumulated wrongs of the last 100 years of race relations to the extent that there has been failure. The responsibility for that failure must be shared by us all, by every state, by every citizen."

Kohler

FOR THE LAST EIGHT YEARS the word "Kohler" has been an epithet on the lips of union members and many other decent Americans, a synonym for harsh, fanatical union-busting.

During those years the Auto Workers struggled in an almost unbelievable contest involving company goons, firearms and all of the anti-union, strikebreaking tactics developed by employers. The union plodded through years of NLRB hearings, court cases, appeals and every other device that Kohler lawyers could devise. Along the way the union was subjected to a Kohler-contrived political attack by Republican members of the McClellan committee.

Hanging on grimly despite company operations with strikebreakers, the union finally brought the company to the bargaining table. An agreement has been reached and workers now finally have the protection of a union contract.

The Kohler struggle is proof once again that the mightiest citadel of anti-unionism can be cracked, that labor can win out if it has the strength and determination and the public support that can produce victory.

Government by Law

In Federationist Editorial:

'The Choice of 1960 Must Now Be Made Again,' Meany Says

The following editorial, Vote — To Move America Forward, by Pres. George Meany, appears in the October 1962 AFL-CIO American Federationist.

IN THESE PAGES two years ago, on the eve of another national election, I described the issue in these words: "Our country is at the crossroads and we must choose one of two paths—a bold and challenging climb toward new heights or the deceptively easy-looking road of the last seven years which slopes slowly but steadily downward."

The American people made their choice. Though the margin was narrow, they chose the road of progress. There is every evidence that the close decision of 1960 has since won the endorsement of a far larger majority.

Unfortunately, that decision has not been translated, to a satisfactory degree, into practical results. Congress has faced up to what might be called the "old challenge"—area redevelopment, wage-hour improvements, housing and a number of others. But very little has been done on the fundamental economic and social questions that must be resolved to sustain and accelerate the modest forward movement of the last two years.

Federal aid to education has been brushed aside. Health insurance for the aged, under the social security system, was defeated in the Senate and smothered in the House. What began as a tax reform bill has emerged in a form that gives the wrong reductions at the wrong time to the wrong taxpayers.

Above all, with the unemployment rate again creeping toward 6 percent, the government's reaction has been circumscribed and laggard. A watered-down public works bill was enacted; but extension of temporary unemployment compensation was callously rejected, a temporary tax-cut in the lowest income bracket was ignored and nothing whatever was done to determine what new programs are necessary to achieve and maintain full employment.

For all of this the President bears little of the blame. He has banished complacency from the Executive Dept. He has urged enactment of most of the measures we in the AFL-CIO support. While we do not agree with him on every particular, we have no doubt that he still wants to move forward.

The responsibility for the failures, the inadequacies and the disappointments of the last two years rests almost entirely upon Congress—upon a reactionary coalition drawn from both parties which, on domestic questions, nearly always commands a majority. That majority must be replaced by a truly liberal majority if the aspirations of 1960 are to be realized.

In short, the choice of 1960 must now be made again. It must be made by the knowledgeable, selective action of the voters among candidates for the Senate and the House.

This is far more difficult, far more demanding upon the individual, than a presidential contest. This year we do not have one ticket aligned against another, from coast to coast. This year we have a national election cut into nearly 500 pieces.

IN EACH ONE of these "pieces" the decisions must be made, not on party slogans but on personal thought, personal choice based on the individual positions of the candidates. It is incumbent upon each of us to vote for candidates on the basis of their records and their clear, unequivocal convictions—disregarding both party labels and personal charm.

Before we can do that, of course, we must be qualified as voters. I hope all of you have registered; and that those who haven't will do so, in those states where the books are still open. As I have said before, in these times a union member who doesn't vote is not only a poor citizen but a poor union member, too.

I have no doubt that most Americans earnestly want this country to move forward again at full speed, to live up to our destiny, to be the inspiration as well as the leader of the free world. I have no doubt that most of our citizens endorse the proposals advanced by the President to attain these ends.

But the proof must be demonstrated at the polls on Nov. 6; only you, and the American people as a whole, can provide it.

Morgan Says:

Academic Freedom Under Fire Throughout the Lower South

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THERE IS NO TELLING how grievously that great educationist, Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett, has wounded the cause of higher learning in his state, where it has never been extravagantly high. And it must have been a deep and desperate wound to his own curious pride to discover that his cause of keeping the campus of Ole Miss unsullied by the shadow of a single Negro student had been lost before it had been begun. Now it comes out that, somewhat accidentally, a Negro named Harry S. Murphy, Jr., was a fulltime student at the university during the 1945-46 school year as part of the Navy's V-12 study program.

Morgan

But the sad fact is that Barnett is not the only one who has damaged American education and held it and the country up to ridicule. There has been an ugly rash of anti-intellectualism, "anti-educationism" just in the last two years—much of it concentrated in the South and coupled with the frantic, brutal but rear-guard attempts by racial extremists to deny civil rights to Negroes.

Although non-southern campuses are by no means impervious to this virus, the pitch of emotion has been most shrilly noticeable in the South, where the battle against first-class citizenship for the Negro is almost invariably hitched to the charges of demagogues that the whole civil rights movement is communistic and that any liberal—in this case meaning human—approach to the issue smacks of subversion and heresy.

The problem is starkly illuminated in the October issue of Harper's magazine by Yale History Prof. C. Vann Woodward, a native of Arkansas. In an article entitled The Unreported Crisis in the Southern Colleges, based in part on personal visits to more than a score of campuses, Prof. Woodward writes: "In spite of a decline in outright violence, academic freedom is still taking a beating in the lower South, from Texas to Florida. Faculty dismissals and harassments have been increasing, and reprisals against students reached a new peak this year . . .

". . . The fundamental trouble is that for the last two years a wave of reaction—led by the White Citizens Councils, the John Birch Society, and the Ku Kluxers—has clashed with the great movement for Negro rights. Both movements are not involved in all cases of academic freedom, but when they are the troubles are intensfied."

To support his disturbing charges, he cited the recent high-handed firing of the respected head of the sociology department of Sam Houston State Teachers College at Huntsville, Tex., under extreme right-wing pressure channeled through the chairman of the board of regents; and he also related similar, earlier incidents at Texas Tech, West Texas State, the University of Tampa, the University of Florida, Louisiana State, Mississippi, the University of Alabama and even Vanderbilt.

ONE OF THE LATEST and most shocking examples of political vigilantes harassing education came to a dubious but not altogether hopeless climax recently at the University of South Florida in Tampa. A so-called legislative committee, after closed-door hearings which the authorities were not allowed to answer, accused the university of condoning communism and encouraging atheism. The heartening thing was that the State Board of Control, emphasizing that it, not the legislature, was the proper agency to investigate such charges, stoutly defended the university and its president.

More often than not the difference between smear and sanity in such proceedings can be determined by a responsible press. The inquisition at South Florida might have been stampeded completely out of hand but for the editorial courage and reportorial thoroughness of the St. Petersburg Times and the Tampa Tribune.

With the almost singular exception of the race-baiting Albany Herald, which has added to the tension in that tortured Georgia city, the press of the Peach State, including its leading broadcasting stations, has been credited with large contributions of dispassion and reason which in turn have eased Atlanta's approach to desegregation and the stinging rejection of a racist by Georgia voters in the recent primary.

By contrast, scenes of some of the ugliest incidents—in, say, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi—have been devoid of any outstanding newspaper, radio or TV station fully committed to a fair-minded role of public responsibility.

One of the remarkable and reassuring things about these attacks on academic and other freedoms is the willingness of professors and students to stand their ground bravely against them. They are entitled to better odds, however, which it is the duty of a so-called free press to give them.

Washington Reports:

Scoreboard on 87th Congress Marked by Rival Senate Whips

DEMOCRATIC and Republican whips in the Senate are in agreement on the major successes and failures of the 87th Congress.

Appearing in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations, Majority Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) toted up the score this way:

Major success of the 87th Congress—passage of the Trade Expansion Act.

Major failure—defeat of the proposal to provide health care for the aged.

Kuchel listed as a close second on the "success" side of the ledger approval of the U.S. loan to the United Nations, which he hailed as a great victory for the cause of freedom.

HUMPHREY CALLED the Trade Expansion Act "the most important piece of legislation that has been before this Congress or any other Congress for many a year." Along with the UN loan, Humphrey hailed the adoption of a health program for migratory workers.

"We have been trying to get this for 15 years," he said.

Kuchel called for revision of the rules of the Senate and the House to expedite future legislation. In this "nuclear era," he said, the congressional rules are "of another age."

Passage of emergency public works legislation to provide jobs and needed facilities was hailed by both senators.

Kuchel said he regretted the failure of Congress to act on mass transportation legislation and termed it "an unsolved problem which the next Congress is going to have to cope with."

In addition to the medical care bill, Humphrey cited the failure of Congress to act on youth employment opportunities, aid to education, creation of an Urban Affairs Dept. and wilderness preservation legislation. But he declared:

"In baseball parlance, we have been hitting far above .500. We have had many highly controversial measures before Congress. I believe in the main we have done well with them."

Kuchel summarized the legislative results as "a very good session of Congress."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A BONE-WEARY CONGRESS, anxious to get home and start campaigning, suddenly awakened to the fact that it was rolling out legislation that for a long time looked dead. The jubilant Democrats, declaring they had "said all along" that the final record of the two 87th Congress sessions would be a creditable one, began to get the feeling they were giving Pres. Kennedy a platform for campaigning.

On this a sense of perspective must be maintained.

The record does not show success on urgently-needed major reform legislation such as aid to education, expansion of the social security system to cover health care, or permanent improvement of the jobless compensation system.

It shows a failure on two of the most significant measures the President fought for—the creation of a Dept. of Urban Affairs and a program for giving federal aid and guidance in modernizing the transit systems of traffic-choked, decaying big cities.

Nevertheless, the session just ending has seen the sudden revival and enactment of a substantial part of the Kennedy-Freeman farm program. The drug control bill went through.

A sweeping federal pay bill neared passage, giving raises to low-salaried workers and adjusting higher salaries so that the government can compete more evenly with private industry for top-flight administrators, scientists and educators.

There was even a last-minute prospect that the women's-wage bill—a measure to require employers to pay women workers equal pay for equal work—had been seized from control of the Senate Labor Committee and sent on its way to passage.

FOR WHAT IT IS WORTH, a complaint filed by conservative Republican Rep. John J. Rhodes of Arizona sheds some light on what has been happening in recent weeks.

"I am so tired of voting on the Hanford atomic reactor issue," he said, that he hoped never to "see the word" again except on the campaign trails back home. His luck had run out; the Administration revived its program for producing electric power from the vast quantities of Hanford steam otherwise wasted, and Congress at last approved it, on the third time around.

Rhodes charged the Administration was keeping Congress around in the hope that "a wornout and fearful membership will be easier prey" for "ultraliberal" proposals. He remarked that after Kennedy bills are beaten, Senate and House conferees have been reviving them while dealing with other measures, and the House and Senate have to face the same issues all over again.

If true, it is a high tribute to the legislative craftsmanship and skill suddenly revealed. Rhodes has no legitimate complaint: in the Republican 80th Congress, the late Sen. Taft produced a compromise Taft-Hartley bill that contained features entirely different from those originally approved by either chamber.

THE CHANGE IN ATMOSPHERE is noticeable among Democrats on Capitol Hill. Six weeks ago they were groaning that the Republican attacks on the Kennedy program gave an impression of confusion, of an Administration on the run.

The White House reporter for the magazine Newsweek, Charles Roberts, in a recent televised commentary bluntly analyzed the session in these terms:

"In recent months many editorials and cartoonists have turned out obituaries. . . . They have pictured the President as bandaged and bleeding," his program "being carried out of the Capitol in a coffin."

In fact, the program "is getting through Congress in good shape," said Roberts. The President has asked for a lot more than former Pres. Eisenhower ever did and he "got more."

Kennedy "has chalked up more than 60 major laws bearing the imprimatur of the New Frontier" in his first two years, said Roberts, and in the last two weeks was about to get a lot more. His "record of failures is much shorter."

"Considering that it was declared dead or dying a few months ago, Mr. Kennedy's program has turned out to be one of the liveliest corpses in history," he concluded.

RECORD OF CONGRESS is evaluated by Republican Senate Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.) and Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) on labor's public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. They listed passage of trade expansion bill as major success and defeat of health care for the aged as greatest failure.

How to Buy:

Shop Hard for Auto Insurance —Or Run Risk of Overpaying

By Sidney Margolius

YOU CAN OVERPAY for auto insurance today if you don't shop for the company with the lowest costs in your circumstances. In just two years the auto-insurance industry has gone through a competitive upheaval. Rates today do not have the traditional uniformity, and the rate you pay can vary sharply depending on the company you choose.

This is especially true if you have a young driver in the family, or have suffered recent accidents or convictions for violations, or drive your car more than 10 miles to work or are near 65. And strangely enough, it also may be true if you have a particularly good safety record and very little road exposure.

Until recently it was simple enough to determine which companies had lowest costs, since most of the stock companies charged the "board" or standard rates for each area, while the mutual companies and other rate-cutters gave discounts at the beginning, or dividends at the end of the policy period.

The old-line companies saw they were losing considerable business to the rate-cutters, and have instituted a number of competitive measures of their own.

A. Mason Blodgett, an insurance authority, reports that among other measures old-line companies have reduced commissions to agents and brokers, are trimming administrative expenses, are offering modified policies with which to compete with the rate-cutters on simplified coverage, and also have developed new classifications, which reduce the cost of insurance to some drivers but increase it for others.

The classifications used by most companies to determine how much you pay are (in order of increasing cost):

- Class 1-A—Car used mainly for pleasure with no male drivers under 25.
- Class 1-B—Car used for driving to and from work, not over 10 miles each way, and with no male driver under 25.
- Class 1-C—Car used to commute to and from work over 10 miles but with no young drivers under 25.
- Class 2—Car used for business purposes (salesmen, collectors, messengers, etc.,) with no young driver under 25.
- Class 2-A—Car operated occasionally by a male driver under 25, who is a resident in the household. It also can include a vehicle operated by a married male driver under 25.
- Class 2-C—Car operated principally by or owned by unmarried male driver under 25.

However—and this is an important clue to shopping for auto insurance—many companies have their own variations of this classification plan, Blodgett advises.

THERE ALSO ARE variations affecting young male operators who own their cars. Those who have had driver training in high school or college receive discounts, usually 10 percent. Some companies are experimenting with psychological exams for young male drivers. Those who pass get a discount. A number of companies give discounts to young drivers who get high marks in school.

Some companies also have a special classification for drivers over 65. There are still other variations.

Many insurance companies also now have the "Safe Driver Award Plan." Under this plan you fill out an application on which you state the number of your accidents in the previous three years, and also the number of convictions or citations for traffic violations. A driver with no recent convictions or accidents gets discounts of 20 to 30 percent or more, depending on the individual company's plan. Some companies even give discounts of 40 percent and more for drivers with clear records going back five years.

On the other hand, drivers with records of accidents or convictions are penalized. One with several convictions or accidents could find his rates surcharged as much as 100 percent or more, and he might have to pay very high rates for three years.

With all the variations, there can be tremendous difference in the price of car insurance in a large city or well-settled suburb—in fact from $75 to $600, Blodgett estimates.

The best way to shop for auto insurance at this time, especially if you have a young driver in the family, or have convictions or accidents, or drive your car more than 10 miles to work, or have other classification problems, is to consult two or three well-qualified brokers as well as the rate-deviators (the mutual companies and direct writers).

How a particular company classifies you is now as important as its theoretical deviation from the standard rates.

WELFARE AGENCIES which supervise baby placements are among the 34,500 voluntary organizations aided by labor through its support of united fund and community chest campaigns. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced the federation's endorsement of the 1962 campaigns in the U.S. and Canada. Pictured are a baby with its new foster parents and a social worker who helped bring them together.

Meany Asks Backing:

Support Urged for United Fund Drive

THE AFL-CIO HAS OFFICIALLY endorsed the annual fund-raising effort of the 2,200 U.S. and Canadian united funds and community chests, and federation Pres. George Meany has urged all members to support the effort "wholeheartedly."

Expressing endorsement in a message to the United Community Funds & Councils of America, Meany said he is confident that organized labor will again help lead the way to a record return even larger than the $501 million last fall.

For a number of years, he pointed out, unions and union members have indicated their conviction that "the 'united way' is the right way" to meet community health and welfare needs by the regularity of their gifts—usually by payroll deduction—and by a year-round program of labor participation encouraged by the federation and its Community Service Activities.

Oliver G. Willits, chairman of the executive committee of the United Community Funds & Councils of America, is serving as acting national chairman for the balance of 1962, succeeding the late Lee H. Bristol, who died suddenly.

The text of Meany's letter follows:

"It is, as always, a genuine pleasure to extend the endorsement of the American Federation of Labor & Congress of Industrial Organizations to the 1962 United Community Campaigns.

"Over the years, organized labor has repeatedly asserted its conviction that the United Way is the right way to meet the health and welfare needs of our communities.

"The 13.5 million members of the AFL-CIO enjoy a unique relationship with federated fund-raising. Because their contributions are given on a regular basis, usually through some form of payroll deduction, they help communities to plan ahead to meet increased needs. This continuing financial support is further implemented by a year-round program of labor participation carried on by the AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

"Because of this relationship, the men and women of organized labor know at first-hand how their contributions meet human needs and are able to participate in community-wide planning to meet these needs.

"The AFL-CIO's official endorsement of United Community Campaigns carries with it our deep sense of involvement and I urge all AFL-CIO members to support this effort whole-heartedly. Organized labor, I am sure, will once again be in the vanguard leading the way to a record return exceeding the $501 million raised by these drives last fall."

From Soup to Nonsense:

Yes, Molly, We Had to Be Tough To Survive in the Good Old Days

By Jane Goodsell

MOLLY, WHO IS SIX YEARS OLD, loves to hear about the olden days before she was born. She listens, wide-eyed, as I tell her about life as it was lived back in the prehistoric days of my childhood.

She can hardly believe it when I tell her that we used to squeeze oranges to get orange juice, and that peas came out of pods instead of boxes. I've told her about non-electric blankets, explaining that we used to put more blankets on the bed when it got colder instead of turning up the little dial.

I've told her, too, about cameras that didn't develop pictures instantaneously, explaining that we sometimes had to wait several days to see how the pictures turned out. She said that she'd seen one of those old-fashioned cameras.

But when I tried to explain to her how we used to make cakes by creaming butter and sugar and adding flour and eggs and milk, she couldn't seem to get the picture at all. She'd never heard of such a thing.

When I told her about refrigerators that had to be defrosted by letting the ice melt into a drip pan that had to be emptied by hand, she felt very sorry for people back in the olden times.

And she patted my hand sympathetically when I told her how hard I used to work back in the days when I had to shift the gears of the car all by myself, when I had to turn the little lever on the can opener, and when furniture polish didn't come in spray cans but had to poured onto a cloth and rubbed into the furniture.

I'VE TOLD HER of my underpriveleged childhood, too—about changing phonograph records by hand and re-filling fountain pens when they ran out of ink instead of throwing them away.

I've told her about the days of yore when telephones were black and sheets were white and Jello came in only six delicious flavors. She shook her head sadly.

But I really stunned her when I told her there wasn't such a thing as television when I was a little girl. She stared at me, horrified.

"Goodness!" she said. "What did you do all the time?"

Reader's Digest Charge Refuted:

Report to President Confirms Integrity of U.S. Job Statistics

A special presidential committee has firmly upheld the integrity and reliability of the government's employment and unemployment statistics. At the same time, however, the committee recommended substantial expansion and improvement in the job figures compiled by the Labor Dept. to meet the growing demands of public and private users.

In its 412-page report, the six-man President's Committee to Appraise Employment and Unemployment Statistics stressed that it had "unanimously and categorically concluded that doubt concerning the scientific objectivity of the agencies responsible for collecting, processing and publishing these data is unwarranted."

"The committee remains highly impressed by the professional qualifications and the scientific integrity and objectivity of those responsible for the system of reporting the official data. . . .," the report continued.

"I guess this is your answer to the Reader's Digest," Pres. Kennedy commented as he accepted the report.

An article in the September 1961 issue of the Digest had charged that the Labor Dept.'s published figures on the nation's high unemployment rate had been "engineered" by "juggling statistics" to make it easier to promote "new federal spending programs."

Kennedy Hails Findings

The furor created by the Digest's accusations, plus doubts raised by other critics as to whether the statistics reflected the true level of unemployment, was a factor in the appointment of the presidential study committee.

Kennedy, in a statement issued on receipt of the report, said it "confirms the fact that the United States has as comprehensive and accurate a system of measuring employment and unemployment as any nation in the world."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz hailed the committee's recommendations for improvement of the system as "objective, critical and constructive." He said that at the direction of the President, he had instructed various Labor Dept. bureaus to include the panel's suggestions in future planning and that some of them "will be implemented immediately."

"It is necessary, as the committee suggests, to know more about who is and who is not in the labor force, why people drop out of the labor force, to know more about the unemployed and why they are without work; to know more about the occupations, income and hours of work of those who are employed," Wirtz declared.

Chairman of the committee was Robert A. Gordon, head of the University of California's economics department. Other members were Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; Robert Dorfman, economics professor at Harvard University; Martin R. Gainsbrugh, vice president of the National Industrial Conference Board; Albert E. Rees, head of the University of Chicago's economics department; Frederick F. Stephan, professor of social statistics at Princeton University.

The committee's findings also destroyed another popular fallacy: that the low rates of joblessness reported by other western industrial nations are due principally to differences in survey techniques and in concepts of unemployment.

The panel found that joblessness actually is higher in the United States than in other countries, except Canada, even when the figures for those countries are adjusted to reflect U. S. techniques and concepts. Included in the report was a comparison along these lines made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which showed:

	Unadjusted	Adjusted
United States	5.6%	5.6%
Canada	7.0	7.0
France	1.1	1.9
W. Germany	1.2	1.0
Great Britain	1.6	2.4
Italy	7.9	4.3
Japan	1.0	1.1
Sweden (1961)	1.2	1.5

Reasons for these sharp differences, the panel suggested, include the much faster rates of economic growth which a number of other countries currently are undergoing, the greater resources of unemployed American workers which enable them to hold out for longer periods rather than take an undesirable job, and law and custom in other countries which tend to keep workers on the job even during recessions.

As to how the government's statistics can be improved, one major recommendation of the committee was for "intensive research" aimed at "sharpening" the interviewing procedures used in the household survey, on which the monthly joblessness report is based.

The key question in the household interviews is "Was . . . looking for work?" Whatever the reply, it is accepted unless the person volunteers additional information. The panel suggests that the Labor Dept. look into the possibility of expanding the questioning so as to gather more conclusive information.

At the same time, the committee urged "strongly" that more comprehensive data be gathered, at least once a year, on persons not listed as in the labor force so as to pinpoint areas with special characteristics or problems. It would be "preferable" to have such surveys quarterly, the report says.

Labor Force Defined

The labor force is made up of persons holding jobs or unemployed. As presently defined, the term "unemployed" includes jobless persons looking for work, those on layoff, and those waiting to start a new job. The committee found this definition to be "reasonable" although not as "inclusive as some should like to have it."

Committee Chairman Gordon said it was unclear what effect on joblessness totals would result from tightening of interviewing techniques and "sharpening" the unemployment concept.

"The chances are just as good that the unemployment totals will increase rather than decrease," he said.

Gordon called attention to a special experimental survey in August 1955 which found more than one million persons classified that month as not in the labor force, but who wanted work and had taken steps to look for a job within the previous two months.

The panel also recommended, among other things:

- A substantial increase over the next decade in the number of households used in the survey sample—to as much as 10 times the present figure of 35,000—to establish an accurate basis for regional, state and community subtotals for which there is a growing demand.
- A national statistical inventory of job vacancies to meet widespread interest and fill "one of the more conspicuous gaps in our labor-force information."
- A breakdown of employment figures by occupations which is "increasingly needed to evaluate the impact of automation and technological change on the structure of the economy" and to provide a basis "for estimating future labor-force requirements."
- More comprehensive information on hours worked and on the number of jobless seeking only part-time work.

The committee acknowledged that its recommendations would require a large increase in appropriations and that it would be unrealistic to expect them all to be put into effect immediately.

The added expense will be well worth it, however, the panel wrote the President.

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY of the founding of the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach employes was marked by the unveiling of a portrait of the late long-time president, W. D. Mahon, in union headquarters in Washington. On the ladder is Pres. John M. Elliott, who presided at the ceremony. Standing are Sec.-Treas. O. J. Mischo (right); Executive Vice Pres. Henry B. Tax Cut of $7 Billion Urged for Low Incomes

A $7 billion income tax reduction concentrated among low-income groups and a $3 billion increase in federal expenditures are strongly urged as the first steps necessary to cure the nation's chronic underconsumption of the past 10 years.

In a new 73-page booklet "Key Policies for Full Employment", the Conference on Economic Progress warns that the country is "still in the grip of the periodic ups and downs in the economy, the dismally low average annual rate of economic growth and the chronically rising idleness of manpower and plant which have plagued us since early 1953."

After detailed analysis, the CEP booklet concludes that underconsumption is at the core of the trouble, declaring that the nation's productive powers, the acceleration in automation, increased skills in the labor force, and business investment in productive facilities "have far outrun . . . the expansion of distribution and consumption which equate with rising living standards."

There is an especially high concentration of "poverty and deprivation among our older citizens," the booklet declares, as well as a high concentration of poverty among those with inadequate education.

Underconsumption Blamed

These and other factors make it clear that "the paucity of our public services relative to our productive resources combine with underconsumption in the private sector to cause rising idleness of manpower and plant," it adds.

The CEP stresses that there is "little merit" in the claim that "excessive increases in wage rates" have harmed investment or damaged business profits.

"Contrary to the widespread belief that wage rate increases have outrun productivity gains," it says, "the study also reveals that, in recent years which are most relevant and even currently, wage rate increases in manufacturing and in the whole non-farm economy have lagged seriously behind productivity gains."

The study, directed by Leon H. Keyserling, former chairman of Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, calls for a personal income tax cut "at the first possible opportunity" of $7 billion, with top priority to cutting the rate on the first $2,000 of taxable income. Other reforms in the tax structure, the CEP declares, should reduce rates and simultaneously close tax loopholes.

Quicker Balanced Budget

To remedy the long neglect of essential domestic public services, a $3 billion increase in federal expenditures is called for. This would result in the "ultimate attainment of a balanced federal budget far more surely and swiftly than the alternative of continuing to stunt our economic performance by taxes which are too high and expenditures which are too low."

The study also urges liberalization of monetary and credit policies. Tight money and rising interest rates, says the CEP, "have seriously repressed consumption" and have consistently "thrown a wet blanket upon the process of economic growth."

The Conference on Economic Progress is a non-profit, non-political organization engaged in economic research and education. Members of the national committee include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, A. J. Hayes and O. A. Knight.

Copies of "Key Policies for Full Employment" are obtainable from the CEP, 1001 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D.C., at 50 cents a copy, with lower rates available for bulk orders.

'R-T-W' Backers Hurl Law at Farm Strikers

Anti-union forces in Kansas and Indiana have called for use of their states' so-called "right-to-work" laws against the National Farmers Organization, which has sought to win higher prices for livestock and farm products by withholding deliveries to markets.

The efforts to incite usage of an anti-union law against farmers was denounced by the National Council for Industrial Peace, which pointed out that it has repeatedly warned that "right-to-work" sponsors have fought farm groups and co-ops as well as industrial workers.

The attack on the farm group was launched by Pres. L. E. Weiss, of Kansans for the Right-to-Work, who charged in Wichita that the membership rules of the National Farmers Organization violate the "right-to-work" provision of the state constitution. He charged the organization with what he called "an illegal maintenance of membership" restriction.

His attack on the NFO was echoed by a Republican state senator from Indiana, John Ruckelshaus of Indianapolis, who said he would request action against the farm group under Indiana's "right-to-work" law.

The Indiana Council for Industrial Peace, through its executive director, George Feldman, said it takes "a grave view" of the threat by the "work" group.

"We have recognized that the same people who support so-called 'right-to-work' laws also attack farmer groups, but this is the first time the 'right-to-work' law has been invoked against farmers," Feldman said.

Leaders of two farm groups not associated with the NFO boycott also spoke out against "work" laws.

A spokesman for the National Farmers Union declared: "We are not for the NFO, but we certainly are against this type of shotgun utilization of what at best is a bad law."

Max Cooprider of Terre Haute, Ind., president of the Vigo County Farm Bureau, said persons who pushed the enactment of the Indiana "right-to-work" law in 1957 are now trying "to force the sale of crops at ruinous prices."

Passenger Ship Services Bettered

New York—A joint program to maintain the high-quality service aboard U.S. flag passenger ships has been undertaken by the National Maritime Union and the major lines, NMU Pres. Joseph N. Curran and Pres. Ralph E. Casey of the American Merchant Marine Institute announced here.

A major feature of the program will permit qualified applicants for jobs in the steward's department to achieve top seniority immediately and thus become eligible to join the union. At present three years or more in the industry are required for top seniority and union eligibility.

Top seniority under the new procedure will be granted on the recommendation of a union-management screening committee.

In addition, in thousands of elections candidates will run for local, county, municipal and state executive department and legislative offices.

Weary Legislators Set to Adjourn For Sprint Down Campaign Trail

litical wars heartened by the last-month surge of congressional activity that saw major portions of Pres. Kennedy's legislative program rolled through to passage.

They counted on active participation by the President in the campaign and were encouraged by legislative leaders who declared flatly that the total achievements of the 1961-62 sessions added up to the most productive record of any Congress since the end of World War II.

Republicans went out on a bid to slash the Democratic congressional margins. They also had visions that in four or five northern and western industrial states they might pick up basic strength by electing GOP governors to replace Democrats.

GOP Gained in 1960

When Kennedy won his narrow victory over former Vice Pres. Nixon in 1960, Republicans picked up two seats in the Senate and scored a net gain of 21 in the House.

The Democratic House loss was considered largely responsible for strengthening the conservative Republican-Dixiecrat coalition that blocked passage of school aid bills, a college aid bill and the Anderson-King bill for health care under the social security system.

The prospective results were clouded for most observers by two factors:

- The normal "apathy" that characterizes voters in most non-presidential election years and sharply reduces the size of the vote, and which in the past has nearly always resulted in congressional losses by the party in control of the White House.
- Uncertainty resulting from substantial shifts in the allocation of House members to the states as a result of the 1962 census. Twenty-one states either gained or lost House seats.

California gained eight and Florida gained four. New York, and Massachusetts, on the other hand, lost two each, and so did sparsely-populated Arkansas. Pennsylvania lost three.

The population migrations recorded in the census resulted in a significant shift of the congressional balance of power toward the Southwest and away from the South (except Florida), the Northeast and the Middle West.

In all the states east of the Rocky Mountains, only six—Ohio, Michigan, Maryland, New Jersey, Florida, Texas—picked up an added member of the House. Sixteen states in the vast region lost a total of 21 seats.

Clothing Workers Back Morgenthau

New York — Managers of New York City locals of the Clothing Workers, declaring the overriding issue in the 1962 election campaign is "the support we owe" the Kennedy Administration, have endorsed the Democratic state ticket.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky issued a statement announcing the backing for Robert M. Morgenthau, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, and his running-mates, declaring that Pres. Kennedy "has a right to look to our state for continued support."

Morgenthau, he said, "grew up in a family atmosphere dominated by the spirit of such great liberal leaders as Al Smith, Franklin Roosevelt and Herbert Lehman," and "will carry on their tradition."

Corbett Raps AMA On Health Plan Stand

New York—Pres. Raymond R. Corbett of the New York State AFL-CIO has charged that proposals made by the state branch of the American Medical Association before a legislative committee on health insurance plans would "sweep the needs of the aged under the rug."

The medical society's recommendations, he said, "would perpetuate the Kerr-Mills system of aid based on the degrading means test."

ILO Group Outlines Metal Trades Goals

Geneva—A broad program to guarantee metal trades workers a fair share of the benefits from technological progress was drafted at a 24-nation session here of the Intl. Labor Organization.

At the same time the 12-day meeting of the UN agency's Metal Trades Committee urged that experts be brought together to prepare a model safety code for the protection of shipyard workers.

The conclusions reached by the worker, employer and government delegates at the committee's seventh session, now go before the ILO's Governing Body, or executive council, for action.

The results of the three-way negotiations were hailed as "very substantial" by Vice Pres. Maywood Boggs of the Boilermakers and Woodrow Ginsburg, research director of the Auto Workers.

Boggs and Ginsburg were worker members of the U.S. delegation, whose government group was headed by George P. Delaney, special assistant to the secretary of labor and former U.S. worker delegate to the ILO.

The American labor spokesmen were on the small working parties that hammered out conclusions on technological and safety problems, the principal items on the committee's agenda.

Terming the improvement of general welfare the "essential end" of technological progress, the committee said this goal could be achieved only "if the gains resulting from higher productivity are shared equitably."

An increase in workers' incomes and improvements in social security benefits and conditions of work are some of the ways of achieving the desired equitable sharing of the fruits of progress, the committee reported.

Special emphasis was placed on the "need for greater and more effective action" to meet the human problems of adjustment, under-employment and unemployment faced by workers affected by the technological changes taking place in the metal trades.

"Every effort should be made," it was stated, "to find and put into effect measures that will enable workers whose jobs are changing or disappearing to continue in employment."

On shipyards, the committee decared that "considerations of production and urgency must not be allowed to prejudice the safety and health of workers."

Reasonable working hours and breaks during them "are an integral part of any accident prevention program," it was stressed.

The committee outlined the points it thought should be covered in the model safety code that it asked the ILO to have drawn up by experts.

At the request of the workers, the committee also urged the Governing Body to study the possibility of following up the meeting of experts by placing the question of shipyard safety and health on the agenda of an ILO annual conference.

Rudy Faupl of the Machinists, American worker delegate on the Governing Body, credited Boggs and Ginsburg with making "key contributions" to one of the most productive sessions of any ILO industrial committee.

Faupl followed the session as the delegate of the Governing Body's worker group.

Idaho COPE Backs Smylie For Governor

Boise, Ida.—Republican Gov. Robert E. Smylie, seeking a second term in office, has been endorsed for re-election by the Idaho State AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

Endorsement of the Republican governor came as the state COPE meeting also gave its approval to two Democrats for election to the U.S. Senate—Sen. Frank Church, running for his second term, and Rep. Gracie Pfost. Mrs. Pfost, a four-term member of the House, gave up her 1st District seat to make the Senate race for election for the four-year unexpired term of the late Sen. Henry C. Dworshak.

Idaho Democrats have been violently split over a gambling issue, with the winner of the gubernatorial primary election, Vernon K. Smith, openly advocating a "county-option" form of legalized gambling.

Former Pres. Truman in a recent campaign swing denounced Smith's proposal.

725 Scholarships Given In USWA 'Talent Hunt'

Pittsburgh—The Steelworkers, engaged since 1948 in a "talent hunt" for gifted children of low-income families, have reported the award of 725 scholarships valued at $704,000 since the program began.

In a booklet summing up the details of the program, the USWA Dept. of Education reported that local unions and districts of the union currently are providing 170 annual grants for higher education at a cost of more than $140,000.

"I wholeheartedly commend this program and pay special tribute to those whose foresight and devotion have made it possible," USWA Pres. David J. McDonald said in a foreword.

The booklet said thousands of high school seniors every year take examinations given by impartial testing committees or university officials with the hope of securing an award that will help them get a higher education. Competition is keen and the number of talented applicants is steadily growing.

Chosen so far by winners have been 206 colleges and universities, including the University of Minnesota, attended by 28 winners; Indiana and Lehigh, 12 each; Pennsylvania State University, 11; the University of Pennsylvania, 10; Brown, 8; Illinois, 7; Harvard and Michigan, 5 each; Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Wisconsin, 4 each; Notre Dame University and St. Louis University, 2 each.

For 1962, unions have donated $72,885 for 144 local scholarship awards and 26 district awards totaled $67,850.

The union's reasoning has been that even in a period when jobs have declined and staff wages have remained unchanged for six years, the scholarship program must be continued when funds are available.

Kefauver Wins Long Fight:

House-Senate Conferees Agree on Drug Safety Bill

A bill to protect Americans from dangerous or ineffective drugs has been cleared for final congressional passage as House-Senate conferees reached unanimous agreement on its provisions.

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), who has led a two-year battle for prescription drug reforms, hailed the final version as a "workable, strong bill."

Only a few months earlier, Kefauver had seen the bill brought out by his Anti-Trust subcommittee stripped of virtually all its teeth by a Republican-conservative Democratic coalition in the full Senate Judiciary Committee.

But before the emasculated bill reached a Senate vote, the revelations of the nation's narrow escape from the baby-deforming thalidomide shocked the American people and put the potent drug manufacturers' lobby on the defensive.

After Pres. Kennedy sent a message to Congress on Aug. 3 urging that "essential" provisions killed by the Judiciary Committee be restored to the bill, the committee hurriedly reconsidered its earlier actions and adopted most of the proposals. Kefauver won some additional improvements on the Senate floor although he failed to restore patent restrictions aimed at reducing prices of prescription drugs.

A similar House bill, brought out by the Interstate Commerce Committee, was strengthened on the House floor by an amendment by Rev. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) that drug advertisements contain at least summary information on possibly-harmful side effects.

The committee version would have permitted manufacturers merely to state that such information was available on request.

The final version of the bill approved by the conferees also:

- Requires that drugs be proven effective, as well as safe, before they can be marketed.
- Authorizes the government to withdraw any drug from the market immediately if it poses an "imminent hazard" to health.
- Requires affirmative government approval before a new drug can be marketed, in contrast to the present procedure whereby new drugs are automatically cleared if the government does not act within a specified time.
- Authorized the government to prevent testing of drugs on humans until there has been adequate preclinical testing.
- Requires labels to show the generic name of the drug in type at least half as large as the manufacturer's trade or brand name.
- Strengthens factory inspection of drug manufacturing.

Postal Hike Exempts Non-Profit Periodicals

There will be no increase in the mailing costs of most newspapers published by unions and other non-profit organizations—thanks to an amendment by Colorado Sen. John A. Carroll (D) to the postage rate and government pay bill approved by the Senate.

While the bill the House passed last year did not raise postage rates for non-profit publications, the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee had added a section doubling the minimum charge for mailing single copies of non-profit publications; and slightly increasing the per pound rate.

The effect, the AFL-CIO told Congress on the basis of a survey by the Intl. Labor Press Association, would have been to force a number of papers to publish less frequently and some to cease publication entirely.

Church groups, fraternal, veteran and charitable organizations also reported they would face serious problems of continuing publications.

After a number of senators spoke in support of the Carroll amendment, which would leave the present minimum per piece rate at one-eighth of a cent, Committee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.) agreed to accept it and strike the increase from the committee bill.

The only increase in second class mailing costs for non-profit organizations approved by House-Senate conferees was a small step-up in the present 1.5 cents-per-pound rate. This charge would rise by one-tenth of a cent a year until it reached 1.8 cents in 1965. Since most newspapers pay the higher minimum single-copy rate, this would affect only bulkier newspapers and magazines.

The Senate bill had also provided a small increase in the piece rate for bulk third-class mailing by non-profit groups, but the conferees eliminated this provision.

Unions and all other non-profit organizations will, of course, be affected by the general increase in postage for first-class letter mail—from 4 to 5 cents beginning Jan. 7, and from 7 to 8 cents for airmail. Post cards will go up from 3 to 4 cents.

Labor Nominee Gets Library Board Post

Cleveland, O. — Mrs. Florence Graham, business representative of Communications Workers Local 4307, has been named a member of the Cleveland Library Board. Long active in labor circles, Mrs. Graham was recommended for the post by the Cleveland AFL-CIO.

Doherty Is Nominated As Envoy to Jamaica

Pres. Kennedy has nominated AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William C. Doherty as United States ambassador to Jamaica.

Doherty, who stepped down as president of the Letter Carriers at his union's convention last month, was one of two official U.S. delegates to the independence celebration of Jamaica last summer as the island ended 307 years as a British possession. Along with Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, he represented the United States in welcoming the Western Hemisphere's newest nation.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee scheduled an Oct. 3 hearing on the nomination, which was expected to be acted on before the adjournment of Congress.

Doherty, a Cincinnati letter carrier, was elected president of his union in 1941 and steered it through its greatest period of growth and legislative accomplishments. When he declined reelection this year, the convention named him president-emeritus of the 157,000-member union.

Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, addressing the NALC convention, gave delegates a hint of the assignment the Administration had in mind for Doherty when he referred to letter carriers as "ambassadors of good will" to the public and added:

"It is fitting indeed that your retiring president may be making wider and more formal use of his qualifications as an ambassador."

Buyer Aids On Display in Post Offices

A three-month program of testing public interest in government publications dealing with consumer problems has been undertaken by the Post Office Dept. in cooperation with the President's Council of Economic Advisers and consumer advisers from other government agencies.

The pilot project will determine reaction of the people to 72 booklets and pamphlets which have been placed on display, with facilities for easy ordering, in 100 post offices ranging in size and location from a substation in New York to Kermit, Tex.

Each post office in the test has a tabletop display explaining the program. Available are a supply of order blanks, envelopes pre-addressed to the Government Printing Office, and from postal window clerks, special documentary coupons which can be purchased to eliminate the use of checks or money orders in small denominations.

The publications include such topics as food and clothing buying, infant and child care, home construction and maintenance, health and safety, appliance purchasing, and recreation.

The publications are available at prices ranging from 5 cents to $2.75. Sales in cities in the test program where full publicity is applied will be compared with those in which there is no promotion outside of the local post office.

UNITED NATIONS DAY posters, similar to the one shown above, may be obtained in advance of the Oct. 24 observance from the U.S. Committee for the UN, 375 Park Avenue, New York 22. Single copies are free; five for 10 cents and 100 for $1.50.

Labor Backs UN Day, To Be Observed Oct. 24

The 17th anniversary of the date on which the United Nations came into legal existence will be observed on Oct. 24.

On that day in 1945 the required number of ratifications of the charter signed in San Francisco on the previous June 26 had been deposited with the State Dept., and the organization which has since done so much to preserve world peace emerged from the dream stage into reality.

The observance is under the general direction of the U. S. Committee for the United Nations. The AFL-CIO is a member organization of the committee, and Pres. Meany is on the board of directors. Chairman for the second year is Robert S. Benjamin, of United Artists Corp.

The committee has made available a large selection of aids to observance of the anniversary and to understanding of the UN itself. They range from posters and other decorations through a wide variety of leaflets and pamphlets, recordings and films, to impressive books dealing, in many instances, with the role of the UN in U. S. foreign policy.

One of the booklets, Facts for Fallacies, provides answers to current questions about the UN and serves as a program guide. The committee points out that surveys show four out of five Americans believe the UN "is serving a useful purpose" but do not always have the facts on hand to answer the fifth American—"the one who views the United Nations as a potential threat" to the U. S. The booklet provides such answers.

Defenses Suggested

"Look for those who enjoy using other peoples' meetings as platforms for pushing their own views," the booklet suggests. "Be on the alert to recognize people who deliberately distort UN actions.

"There are organizations which indoctrinate people through 'schools' and 'institutes' on ways of waging anti-UN campaigns. By having the facts on hand, point out the errors in statements made. Be ready to help the local chapters of the Parent - Teacher Association, women's clubs and others which are particularly open to this type of disruption."

Other helps the committee has ready for distribution include a leaders' guide to individual and community action, a UN study kit and David Coyle Cushman's The United Nations and How It Works, a practical insight into the UN's structure and organization.

A full list of free and inexpensive publications, as well as those for which charges are made, may be obtained from the U. S. Committee for the UN, 375 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Scholarship Split By Packing Union

Chicago—The Packinghouse Workers have divided their annual $1,000 Russell Bull scholarship between Joan Trumpower, Washington, D. C., a white student at the predominantly Negro Tougaloo College, Tougaloo, Miss., and David W. Johnson, Muncie, Ind., a graduate student at Columbia University.

The scholarship honors the former director of the union's District 3. Miss Trumpower, formerly a student at Duke University, picketed segregated eating facilities in Richmond, Va., and was jailed as a freedom rider for three months in Mississippi.

Johnson, a graduate of Ball State College in Muncie, opposed a pattern of discrimination in off-campus housing there which forced Negro students to live considerable distances away and limited their full use of the school's facilities.

Congress in Drive to Pass 'Must' Bills

Narrow Senate Vote Salvages Aid Funds

as the best that could be achieved this year, even though it bore a sketchy resemblance to the President's original proposals. It cleared the House by voice vote and passed the Senate, 56-22.

The Administration avoided a disastrous setback in the foreign aid program as the Senate beat back —sometimes by narrow margins— efforts to trim a $4.4 billion appropriation bill for the aid program. The closest vote came when an attempt by Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R-S. D.) to knock out $125 million in loans to underdeveloped countries was rejected 40-38. Final passage was by a 57-24 vote.

Before the Senate voted, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller had written each senator that labor considered the foreign aid program "absolutely essential" to world freedom and the nation's security. Noting that 80 percent of the aid appropriations are spent in the United States, he warned that sharp cuts in the program would add to unemployment.

Although the Senate bill was some $300 million less than the amount previously authorized by Congress, it was nearly $800 million above the drastically-slashed appropriation voted by the House. Conferees were expected to split the difference.

In another major appropriations action, the Senate voted $500 million to get the emergency public works program under way.

$900 Million Authorized

While the amount fell short of the $900 million authorized for needed job-creating projects, the Appropriations Committee said the President could seek more funds if necessary when the new Congress convenes in January. The House had not yet acted on the appropriation as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) pushed a last-minute effort to revive the temporary unemployment compensation program. The 1961 law, providing extended benefits for persons who exhausted their regular state compensation and were still unemployed, expired last spring. A bill to continue the program has been locked in the House Ways & Means Committee. McCarthy said he would seek to attach the measure to a House-passed bill.

Among the bills listed by the House leadership for consideration before adjournment was a Senate-passed amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act aimed at restricting child labor by migrant farm workers. It would prohibit children under 12 from working in fields beyond daily commuting distance of their permanent homes.

Pay Bill Accepted

The government employe pay and pension raise which the Senate attached to a House-passed postage rate bill was initialed without change by House conferees.

It gives half a million postal workers an immediate 8.6 percent average increase, and another 2.6 percent effective Jan. 1, 1964. The raise for the 1 million classified, white collar workers varies considerably with grade level but averages 5.5 percent immediately and 4.1 percent in the second step. Wages for blue collar workers are set by wage boards on the basis of prevailing rates paid by private employers in their areas.

A point of order was raised on the House floor, however, to a portion of the conference report giving 600,000 persons on the civil service retirement rolls a 5 percent increase in pensions. The measure went back to conference in an attempt to work out a solution.

The Senate-passed equal pay for women bill follows the language of the House bill in providing equal pay "for equal work" on jobs requiring "equal skills."

While the House bill gives the secretary of labor clear authority to initiate enforcement of the law, the Senate version requires that a complaint must first be filed by or on behalf of a worker. The Senate bill also limits coverage to establishments with 25 or more employes, while the House language referred to an "employer" with 25 or more employes.

HIGH SCHOOL DEBATERS arguing the "pro" side of the expanded trade issue this school year are receiving a special assist in this AFL-CIO kit. Trade Adjustment: The New Realism is a 16-page pamphlet which discusses the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 and its provision for adjustment aid for workers displaced by expanded trade; the other pamphlets discuss various aspects of the trade issue and labor's position.

Guidelines Set Forth For Emergency Works

Broad guidelines for the selection of projects under the new emergency public works program were set forth for some 850 representatives of states, communities and their redevelopment agencies at a two-day meeting with Commerce Dept. officials.

Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges, opening the conference, expressed the hope that it would lead "to the speedy inauguration of projects that will help put our unemployed back to work and increase the opportunities for our underemployed."

He noted that the program was designed to meet a dual purpose: "To put people to work at useful jobs" in areas of high and persistent unemployment and "to spur economic expansion in these areas by helping carry forward worthwhile community projects."

The $900-million emergency program was enacted by Congress on the urging of Pres. Kennedy to help combat the continuing high rate of joblessness. It had the solid backing of the AFL-CIO.

The act authorizes the President to allocate funds to launch or speed up previously authorized federal public works projects or state or local projects for which federal aid had been approved.

The federal share of the cost may be at least 50 percent of the total and as much as 75 percent in states or communities unable financially to raise half the cost. The state or local share, however, must represent a net increase over planned spending for capital improvements.

Eligible Areas

Eligible for the federal aid will be areas already designated under the Area Redevelopment Act, plus others designated by the secretary of labor as having had substantial unemployment—6 percent or more —in at least nine of the preceding 12 months. ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., recently reported that 1,069 areas in all states and several territories are qualified for aid under the act. No state may receive more than 10 percent of the total allocation.

The Senate recently trimmed appropriations for the program to $500 million on the basis of committee recommendations that this would be more than enough to cover projects ready to start between now and January, when it could take another look at the need for funds.

The ARA's role in the program is primarily one of coordination to spur the 13 federal agencies directly responsible for the type of projects eligible.

Batt told the state and community officials, who came from 44 states, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands, that the government would be looking for projects:

- That "use local unemployed workers to the greatest extent possible."
- That can be started before June 30 and can be at least half completed within a year after the first workers are hired.
- That meet an essential public need, such as sewer or water facilities, public recreational facilities, or soil, water and forest conservation and development.

Opportunity Award Goes To Randolph

New York — Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, an AFL-CIO vice president, and Thomas J. Watson, Jr., chairman of the board of directors of the Intl. Business Machines Corp., have been named receipients of the National Urban League's 1962 Equal Opportunity Day awards.

Henry Steeger, Urban League president, said both of the men chosen for the honor have made "outstanding contributions toward the Urban League goal of equal opportunity."

The awards will be presented at the annual dinner to be held on Nov. 19, the 99th anniversary of the Gettysburg Address in which Abraham Lincoln reaffirmed the American concept that "all men are created equal."

The annual dinner always attracts many representatives of labor groups as well as leaders of industry, government and civil and fraternal organizations.

Recipients of Equal Opportunity Day awards in past years include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the National Maritime Union and Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes.

Oklahoma Labor Backs Atkinson as 'Work' Foe

Oklahoma City—Labor's battle against a so-called "right-to-work" law in Oklahoma took a long step forward when the Democratic candidate for governor, W. P. Bill Atkinson, pledged full and vigorous opposition to the anti-union measure.

Atkinson told a state COPE convention here that he was opposed to "right-to-work," would veto it if the legislature enacted it, and if peitions for a referendum were validated, would place the question on the ballot in the 1964 general election, where its chances of defeat would be greatest.

Rules for Referendum

Oklahoma law provides that a question which goes to referendum at a general election must receive a majority of all the votes cast in that election. Those who do not vote on the question itself are therefore counted as against it.

Historically many citizens casting ballots for specific candidates prefer not to vote on proposed referendum issues — or are disinterested or feel ill-informed.

Atkinson's pledge was the first public statement on the issue by the nominee. It won him the unanimous endorsement of 350 COPE delegates here.

At the same meeting the Republican candidate, Henry Bellmon, said he was "personally" opposed to "right-to-work." But he acknowledged he had signed the referendum petition of its proponents, and if the petitions were validated, would call a special election to act on them.

The validity of the "right-to-work" petitions filed earlier this year has been challenged by the state AFL-CIO and a citizens' group, the Oklahoma Committee to Preserve Free Marketing and Bargaining. Many of the signatures, the challengers claim, are fraudulent, were signed by unregistered voters, are duplications or are otherwise improper.

A ruling will be made by the Oklahoma secretary of state after the AFL-CIO has completed the time-consuming job of checking each signature.

workers on part-time for economic reasons, about 400,000 less than in August.

The total civilian labor force dropped about 500,000, reflecting the return to school of teenage workers, but at 72.7 million was up by about one million over September 1961.

A breakdown of the civilian labor force showed a drop of 2 million teenagers—300,000 more than anticipated—and a rise of 700,000 among adult women, or 100,000 more than expected. The drop in adult males of 200,000 was seasonal.

Wolfbein said there were no immediately apparent reasons for the shift in the makeup of the labor force.

Of the 3.5 million unemployed workers reported by the Labor Dept., 1.6 million were adult males, 1.2 million were adult females and 700,000 were teenagers.

Compared to a year ago the total number of unemployed in September 1962 was about 500,000 lower and the seasonally adjusted rate was down from 6.8 percent in 1961 to 5.8 in 1962.

'Americans at Work' Films Given College

Ann Arbor, Mich.—A series of 49 "Americans at Work" films, produced by the AFL-CIO and shown on television stations throughout the nation, has been donated to the University of Michigan's Audio-Visual Education Center here.

Don Stevens, education director of the State AFL-CIO, presented the motion picture series to the university, which will make the films available to Michigan schools and other groups studying occupational guidance.

87th Congress Chalks Up 'Solid' Two-Year Record

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT position in Mississippi will be "to our credit in the rest of the world," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (left) predicted as he and Mayor Willy Brandt (center) of West Berlin were interviewed by Tony Sylvester on Station WTOP-TV in Washington. Brandt lauded Meany and the American labor movement for their help to Berlin workers.

Meany, Brandt Interviewed:

Federal Action in Mississippi Seen Enhancing U.S. Stature

The role the federal government has taken in the University of Mississippi desegregation crisis in the long run "will be to our credit in the rest of the world," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany predicted in a Washington television interview.

Meany and Mayor Willy Brandt of Free Berlin were questioned by Tony Sylvester on Station WTOP-TV in Washington.

The AFL-CIO president said he did not feel that the position of labor in the South was affected by the Mississippi situation.

"We have known all along that Mississippi was really a citadel of race discrimination," he said, "and I think that when the people in the rest of the world realize that here is the power of the federal government being used . . . to protect the rights not of some great corporation, not the rights of some great segment of our society, but to protect the right of one individual to go to school . . . being used on the side of the weak against the strong, I think that in the long run the position our government is taking will be to our credit in the rest of the world."

Brandt expressed regret that the United States should "have problems of this kind in addition to all the burdens they have from the outside."

"On the other hand," he continued, "I am deeply impressed that matters of principle, even if they only concern a few citizens, are handled in the way they are handled—in other words, that so much energy is concentrated upon these problems of human rights."

He expressed the belief that many Europeans "would be inclined to look upon it in the same way."

Aid to Berlin Praised

Meany and Brandt also discussed the situation in Berlin, the German mayor praising the American labor movement for the aid it has given workers in Germany, and lauding Meany because "he has done many good things for the people of Berlin."

The great difficulty, the two men said, is the human suffering and the problems of daily life growing out of the presence of the wall the Soviet built to separate Free Berlin from its captive sector.

Brandt said he and Meany had discussed "what could be done to mobilize world opinion for certain things which could counteract the most inhuman consequences of the Wall of Shame."

The mayor said he was

Coalition Blocks Further Progress

By David L. Perlman

The 87th Congress neared its final rollcall with "a good solid record of accomplishment" from labor's viewpoint.

"It also left undone far too much essential business," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared, but "on balance" the achievements outweigh the failures.

Biemiller termed the two-year legislative record "particularly impressive in light of the paper-thin margin of support in Congress for key issues in the Kennedy Administration's program."

Detailed in Pamphlet

Reviewing the record in an AFL-CIO pamphlet entitled Labor Looks at the 87th Congress, Biemiller listed as "the most significant achievement" enactment of "the broad, new, job-creating trade expansion program." (See story, Page 11.)

Close behind it in importance was extension of minimum wage coverage to 3.6 million additional workers. It was the first time that Congress had added to Wage-Hour Act coverage instead of taking groups of workers from under the law's protection. The same bill raised the minimum wage in steps to $1.25 an hour. (See story, Page 10.)

There were major setbacks, too, as the conservative coalition exercised a veto power over some of Kennedy's top priority programs.

Some Programs Killed

Health care for the aged through social security and all new aid-to-education bills were blocked. An Administration bill to end discriminatory literacy tests was shelved after a Senate filibuster. Kennedy tried to set up a Cabinet Dept. of Urban Affairs through a reorgani-

Vote Trend In Rockies Still Hazy

By Willard Shelton

The five-state empire of the upper Rocky Mountain states this year will elect three governors, five U.S. senators and 11 members of the U.S. House. In all cases the political contests are closely fought, the patterns of probable voting are not yet clear.

This vast but sparsely populated land, where only Colorado has shared anything approaching an industrial boom and a spotty one at that, was Nixon territory in 1960 and Eisenhower territory in 1956. The Republican presidential nominee in each year swept Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Montana with their total of 21 electoral college votes.

Yet the Mountain States are by no means part of the Republican Party "heartland." Two of the three governors seeking re-election are Democrats — and the third, Republican Gov. Robert E. Smylie of Idaho, has received the endorsement of the state labor

Health Plan Ads Scored As Pre-Election 'Trick'

A national magazine advertising campaign now being conducted by Blue Cross-Blue Shield is "a blatant political trick to seek to confuse the public" before the congressional elections, according to Aime J. Forand, president of the National Council of Senior Citizens.

The advertisements state that local branches of the two organizations are "preparing to offer" expanded programs for older citizens. The council, which has 1.5 million members, immediately sought information in local communities.

"In 24 states our members were told that no such plans were available," Forand said.

"Where information was given about prospects for the future, it was reported that Blue Cross programs for older people will cost upward of $12 per month. In combination, Blue Cross-Blue Shield would cost an elderly couple about $360 a year.

"The truth is that Blue Cross-Blue Shield are nowhere near the achievement of an adequate national health care program for the aged at rates old folks can afford.

'Nothing to Offer'

"American Medical Association, Blue Cross-Blue Shield and private insurance companies have nothing to offer older people except health insurance which they cannot afford

Rail Telegraphers Win Prior Notice on Layoffs

By Eugene A. Kelly

An arbitration panel named by Pres. Kennedy has settled a five-year-old dispute over railroad job layoffs by ruling that the Chicago & North Western Railway may make layoffs but must give the Railroad Telegraphers 90 days advance notice and time for discussion of the issue.

The ruling on one of four disputed points, plus other provisions in a strike-ending agreement reached Sept. 28 by the union and the C&NW, will give the 1,000 ORT members on the line a substantial measure of protection against unrestrained "job slaughter," according to Pres. G. E. Leighty of the union.

Expressing disappointment because the award "should have been more favorable to our members," Leighty said that the ruling on three of the four points in dispute nevertheless had "produced better provisions than Mr. Heineman was willing at any time to agree to." He was referring to Ben Heineman, C&NW board chairman.

The ruling was issued by Sylvester Garrett, Pittsburgh attorney-arbitrator, who said his views did not necessarily reflect the views of either Heineman or Leighty, the

Meany Tells Legion:

Healthy Economy Essential to Survival

Las Vegas, Nev.—The economic health of the U.S. must be maintained as a "vital and important element in the arsenal of weapons that we must have if we are to survive" the Communist drive for world domination, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared here.

He told the national convention of the American Legion the security of the nation in the cold war is tied directly to the "state of our nation's economic health."

"The disagreeable fact," he said, "is that our economy is not in good shape and that the No. One problem we face in the domestic scene is the problem of long, continued high unemployment as well as our long-continued failure to use the productive capacity which we have available."

Meany told the Legionnaires "we have in this country the greatest productive machine in the world but it is only running in low gear. That's the real problem."

The nation, he stressed, must be militarily strong if it is effectively to meet the Communist threat.

"But we cannot be militarily strong," Meany emphasized, "if we are economically weak. That is what the Communists, from Lenin to Khrushchev, have banked upon —economic weakness in the United States."

The nation has the ability and the potential to build the economic strength "that will match our military strength and make us completely secure," he declared.

The U.S. can no longer afford any illusions as to the strength of the Soviet Union, nor can it afford the self-delusion that Soviet intentions and plans for world domination have changed.

"No matter what they may say through their diplomatic representatives or their propaganda media about devotion to peace and friendship with other nations, we must judge them by their deeds rather than by their words," he said.

The U.S. is the "No. One objective in the Soviet plans of world conquest," he said.

"As the most powerful single nation in the free world, we must be their No. One objective. Whether we will it or not, in the very nature of things as they are, our nation must lead the free world in this struggle."

American labor agrees with Pres. Kennedy that "we must face up to the serious situation that confronts our nation," he said.

"While it would be foolhardy indeed to underestimate the challenge and menace to our free way of life represented by Soviet military and technological progress," he added, "it would likewise be foolish to underestimate our own potential."

The U.S., said Meany, must eventually move ahead of the Soviet in space exploration, and must continue to play a leading role in the United Nations where the Communists are desperately trying to line up the uncommitted nations on their side in the world struggle.

Meredith Case Seen 'Test of Democracy'

The Meredith case symbolizes the world struggle for equality and fair play and "represents a test of the claims of democracy," Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. said in a statement supporting Pres. Kennedy's dispatch of troops to the University of Mississippi campus.

"Throughout the world, men and women of all races are looking upon what we do now in Mississippi," they said. "The are measuring our words about democracy against what we do to guarantee equal rights under law . . . Equally important, the Meredith case is a test of this nation's respect for justice."

Civil rights and equal opportunity can no longer be "denied with impunity," they said, adding that "institutions throughout the whole land must be made to adjust to this hard fact."

Earlier, Reuther as president of the Auto Workers had sent telegrams to 83 senators and Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson urging them to co-sponsor a "declaration of conscience and affirmation" of respect for law and order introduced by Senators Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and Kenneth Keating (R-N.Y.).

Pres. Arthur Rosenstock of the Newspaper Guild, noting accounts of abuse of reporters and photographers during the rioting and the slaying of Paul Guihard, French journalist, called on Mississippi law enforcement agencies to insure full protection for the press.

"The segregationists who beat up newsmen made it clear that their objective was to prevent reporting of the facts," he said. "State police who left their posts were guilty of aiding and abetting this aim as well as of failing to protect human life.

"It is Gov. Ross Barnett's responsibility to make sure that this shocking dereliction of duty is not repeated and that newsmen can fulfill their obligations in Mississippi with the same safety they are granted in every other state."

The New York Laundry Workers Joint Board of the Clothing Workers on the eve of the campus rioting passed a resolution expressing "shock" at Barnett's contempt of court and "contempt for the American Constitution, the law of the land and public opinion."

Meany Co-Chairman Of Labor Dept. Group

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been appointed co-chairman of a committee named by Pres. Kennedy to plan for the 50th anniversary of the Labor Dept. in 1963.

Serving with him will be Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and three of his predecessors, Frances Perkins, who served under the late Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, James Mitchell, appointed by former Pres. Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, Kennedy's first secretary.

Named as vice chairmen of the committee were Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

Kohler Pact Approved by Auto Workers

Kohler, Wis.—The first contract between the Auto Workers and the Kohler Co. since 1953 has been ratified, 411-45, by members of UAW Local 833.

The 1953 contract, the first ever signed by the parties, expired and a strike started in April 1954. Kohler Co. negotiators returned to the bargaining table only after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review a ruling holding the firm guilty of unfair practices and ordering reinstatement of most strikers with back pay.

The new contract calls for arbitration of grievances, seniority up to 2.5 years, seven paid holidays, improved vacation schedules, better transfer and leave-of-absence clauses, raises in night shift premiums, and numerous other changes including raises in insurance benefits, hospitalization and pensions.

Issues still awaiting decision by the National Labor Relations Board include reinstatement of 77 strike leaders and more than 1,200 other strikers. The bargaining units covers 2,568 workers.

West Berlin Morale Good, Brandt Says

"afraid" that people who feel the Berlin situation is as critical, if not more critical, than it has ever been "may be right."

"I would not be surprised," he added, "that even before this year has ended we might get some additional excitement."

The morale of West Berliners, he insisted, has "nothing wrong" with it.

'Morale Is Good'

"There may always be periods when some people get a little impatient," he said, "and why shouldn't they? There is also the possibility that some people sometimes show some signs of confusion. I think, nevertheless, there is less confusion in West Berlin than in many other places.

"Now, the morale is good. I just visited some of our factories before I left. I talked to the workers there. I talked to those who work with us in our administration and other places. There is a feeling of basic confidence. No overoptimism —there can't be a feeling of overoptimism."

"But there is a feeling of basic confidence in the belief that with the support of our friends abroad, and based upon our own will to work and to survive, we will manage to go through those difficulties which may be ahead of us."

Brandt declined to give any figures on the number of East Germans who escape to the West because "almost every single case now is a drama" and the risk is greater than before the wall was built.

SAG Establishes Professional Award

Hollywood — A Screen Actors Guild Award "for outstanding achievement in fostering the finest ideals of the acting profession and advancing the principles of good citizenship" has been established by the board of directors of the Screen Actors Guild.

National Executive Sec. John L. Dales said the award will be presented at the annual general membership meeting, always held in November. The first award will be presented at this year's meeting, to be held Nov. 12.

State Labor Backs Jamestown Strike

New York—The State AFL-CIO has voted full backing for the Furniture Workers, on strike for more than a year at the Jamestown Sterling Co. plant, and has called on Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) to implement the findings of a panel he created to help settle the strike.

State federation Pres. Raymond Corbett and Sec.-Treas. Louis Hollander, acting on instruction of delegates to the recent fifth annual state convention, have sent letters to 2,500 affiliates reminding them of the convention action and urging them to assist the Jamestown strikers "morally, financially, and in every other way possible."

The union went on strike Oct. 3, 1961, after futile attempts to win an acceptable first contract. Rockefeller named a special panel whose recommendations for settlement were rejected by the company in February 1962.

Maritime Union Listed For Non-Compliance

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has notified all federation affiliates that the National Maritime Union has been found to be in non-compliance with the decisions of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes procedures and is therefore subject to sanctions under the federation's constitution.

The finding was reached by a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council consisting of Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne and Meany. Meany said it followed refusal of the NMU "to withdraw from its efforts to supplant the Seafarers Intl. Union as the collective bargaining representative of unlicensed seamen aboard certain vessels of the Robin Line Division of Moore-McCormack lines."

Impartial Umpire David L. Cole had found the NMU's action to be a violation of the no-raiding provisions of Art. XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution. An appeal by the NMU from Cole's decision was denied by the Executive Council subcommittee. The SIU subsequently complained that the NMU had failed to comply with the ruling.

The NMU is the third union to be found in non-compliance since the adoption of the internal disputes plan as Art. XXI of the constitution at the December 1961 AFL-CIO convention. The only other union remaining in non-compliance is the Journeymen Stonecutters Association.

In his notification to affiliates, Meany said that the NMU, effective Oct. 5, 1962, would be subject to the following provisions of Sec. 15 of Art. XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution.

"1—The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

"2—The Federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

"3—The Federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution.

"4—No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article."

In C&NW Arbitration:

Rail Telegraphers Win Layoff Notice

other two panel members. Heineman concurred on all four points, Leighty on one.

Established to settle a dispute over the meaning of an emergency board recommendation to the President, the panel ruled that the C&NW must give 90 days notice of its intention to abolish jobs (the railroad wanted from 10 to 30 days; the union asked for an arbitration provision). It ruled also that:

- In cases in which the union and management fail to reach agreement on permanent discontinuance of a job, the railroad may abolish the job but must provide the job displacement benefits set forth in the Sept. 28 agreement.

Where layoffs are subject to the approval of regulatory bodies, the union is free to oppose management proposals on their merits.

- Extra employes shall be guaranteed payment for 40 hours of work if they respond to a call for work, but management may determine the appropriate size of the extra work force. If any layoff of extra workers is decided on, the railroad must serve a 90-day notice on the union.
- Employes on layoff who have claims pending before the National Railroad Adjustment Board may pursue the claim or accept the compensation provided in the Sept. 28 agreement, but may not do both.

Arbitration of the four unsettled issues had been urged by Pres. Kennedy as a way of ending a 30-day strike that had tied up the C&NW. The union agreed after conditions for return to work had been negotiated.

Leighty said the award was disappointing in some aspects and was "another illustration of the unfortunate results when government officials intervene in disputes outside the normal channels" of the Railway Labor Act.

"Disputes in this industry should be decided in the final analysis by free collective bargaining as the act provides," he said.

Before the strike started, the railroad had refused, in several years of negotiation, to write any job security protection into its contract with the union.

The Sept. 28 agreement ending the strike provided that:

- Workers transferred because of job abolishment shall have a five-year guarantee that pay and working conditions are at least as good as before the transfer. If the new job is at lower pay, the railroad must pay a displacement allowance.
- Workers whose jobs have been permanently abolished shall receive a furlough allowance equal to 60 percent of recent average earnings for periods ranging up to 60 months, based on seniority.
- Instead of a monthly furlough allowance, workers may take a lump sum separation allowance to a top of 12 months' pay.
- All these provisions are retroactive to Jan. 22, 1958, "to the extent they can properly be applied."

SP Pattern Sought

Earlier this year the union negotiated a contract with the Southern Pacific containing broader protective measures, and tried unsuccessfully to get the C&NW to offer like proposals. This week the ORT opened negotiations with the New York Central Railroad on new contract terms for about 2,000 members.

In negotiations that began almost five years ago, the C&NW had held that a union proposal on layoff protection was not a proper subject for collective bargaining. It clung to that position until the U.S. Supreme Court ruled against it. Further negotiations led to a strike notice and the appointment by the President of an emergency board.

The emergency board in a June report concluded that the rule proposed by the ORT would "seriously impair efficiency and would represent an undesirable approach to job security." At the same time it "deplored the lack of sufficient provision for problems of worker adjustment" and refused to regard "economic efficiency and employe security as mutually exclusive choices."

The board proposed that a comprehensive program of employe protection be negotiated. When the parties could not reach agreement, a strike started but was ended by the Sept. 28 agreement, which sent the four unresolved issues to binding arbitration.

General Board To Meet Nov. 14

The AFL-CIO General Board has been called to meet in Washington, D. C., Nov. 14 to consider organizing and other matters that may be referred to it by the Executive Council.

The General Board is composed of council members and the president or other principal officer of each of the AFL-CIO's national and international affiliates and its trade and industrial departments.

The federation constitution provides for an annual meeting of the board to consider policy questions submitted by the executive officers or by the Executive Council.

OCAW Strikers Defy All-Out Company Attack

Hastings, Minn.—A new Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers' union of 450 members, on strike since Aug. 27 against the Smead Mfg. Co. here, is standing firm against everything that management and strikebreakers can contrive to discourage the pickets—a tight court restraining order, a "back-to-work" movement, even a shotgun blast.

"Our picketing still is peaceful," said OCAW Dir. A. Dave Herring of District 6, St. Paul. "The company took 50 strikebreakers through the lines in a big 'back-to-work' attempt and the pickets refused to be discouraged.

"They kept marching and singing 'We Shall Not Be Moved' and 'Solidarity Forever.'"

The union, on strike for a first contract, has asked all other unions using Smead products—file folders, envelopes, and plastic zippers — to write management urging it to negotiate a "fair and decent" contract.

A District Court judge issued an order limiting pickets to five at either side of the plant entrances and restraining anyone from walking across the entrances—the first time in Minnesota history that pickets have been barred from walking activity, according to OCAW Local 6-717.

After the OCAW won bargaining rights from an unaffiliated local union last May, management restricted bargaining sessions to one day a week, four hours a day and refused to grant any type of union security. The unaffiliated union, which Local 6-717 described as a "petticoat" union, had both the union shop and dues checkoff.

When a strike deadline neared, management posted notices that those not reporting for work would be fired. The strike began, and when the number of strikebreakers going through the picket line dropped from 50 a day to 7, the company halted production for five weeks.

Police arrested 11 pickets for alleged misdemeanors. One strikebreaker was charged with second degree assault after OCAW Rep. Larry Hunter tried to stop a car which had endangered women pickets and narrowly escaped being hit by a shotgun blast.

Two negotiating meetings have been held since the walkout started, and a third one was scheduled.

Businessmen, Beck on Trial In T-H Case

New York—Two businessmen are on trial with former Teamster Pres. Dave Beck in federal court here on charges of violating the Taft-Hartley Act by a $200,000 loan to Beck from business firms controlled by the executives.

The businessmen are Burge Seymour, president of Associated Transport, Inc., and Roy Fruehauf, retired president of Fruehauf Trailer Co. of Detroit.

The case arose from evidence revealed at hearings five years ago before the McClellan special Senate committee investigating union and management malpractices.

As presented by Assistant U.S. Atty. Thomas Edwards, the case charges that Beck sought a $200,000 personal loan from Fruehauf, and that Fruehauf Trailer raised part of the money itself and obtained the rest from the Brown Equipment Co., a subsidiary of Seymour's Associated Transport.

The government says that the action of Fruehauf and Seymour in lending Beck the money violated the T-H provision forbidding transfer of gifts or "things of value" from management representatives to union officials representing their employes. Beck is charged with accepting a "thing of value."

Separate counsel for Beck, Fruehauf and Seymour have argued that the T-H language was vague, that loans between companies and union officials were not specifically forbidden until the Landrum-Griffin Act was passed in 1959, and that the government is seeking to apply this statute retroactively.

The transaction took place in 1954, seven years after passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. The trial is being conducted before U.S. Dist. Judge Wilfred Feinberg.

or pauper's oath medicine on the welfare rolls.

"Yet they are jointly engaged in a multi-million dollar campaign to prevent the advent of health care for the aged through social security."

Forand as a Democratic congressman from Rhode Island introduced the first bill for medical care for the aged through social security. He said that while the Anderson-King bill, the successor measure which was sponsored by the Kennedy Administration and backed by the AFL-CIO, was being discussed in the House Ways & Means Committee, branches of the AMA spent "millions of dollars" in protest advertising.

"Now organized medicine has demonstrated its domination over Blue Cross-Blue Shield," he added, "by persuading them to embark on a pre-election advertising campaign which seeks to deceive the public.

"If this advertising had been undertaken weeks following the election it would still be too early for the proposed local plans—but post-election advertising would not have suited the political strategy of those who oppose Pres. Kennedy's program.

"Pres. Kennedy has promised to re-submit his program to Congress early next year. Its enactment will depend on the American people returning to Congress a majority of representatives who recognize that the desperately-needed health care needs of older people can best be met through social security financing."

Four-Week Vacations Urged for All Swedes

Oslo—All Swedish workers would get four weeks of paid vacation a year under a bill drafted for presentation to Parliament by a special committee named by the government with the labor movement and the employers represented.

If accepted, the proposed holiday schedule would become effective July 1, 1963. Three days would be added to the present three-weeks' vacation in 1964, and the rest of the fourth week the following year.

Ways of Meeting Trade Competition Proposed

Agreement on policies to ensure the competitive standing of American products in the world market was indicated in a formal report to Pres. Kennedy from the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

The advisory group, made up of seven representatives from labor and seven from industry with five public members serving with Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, expressed general agreement on these points:

- Improvement of our position in competing for foreign markets would serve to "accelerate economic growth and make possible improvement of our balance of payments."
- Wage rates and other costs "must be balanced by continuing technological improvement and increased productivity," but "we are proud" of the wage standards and standard of living.
- Both management and labor in formulating wage, price and profit policies "should bear in mind the need for overall price stability" but "no precise statistical standards" can or should be set generally as to the exact level that would adversely affect us.

The report, presented to Kennedy by Hodges as chairman and Wirtz as vice chairman, also called for stronger selling efforts by business abroad, improved government and private export financing, and improvement in service facilities.

The advisers recommended that in individual industries and companies labor-managment committees should be established to "explore ways of expanding exports."

Henry Ford II, an industry member, endorsed joint discussion of export problems as part of collective bargaining but dissented from a "general endorsement" of labor-management committees dealing with the subject. He said it raised "very serious questions concerning the responsibilities of management and the role of unions."

Failure to Attend Meeting Expensive

Cleveland, O.—Members of Retail Clerks Local 880 have voted a penalty of an extra month's dues for any member who fails to attend at least one meeting in each three-month period, Pres. Cecil B. Dunlap announced.

Meany Urges Illinois AFL-CIO To Add to Liberals in Congress

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois state armory belied the so-called "off-year" atmosphere when 2,000 delegates gave Rep. Sidney R. Yates (D-Ill.) a 15-minute demonstration as he was introduced to the 5th annual Illinois State AFL-CIO convention.

All the trappings of a presidential nominating convention built up the enthusiasm of Illinois labor behind Yates' drive to oust Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R) from the Senate seat he has held since 1950.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany kicked off the political talk with a call for more liberals in the House and Senate to enact a realistic program to stem unemployment.

In a reference to Dirksen's defense of the drug industry, Meany said that drug prices are becoming so high people can't even afford headaches. He attacked those who say labor should not be in politics.

"We should be in any activity which is legal for any American citizen," he said.

Meany's call for action toward a 35-hour week to provide more jobs was echoed by Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom of the Illinois AFL-CIO.

"A 40-hour workweek is no more sacred than the 60-hour or 44-hour week," Soderstrom said.

"Probably the most effective way to handle the problem in Illinois is to refuse to sign any labor contract unless it contains some provision for a shorter workweek."

Right Wing Assailed

Soderstrom charged right-wing movements are "fellow travelers of reaction" and declared that the purposes of the John Birchers and their allies are to destroy democratic institutions, social legislation and collective bargaining.

Yates, who has represented the 9th District in Chicago for 14 years, said the records were barren of any contribution by Dirksen to the legislative history of the past 12 years, except to obstruct the work of organized labor and others seeking solutions to major social problems.

Pointing to the COPE voting records, Yates ticked off bills opposed by Dirksen: increase in the minimum wage and extension of coverage; extension of unemployment compensation benefits; manpower development and retraining, and area redevelopment, which already has produced important job gains in Illinois in the face of Dirksen's opposition.

Yates charged Dirksen was primarily responsible for defeat of Pres. Kennedy's program to help finance hospital and nursing home care for the aged through social security.

"The junior senator form Illinois [Dirksen] evidently takes pride in acting as spokesman for vested interests," Yates charged.

Douglas Calls for Help

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) made this plea to the delegates:

"Send someone to the Senate who will vote with me once in a while.

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, in his first talk to a labor organization since his advancement to cabinet rank, said he could understand the feeling that led to the call for a shorter workweek but that the Administration was opposed to this program now.

"A more appropriate answer," he said, "to what is indeed a serious problem is to stimulate the economy so that there will be a job for everyone who wants one."

Wirtz said the 87th Congress has accomplished more for workers than any Congress since 1935.

Vigorous action to hold all House seats now occupied by liberals was urged by Stanley L. Johnson, executive vice president of the State AFL-CIO and COPE chairman. Illinois lost one district through reapportionment.

State Goals Listed

Legislative goals adopted by the convention for the General Assembly session opening in January include a ban on importation of strikebreakers, collective bargaining rights for all public employes, including teachers; making it a misdemeanor when employers fail to make contributions to negotiated health and welfare plans and a state minimum wage law providing standards at least equal to those in the federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

Illinois is the only major northern industrial state without a minimum wage law.

Broadcast Employes Back Job Bias Fight

Chicago—Full support of the fair employment program recommended recently by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has been voted by the Broadcast Employes & Technicians, meeting here in convention.

Fifty-four delegates representing 6,100 NABET members also re-elected top union officers, raised the pay of officers and staff representatives, and defeated an increase in dues, now 1.3 percent of earnings.

The convention voted to support the AFL-CIO objective of a shorter work week and unanimously approved Federal Communications Commission Chairman Newton Minow's call for more UHF (ultra-high frequency) television stations.

A resolution endorsing the fair employment program of the President's committee declared:

"It is our purpose to further equal opportunity in all union services and benefits, in employment tenure, terms and conditions of employment, work assignment, promotion and transfers, and in all aspects of work training."

Some 20 changes, none of them major, were made in the union constitution. Other proposals were referred to the executive council for action.

The delegates re-elected Pres. George W. Smith for an unprecedented third term over four opponents and raised his pay from $15,000 to $16,500 a year. Sec.-Treas. Arthur Hjorth, previously serving by appointment since 1951, was elected to the post without opposition and with his salary increased from $12,285 to $13,500. Eugene Klumpp, Buffalo, defeated two other candidates for vice president.

A major convention speaker was FCC Member Robert E. Lee, who described plans for public hearings into TV programming. The commission is interested, Lee said, in possible deterioration of technical operations of radio and TV stations. Smith told the FCC member that NABET could supply evidence of such deterioration.

Lee said the future of television lies in utilization of UHF. He pointed out that the present VHF system provides only 12 channels, leaving no room for expansion. A survey indicated that the nation could support 1,200 TV stations but Lee said he favored an increase from the present 450 stations to 800.

To Aid AFL-CIO Affiliates:

35-Hour Week Drive Task Force Named

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has named a special seven-man task force to aid and advise all federation affiliates in the drive for a 35-hour workweek.

In a letter to all national and international unions, Meany wrote that the task force "is ready and anxious to assist you in any way possible in furthering this most urgent effort." He noted that the drive to establish a 35-hour week "will be a long and difficult struggle."

"But with a united effort, backed by all our resources and all the skill at our command," he added, "it can be won."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its August meeting in Chicago, adopted a policy to launch a drive for the shorter workweek and designated a special council committee headed by Meany and a task force of headquarters specialists to set up and guide the campaign. Named to the council committee were Vice Presidents George M. Harrison, O. A. Knight, Lee W. Minton and Jacob S. Potofsky.

Kirkland Selected

Meany designated Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to the president, to head the task force and named the following department directors to serve with him: Stanley H. Ruttenberg, research; Andrew J. Biemiller, legislation; Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel; Albert J. Zack, public relations; Saul Miller, publications; Lawrence Rogin, education.

Meany wrote the affiliates of the worsening unemployment problem since the council's action with a rise in the rate of the jobless to 5.8 percent.

"Even the most optimistic economic prophets no longer predict any substantial improvement," he noted.

"Moreover, the official figures, intolerable in themselves, gravely understate the true extent of unemployment. They do not include the partially unemployed—those who are involuntarily working less than a full week. Nor do they count the hundreds of thousands, young and old, who want and need jobs, but who periodically yield to discouragement and give up the search. And above all, no current statistics measure the future impact of automation, still in its infancy."

Therefore the AFL-CIO, he added, "must press" the drive for the 35-hour week "with all possible vigor." Requests for aid or advice should be addressed to Kirkland, who will coordinate the campaign and channel assignments to the appropriate departments "whose directors have been instructed to make all their facilities available for this purpose."

Kirkland, Meany said, "will report directly to me on the progress of our campaign."

Two-Front Drive

The Executive Council resolution called for a two-front drive for a shorter workweek to spread employment and pull the nation out of "economic stagnation."

The focus will be on a legislative effort to amend the Wage-Hour Act for a 35-hour week and provide double time for overtime, and on an intensified effort on the collective bargaining front to negotiate a reduction in hours without a cut in take-home pay.

Campaign in Wyoming Tied to 'Work' Issue

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Organized labor in Wyoming is carrying on a quiet, little-publicized war this fall against a quiet, little-publicized campaign to put a so-called "right-to-work" law on the books.

This guerilla war is half the political picture. The other half centers on the closely-matched race for U.S. Senate, in which incumbent Democrat J. J. Hickey, is seeking his first full term and is challenged by former Republican Gov. Milward Simpson. There are also races for governor and for Wyoming's one seat in the House.

The almost-underground nature of the "right-to-work" fight is something new. The "work" forces, perhaps because of drubbings in several other states, are not beating the drums loudly. Instead they are holding small workshops and discussion meetings with groups they think will be receptive.

Their objective is to secure election of sufficient anti-labor state legislators to (1) pass a law banning the union shop or (2) submit to the people two years hence a constitutional amendment to accomplish this end. The legislation would require a simple majority in both houses plus the governor's signature; the constitutional submission would require a two-thirds vote of each house.

Candidates for Governor Mum

Labor is countering, and the fight is concentrated in the House, where the prospects are considered fair. To block a "work" bill, all the Democrats likely to be elected plus half a dozen Republicans will be needed. The fight is genuinely bipartisan, which in this area fits the tradition in which pro- and anti-labor votes have broken across party lines.

A friendly governor could veto any "right-to-work" bill, but neither candidate for that office has indicated if he would do so.

Labor has endorsed Democratic Acting Governor Jack R. Gage, who stepped up nearly two years ago to succeed Hickey, who as governor appointed himself to the U.S. Senate upon the death of Republican Sen.-elect Keith Thompson. Gage is opposed by Clifford P. Hasen, Republican, a rancher.

Hickey, who in 1961-62 sessions of Congress has voted right eight times and wrong twice according to national COPE's tally, has a close race on his hands.

In his day, Simpson has been one of Wyoming's most popular office holders, but in his last term as governor (1954-58) made enemies for assorted reasons. Hickey defeated his bid for re-election as governor in 1958. Hickey's campaign has gotten off to a slow start this year, however, and much depends on his ability to campaign aggressively in the last weeks.

In the state's only race for Congress, a young Democratic Cheyenne attorney, Lou Mankus, is running against Republican Rep. William Henry Harrison, who has voted wrong 10 times and right once according to national COPE. Harrison's name is magic in Wyoming, where politics tend to follow a personality-line rather than party-line.

Everybody Running Scared:

Carroll Given Edge In Colorado Race

Denver—Everybody is "running scared" in Colorado this year, and labor forces are seeking to return to Washington a congressional delegation as good or better than the present contingent and to state office the labor-endorsed incumbent governor and legislative majority.

Democratic Sen. John A Carroll, with 40 right votes and no wrong votes on the COPE tally, is seeking his second term. He is opposed by an aggressive Republican campaigner, Rep. Peter H. Dominick, who in his one term has voted wrong 11 times and right zero times by the same reckoning.

Carroll has the advantage of six years of incumbency, an increased acceptance among the state's more conservative voters, and the unwritten but nevertheless apparent law that Colorado likes to send to Washington one senator from each party. Sen. Gordon R. Allott is not up for election this year. Labor supports Carroll with enthusiasm and genuine affection.

The visible straws-in-the-wind give Carroll a slight edge. But politics are ominously quiet in Colorado this year; anything could happen, both political parties admit.

McNichols Favored

In the race for governor, the predictions favor incumbent Democrat Stephen McNichols, but only because he is a tremendously competent politician and campaigner. He is carrying a great burden because, with the support of a Democratic majority in the legislature, he pushed through a sharp increase in state income taxes three years ago.

McNichols proved his courage and forthrightness by spending money to upgrade state school aid, colleges and institutions and raising the taxes to finance the improvements. More than 88 percent of the money available is spent in those fields. Impressive improvements are being made in all three.

Ironically, McNichols is attacked by Republicans because he has built up a cash surplus in the state treasury and placed capital construction on a pay-as-you-go basis. These same Republicans cry that the federal government should get out of the red and get on a cash basis.

His Republican opponent, John A. Love, is a handsome newcomer, Colorado Springs attorney. His campaign stickers feature the slogan "I'm for Love—Isn't Everyone?" and at rallies scantily clad lovelies from modeling schools parade around flaunting this slogan. The Republicans gave Love a landslide victory in the GOP primary over David A. Hamil, an experienced public servant.

Labor has been working fairly diligently in its COPE efforts. Registration is better than two years ago, and registration efforts were carried on until the last moment among union members in some areas.

Even Split in Hand

The state's four congressional districts are now split evenly between the two parties. The two Democrats, Representatives Byron G. Rogers of Denver and Wayne Aspinall of the western area, are considered certain of re-election.

Veteran Republican Rep. Donald G. Brotzman of the northeastern district is conceded to be ahead, although Democrat Conrad McBride, a university professor, rolled up a substantial vote in a three-way primary.

In the southeastern district, which should be liberal Democratic, Republican incumbent Rep. William B. Chenoweth is opposed by Albert J. Tomsic, speaker of the state House and a hard campaigner.

Chenoweth has a voting record of 35 wrong, 13 right, by COPE standards. Although Democrats are free of intraparty feuds in the district this year, Chenoweth looks formidable still. He has given skillful attention to the affairs of his district.

AS THE ELECTION CAMPAIGNS sweep into high gear, candidates go to union halls and plant gates to talk to the voters. At left, above, a member of Auto Workers Local 306, Wilbert ("Happy") Heliste, greets Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson, who is running for re-election against George Romney, Republican, in Michigan. At right, California's Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown discusses his race for re-election with workers at the hiring hall of Hod Carriers Local 300 in Los Angeles. Brown's opponent is former Vice Pres. Nixon, seeking a political comeback.

body's Committee on Political Education.

Five of the 10 incumbent senators are Republicans, five Democratic. Seven of the 11 incumbent members of the House are Democrats.

Pres. Kennedy in his race against former Vice Pres. Nixon sharply reduced the GOP pluralities that Gen. Eisenhower rolled up in 1956 against Adlai E. Stevenson. Ballot-scratching is commonplace in all the Mountain States regardless of presidential voting.

Democratic Sen. John A. Carroll of Colorado squeaked through to a narrow victory in 1956 despite a 130,000 plurality for Eisenhower in the state. In Montana in 1960, Democratic Sen. Lee Metcalf won by 4,000 votes while Nixon carried the state by 7,000 over Kennedy.

The overriding disputed issue in the entire region this year as candidates for the Senate and the House face the voters is support for or opposition to Pres. Kennedy's domestic program. This fits well into the Mountain States' political tradition; historically the Democrats who win elections are liberals and the Republicans elected tend to go along with the GOP's dominantly conservative element from the Middle West. The battlelines between the candidates of the respective parties in 1962 are clearly drawn.

There are local issues involved in each state, of course, and in many cases there are issues of personality and individual appeal. In some cases, as in Idaho's contest for governor, the local issues seem likely to prove decisive.

It is generally conceded here as elsewhere that the voters approve of the way Kennedy has handled his office; it is considered certain that if he were running against Nixon this year he would score far more heavily.

Yet few candidates of either party seem to be assured winners. One example is Democratic Sen. Frank Church of Idaho, who generally votes with his party's liberal wing. Another is Republican Rep. William Henry Harrison of Wyoming, who votes with his party's conservative wing.

'Work' Forces Active

Labor strength in the Mountain States varies widely, depending on the concentration of industry and mining. But in all the states labor has worked to spread the records of the candidates among citizens to increase the registration and turnout of voters.

In the past several years "right-to-work" forces have been exceedingly active in Colorado and Idaho, Montana and Utah, and they are expanding their penetration to Wyoming. Labor in self-defense has increased its own political activity, on the state legislative level as well as in congressional and statewide elections.

Attack Renewed

In 1958 the "work" propagandists managed to get referendum proposals for anti-union shop laws on the Colorado and Idaho ballots. The proposal was snowed under in Colorado and beaten in Idaho, but there is constant renewal of the agitation in state legislatures.

This is a land of cattle and lumber, of wheat-farming and beets, of a few expanding industries and a good deal of mining. Some farmers and ranchers are disaffected, as is not uncommon, and have a feeling of uncertainty as the Kennedy Administration pushes toward a new farm program that will cut the cost of price supports by pulling production closer into balance.

Denver, largest city in the entire region, is growing rapidly and its suburbs have pushed far out. Yet only a short distance away, in southeastern Colorado, there is substantial unemployment that is becoming chronic.

Most political observers in the region expect no landslide shift of political power in the direction of either party this year.

Early Utah Polls Hint Trend to Democrats

Salt Lake City—The Democratic candidate for the Senate in Utah, two-term House member David S. King, is seeking to knock out Sen. Wallace F. Bennett, Republican conservative who once served as president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Strongly backed by the State AFL-CIO, King overturned a normally heavy Republican majority in Salt Lake City to win his House seat in 1958 and re-election in 1960. He was a beneficiary of the 1958 tide toward the Democrats that brought the party a net House gain of 47 seats.

Running against Bennett, he is generally considered to be facing an uphill fight; the Democrats have won only one Senate race in Utah in the past 13 years, and that came when Bracken Lee, now Salt Lake City's mayor, split the party in 1958 by running as an independent against the incumbent Republican, Sen. Arthur V. Watkins, and Democrat Frank Moss. Moss was elected in the three-way race.

Lee, a highly controversial figure who has campaigned against foreign aid and federal income taxes, tried to make it to the Senate again this year. Charging that Bennett wasn't conservative enough, despite a record listing him on the Committee on Political Education scorecard as having voted only three times in 12 years for labor-backed bills, while voting against them 46 times, Lee fought a hard primary contest.

Democrats went into the Republican primary in large numbers, to vote both for and against Lee. When Bennett won, Lee, however, accepted the results without running again as an independent.

The issue in the King-Bennett race is a straightout contest on the Kennedy program, with King as an advocate. In his two House terms he has a voting record almost the opposite of Bennett's, and is credited by COPE with 19 votes for public-interest or labor bills, only 2 against.

Both King and his party have been encouraged by early polls showing that a Democratic year may be in the making. The state's 1st Congressional District was won two years ago by Democratic Rep. Morris B. Petersen; his plurality was razor-thin but the normal Republican majority is overwhelming.

King's personal advantage is that he is an attractive and effective campaigner while Bennett impresses most voters as aloof if not cold.

Gambling Issue Clouds Campaigns in Idaho

Boise, Ida.—Two liberal Democrats are running for the Senate in this state where the population is small, the victory margins often narrow, and the political situation unusually confused.

The confusion arises from the intrusion of a gambling issue by Vernon K. Smith, the Democratic candidate for governor against incumbent Republican Gov. Robert E. Smylie.

Smith, campaigning as an advocate of "county option" authority to legalize open commercial gambling, won the Democratic primary in a multiple-candidate race. He also stirred up a hornet's nest of controversy.

Former Pres. Harry S. Truman entered the state to campaign for the Kennedy program and bluntly denounced Smith's pro-gambling platform as a "terrible" thing for Idaho. Smith retaliated by charging that Truman had "deserted the Democratic Party," but the effect was to weaken his already shaky prospects of unseating Smylie.

The Idaho AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, disturbed over both the gambling issue and a strong suspicion that Smith was unreliable in the state's perennial "right-to-work" battle, endorsed Smylie for re-election as an able and trustworthy governor.

It also gave a strong endorsement to the two Democratic candidates for the U. S. Senate, Sen. Frank Church, who is seeking re-election to a second term, and Rep. Gracie Pfost, a five-term member of the House. Mrs. Pfost gave up what was for her a safely Democratic congressional district to run for the Senate vacancy created by the death last July of the late Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R).

The issue in the senatorial races is the Kennedy program.

Church in his first six years is rated by COPE as having voted on 28 rollcalls in favor of proposals labor considered in the public interest, only four times against. Mrs. Pfost's scorecard shows 43 votes that labor believes were public-interest votes, only 3 negative.

Church's opponent, Jack Hawley, is a lawyer and former state representative listed as a Republican conservative. The Republican nominee against Mrs. Pfost is former Gov. Len B. Jordan, who was appointed by Smylie to fill the Dworshak seat pending the election.

The decisive battleground is the 2nd (southern) Congressional District, which is traditionally Republican but which went Democratic in 1960 when it elected Rep. Ralph R. Harding, now seeking a second term.

Ohio Democrats Back 'Little Wagner Act'

Columbus, O.—Delegates to the Ohio state Democratic Party convention here have adopted a platform calling for a state minimum wage law and a "little Wagner Act" which would guarantee collective bargaining rights to workers not covered by the federal National Labor Relations Act.

Other labor-proposed platform planks adopted by the convention include improvements in unemployment benefits and workmen's compensation and strong, enforceable civil rights programs covering the fields of jobs, homes, financing, education and recreation.

Neither Logic nor Reason

THERE IS A PARALLEL of sorts between the die-hard racists of Mississippi and the die-hard reactionaries of the National Association of Manufacturers: The racists are willing to use violence and insurrection to stop the progress of civil rights; the reactionaries are willing to stir up industrial warfare to stop the progress of social justice.

There is neither logic nor reason to explain either group. When most of the nation has accepted—albeit in some areas reluctantly—the admission of Negroes to colleges and universities, Mississippi racists choose to defy the courts and the law. When most of the nation has accepted trade unions as an essential part of American life—albeit not in all areas—the reactionary leadership of the NAM chooses to launch a new campaign to weaken and destroy unions, a path almost certain to stir unrest and dissension.

The fate of the NAM campaign will be the fate of the racists. The NAM can no more sell the nation a program to destroy unionism than the racists in Mississippi could sell a plan to destroy the American judicial system.

In a very real sense the NAM campaign against trade unions smacks of the young thugs who threw rocks at U.S. marshals.

Danger Signal

THE FAILURE of the unemployment rate to drop in September indicates a potential worsening in the economic outlook for the rest of the year.

After a half-year of averaging out at 5.5 percent, the jobless rate moved to 5.8 percent in August and stayed there in September, a month when it normally is near the year's low point.

There were a few encouraging areas in the Labor Dept.'s latest report. For the first time in two years the number of workers unemployed 27 weeks or longer dropped below 500,000. The actual number of unemployed at 3.5 million, a drop of more than 400,000 from the preceding month, also was bright spot.

But the fact that on a seasonally adjusted basis nearly 6 out of every 100 persons seeking work in September could not find it, is a danger signal that cannot be ignored. If the current 5.8 percent unemployment rate continues into January 1963, the actual number of unemployed may reach 4:7 million.

The September report points up also the serious problem of securing and holding a job among teenagers. Of the 3.5 million counted as jobless in September, 700,000 were teenagers, a figure that many economists consider sharply understated. A large number of youngsters are not actively seeking jobs because they believe there are none to be had.

The same report points up also the large amount of unemployment among adult females, with 1.2 million of the 3.5 million jobless in this category. This also is considered an understated figure of actual joblessness as many women have given up hunting jobs that they want and need and are no longer counted in the labor force.

The fact that adult women and teenagers make up more than half the 3.5 million unemployed in September underscores the danger to the nation's economy. Most of these unemployed, as well as those who have given up hunting jobs, are supplementary wage earners who help bolster the demand for all types of products and services.

Their high rate of unemployment—6.1 percent for teenagers and 13.2 percent for adult women—could have an important impact on the economy's ability to achieve a rate of growth necessary to maintain full production and high employment.

38 Ratifications Needed:

Poll Tax Amendment New Step In Quest of Universal Suffrage

HISTORY WAS MADE when the 87th Congress approved a constitutional amendment which would outlaw the payment of a poll tax or any other levy for the privilege of voting in federal elections.

Before the resolution becomes the 24th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution it must be ratified by a minimum of 38 state legislatures in the next seven years.

It is true that the poll tax is not the great "cause" issue it was a quarter of a century ago when bills to ban it were first introduced in Congress.

Today only five states—Mississippi, Alabama, Virginia, Arkansas and Texas—require such taxes for voting in federal elections. In the period just prior to World War II almost all southern states used the poll tax as a means to limit the Negro vote. Literary tests and similar "qualifications" are more commonly erected for this purpose now.

However, what cannot be overlooked is that every action taken to assure universal suffrage is an important step toward achieving the goals set forth in the Declaration of Independence.

This great document proclaimed that "all men are created equal" and that they are "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights" under governments "deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

At the time this was written and for many years thereafter there were rigid property qualifications for voting. Earlier there were even religious requirements.

In the early years of the republic, ownership of property was a prerequisite to voting in almost all the states. John Adams, for example, expressed the ruling class conviction of the time that government is, and ought to be, founded on property and that only those who have sufficient property to ensure their support of the established order can be allowed to vote with safety.

The second president frequently used the argument that the workingman was dependent on his employer and would vote as his employer willed. This, Adams felt, was a threat to the landed aristocracy.

However, early unionists who believed in the revolutionary cry of "No Taxation Without Representation" fought for the right to vote.

The first breakthrough came in Massachusetts in 1820 when a new law was adopted which permitted taxpayers to vote. However, to counter this, an effort, led by Daniel Webster, was made to require property ownership to vote for or be a member of the state senate.

In New York, too, as property qualifications were knocked down in electing members of the lower house of the legislature, conservatives insisted on the right to restrict membership in and voting for the upper house to property owners.

The debate in both New York and Massachusetts was closely patterned after the present-day fight for a "fair share" vote for urban workers.

CHIEF JUSTICE JAMES KENT of the New York Supreme Court expressed fear of universal suffrage in connection with New York City, saying:

"Now, sir, I wish those who have an interest in the soil to retain the exclusive possession of a branch of the legislature, as a stronghold . . . in which no laws could be passed without the free consent of the owners of the soil."

Gradually, with trade unions playing a leading role, property qualifications for voting were being wiped out. Other restrictions, such as residence, taxpaying, literacy, were established, but with each change the goal of universal suffrage was a little nearer.

After the Civil War the 14th Amendment legally enfranchised the Negro although many roadblocks were placed in the way of Negro voting, especially in southern states. The woman's suffrage movement, which started in the mid-1800s, reached fruition after World War I with the passage of the 19th Amendment to the Constitution.

We still have a long way to go before we reach the goal of the Declaration of Independence, but each time we knock down a roadblock to voting we have made just that much more progress. Great strides have been made and are being made in wiping out property qualification. There are still many who insist that geography, for example, should determine at least one house of the state legislature. This is a holdover concept of the old property idea.

The 87th Congress refused to meet the literacy block to voting and many southern states use this and a wide variety of other means to discourage Negroes from voting. Also, while progress in federal elections is being made, many states still refuse to accept the concept of universal suffrage in state and local elections. The fight must continue, for the ballot is the weapon that controls our government. The idealism expressed in 1776 must become the reality of our time. (PAI).

Morgan Says:

This Is an Item That Should Hit Everyone Right Where He Lives

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

ALL KINDS OF THINGS are going on in Los Angeles County all the time. Like take the case of the aroused real estate man from Pasadena. Oh sure, here was Kennedy back in Washington, fooling around with Berlin and Cuba, with Gov. Barnett of Mississippi and men in outer space.

Morgan

And here was Nixon worrying himself sick all over the state of California trying to find a way for people to strike out at communism in their daily lives, a way which — hopefully — would at the same time knock the former vice president back into political orbit. Here even was Pat Brown, the governor, trying to cut an incisive image of forcefulness and concerned about how all those other items would affect what California voters would do at the polls. But this Pasadena guy had a real crisis on his hands.

A Jap—that was the way he put it—a Jap, he discovered, was about to move into his street.

He didn't waste any time. He faced right up to the problem, four-square and true-blue and in the democratic American way. He called an indignation meeting of his neighbors. "We simply can't stand still for this," he said. "It will ruin our property values. Besides, those Japs were killing American boys in World War II."

There wasn't exactly what you would call unanimity of opinion at the indignation meeting and at first there was some confusion over what was going to be on the agenda. One rumor got around that maybe the outraged realtor was proposing a levy of volunteer troops to dispatch to the aid of Barnett. Anyhow, when somebody called one neighbor, an ex-social worker, a Stevensonian and now a Kennedy Democrat, her son answered and said:

"Mother's gone off to some kind of White Citizens Council meeting."

Meanwhile, back at the rancorous rally in the neighborhood, the former social worker was coming through loud and clear.

"Look Stanley," she told the businessman (whose name is not really Stanley), "I don't happen to believe that the quality of my neighbors depends on the cast of their eyes or the color of their skin or whether they worship idols or Jehovah. I believe in the Second Commandment which says 'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself,' and I for one am ready to welcome this Japanese couple."

"But that is not what Christ meant," protested another woman, adding shrilly, "and don't you try to brainwash us with the Bible."

Stanley himself had hit upon a plan of action, inspired by his patriotic apprehension over the awful threat to neighborhood property values.

THERE WAS, it developed, a Jew who had already bid on the property in question—a house being sold by a couple who were divorcing. Indeed the Jew, a doctor and an instructor of medicine at the Seventh Day Adventist College, had already put down a deposit in the belief that he had actually bought the house for approximately $34,000. Then somebody quoted $39,000—the owners' original price—to the Japanese physicist who accepted it. Stanley's idea was to raise the difference in the neighborhood so the Jew could get the place.

"I never thought I'd live to see the day," wryly observed another resident, himself a college professor, "when people would be encouraging a Jew to move into Pasadena."

But despite opposition which was not anti-Semitic but anti-foul play, Stanley and his cohorts determined to press ahead. One neighbor called on the Japanese wife and appealed to her to abandon the deal out of a sense of "fairness" to the residents who had so much invested in their homes. Another man telephoned her pleading with her to understand that the threatened shrinkage in the value of his home would jeopardize the security of his old age.

By this time the drift of developments had been encountered by a fellow from the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker outfit, who advised the Jewish doctor, who, needless to say, was aghast. He in turn made contact with the ex-social worker. They exchanged expressions of distress over the situation and he made it plain that, much as he had originally coveted the house, he could under no circumstances be the pawn in Stanley's plan.

As things stood at last count, the Japanese couple after meeting and delighting at least some of their potential neighbors were going ahead with their purchase of the house and the street was preparing to receive them.

It seems to me that this item ought to strike everybody right where he lives.

Labor News Conference:

Schnitzler Calls for Special Aids To Assist Women Who Work

IF WOMEN ARE to be enabled to make their full contribution to society, outdated prejudices will have to be swept away and special aids like child care centers and educational courses will have to previded, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler has declared.

Schnitzler, a member of Pres. Kennedy's Commission on the Status of Women, was interviewed about the commission's work on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program, broadcast by the Mutual Broadcasting System. Reporters Marjorie Hunter of the New York Times and Eve Edstrom of the Washington Post posed the questions.

Schnitzler pointed out that some 24 million women now hold jobs and an estimated 24 or 25 million are involved in a variety of "community activities."

"Now when we talk about a woman in employment," he said, "if she is a married woman and has a family, there is a reason for her working, more often than not. It is an economic reason and we have not done the job that we could do in developing proper child care centers."

He conceded that some women work to provide their families with luxuries, but added that preliminary data indicate that most women work to supplement their husband's earnings.

"Did we forget about the widows; did we forget those who are supporting mothers and fathers or some of their elder relatives?" he added.

SCHNITZLER POINTED out that prejudices against working women have been weakening both as they have proven themselves in all types of work at all levels and as they assert themselves and demand recognition and equal treatment.

"I think you have progressed to the point," he said, "where you can stand up and not ask for any special favors but say that you are entitled to these conditions because you earned them."

"We thank you," replied Miss Hunter.

Schnitzler noted that organized labor always has opposed the use of women as cheap labor, "has always stood for equal pay for equal work."

Schnitzler said he expected the commission's recommendations, due before next Oct. 1, will "shock" those "mired" in a "no change" attitude, and expressed confidence that the women of America would use "the necessary muscle" to pass corrective laws.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

DETROIT—IN THIS YEAR when elections of state governors have taken on unusual significance, the race in Michigan is second in attention-getting qualities only to that in California. It is George Romney, the motor car manufacturer, for the Republicans against Democratic incumbent Gov. John B. Swainson.

Romney represents what might be called the Michigan GOP's Sunday punch. He has been well publicized for years as the executive and salesman who sparked what is called the "compact" car revolution. He entered politics with a dash and verve, stating loudly that he didn't even know whether he was a Republican or a Democrat, but that he certainly thought the political situation in the state should be improved. He organized a "citizens" group to improve things, then he became active in state constitutional revision, and then he announced his desire to run for governor.

Swainson, who is seeking a second two-year term, entered the statehouse as the successor to G. Mennen Williams, now assistant secretary of state for public affairs, who served six straight terms as governor. The results of the campaign this year, if the Democratic administration survives, will be to establish Swainson as a political force in his own right.

THE POLITICAL FACTS in Michigan set it apart. The state is economically dominated by the automotive industry, which in turn means a great many workers in unions. And the Republican Party in the state has been dominated by its small-town and rural leaders, heavily entrenched in the state legislature, embittered by their loss of power 14 years ago to the Williams organization based in Wayne County (Detroit) and its surging industrial suburbs.

For nearly a decade and a half, the Republican state legislature has fought proposals by Williams and Swainson to modernize the state tax system, to improve revenues and social services, to repeal burdensome and expensive levies that are outmoded. The legislature blocked every effort.

Romney came along with a plan that looked remarkably like the Williams and Swainson plans. Once again the legislature turned down the Swainson proposals—this time by a single vote in the state senate. And once again the Democratic governor was accused of creating a fiscal "stalemate."

Romney is like all other Republican candidates of the past several elections in hammering away at the "stalemate" theme.

By a process of logic that is familiar only in political life, the cure for the "stalemate," he indicates, is not to change the legislature that failed, but to throw out the governor who made proposals the Republican candidate himself endorses.

THE GOP THOUGHT it had picked a winner when it nominated Romney, who was getting national publicity as a potential presidential candidate in 1964 before he had announced for governor.

The Detroit News poll, which is a mail-ballot poll with a reputation for reflecting accurately the probable division of votes, gave the Swainson camp a lift when it showed Swainson and Romney running neck and neck early in October. The Democrats got a further lift when the governor began slugging at Romney in a two-fisted debate before Detroit's celebrated Economic Club.

The next night the two candidates met face to face again in the first of three scheduled half-hour television debates. The newspapers called it a standoff.

An example of the power of the automobile companies was revealed when Henry Ford II, just returned from Europe, acknowledged that Ford lobbyists had helped beat the governor's compromise tax plan in the legislature.

Swainson, intent on getting the program through the Senate, telephoned Ford last April and said the only obstacle to passage was Ford's intense opposition. He asked the motor company executive to "call off" the lobbyists. Ford refused.

In his later explanation he remarked: it would have been injurious "to one segment of the economy." Actually, it would have given Michigan business generally a net reduction in taxes of $71 million.

'Revolution' in Los Angeles:

Doctors Shift Views On Labor Movement

LOS ANGELES—A minor revolution in attitudes on a major subject seems to have occurred among leaders of organized medicine here.

There may be no basic change in their continued resistance to such proposals as health care for the aged through social security, but officials of the Los Angeles County Medical Association said their ideas about union representatives have undergone a radical upheaval.

It is still too soon to say there will be no shift back in the opposite direction, but union spokesmen here hope the surprising comments of the LACMA reflect a real understanding of union goals among physicians here and that this understanding may spread to other doctors around the nation.

A group of union leaders recently began a series of meetings with representatives of LACMA.

In the latest issue of the LACMA Bulletin, Dr. Richard A. Taw, secretary-treasurer, said in describing the sessions:

"Because of an ingrained and not unjustified belief that these people were 'the enemy', they (the union leaders) were approached with caution.

"The sincerity of the doctors was questioned, but their (labor's) willingness to cooperate and find solutions to mutual problems was evident.

"These men from labor are astute and extremely well informed, and the quality of the men at these meetings was most impressive.

"Labor is much better informed about medicine's failures than we are.

"We see and are in contact with the people that we help and whose lot we improve. They are in contact with those we miss and areas in which we fail."

Taw said it is not the purpose of the LACMA's Research and Planning Committee "to convince all segments of society that we have the answer to all of medicine's difficulties."

Instead, he said, the committee's object has been "primarily to explore the problems and share the experience of other groups interested in community health (and) any solution must be satisfactory to the entire community or it will not endure."

"We must learn first before we can diagnose and treat," he said.

Noting a union suggestion that a subcommittee "of top men in each area represented sit down and bargain" until an acceptable answer is found, the LACMA officer said "This is a very attractive and sensible suggestion."

The medical organization, one of the more conservative such groups in the nation, also met with representatives of management involved in union health and welfare programs.

Taw said that "several of the management representatives were extremely pessimistic, and a few were definitely antagonistic to the medical profession and did not hesitate to express their views."

After the session, however, the doctor said that management was "convinced of the sincerity of the doctors."

Intl. Vice Pres. E. R. White of the Machinists, who attended the session with the doctors, called the meetings "most helpful and constructive."

He emphasized that organized labor is still "very much in favor of such measures as the Anderson-King bill, and our concern basically is to bring all the miracles of modern medicine to all the citizens of this nation."

"We are hopeful," he said, "that further meetings with the doctors may bring us further toward this goal."

Other union officials at the meeting included Ira L. Osborn of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers, who filled in for W. J. Bassett, secretary of the Los Angeles County Labor Federation, and representatives of several affiliates, including building trades unions and the Auto Workers.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Trying to Be The Whole Child Can Take a Lot Out of a Kid

By Jane Goodsell

WELL, HERE WE ARE again, faced with the important task of planning the children's after-school activities. Should little Ermintrude take ballet lessons? Piano lessons? Interpretive dancing? Tap dancing? Horseback riding? Ice skating?

Should Junior sign up for the weight-lifting class? Should he take ballroom dancing? Judo? Golf? Chess? Skin-diving? Wood carving?

Time was when kids used to go home after school because there wasn't any place else for them to go. After grabbing something to eat from the icebox, they spent the rest of the afternoon doing whatever kids used to do. As long as they kept out of trouble and showed up in time for dinner, nobody paid much attention to them.

But today it is every parent's duty to develop The Whole Child; and there is a dazzling array of constructive activities, all designed to transform the younger generation into well-rounded, socially-integrated, physically-coordinated, culturally-oriented individuals.

The problem of which lessons to give which child is as puzzling as the riddle of the chicken and the egg. For those of you whose heads are a-whirl with confusion, here are some guideposts to clarify the situation:

Reasons why a girl should take piano lessons:

1. Because she has musical ability that should be developed.

2. Because she has no musical ability and ought to develop some.

3. Because there's a piano in the house, and it might as well be used by somebody.

4. Because there isn't a piano in the house, but a small spinet would look lovely in the bay window.

Reasons why a boy should take tennis lessons:

1. Because he's so poorly coordinated.

2. Because he's so well coordinated that he might turn out to be another Pancho Gonzales.

3. Because the kid next door is taking tennis lessons.

4. Because he was given a tennis racket for his birthday.

Reasons why a girl should take dancing lessons:

1. Because she's so graceful.

2. Because she's so awkward.

3. Because her mother took dancing lessons when she was a girl.

4. Because her mother was deprived of the opportunity to take dancing lessons when she was a girl.

Reasons why a child should take riding lessons:

1. Because she's so fond of horses.

2. Because she's scared of horses.

3. Because she has a free Thursday afternoon now that she's given up ballet.

4. Because she can wear her sister's outgrown jodhpurs.

Labor Score Card on 87th Congress

ISSUE AND AFL-CIO POSITION	CONGRESSIONAL ACTION
TRADE EXPANSION: With 4 million U.S. jobs dependent on exports and imports, the AFL-CIO was an early supporter of Pres. Kennedy's bold trade expansion program keyed to breaking down tariff barriers erected by European Common Market countries. The Administration program included realistic adjustment help to workers and industries hurt by increased imports. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, the first public witness at House hearings, emphasized that labor's support would be withdrawn if Congress weakened provisions authorizing special unemployment and retraining benefits for workers.	Congress gave the President virtually everything he asked for, including power to negotiate lower duties covering broad categories of goods with the Common Market. Tariffs can be cut up to 50 percent on a reciprocal basis over a five-year period, and can be eliminated entirely for products where the U.S. and the Common Market nations account for 80 percent of world trade. The adjustment assistance, retained in the bill despite conservative opposition, authorizes a federal allowance equal to 65 percent of average wages, payable for up to 52 weeks of joblessness. Persons over 60 and workers being retrained would receive payments over a longer period.
MINIMUM WAGE: One of labor's top-priority goals as the 87th Congress convened was to raise the $1 minimum wage and extend coverage of the wage-hour law. This was needed, the AFL-CIO Executive Council said, "to bring a measure of economic justice to workers and to add to the purchasing power on which economic recovery depends."	With strong support from Kennedy, Congress last year raised the minimum wage in automatic steps to $1.25 an hour, and extended coverage to 3.6 million previously unprotected workers—the first expansion of jurisdiction in the law's history. Although the conservative coalition in the House drastically weakened the committee bill, the Senate repaired most of the damage.
AID TO DEPRESSED AREAS: While unemployment has been high nationwide, the heaviest suffering has been in areas where plants have been closed, mining discontinued and where joblessness has persisted despite business upturns. AFL-CIO had called for a "bold program" of help.	Two months and 10 days after Kennedy took office, he was able to sign an area development bill authorizing federal funds to help communities and to finance retraining for workers. Almost identical bills had been vetoed by former Pres. Eisenhower in 1958 and 1960.
MANPOWER RETRAINING: Automation's impact on unemployment, brought out by labor witnesses in congressional testimony, pointed up need for retraining of workers with obsolete or inadequate skills for jobs available.	The Senate in the first session passed a labor and Administration-supported bill introduced by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) but the House Rules Committee blocked action until the 1962 session. The final bill authorized a three-year, $435 million program, with workers entitled to unemployment benefits for up to 52 weeks of training.
UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION: Administration and AFL-CIO agreed on need for improved federal standards of unemployment compensation and supported McCarthy-King bill to set a floor under benefits of 50 percent of normal wages up to two-thirds of the average of statewide wages. There was also an immediate need for continuing benefits to persons who had exhausted their rights under inadequate state programs.	One of the first Administration bills approved by Congress was an emergency one-year federal program extending jobless benefits by up to 13 weeks. The program expired last spring, however, and the House Ways & Means Committee—with a crowded agenda—failed to take up the McCarthy-King bill. By a one-vote margin, the committee rejected a bill to extend the temporary program.
PUBLIC WORKS: Labor early gave strong support to the Clark-Blatnik program of stepped-up public works spending as a weapon against current unemployment and future recessions. Kennedy, who initially asked a massive stand-by program to be used if joblessness increased, agreed that an immediate emergency public works step-up was needed.	Congress authorized a $900 million immediate public works program to be channeled into both urban and rural areas of heavy unemployment. The money is to be used both for federal projects and for matching grants-in-aid to step up state and local public works. The AFL-CIO Executive Council estimated the bill could provide as many as 300,000 new jobs, directly and through stimulation to the economy.
HEALTH CARE FOR AGED: The AFL-CIO, which led the fight for the original Forand bill, actively pressed for the Administration-backed Anderson-King bill to provide hospital and nursing care protection for those over 65 through the social security system.	The House Ways & Means Committee held hearings, but supporters were unable to get the committee majority needed to bring the bill out. In the Senate, southern Democrats joined with Republicans to kill the measure, 52-48, even though it had been modified in an effort to pick up more GOP votes.
LABOR LEGISLATION: The AFL-CIO had called for hearings on modification of the Landrum-Griffin and Taft-Hartley Acts, closing of loopholes in the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act, inclusion of the cost of fringe benefits in computing prevailing wages under the Davis-Bacon Act, and a requirement that contractors on federally-assisted projects pay overtime rates after 40 hours a week. At the same time, anti-labor groups pressed for legislation to put unions under anti-trust restrictions, outlaw strikes in defense-related industries and transportation. The AFL-CIO also supported an Administration reorganization plan to speed NLRB decisions.	Congress put teeth into the Welfare-Pension Plan Disclosure Act by giving investigative and enforcement powers to the secretary of labor and providing criminal penalties for kickbacks and embezzlement. Congress also approved an 8-hour day, 40-hour week law for federally-aided construction. Davis-Bacon improvements were blocked in the House Rules Committee and the House turned down the NLRB reorganization plan. There was no progress made towards either tougher anti-labor legislation or liberalizing existing laws.
HOUSING & URBAN AFFAIRS: Administration proposals for multi-billion housing and urban renewal programs had strong AFL-CIO backing. Labor also supported a reorganization plan establishing a Dept. of Urban Affairs and a mass transit program to aid traffic-clogged cities.	Congress enacted the most comprehensive housing program in more than a decade in a major Administration victory. The Urban Affairs Dept. was killed in the House by a large margin, with virtually all southern Democrats voting with Republicans after Kennedy had revealed that Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, would head the new department. The mass transit bill was blocked in both houses.
WORLD AFFAIRS: Labor supported foreign aid programs as "essential to world freedom and the nation's security" and strongly backed legislation to enable U.S. to purchase United Nations bonds. Peace Corps was actively supported.	Authorization for the President to purchase UN bonds was approved after a hard fight. Foreign aid programs were continued, but Congress sharply cut back the appropriations requested. Peace Corps won congressional approval.
AID TO EDUCATION: Labor and the Administration joined in support of major program of federal aid to schools, including colleges and medical schools, coupled with scholarship programs.	All major aid to education bills were either defeated or bottled up in committee, except for continuation of existing program of aid to federally-impacted school districts and extension of National Defense Education Act.
CIVIL RIGHTS: AFL-CIO backed Administration bill to end discriminatory literacy tests, asked ending of poll tax, and testified for broad fair employment legislation.	Congress passed constitutional amendment barring poll tax in federal elections, subject to ratification. Literacy bill sidetracked after Senate filibuster. FEPC bill not acted on.
TAX REFORM: The President submitted a broad tax revision program including proposals which labor supported for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income, closing loopholes on taxation of income earned abroad, tightening tax-exempt expense accounts. AFL-CIO opposed Kennedy plan for investment tax credit for business. Labor strongly urged immediate tax cut, largely in lower income brackets, to spur economy and purchasing power.	Tax bill enacted by Congress included investment windfall for business but few of the loophole-closing reforms urged by the Administration. The AFL-CIO termed the final measure a "fraud" and said "true tax reform is still a crying need." Kennedy said he will seek broad tax cut next year.
CONSUMER PROTECTION: Labor-backed bills included Douglas truth-in-lending measure and Kefauver bill to tighten drug safeguards and limit patent monopoly. Labor opposed so-called "fair trade" legislation.	Modified Kefauver bill passed, strengthening protections against unsafe drugs and misleading advertising. Truth-in-lending bill failed to get out of committee. Fair trade bill blocked.
SOCIAL LEGISLATION: AFL-CIO and Administration supported legislation to improve social security benefits, provide youth employment opportunities, improve public welfare programs and aid migrant workers.	Minimum Social Security benefits were raised and optional retirement at 62 allowed for men as well as women. Welfare reform bill enacted. Only one of five Senate-passed bills to aid migrant workers became law. Youth employment bill blocked.
NATURAL RESOURCES: Labor supported comprehensive federal program of land, water, power development and effective water pollution control.	Among significant victories were stepped-up pollution control, congressional approval of long-pending Fryingpan-Arkansas project in Colorado, and authorization for utilities to construct electric generating plant utilizing waste steam from Hanford, Wash., Atomic Energy Commission plant.
FEDERAL EMPLOYES: Kennedy proposed three-step "catch up" raise for federal employes. AFL-CIO hailed proposal but asked more for lower grades and earlier effective dates.	Congress enacted with labor and Administration endorsement a two-step raise averaging about 10 percent for the 1.5 million annually-paid workers. Cost-of-living hike in pensions was authorized, starting in January.

Virginia Law Unconstitutional:

High Court Upsets Curbs on Pickets

The U.S. Supreme Court has struck down as unconstitutional a Virginia law barring union members from picketing unless they are employes of the firm involved.

In three other cases involving labor, the court also:

- Agreed to hear arguments on whether management can grant "superseniority" to strikebreakers.
- Upheld the right of the secretary of labor to delegate the power of subpoena to a subordinate under the Landrum-Griffin Act.
- Refused to review a lower court ruling that the Glidden Co. should have offered jobs and seniority to workers when it moved its Durkee Famous Foods plant from Elmhurst, N. Y., to Bethlehem, Pa., in 1957.

In the Virginia case the high court reversed a lower court opinion that the "right to work" state could bar "outsiders" from picketing.

Virginia courts had convicted four representatives of the Ladies' Garment Workers of violating a state law by taking part in picketing activities during a 1960 strike at the Radford, Va., plant of the Kenrose Mfg. Co. They were not company employes, but were aiding employes on strike.

The ILGWU argued that the state law interfered with the rights of free speech and assembly and made state law superior to federal law in a field long preempted by federal statutes. The Supreme Court decision upheld the union.

'Superseniority' at Stake

The "superseniority" issue involves a 1959 strike of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers against the Erie, Pa., Resistor Corp., which offered to give strikebreaking workers and new employes who crossed the picket line a guarantee of 20 years seniority over the strikers.

The National Labor Relations Board, asserting that the preferential seniority offer is an unfair labor practice, is appealing a June 26 decision of the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Not involved is a 6th Circuit Court decision upholding a board ruling in a similar case—the Rubber Workers and Swarco, Inc., plants at Bucyrus and Carey, O.

The Glidden case came before the high court on a company request for a rehearing of a 1961 decision by the U.S. 2d Circuit Court of Appeals. The latter decision supported the claim of members of the unaffiliated Teamsters that Glidden workers were entitled to jobs with full seniority when the Elmhurst plant was closed and operations moved to Bethlehem.

The fourth case involved a subpoena issued in 1961 by a subordinate of Arthur J. Goldberg, then secretary of labor. The subpoena ordered Thomas Battles, a labor relations consultant, to appear before a Dept. of Justice attorney in an investigation of Philadelphia Teamsters.

Battles refused to testify, challenging the validity of the subpoena and the legality of the investigation. A Circuit Court ruled against Battles and the Supreme Court has declined to review that ruling.

The Supreme Court decisions were among a number issued on the first working day of the court's new term. Goldberg, newly appointed by Pres. Kennedy, was in court when the decisions were read but did not participate in any of them.

4 Million Get Pension Aid in First Session

More than 4 million persons directly benefited from the improved social security benefits adopted during the first session of Congress. These included:

- Retired workers drawing the minimum benefits, whose payments were raised from $33 to $40 a month.
- Men who wished to begin drawing reduced benefits at 62 instead of waiting until 65. (More than 100,000 filed applications the month after the law was passed.)
- Widows whose benefits were raised from 75 percent of their husband's benefits to 82.5 percent. The same increase was provided for surviving parents.
- Retirees with part-time jobs, who were able to earn more money without a reduction in benefits.
- Persons not previously entitled to benefits who became eligible under liberalized rules.

To pay for the improvements, payroll taxes paid by employers and employes were raised one-eighth of 1 percent.

Painters in Drive On Prison Wares

The Painters have opened a new campaign against the use of prison-made goods by private contractors in place of products they would otherwise buy in the open market.

The National Sign, Pictorial & Display Conference, an affiliated organization of the Painters, has adopted a resolution protesting in particular the growing use of prison-made signs not only by government units, but also by federal contractors.

Bryce P. Holcombe, Washington representative of the conference and general organizer of the Painters, stressed that the union is not opposed to rehabilitation programs in prisons that involve the teaching of craft or industrial skills.

MORE THAN 50,000 Oklahomans picked up pamphlets exposing so-called "right-to-work" laws from AFL-CIO booth at Oklahoma State Fair. Attracting them to the booth was the County AFL-CIO's offer of free ice water to thirsty fair visitors.

Joblessness, Economic Stagnation Under Steady Administration Attack

The nation was in the grip of its most serious recession since the 1930s when a new President and a new Congress took office in January 1961.

There were 5.4 million persons jobless and 1.7 million more working only part time—"involuntarily", as the Labor Dept. phrased it. Seventy-six large cities and 152 smaller areas were listed as having "substantial labor surpluses", meaning there were many more people looking for jobs than there were jobs available.

Congress didn't give the President all that he asked for "to get the economy moving again." But the first session of Congress did apply first-aid to the suffering depressed areas and did extend federally-financed jobless benefits to hundreds of thousands of workers who had exhausted their state unemployment compensation and were still without work.

In the second session, with unemployment still high despite a business upturn, Congress enacted the Administration's manpower retraining program and voted an emergency public works speed-up designed to provide jobs and buying power to stimulate the sluggish economy.

The depressed areas bill which Kennedy signed two months and 10 days after he took office was almost identical to measures which then-Pres. Eisenhower had vetoed in 1958 and 1960. It provided federal loans to build industrial plants in communities with persistent high unemployment, money to construct public facilities to provide employment and improve the chances of attracting industry, and funds to retrain workers in skills needed by employers in the area.

Major Improvement

The temporary unemployment compensation program enacted by the 87th Congress was a major improvement over the Eisenhower Administration's 1958 program.

Under the earlier program the government merely advanced money to states which were willing to extend the duration of jobless benefits, and only 15 states accepted the loans.

By contrast, the 1961 TUC bill raised the payroll tax paid by employers throughout the nation to finance the extension of benefits—and all states participated. On a key vote, the Senate rejected, 44-42, a Byrd amendment which would have prohibited using taxes paid by an employer in one state to finance extended benefits in another state. If adopted, this would have destroyed the concept of the unemployment crisis as a national problem requiring a national solution.

The one-year bill authorized a 50 percent extension in duration of benefits, up to a maximum of 13 weeks.

A major achievement of the 87th Congress was manpower development and training legislation aimed at helping workers with obsolete or inadequate skills equip themselves for jobs which are or will be available.

The first session saw a strong bill passed by the Senate. Early in the second session, a weaker bill was approved by the House. The conference compromise provided a three-year, $435 million program to retrain unemployed workers and provide on-the-job training for younger workers.

A delay in voting funds held up the timetable for retraining, but the first programs are now in operation.

The AFL-CIO was among the first groups to call for an accelerated public works program as a weapon against high unemployment. After first asking only a stand-by program to be used if economic indicators point to a new recession, Kennedy added his endorsement for an immediate spending program along lines of the Clark-Blatnik bill.

The Senate first voted $750 million in immediate spending and an equal amount in stand-by authority; then accepted the House-passed bill providing $900 million authorization for immediate programs, without stand-by provisions. The closest test came in the House, where the bill survived by a 221-192 vote.

While reacting to the immediate emergency situations, the 87th Congress put off action on the Administration's labor-backed plan for permanent improvements in unemployment compensation standards.

Minimum Wage Gains Climax Kennedy Drive

Pres. Kennedy won from the 87th Congress what he had been unable to get through the 86th Congress as a senator from Massachusetts—a meaningful improvement in the federal minimum wage and the first extension of coverage in the Wage-Hour Act's 25-year history.

In one of his first messages to Congress, Kennedy asked passage of a wage-hour bill similar to the labor-backed measure he had cosponsored with Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) and Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) in the previous session. It would have extended coverage to 4.3 million more workers and raised the wage floor in steps to $1.25.

The conservative coalition in the House dealt the program an initial defeat, adopting an emasculated substitute. But the Senate approved a McNamara bill embodying the Kennedy program and the final version was close to the Administration draft. It extended coverage to 3.6 million workers and provided a step-up to the $1.25 minimum. On final passage in the House, 197 Democrats and 33 Republicans supported it, with 138 Republicans and 58 Democrats opposed.

During the second session, Congress approved an AFL-CIO-endorsed bill to give the secretary of labor powers of investigation and enforcement under the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act and setting up criminal penalties for kickbacks and embezzlement of welfare-pension funds. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce opposed the bill.

Congress also acted to correct a loophole in the 8-hour day laws governing contractors in federally-financed or assisted projects. While laws dating back to 1892 required overtime payment after 8 hours in one day, there was nothing to stop a nonunion contractor from working his crews seven days a week without premium pay, thus enabling him to underbid fair employers. Congress set a 40-hour ceiling on straight-time work.

On the minus side, Congress failed to approve inclusion of fringe benefits in determining prevailing wages under the Davis-Bacon Act, did nothing to clarify jobsite picketing rights, defeated a reorganization plan to speed up National Labor Relations Board decisions, failed to protect wages of farm workers against "bracero" competition, and passed only one of a series of bills aimed at improving conditions of migrant workers.

Progress Made During 87th Congress

Achievements Seen Outweighing Failures

zation plan, but the House rejected it.

The key to the accomplishments of the 87th Congress—despite the handicap of the loss of 21 liberal seats in the 1960 election—was the change in the presidency, according to the AFL-CIO analysis.

In contrast to former Pres. Eisenhower, whose vetoes or threats of vetoes helped block social legislation from 1953 through 1960, "Pres. Kennedy threw White House power into the legislative battle for liberal programs," labor's legislative experts emphasized, "otherwise the record of the 87th Congress would have been much worse."

To relieve recession suffering, put jobless workers back on payrolls and provide new purchasing power to stimulate a sluggish economy, Congress passed these major labor-backed, Administration programs:

- Depressed area aid.
- Manpower retraining.
- Public works step-up.
- Temporary unemployment benefit extension in 1961. However, the program was allowed to expire this year.

Boosts to the economy also came through a greatly-expanded housing program, and a "catch-up" pay raise for 1.5 million government employes.

Resources Protected

Long-delayed programs to make better use of the nation's natural resources became law, the analysis observed. Consumers were also given greater protection against unsafe or ineffective drugs—although it took the scare of baby-deforming thalidomide and an aroused public opinion to make Congress heed the President's request for a strong law.

More than 4 million persons on social security rolls gained through increases in minimum benefits and widows' pensions, and from optional early retirement for men.

If a constitutional amendment passed by Congress is ratified, voters in five states will no longer have to pay a poll tax to vote in federal elections.

On the free world front, the Peace Corps was set up on a permanent foundation, the Alliance for Progress opened a new era of inter-American cooperation, and the President won his request for authority to buy United Nations bonds to help the world organization out of a financial crisis.

Over employer opposition, Congress passed labor-backed amendments to the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act giving greater investigative and enforcement powers to the secretary of labor.

Left for the 88th Congress to tackle was permanent reform of the unemployment compensation system through high federal standards, a youth employment opportunities program, mass transit legislation to help traffic-choked cities, the balance of the Administration's farm program which didn't get adopted, and amendment of the Davis-Bacon Act to include fringe benefits in computing prevailing wages.

Although the President signed it, the tax revision program he submitted to Congress last year reached the White House in emasculated form, stripped of most of its loophole-closing provisions.

While the President succeeded, during the first days of the 87th Congress, in expanding the House Rules Committee to balance the previous top-heavy conservative domination, the reform was not complete and Senate liberals failed in an effort to curb filibusters.

Outlook for TUC Dim

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the outlook appeared slim for last minute efforts to revive the temporary unemployment compensation program and to pass an equal pay for women law.

In other developments, Congress sent to the White House a $3.9 billion foreign aid appropriation—a sharp cut from the amount the President had sought although not as crippling a slash as the House had originally voted.

Kennedy signed a bill allowing tax deductions for self-employed persons who set aside money in special funds for their retirement, thus lifting one obstacle to adjournment. However, controversies over appropriation and a delay in consideration of the rivers and harbors authorization bill continued to keep the session well beyond the target date set by the leadership.

Firing Held Illegal in Late Dues Case

A company which fired a worker at the direction of a union under its union shop contract has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to put her back to work.

The firing was unlawful, the board said in a 3-2 decision, because the union accepted the dues after a late-payment deadline had passed, failed to return them, and voted to drop the worker from membership.

Three board members voted to order the Colgate-Palmolive Co., Berkeley, Calif., to reinstate Phyllis Boyle as a worker despite a union shop contract with an unaffiliated union—Local 6 of the Longshoremen & Warehousemen. Management committed an unfair labor practice, they said, because it knew the union had accepted the delinquent dues, and the union also broke the law when it insisted on her discharge after it had waived its rights by accepting her dues. Both were ordered to compensate her for lost pay for at least 10 weeks.

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member Gerald A. Brown dissented, saying the ruling was too severe.

Pamphlet Spells Out Record of Congress

A detailed review of the two-year record of the 87th Congress is now available from the AFL-CIO in the form of a new pamphlet, "Labor Looks at the 87th Congress."

The pamphlet, Publication 77D, prepared by the Dept. of Legislation headed by Andrew J. Biemiller, covers the record on the general welfare and the economy, foreign policy, labor legislation, consumer protection, conservation and atomic power, civil rights and congressional rules.

Trade Expansion Act Highlights 2nd Session

Congressional approval of Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion program—by a larger margin than even its supporters had anticipated—was the high point of the second session.

The AFL-CIO was an early backer of the measure, which grants the President unprecedented powers to negotiate tariff cuts and puts into effect an adjustment program long urged by labor to help workers adversely affected by freer trade.

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) chairman of Ways & Means Committee, was the Administration's field general in steering the bill through the House. In one committee showdown, he rounded up the votes to keep intact the adjustment protections for workers. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had warned that weakening of the provision would force labor to withdraw its support.

In the key vote on the House floor, a Republican attempt to substitute a simple one-year extension of the existing tariff program was handily beaten, 253-171, and final passage was by a 298-125 vote. The Senate rejected a series of weakening amendments and voted final approval, 78-8.

The President was given authority to negotiate for elimination of all tariffs on goods of which the U.S. and the European Economic Community together account for 80 percent of the free world trade. Other tariffs could be negotiated downward by 50 percent. Reductions would be spread over a five-year period.

Under the trade adjustment section, when the Tariff Commission finds that tariff concessions adversely affect a domestic industry, the President is empowered to put into effect provisions for:

- Federally-financed unemployment benefits equal to 65 percent of the worker's wage for up to 1 year, with a ceiling of 65 percent of the national average manufacturing wage.
- Workers undergoing retraining to receive an additional 26 weeks of benefits and persons over 60 an additional 13 weeks. Those in retraining programs could be given travel allowances and lump-sum relocation allowances of up to 2.5 times the average weekly manufacturing wage.
- Loans and tax advantages to injured business firms, and technical assistance in converting to other products.

In other developments affecting U.S. international relations, Congress authorized U.S. purchase of United Nations bonds, set up the Peace Corps on a permanent basis and voted funds to get the Alliance for Progress program in Latin America under way.

During both sessions, however, the House made heavy cuts in foreign aid appropriations and the Senate was able to put back only part of the slashed funds.

Federal Pay Scales Raised During Term

Government employes, whose salaries traditionally lag several years behind wages in private industry, came a big step closer to catching up as Congress approved a two-step pay raise for more than 500,000 postal workers and some 1 million classified employes.

The raise will average about 10 percent, including the portion effective in 1964.

Based on the pay reform proposals submitted by Pres. Kennedy early this year, the bill provided higher increases than the President had proposed for postal workers and other low-paid employes, slightly less for the top brackets, and an earlier effective date than the Administration had originally sought.

Its main features, however, follow the Administration draft, including a provision for annual salary studies of comparable jobs in private industry.

Pension increases, effective in 1963, were authorized for 600,000 persons on the retirement rolls and a cost-of-living escalator protection was tied to pension payments.

Strong Boost Given Housing By Congress

The 87th Congress enacted the most comprehensive housing legislation since 1949 during its first session—and followed it up in the second session with a stepped-up program of low-cost loans to provide housing for the elderly.

The most significant feature of the 1961 housing law was the boost it gave housing projects for moderate income families, a goal long supported by the AFL-CIO.

Long-term, low-interest loans were authorized for both rental and cooperative housing for families with incomes too high to qualify for low-income public housing but not high enough to afford the prices and rentals required for most housing not built with government assistance.

The new law also included a big increase in programs for public housing and urban renewal.

There were few votes to spare in the Administration victory on the bill. The Senate adopted the moderate-income provisions of the bill by a 47-42 vote, and the House rejected an inadequate substitute bill by only 215-197.

The housing-for-the-elderly bill doubled the money available in a revolving fund for direct loans to nonprofit groups for construction of rental or cooperative housing in urban areas. It also greatly broadened a comparable program administered by the Farmers Home Administration for rural areas. The AFL-CIO strongly supported the measure in testimony.

Bills Guarding Resources Fared Well

Supporters of federal programs to prevent the waste and exploitation of the nation's natural resources made significant headway in the 87th Congress.

For years, federal funds had been sought for a multi-purpose project to tunnel water from the Fryingpan River in western Colorado to the Arkansas River basin in eastern Colorado across the Continental Divide. It would provide water for irrigation and industrial use, electric power, flood control and recreation benefits. Bills had passed the Senate in 1954, 1956 and 1957, but had died in the House.

This year the Fryingpan-Arkansas bill passed both houses and became law.

After two defeats in the House, a conference committee revived and Congress approved authority for a group of public utilities to utilize waste steam from the Hanford, Wash., Atomic Energy Commission plant to generate needed electricity for the northwest.

A stepped-up program to combat water pollution, similar to one vetoed by Pres. Eisenhower in 1960 with the comment that pollution was a "local" problem, was passed in the first session and became law.

Programs to develop better and cheaper methods of converting salt water were continued and stepped-up, although not to the extent sought by the Administration.

Three new national seashore recreation areas were added to the national park system, although a Senate bill to set up a national wilderness preservation system was scuttled in the House.

'Center' Established:

NAM Plans Drive For Anti-Labor Laws

The National Association of Manufacturers has announced the establishment of a "Center for the Study of Union Monopoly," confirming the existence of a new, long-range campaign for additional anti-labor legislation.

Charles A. Kothe, NAM vice president for industrial relations, said the center already has held some preliminary meetings. His announcement said it would be guided by a committee of 30 "manufacturers, educators, attorneys and others interested in analyzing the economic effects of union monopoly."

He said the center would serve as a clearing-house to compile "case histories showing the effect of this monopoly power on the national economy, on individual companies, on the unions themselves, and on their members."

Copies of a working paper submitted by Kothe to an unpublicized meeting of the NAM executive committee last spring have been circulating for some time. Text of the document, titled "A Program to Curb Union Monopoly Power," was recently inserted in the Congressional Record by Rep. Roland V. Libonati (D-Ill.).

Libonati declared the NAM was embarking on a campaign to "brainwash" the public and stimulate support for federal legislation that would "in effect destroy the freedom of union activity in the labor movement." The plan, he said, calls for the use of "all the hidden persuaders so effectively used to get us to buy soaps and cigarettes."

Kothe's paper outlined a three-year campaign beginning with the gathering of so-called "case-histories" and culminating in 1964 in "a full-powered drive . . . with all forces activated to accomplish the legislative goal."

What that legislative goal might be was not spelled out, although the document noted that some NAM officials want the nation's anti-trust laws amended to cover trade unions, while others favor legislation aimed at specific aspects of labor-management relations.

Kothe himself has been quoted as advocating "some kind of restrictions designed just for labor," such as flat prohibitions against industrywide or companywide bargaining, legal bars against industrywide strikes, and measures to prevent unions from setting forth national wage and benefit policies.

The NAM's definition of "union monopoly power" was set forth in an editorial in a recent issue of the NAM News as the ability of labor "both nationally and on an areas basis, to exact increases in wages and fringe benefits which are not warranted by gains in output in the competitive situation which confronts an industry or a particular employer"—in other words, union effectiveness at the bargaining table.

Aerojet Talks Continue as Walkout Ends

Negotiations on a new agreement affecting 9,000 aerospace Machinists continued in Washington after workers ended a four-day strike blamed on "misunderstandings" and returned to work at four locations of the Aerojet-General Corp., space component contractor.

At a meeting called by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, all parties to the dispute issued a statement agreeing it was caused by "unfortunate misunderstandings" and promising to continue looking for a settlement.

The statement said that, in 20 years of company existence—15 of them under a union shop contract—this was the only serious disagreement between the parties. It added:

"The company wishes to state that it is proud of the skill and patriotism of its workers and regrets the misunderstandings for which it was responsible. Both parties assure the nation that production schedules vital to the nation's defense will be met."

In other negotiations, Pres. Kennedy announced an extension of the deadline from Oct. 15 to Nov. 5 for a report by a presidential board headed by Saul Wallen in the dispute between the IAM and the Boeing Co. The union has said it wants a contract by Nov. 15.

IAM negotiations with Lockheed were continuing at Los Angeles, and a strike deadline was extended by Auto Workers Locals 300 and 669 at a Wright Aeronautical plant in Paterson, N. J., employing 7,200 shop and office workers.

UAW Official Named To Satellite Board

Auto Workers Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock was one of 13 persons named by Pres. Kennedy to start a government-regulated private corporation to operate a communication satellite program.

ORIT Urges Ben Bella To Forego Visit to Cuba

Mexico City—Algerian Premier Ben Bella has been urged by the inter-American trade union movement to forego a scheduled visit to Cuba and avoid "sanctioning" the Castro regime.

Gen. Sec. Arturo Jauregui of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) told Ben Bella in a telegram that his announcement of plans for an official visit to Cuba had produced "an unfortunate impression" among workers in the hemisphere, who with other free trade unionists "have enthusiastically supported the cause of the Algerian nation."

"The Commuist regime of Castro has imposed on the Cuban people the most barbarous tyranny ever suffered by any nation of our continent," Jauregui declared.

The fate of the Cuban people, he said, is no different from "that of the Algerian workers and people in the worst days of French colonial rule."

He urged Ben Bella "to abstain from sanctioning with a visit . . . the most despicable group of tyrants" in the history of the Americas.

WHEN A BRANCH of the American Institute for Free Labor Development for regional training was opened in Caracas, Pres. Romulo Betancourt (right) of Venezuela presided at the exercises. He is shown being greeted by Serafino Romualdi, executive director of the institute and AFL-CIO inter-American representative.

Farm Workers Drop 41 Percent in Decade

The number of workers in farm occupations plummeted 41 percent in the 1950-60 decade, the sharpest decline in history, the Labor Dept. has announced.

The trend will continue downward during the early 1960s, according to the report prepared by the new Office of Manpower, Automation & Training. The pace will depend on the availability of non-farm jobs.

The farm labor decline of the 1950s was attributed mainly to "the technological revolution in agriculture" which cut the need for labor and caused a two-thirds boost in farm output per man-hour. The output per manhour in manufacturing rose one-third during the same period.

The report was prepared in light of the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962, which contains provisions to help rural youth and adults secure occupational training so they can adapt to the basic trend.

The Labor Dept. said workers in farm families who earn less than $1,200 net income per year are considered unemployed under the new law and thus became eligible for priority referral for training.

The report said there were in 1960 slightly fewer than 4 million workers employed as farmers, farm managers, farm laborers and foremen; this compared to 6.7 million employed in 1950.

At the turn of the century, the report noted, 1 of every 3 workers in the labor force was engaged in agriculture; by 1960, the proportion had changed to 1 in 18.

The report also noted that under the Area Redevelopment Act, the nation's first farm training course was set up in January to meet a need for skilled farm machinery operators in fruits and vegetables. By June, 358 workers were in training.

The shift of large numbers of workers from rural to urban areas—especially in the 20 to 29-year group — emphasizes the need for training programs, the report added.

The largest proportionate and absolute decline in rural population occurred in the South. As a result, the South for the first time in its history had more of its population living in urban areas than in rural areas.

The report said "a considerable portion" of the exodus from the South was non-white. The out-migration of non-whites totaled 1.5 million in 1950-60, the bulk moving to the large manufacturing states of the Northeast and North Central regions.

The report said this shift of workers ill-equipped for city jobs probably contributed to the problem of hard-core unemployment which persisted during the latter 1950s.

High Jobless Rate Areas Decline to 44

The number of major industrial areas with an unemployment rate of 6 percent or higher dropped to 44 in September, three less than the previous month and 38 below the total a year ago.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz released the report showing eight changes in the ratings of 150 major employment centers, five moving to lower categories and three reflecting an increase in joblessness.

An all-time high in the number of major job areas with 6 percent or more unemployed was hit in the spring of 1961 when 101 such areas were listed. Since July of this year the total has dropped from 48 to 47 to 44.

Four major areas moved from the 6 to 9 percent jobless category to the 3 to 6 percent bracket in September: Bridgeport and New Britain, Conn., and South Bend and Terre Haute, Ind. The classification of Terre Haute to below 6 percent jobless was the first time this area has moved out of the "substantial unemployment" listing since 1951. Another improvement was registered in Fall River, Mass., which moved from the 9 to 12 percent bracket to the 6 to 9 percent category.

Moving in the other direction were Altoona, Pa., Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va., and Steubenville, Ohio-Weirton, W. Va.

T-H Order Bars Longshore Strike

New York — A U.S. District Court judge has issued a Taft-Hartley injunction here forbidding a strike of East Coast dockworkers before Dec. 23.

Dist. Judge John F. X. McGohey issued the order imposing the 80-day waiting period after Justice Dept. lawyers argued the national interest would be imperiled by a strike.

Dockers who walked out last week in a dispute over contract terms returned to work under a temporary order issued by the same judge. Spokesmen for their union, the Longshoremen, said they are willing to negotiate new contract terms and do not want to impede government efforts in view of the Cuban situation.

30 Students Attend First ILO Institute

Geneva—The new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies, established by the Intl. Labor Organization, has begun operations with 30 students from 29 countries attending its first study course.

During its 12 weeks, 33 lecturers from the faculty and the ILO itself and 28 guest lecturers from 14 countries will speak to the students on a wide variety of social and labor subjects centering on the main theme, The Labor Force and Its Employment.

The institute was established by vote of the ILO Governing Body in March 1960 and is financed by an endowment fund which now stands at $3,074,000 through gifts, pledges, legacies and grants from 36 countries, many worker and employer organizations, private institutions and individuals. The fund pays for all expenses of the students, who have at least some background in labor, management or government.

ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse sent a message of welcome from New York, where he is attending the General Assembly of the United Nations. He reminded the students that the program was not intended to provide training in any particular field, but instead to give "an opportunity of contact and discussion with specialists in various fields and of intensive exchange of views and discussions.

"In this era of increasingly rapid change," he said, "your first task will be to try and understand the processes of change, to understand the problems that they raise and the various means of solving them."

3 Religious Groups Back Anti-Bias Act

Harrisburg, Pa. — Three major religious groups have joined in a friend-of-the-court brief upholding the state side in a challenge to the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania Human Relations Act.

The suit was filed in Commonwealth Court by the Connellsville Joint School Board in an effort to upset a ruling by the State Commission on Human Rights ordering it to hire Mrs. Jane McPherson for a teaching job. She contended she had been denied the job because she is a Negro.

The joint brief was filed by the Pennsylvania Council of Churches, Pennsylvania affiliates of the Synagogue Council of America, and the Catholic Interracial Councils of the dioceses of Pittsburgh and Greensburg.

The church groups maintained the challenged act represents "strong recognition by the people" that discrimination is unjust.

"In the social setting of the present," it added, "the act is a reflection of the first section of the Declaration of Rights that 'All men are born equally free and independent'."

Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO is chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Kennedy Going All-Out For Liberal 88th Congress

PRES. KENNEDY takes his campaign for a Congress that will support his domestic program into state after state across the nation. Here, in Louisville, Ky., he speaks before 9,000 voters, turns to point out to the audience two candidates on the platform—Lieut. Gov. Wilson Wyatt, left, who is running against Republican Sen. Thruston Morton, and Rep. Frank Burke (D), who is challenged by a Goldwater-type conservative Republican nominee.

Retraining Programs Aid 20,000

Retraining programs for about 20,000 unemployed workers have been authorized as the federal government has pushed into operation a major attack on chronic joblessness resulting from rapid changes in the economy.

Approximately 12,000 jobless men and women were approved for retraining during the first year of activity under the 1961 Area Redevelopment Act, the Labor Dept. has revealed.

Projects providing for the retraining of an additional 7,200 workers have been approved under the long-range Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962.

Among the first 2,304 enrollees who completed training in the initial nine months of the ARA, 61 percent were placed in jobs and 39 percent were awaiting referral to jobs as of last June 30, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced in a formal report.

About 9,000 were enrolled in approved training projects during the nine-month period, Wirtz said. The Labor Dept. reports that an additional 3,000 were enrolled in three months that followed.

Projects under the 1962 Manpower Development Act—a broader program designed to train or retrain 400,000 workers across a three-year period—began to get fast approval as states and communities committed allocated federal funds to specific approved projects. The plan is financed with an initial $64 million appropriation by Congress, with indications that more funds will be made available as the program advances.

Pilot Projects in ARA

The broader program, Wirtz pointed out, will be substantially advanced by the preliminary experience gained under the much more limited ARA training projects.

The ARA operation, he said, is giving the government a "graphic picture of some of the manpower problems that confront us and a glimpse at some possible solutions."

"Occupational training in itself cannot create jobs," the report released by Wirtz commented, but "it has proven to be an effective tool for assisting several thousand workers who were faced with the alternative of either changing their occupations or remaining unemployed for extended periods."

The training programs together represent a two-pronged drive under the Kennedy Administration to deal with one of the most serious problems

Drive Aims To Stir Up Big Vote

By Willard Shelton

President Kennedy is hitting the campaign trial in an unprecedented White House drive to rouse the voters from the apathy that ordinarily deadens off-year elections and to strengthen the Democratic margins in Congress for legislative battles that lie ahead.

"It is the responsibility of a President of the United States to have a program and to fight for it," he said three weeks before the Nov. 6 election.

He left no doubt that he intends to keep fighting for the election of progressive northern and western Democrats who will pass the bills in the 88th Congress that the 87th Congress turned down.

From New England to the Pacific Coast, from the Midwest to the Mountain States, the President is warning voters that the party in power has historically lost membership in Congress in the off-year contests and that the pattern must be broken to pass a school-aid bill, a health care bill, a bill creating a Dept. of Urban Affairs.

Eisenhower Counters

The Republicans are countering with former Pres. Eisenhower, who in six states thus far has campaigned for more vigorously for GOP candidates than he ever did from the White House.

The Eisenhower theme is that the Kennedy Administration is "callow," brassy and boastful, that the White House is filled with "self-assertive intellectuals," that the Administration programs offer "pie in the sky."

In Midwest States:

Democrats Battling To Regain 17 Seats

From the Appalachians to the Rocky Mountains the 13-state midwestern area on Nov. 6 will elect nine governors, 11 senators and a huge block of 132 members of the House, only a little short of one-third of the House's entire membership.

This has been, traditionally, a Republican heartland, although politics here as in other parts of America is fluid and shifting. Of the 11 senators, most of them chosen in the Eisenhower presidential election in 1956, all but two are Republicans. Among House members the existing GOP edge is 79 to 53 (eliminating five districts that have been lost by reapportionment after the 1960 census).

The House margin for Republicans would be larger if Kentucky were counted as southern rather than midwestern, which is the usual classification, but Kentucky is distinctly a border state with voting habits much like Missouri's. It usually chooses a preponderance of Democrats for the House and may very easily choose Republican governors and senators.

The Democrats made tremendous gains all through the Midwest in their 1958 landslide victory, picking up 23 House seats previously held by the GOP. In 1960 the Republicans made a strong comeback, regaining 17 of the House places they had lost.

In the nine midwestern states where there are contests for governor this year, Democrats now hold five of them, and in all five the Republicans are making a hard drive to recapture the state houses.

Observable signs indicate that the election battles throughout the area

Job Picture Still Gloomy, Hours Rise

The September job picture showed no real dent in unemployment as the Labor Dept. reported the seasonal factors of school reopening and fullscale new car production brought a jump in employment and a drop in joblessness.

The number of workers on nonfarm payrolls rose by 500,000 to a record high of 56.2 million. State and local governments added 400,000 employes as school reopened and the auto industry gained 125,-

Darlington Workers Awarded Back Wages

One of the nation's largest textile chains has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to pay lost wages to more than 500 Darlington, S. C., workers who lost their jobs six years ago when their mill was closed because they voted for union representation.

In a landmark 3-2 decision, the NLRB ripped apart the legal fiction that the Darlington Mfg. Co., owned and controlled by South Carolina "right-to-work" leader Roger Milliken, was a separate employer from its parent corporation, Deering, Milliken, Inc., headed by the same Roger Milliken.

If the courts uphold enforcement of the NLRB order, the workers who were stranded when Milliken ordered the mill closed and its equipment sold at auction rather than bargain with the Textile Workers Union of America will receive back wages for all periods of unemployment plus the difference in wages if they have since worked at lower-paid jobs.

The labor board also ordered the Deering, Milliken chain to give former Darlington employes preferential hiring at its other mills in South Carolina and adjacent states and to pay the moving expenses of workers who accept jobs in other mills.

Deering, Milliken was also ordered to bargain with the TWUA on terms and conditions of employment for the former Darlington

Steelworkers Certified In Big Canadian Victory

Toronto, Can.—The Ontario Labor Relations Board has put its official stamp on one of the great union triumphs in Canadian history—the decisive victory of the Steelworkers in the "Battle of Sudbury."

The board ended 13 months of turmoil in Ontario's nickel belt by certifying the Steelworkers as sole and exclusive bargaining agent for 15,000 Intl. Nickel Co. miners, smeltermen and refinery workers.

The triumphant Steelworkers immediately called on INCO to begin bargaining on a new agreement for the Sudbury workers and 2,000 more in Port Colborne.

The Steelworkers' win smashed the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers union into virtual impotence in Canada since it stripped away two of every three Canadian members of that union.

It was the climax to the year-old "killer offensive" launched by the Steelworkers to drive Mine-Mill out of the Canadian nickel industry and the greatest victory scored by the union in its 13-year effort to free hard-rock miners and smeltermen from the Communist-dominated union.

The Steelworkers earlier had wrested bargaining rights from Mine-Mill for 2,000 men at Inco's Port Colborne refinery and another

DUBUQUE KIDS show their willingness to support the home town by going to work on a king-sized hot dog made in Dubuque. It was part of the "Boost Dubuque" night at the ball park of the appropriately named Packers. The promotion enlisted labor, management and civic promoters generally to sell more meat products and help keep jobs of workers in the Iowa city.

Labor Helps to Sell Meat, Also Dubuque

Dubuque, Iowa—A suggestion advanced by union representatives at a management-labor meeting of the Dubuque Packing Co. here last March mushroomed into a community-wide promotion this city of 60,000 will not forget for a long time.

Impetus for the promotion idea possibly was furnished by closing of an industry employing nearly 800 people the month before—only one of a number of factories which had closed its doors here in recent years. The situation had created a cloud of gloom which management and labor watched anxiously.

Now the apprehension is gone; in its place is a new optimism traceable to an idea advanced by union leaders seeking to cooperate with management in a united effort to prove that there was hope for every citizen in the future of the city.

Carefully laid plans resulted in a community-wide "Boost Dubuque" promotion throughout August. Employes at the packing plant, as well as businessmen and workers throughout the city, could be seen everywhere displaying their "Boost Dubuque" buttons along with the familiar label of the Dubuque packing plant products.

Sales of meat products processed at the plant have soared 60 percent in a year. Employes normally laid off during the summer season have had steady jobs. Some were required to work 10 to 12-hour days during the peak of the promotion to keep pace with the demand for Dubuque Packing Co. products.

All this happened because management and labor cooperated to work together to provide steady employment during a dull season. One of the things which prompted the promotion was a report showing sales of the firm's products in Dubuque at a lower level than in other cities of the same size.

The Dubuque Packing Co. is considered the tenth largest in the country and is the largest employer in the city. Automation has steadily made inroads on employment opportunities with consequent loss of jobs, which has meant loss of purchasing power along Main Street. And after losing 800 employes at the recently closed factory, business wanted no more of this.

'Boost Dubuque' Night

As part of the promotion effort, the cooperating unions sponsored a "Boost Dubuque Night" at Dubuque's minor league ball park. Dubuque-made hams were among the prizes and Dubuque-made hot dogs were sold at half-price, with the unions picking up the bill. The company covered expenses for the rest of the drive and considered the money one of its best investments.

Commenting upon success of the event, Dave Cavanaugh, president of Meat Cutters Local 150, said:

"I sincerely hope that effects of our promotion will be far reaching. We have demonstrated that it takes two groups, both management and labor working together, to meet a problem which was fast developing to the detriment of both the owners and workers. And besides our immediate benefit at the plant, the whole town benefited."

Cooperating with the packing plant in sponsoring the promotion were Local 150, General Drivers Local 421, Operating Engineers Local 758, Retail Clerks Local 396, and Meat Cutters Local 431.

Work Stoppages Decline in August

Work stoppages in August declined slightly from July levels, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

Approximately 335 stoppages began in August and 235 continued from July. Time lost in man-days accounted for 18 one-hundredths of 1 percent of total working time, up slightly over August 1961 and August 1960 but a reduction from July levels, BLS said.

Thus far in 1962, time lost by strikes or lockouts was higher than in the corresponding eight months of 1961 but below comparable levels for all other postwar years except 1957 and 1958.

Purchasing Power Boost Needed:

Artificially-Built Deflation Labeled Drag on Economy

Minneapolis—The American economy in 1962 has "great underlying vitality and strength" but is "afflicted with all the symptoms of an artifically induced deflation," according to a top government economist.

James W. Knowles, senior economist with the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, told the American Statistical Association at its meeting here that policies adopted to meet the problems of the 1940s and early 1950s are no longer pertinent because the inflationary conditions of those periods have disappeared.

The basic fault, he indicated, is in the continuing gap between consumer and investment income—a gap that has been steadily widening since 1954 when tax legislation went into effect favoring investment income.

The remedy, he continued, is tax reform that would bring the two types of income into greater balance and bolster consumer income to spur economic growth.

Perhaps the most "significant symptom" of the deflationary trend is the low ratio of consumer spending to the nation's total spending for goods and services, said Knowles. This weakness, he added, can be attributed mostly to the fact that consumer after-tax income is too low in relation to the economy's ability to produce.

He declared that the recovery from the 1960-61 recession "appears to be one of the weakest—if not the weakest—since World War I." It is weaker than the recovery from 1958-60, he said, and that "was one of the weakest recoveries since 1921."

There is a widening gap today, he said, between "potential output and total demand which tends to repress prices, savings, employment and investment." The automatic stabilizers built into the economy in the past 20 years, he added, are now providing "powerful brakes on the expansion of the economy as well as stimulants during contractions."

The problem is intensified by the success of management in reducing break-even points to provide insurance against cyclical swings in demand, said Knowles. In some industries, he warned, this has reached a point at which, if the economy should boom to high levels of employment, "the total cash flow to capital, including both profits after taxes and depreciation funds, would reach higher levels than would be needed to finance the level of investment that business could maintain year after year without developing excess capacity."

These policies, in some cases, he noted, "have re-enforced rather than offset the forces of deflation originating in the public sector [government] of the economy."

He predicted that it would not be surprising, given the existing situation and present government policies, if the gross national product and unemployment rate both were to rise in coming months.

Taking existing unemployment rates and figuring in part-time joblessness as well as the failure of the labor force to meet growth expectations, Knowles said the true current rate was probably between 7 and 7.5 percent of the labor force.

"There seems to be nothing in the immediate picture, even on the most optimistic assumptions, which would significantly reduce this rate," he added. "There is some reason for expecting the rate to rise in coming months."

R-T-W Strike Movie Called 'Clever' Fiction

A malicious, distorted film is being distributed by the anti-union National Right-to-Work Committee as part of its campaign to push for state compulsory open shop laws and to defeat trade union organizing drives.

The title of this soap opera of industrial relations is a moving "And Women Must Weep." It is presented as if it were gospel truth, based on a 1957 strike of the Machinists in Princeton, Ind.

"The film is cleverly salted with fictitious events that never really happened," Al J. Hayes, president of the IAM, declared. Al Zack, director of public relations for the AFL-CIO, had even sharper words for the movie:

"It is a false, deliberately malicious, lying film," he said. "It is propaganda of the Nazi type at its very worst." But, warns Zack, "this film is effective."

There are two versions, one designed to defeat union plant organizing drives and the other for the political arena, to push for so-called "right-to-work" laws.

A central figure in the film is a minister who leads a back-to-work movement during the strike. This serves to shroud the anti-union cause with all the sacredness of the church.

In the actual strike a minister was involved in strikebreaking, but most of the citizens of Princeton would like to forget him now. He's in California working for right-wing religious organizations.

IAM Digs Out the Facts

The IAM decided to meet the falsehoods, the fabrications and the propaganda head-on. Hayes sent Gordon Cole, editor of The Machinist, out to Indiana with a camera crew to interview people connected with the strike, to present the true picture of the 1957 situation.

The Machinists then produced their own film which painstakingly dissects the stark falsity of the anti-labor film, point by point. The IAM film, "Anatomy of a Lie," may be rented from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Following are some of the "lies" revealed by "Anatomy of a Lie":

- The anti-labor film depicted the president of the local as a bullying, shouting, ignorant man who violated the union contract and pushed the workers out on strike to protect his own job. The actual president of the local was a warm, grandmotherly woman who pleaded with the workers not to strike for her, but only if the provocations for a strike made such action a necessity.
- The anti-labor film showed a small clique of 11 deciding to strike after being harangued by the president. In truth there was a meeting of some 400 workers at the Princeton armory and only nine voted against the strike.
- In the anti-labor film the impression was given that outsiders took over the strike. Strikers reported that the company actually hired strikebreakers outside of Princeton and outside of Indiana.
- The impression is given that union "goons" shot a baby. "Anatomy of a Lie" shows interviews with both the sheriff and the father of the baby. Both agreed that there was nothing to indicate that the shooting was in any way connected with the strike. The crime has never been solved.
- The impression is given that the strikers were brutish men whereas, in fact, 80 percent of the union members were women.

IAM Ratifies Convair Pact; Aerojet Settles

Aerospace workers at General Dynamics (Convair) plants and bases coast to coast have voted 3-1 to ratify a new contract, and members of the same union—the Machinists—were balloting in weekend meetings on new terms offered by the Aerojet General Corp.

That left unsettled only two major pacts—between the IAM and Lockheed and Boeing, space component manufacturers. Other major firms have come to terms with the IAM and the Auto Workers along the lines of settlement proposals made by Pres. Kennedy's special aerospace board.

The three-year General Dynamics pact provides general wage increases of 2.3 percent this year, plus a seven-cent cost of living factor, and additional 2.5 percent boosts next July and in July 1964. Also included are more than 30 other improvements.

The key provision is a union shop, which becomes effective if two-thirds of the employes vote yes in an election set for Oct. 23 by the National Labor Relations Board. Hal Shean, IAM coordinator, said the union is confident that employes will vote yes "by an overwhelming margin."

The Aerojet agreement reached last week in Washington was being voted on at ratification meetings by members of IAM locals 946 and 1893. Details were withheld until members have voted but a Lodge 946 official said the negotiating committee was unanimously in favor of recommending acceptance.

At Shipbuilding Convention:

Union Members Urged to Take 'Vigorous Action' at the Polls

By Gervase N. Love

Miami Beach, Fla.—The voters want candidates who will support Administration proposals for liberal legislation and will "pressure the Administration to go further and faster in resolving the unmet needs of our society," the 21st convention of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers declared in an appeal for vigorous political action by the membership.

Many of the nearly 250 delegates stalked to the microphones to add their emphasis to the resolution, which called for reversal of the off-year tradition of staying home on election day.

"We are faced with a sweeping conspiracy to render the labor movement ineffective," it warned. "This conspiracy exists between the leaders of large corporations and groups within both political parties, and has as its immediate objective the use of political power to constrict labor unions so as to render them ineffective at the bargaining table."

Shipbuilders Pres. John J. Grogan, mayor of Hoboken, N. J., and Hudson County Democratic chairman, closed the discussion with a stirring plea for all union members "to take an active part in political life and support those who help us—they deserve it."

"Help them financially," he asked. "Reach into your pocket and give them a dollar once in a while — Rockefeller and Romney and Nixon don't have to worry about money, but it's up to us to give it to our friends who do."

He noted that a few minutes earlier, in a convention speech which had broken into the political action discussion, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler had recalled having been picked up by Hoboken police regularly as a young organizer for the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, of which he formerly was president.

"I know what Bill Schnitzler was talking about," Grogan said "We couldn't get into our own union hall for nine long months, and we were blackjacked and jailed. That's how we organized and that's why we got into politics—to get rid of the kind of people in office who were trying to take away our rights as Americans."

Schnitzler hailed the sentiment expressed in a sign that faced him from the rear of the convention hall as he spoke. It read "A Better Future Through a Stronger Union."

It was utilization of "our combined strength" in the past that accounted for the progress labor has made, he asserted. Only through the use of its combined strength will labor make progress in the future, Schnitzler said in urging unions and their leaders to forget differences and work together as they once did.

He also urged unions through their members, officers and publications to "brag about what they're doing to build," and cited a number of community projects unions have undertaken without fanfare for themselves or cost to their cities or states.

"We must broaden our thinking to cover the entire community," he added, "and then the future will measure our success in what we do now to consider the entire community. Not to let the entire community know what we do to help make it better is to give people a false image of ourselves and to leave their minds open to the anti-union propaganda that deluges them."

The delegates warmly endorsed the AFL-CIO internal disputes machinery and added a re-affirmation of "our adherence" to national AFL-CIO policies.

"We instruct the national officers and general executive board to do all in their power to realize the goals and aims of the national AFL-CIO," they continued, "and we do declare that the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbulding Workers embraces the doctrines of AFL-CIO as part of the national program of this union."

In other resolutions the convention:

- Welcomed recently adopted improvements in social security and called for a broad program of further advances.
- Put the full weight of the union behind the coming "climactic drive" for enactment of the Anderson-King bill.
- Called for a "comprehensive overhauling and improvement" of unemployment insurance under a single federal program.
- Renewed the union's endorsement of federal aid to education for school construction, teachers' salaries, college scholarships and university facilities.
- Stressed the urgency of beating back the states' rights campaign in workmen's compensation as "a phony device calculated to obstruct the development of adequate legislation" and backed enactment of federal standards.
- Pledged support of white collar workers in the shipbuilding industry.

TRADE UNIONISTS and students filled the picketline ranks Oct. 6 on Desegregate Howard Johnson's Day in a demonstration organized by the Congress of Racial Equality. Represented in this New York scene were Ladies' Garment Workers Local 23, Hospital Employes' Local 1199 and District 65 of the Retail, Wholesale and Dept. Store Workers. Picketlines went up in 30 cities in 15 states.

Chemical Workers Get 2-Year Growth Report

Las Vegas, Nev.—Chemical Workers' Pres. Walter L. Mitchell presented a two-year report of "growth and strength" to the ICWU's 18th convention.

Mitchell said there is still much New Frontier legislation to be passed, and he pledged ICWU support to Pres. Kennedy's program. "In the Gompers" tradition, we will always want more and more," he said, "and we will not be happy while millions of workers are unemployed or while one worker is being deprived of his rights."

ICWU has grown modestly in membership, while some unions have declined, Mitchell told the 370 delegates from more than 400 locals in the U.S. and Canada. This, he said, has been true even though automation in the chemical industry "has taken a heavy toll in lost jobs." He noted, too, that the union has also grown in finances and political stability and it is completely debt-free with net worth of more than $1 million.

Key issues before the convention include election of officers, four-year terms and salary increases for officers, and the launching of a major apprenticeship and training program.

British labor leader James Matthews, president of the Intl. Federation of Industrial Organizations and the General Workers Union, urged all Americans to study the British health system and push passage of the Kennedy health care for the aged program. Matthews challenged the American Medical Association to prove its charges that British health programs do not work.

"I believe the working man of any country is entitled to the best medical health that country can provide at a cost he can afford," Matthews said.

Assistant Labor Sec. James Reynolds told delegates of the 80,000-member union that "you prove size is not a way to measure value."

Called 'Most Democratic'

Reynolds called the ICWU "one of the most democratic trade unions" and reminded the convention that "the only significance of size is in the enormity of the challenge facing America to provide full employment in a free economy." Reynolds said labor unions have carried the "ideal of freedom" into all phases of national life, and he urged ICWU members to continue supporting the Kennedy program to "fill the gap in the social security system with medical care for the aged" and make labor's main assault on unemployment.

Dr. Herbert K. Abrams, ICWU medical consultant, called for more federal action to curb occupational health problems. State agencies cannot do the job, he said, and labor must also press for more federal control of radiation hazards, instead of the "patchwork system" some states provide.

A team of Bolivian petroleum workers attended opening sessions of the convention, along with management guests from major U.S. chemical and drug plants which are under ICWU contract.

NMU Recognized On Military Fleets

New York—The National Maritime Union has received formal recognition in the Pacific and Gulf area fleets of the Military Sea Transportation Service, Pres. Joseph Curran has announced.

The action gives NMU formal designation as bargaining representative of unlicensed seamen in all three fleets of the service—a branch of the U.S. Navy operating transport and service vessels manned by civil service employes. Recognition was obtained in the Atlantic area fleet two weeks ago. The MSTS fleets total 64 ships employing 4,500 non-officer seamen.

Formal recognition is granted only after at least 10 percent of the employes of the unit have joined the union. With this recognition, MSTS must consult with the union regarding any changes in policies or conditions affecting its members. NMU has filed for exclusive recognition in the Atlantic and Gulf MSTS fleets. This form of recognition, requiring majority representation, means MSTS must enter into collective bargaining with the union and terms agreed on apply to all employes.

Lyle Cooper Dies; Retired UPWA Aide

Chicago—Lyle Cooper, who for almost two decades was research director for the Packinghouse Workers until his retirement last year, died here after a long illness. A former economist for the U.S. government, Cooper was considered a leading expert in the field of agricultural economics.

NAACP Urged to Shun Split with Labor Allies

New York—The Ladies Garment Workers Union has called on the "responsible elements" in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to prevent the destruction "of the natural and historic alliance between the NAACP and the progressive trade union community."

In an editorial in the Oct. 15 issue of the ILGWU's official publication, Justice, the union declared that the NAACP board has a "grave responsibility" to prevent "one irresponsible individual from tearing down a constructive relationship that has been built up over many years."

The editorial referred to a resolution adopted by the NAACP board of directors on Oct. 8 charging the union with alleged discriminatory tactics. Justice termed the resolution "a rehash of the charges contained in the unacceptable testimony of the discredited NAACP labor secretary (Herbert Hill) and written in the same intemperate language."

Hill, until recently a part-time staff member of a House Labor subcommittee until he resigned amid charges of conflict of interest, had at the opening of the subcommittee hearings distributed a statement which subcommittee members refused to allow in the record until further editing and research.

The Justice editorial said the testimony was "rejected" by the subcommittee because it was biased, opinionated and unfounded in fact."

The NAACP later distributed copies of the Hill statement as prepared for the committee, and the resolution adopted by the board was based in large part on the same material.

Charges Repudiated

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky has appeared twice before the subcommittee sharply repudiating charges that the union denies equal opportunity to workers of all races and languages to be trained for better-paying jobs or to hold high union office.

The Justice editorial noted that the ILGWU has for many years supported the NAACP "in line with an historic and traditional policy of the union: the fight for full human rights and equal opportunity."

The editorial continued: "We have too much regard for the individuals on the NAACP board to believe that they would lend their names to this irresponsible action (adoption of the resolution) if they had all the facts before them.

"This resolution of the NAACP . . . could only be a serious blow to the cause of civil rights, to the cause of labor and to the great liberal coalition in America."

The adoption of the NAACP board's resolution led to the resignation of ILGWU Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman from the board of the organization's Legal Defense Fund.

Zimmerman noted in his resignation that the had helped organize the first national Negro Labor Committee, had served with AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph on the first National Committee for a Permanent FEPC, organized the first labor advisory committee on Puerto Rican affairs and directed the anti-discrimination program of the Jewish Labor Committee since 1941.

He charged Hill with being a "notoriously irresponsible person" and that "we have not been inclined to hold the NAACP responsible for his behavior." But the board's resolution, he added, "has formally endorsed Hill's charges which are demonstrably untrue."

The NAACP, he declared "has driven a wedge between the Negro community and the labor movement which will necessarily impede our struggle to improve the economic conditions of Negro workers and to widen their economic opportunities. It is now further shattering the forces of civil rights."

Housing for Elderly Planned in Detroit

Detroit—Four Freedoms, Inc., has announced that ground will be broken next spring on a 21-story, 330-unit apartment for the elderly in the Gratiot redevelopment area downtown. Rentals will start at $65 a month.

A nonprofit union-sponsored group, Four Freedoms plans a similar building later on a five-acre plot close to shopping and transit facilities. Space in Four Freedoms House will be available to those 62 years and up.

Rail-Airway Supervisors Elect Officers

Chicago—The Railway & Airway Supervisors elected officers, made changes in their constitution and considered internal union problems at a two-day convention here.

The 125 delegates rejected a resolution requiring compulsory retirement of officers at age 65. They also turned down a proposal for expenses and lost time payments to directors for attendance at board meetings.

Adopted was a proposal requiring that board meetings be held not oftener than every six months unless called by the president.

The union's 26th convention re-elected J. P. Tahney president for another four-year term over J. P. Tipton, a vice president. Tahney has been president since the union was founded in 1934. In addition to six vice presidents, the delegates re-elected G. D. Martin, corresponding secretary, and W. Howard Taylor, recording secretary.

Rudolph Durdik resigned as financial secretary-treasurer after the delegates voted to remove the office from the board of directors. The board will name a successor to fill the unexpired term.

Tahney told the convention that since the union was founded 28 years ago, "the supervisors throughout the railroad and airway industry have benefited by your assistance, enlightenment and good work."

Guest speakers included AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Daniel J. Healy and A. E. Lyon, labor member of the Railroad Retirement Board.

The 8,000-member union has contracts with North Central Airlines and 86 railroads.

Missile Site Stoppages Hit Low .005% in August

Only 67 man-days of labor were lost because of disputes at American missile sites in August—a record exceeded only once before in the history of the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission.

The commission, calling the loss "insignificant, to say the least," said that of 1.4 million man-days worked in August, time lost in work stoppages figured out at .005 percent.

That made August "one of the very best months" in missile site history, according to commission Sec. Julius E. Kuczma. Only one other month was more dispute-free, he said.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz is commission chairman. He has reported another low time-lost record for the first quarter of the commission year. Of 4.3 million man-days worked in June, July and August, only 1,424 days were lost because of work stoppages, he said, for a percentage of .031.

The job of building missile sites has been called the "largest construction job" in the United States. Last June Pres. Kennedy hailed the work record as one of which the nation could be "justifiably proud."

At that time the commission lauded AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for his leadership and support, and cited strong positions backing labor's "no strike" pledge by Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, and by heads of other construction unions. For the first year of the commission's existence, the lost-time percentage was .091.

Politics, Organizing Key Cement Parley

St. Louis—Political action and trade union organizing were twin themes of speakers at the opening sessions of the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers convention here.

Pres. Felix Jones, in a keynote address to the 300 delegates, called for a program of mobilizing the union's resources to make new breakthroughs in organizing and bargaining.

The choice before the convention, he said, is "whether the union is to go forward in accomplishing its goals or will take the easy road of drifting and just being another union."

Jones called also for coordinated efforts to fight "right-to-work" forces in every state where the union shop is under attack.

In other addresses:

- Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., told the delegates that the voting records of congressmen and senators show "who are the friends of unionism" and deserving of re-election.
- Canadian Labor Congress Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald joined in stressing the importance of political action by unions. He also called for a greater labor effort to get the economies of the two nations moving forward more rapidly, pointing out that the standard of living in some European countries has risen at a considerably faster rate than in North America.
- Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) predicted passage of social security health care for the aged in the next Congress.
- AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization Jack Livingston told the delegates that more vigorous organizing efforts are needed by all unions. He said the number of workers organized in recent years has been balanced out by the loss of membership and jobs as a result of automation.

At Sheet Metal Convention:

Schnitzler Spurs 35-Hour Campaign

Miami Beach, Fla.—"Pump-priming" the economy during periods of unemployment will no longer work, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared in a talk to the 31st general convention of the Sheet Metal Workers.

An increase of $1 billion in the gross national product until a few years ago, he recalled, produced 45,000 to 65,000 new jobs. Now, he continued, the same increase means only 3,652 new jobs.

"We're going to have to tackle it another way," he said.

"The President has said he wants full employment on a 40-hour week. I am in favor of that 100 percent. But I don't see where anything this Administration has done has produced anywhere near full employment on a 40-hour-week basis, and it has done its best. Congress has been reluctant to give all the Administration has asked for, but even if it had I don't see how it could have eaten into this unemployment.

"It seems to me our waiting time is almost over. We can't wait any longer because the picture is not getting any better—it's getting worse. If America does not provide jobs for the workers on a so-called 40-hour-week arrangement, then we're going to have to go to a 35-hour week so we can put the unemployed to work and keep them working."

The more than 700 delegates roundly endorsed the international union administration headed by Pres. Edward F. Carlough and Sec.-Treas. David S. Turner, and re-elected them and 11 vice presidents without opposition. Carlough's stand in defense of the union's jurisdictional claims was given unanimous endorsement.

The convention was the first the Sheet Metal Workers have held since the Landrum-Griffin and labor-management and reporting acts were passed, and the delegates approved a long series of amendments which brought the international constitution into compliance with the requirements set up in the legislation.

They also passed several resolutions aimed at protecting the union's jurisdiction, voted to accept into union membership all workers in shops, either organized or being organized, "where the work performed is within the jurisdiction of the SMWIA," and backed the general officers in "the continuance and expansion of their efforts in organizing all areas and phases of the sheet metal industry."

The officers' report noted that the union is one of the few showing growth, with an increase in production membership of more than 50 percent since the last convention four years ago.

2,000 at the firm's Thompson, Manitoba, complex. Mine-Mill is left with only the 2,200 workers at Falconbridge Nickel in Sudbury. The Steelworkers withdrew a bid for bargaining rights at that company in August after the labor board found some cards had not been properly signed.

Stripped from major union status and 27,000 members to an almost regional status and less than 9,000 members, Mine-Mill said it would appeal the certification to the courts. It said it refuses to recognize the board's verdict.

The Steelworkers won a government vote for bargaining rights by a slim 15-vote margin, but Mine-Mill objected on two grounds—that 70 ballots had not been officially stamped and that the Steelworkers violated the 72-hour no-propaganda period before the February vote.

The board ruled against both protests although employer member R. W. Teagle agreed with Mine-Mill and recommended another vote.

The victory pushed the Steelworkers over the 100,000-member mark in Canada, the first union to reach that figure in this country.

The Steelworkers, who took Port Colborne with ease last December, pushed through barbed wire barricades and company interference to win a resounding victory in Thompson last spring.

The union moved into Sudbury on Sept. 10, 1961, after die-hard Mine-Mill members rioted when Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, attempted to tell the Inco workers how they could get back into the recognized labor movement.

Labor's Support of UN Reaffirmed by Meany

The ideals and aspirations of American labor "are identical with the fundamental aims of the United Nations charter," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a statement calling on all AFL-CIO members to reaffirm support of the UN on Oct. 24, United Nations Day.

Despite enormous difficulties, the federation president said, the UN has "made encouraging progress" in advancing the aims proclaimed in its charter. Meany pledged American labor's support to "help the UN translate the ideals of its charter into living reality."

American labor, said Meany, pioneered the campaign for the adoption of the UN convention against slave labor. "On the occasion of the observance of UN Day, we pledge our highest efforts, in cooperation with the ICFTU, to secure UN adoption of a convention for protecting the basic human rights of the millions of people on both sides of the iron curtain imprisoned on political and religious grounds."

The UN, Meany warned, with its membership already more than doubled, "faces the task of eliminating its weaknesses and the dangers which beset it. The nations of Africa and Asia can render decisive service towards the success of the UN Development Decade program by assuring the UN authoritative and cohesive rather than fragmentized and paralyzed leadership. The UN can grow as a new type of instrument of world negotiation and preventive diplomacy only if all its member states honor its decisions and meet their obligations and responsibilities to it as a world body."

Meany urged that the UN as "an open door to the future" be strongly supported so that it becomes a "door to a world of human freedom, well-being and world peace."

PIN AND TIE CLASP were presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by members of a union-to-union team from the All-Japan Federation of Electric Machine Workers Unions who called at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington while guests of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

UNION-TO-UNION TEAM from the Federation of Electric Workers' Unions of Japan through Vice Pres. Chozui Kameyama presented a gift to Pres. George Meany during a call at AFL-CIO headquarters. The group is exchanging visits with the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

At Oklahoma Hearing:

Expert Sees Forgery On 'R-T-W' Petitions

Oklahoma City—A handwriting expert has testified that 35 different names on a single Oklahoma "right-to-work" law initiative petition were forged by the same person.

The expert said that in more than 1,100 instances signatures were placed on the petitions more than once by the same person. Evidence on another 1,000 cases of alleged fraud was still to come.

The testimony was given by Mrs. Sadie McBride, Oklahoma City, in a hearing before Sec. of State William Christian challenging the validity of the initiative petition, which seeks to place the so-called "right-to-work" proposal on a state ballot.

The sheet bearing the 35 different names, taken from the initiative petition filed with the secretary of state by "right-to-work" law proponents, was introduced in evidence at the hearing and the handwriting expert said they were all written by one person.

Examination of 18 bulky volumes containing the instances of alleged "flagrant fraud" was then begun by Christian, with the handwriting expert testifying on the evidence found in each case. Examination of 14 other volumes was to be considered later in the hearings.

Under Oklahoma law, fraudulent signatures to an initiative petition constitute a felony.

'Fraud' Charged

Attorneys for citizens groups challenging the "right-to-work" petition said there were "hundreds of other instances of fraud" that had been uncovered. William Kessler, Oklahoma City councilman, represents the challengers.

"It is obvious petition circulators were not warned of the serious consequences of using these illegal methods of obtaining false signatures. On the contrary, it appears circulators were encouraged to violate the law."

The hearing on the "right-to-work" petition challenge was set by Christian two months ago and held on schedule after the challengers obtained a temporary writ of mandamus.

The attorneys contended the secretary of state was uncertain of his legal right to subpoena witnesses to appear before his hearings on the petition challenge.

Kessler said examination of the signatures on the "right-to-work" initiative petition has uncovered "numerous instances of outright forgery."

Questioning Sought

"The secretary of state is authorized by law to conduct these hearings and rule on testimony," Kessler said in his argument.

"How can he do so and give us a fair and complete hearing unless we are permitted to question individuals responsible for the wholesale amount of fraud and irregularities showing up on these petitions?"

The attorney said the challengers seek to question 10 petition circulators and three officers of Oklahomans for the Right to Work Inc., the organization responsible for circulation of the initiative petition.

"We are anxious to hear their explanation of numerous cases of outright forgery," Kessler said.

"I am amazed at this utter disregard for the law. I wonder if these people realize fraudulent signers of a petition are risking felony conviction for which the maximum penalty is $500 fine and up to two years imprisonment?"

"In checking Oklahoma County voting files we are finding one out of every four petition signers were not even registered to vote. Another 18 percent are improperly registered."

States Urged To Look Into Health Plans

The National Council of Senior Citizens, alarmed over charges that subscribers to health insurance plans have received unnecessary surgery by unqualified doctors, has called on its member clubs to urge state studies of the non-profit plans and the medical societies which control them.

Former Rep. Aime J. Forand of Rhode Island, president of the council, said the move was prompted by serious charges growing out of a state-sponsored Columbia University study of non-profit health plans in New York. The council wants special attention focused on Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans and supports the Columbia recommendation of more public representation on Blue Shield boards.

"Reports from our membership in many states," Forand said, "indicate that criticisms of poor-quality service and high costs, such as were leveled in the recent Columbia University report, could be found in many other areas of the nation."

The four-year study by the Columbia group disclosed that subscribers may be subjected to inferior medical care. Forand said the council has received reports that new Blue Cross-Blue Shield combination plans for older people would cost an elderly couple more than $360 a year—a rate hike of over 50 percent.

Strong Anti-Bias Policy Stressed by Seafarers

The West Coast division of the Seafarers union has a strong anti-discrimination policy, SIU Pres. Paul Hall declared, and membership and work permit applications are considered without regard to race, color, creed or national origin.

Hall cited a statement of policy voluntarily filed with a House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) declaring that the anti-discrimination policy is fully binding on the division (known as the Sailors Union of the Pacific) and its agents and officers.

The citation came as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed for recision of certification of the SUP with the National Labor Relations Board regional office in San Francisco on grounds that the unit engages in discrimination.

NAACP Files Suits

The NAACP action was one of several announced by the organization including a suit filed in the U.S. District Court in St. Louis against the Trainmen and the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co. The objective, said Robert L. Carter, NAACP general counsel, is to establish legally "the right to equality in job opportunity."

Hall cited the statement by Roosevelt in the Congressional Record of May 22, 1962 that the SUP had taken a "significant step to eliminate discrimination," and that "it is most gratifying to me to have received voluntary cooperation of the union to eliminate discrimination and to advance the cause of human rights." He inserted the SUP policy statement in the Record.

Hall noted that in contrast to the NAACP action announced by Carter, the Brooklyn, N. Y. branch of the NAACP had presented a Better Race Relations Labor Award to the SIU local in Brooklyn this month for its excellent record and active civil rights committee.

The SIU president noted also that the union's paper, the Seafarers Log, in September called on all union members to notify him directly of any discrimination or denial of equal rights so that necessary action could be taken.

The NAACP also filed a charge with the Atlanta office of the NLRB alleging that Local 2401 of the Steelworkers at the Atlantic Steel Co. had set up different wages and job classifications for Negroes. USWA General Counsel David E. Feller denied the charges, noting that the union negotiated several years ago contract language that allowed Negro workers to move into previously all-white departments when vacancies occured.

20,000 Jobless Enroll In Retraining Programs

characteristic of present-day unemployment—the incapacity of hundreds of thousands of workers to find employment in industries for which they have previously worked.

The programs are designed to provide new skills for workers whose former skills have been made obsolete either by automated processes or by the decline of entire industries.

Both the ARA programs and the Manpower Development & Training programs were approved by Congress on Administration initiative and both were strongly backed by the AFL-CIO as part of the answer to the problem of joblessness caused by rapid technological change.

The ARA training program is designed specifically to equip workers for new jobs in areas where unemployment has been substantial and chronic and where the federal government is seeking to aid entire distressed communities.

Training in New Skills

The Manpower Development program is intended primarily to aid workers individually by equipping them with new skills useful anywhere in the country in industries that now suffer a shortage of adequately prepared employes.

In the first month of the broad-range program, the Labor Dept. committed approximately 16 percent of the funds available from the first appropriation. Four states gained approval of the maximum funds they are allowed under the law—Connecticut, Maryland, Oklahoma and Nevada. Other states are rapidly seeking approval of training projects, the Labor Dept.'s manpower expert, Seymour L. Wolfbein, indicated.

In the first period of the area redevelopment training program, Wirtz reported:

- Nearly 64 percent of all trainees were men and one-third of all were more than 35 years of age.
- About 79 percent had some high school education although not all had been graduated from high school. About 12 percent had less than a full eight-year grade school education.
- Courses of training were approved for 89 occupations representing almost all major occupational groups.
- The largest group of trainees, 29 percent of the total, received training in 14 metalworking occupations.
- The second largest, 22 percent, received clerical and sales training.
- There were 358 trainees in agricultural occupations including operation and maintenance of farm machinery; 610 in the automobile trades; 359 in the field of electronics mechanics.

NLRB Orders Back Wages, Jobs For Darlington Textile Workers

workers who take jobs at other Deering, Milliken mills.

The key issue in the six years of hearings and litigation was whether Deering, Milliken should be held responsible for the unfair labor practices of its affiliated mill.

The board was unanimous in its finding that the Darlington mill was guilty of unfair labor practices. Three members, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown said the evidence made it clear that all Deering, Milliken mills were controlled by the Milliken family and that Roger Milliken was president of all but one of the affiliated companies. Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissented on this point.

"More important," the NLRB majority added, "was Roger Milliken's participation in the area having the greatest impact on labor relations—the area of collective bargaining. Thus he circulated a memorandum and editorial which was obviously intended as a primer to the managers of the mills in combatting union organization. During the organizational campaign, his pervasive influence was demonstrated by the statements of supervisory employes that Roger Milliken would close the plant rather than permit its unionization. . . . And finally it was Roger Milliken who told a stockholder and director that he would not operate the mill as long as there was '17 percent of the hard core' labor people remaining in the mill."

The "17 percent" figure referred to the employes who refused to disavow their support of the union after the plant closing had been announced. In a whipped up atmosphere of hysteria and fear, more than 400 of the workers signed supervisor-circulated petitions recanting their support of the union. The mayor of Darlington carried them to Milliken to plead, hat in hand, for a reprieve.

Plea Rejected

Milliken coldly noted that some 17 percent of the workers had not signed the petitions and said he didn't think he could profitably run the mill with such a "hard core" of resistance to the speedup which had led the mill workers to organize.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock hailed the NLRB order as "a big step to remedy injustices done to Darlington workers." He added:

"We hope other southern textile workers will take heart from the board's action which demonstrates that effective remedies can be brought to bear against union-busting employers."

Pollock said the union also hopes that as a result of the NLRB action "other southern textile employers will become more law-abiding."

The Enemy Is Apathy

WITH THE 1962 election campaign in its final two weeks, political writers and analysts are dusting off the voting records and expounding on the "iron rule" of midterm elections: the party in power always loses congressional seats.

The facts are that since the beginning of the 20th Century in only one midterm election has the party holding the White House picked up seats—in 1934, in the first opportunity the voters had to pass judgment on the New Deal. Voters turned out in great numbers that year to record a vote of confidence in FDR and provide more votes for his program.

The 1934 case holds out hope for 1962. There is nothing inevitable about the midterm rule. If the voters who back the Kennedy Administration turn out to vote in November in full force, liberal strength in the House and Senate can be increased.

The enemy is apathy, especially among voters who tend to support the Administration. By simple failure to vote they ironically strengthen the opposition to White House programs and policies because the conservatives rally their forces to increase congressional opposition to the President.

The secret weapon in the 1962 elections is the great uncast vote—the electoral power of the millions who do not come to the polls in congressional elections. There are enough of these unexpressed votes to repeal the "iron rule" and repeat the FDR victory in 1934. Labor's job is to turn out that vote.

Comparing the Records

FORMER PRES. EISENHOWER'S unusually active participation in the fall election campaign has invited new attention to the record of his first two years in the White House compared to the opening years of the Kennedy Administration.

The record shows conclusively that Pres. Kennedy, working with a Democratic Congress, has achieved more in the way of major legislation than was accomplished by Pres. Eisenhower working with a Republican Congress during his first two years. Pres. Kennedy asked for more and got more than Pres. Eisenhower during a comparable period.

The record shows that Pres. Eisenhower secured congressional approval of about 30 major proposals. Pres. Kennedy has chalked up more than 60 major laws during his first two years including creation of the Peace Corps, the disarmament agency, the Alliance for Progress, aid to depressed areas, an increase in the minimum wage and extension of coverage, manpower retraining, the far-reaching trade expansion measure, a pay increase for federal workers and many more.

The record of failures in the first two Eisenhower years is about as long as the accomplishments, while the first Kennedy Congress refused to go along on a handful of issues, although these have an importance beyond a mere listing.

The difference in the records takes on added significance when it is remembered that Pres. Eisenhower had the Republican-Southern Democratic coalition working with him and Pres. Kennedy was under constant attack from the conservative grouping, winning portions of his program by paper-thin margins.

An 88th Congress bolstered with enough liberals to overcome the obstructionism of the coalition can produce a two-year period of fruitful legislation designed to meet the critical problems in medical care, education, urban growth and civil rights and above all move toward a solution of the chronic unemployment that is plaguing the nation.

Hey, Wake Up

In Analysis of 87th Congress:

Labor Finds the Record Good; Major Problems Confront 88th

This analysis and evaluation of the two-year record of the 87th Congress is contained in a new AFL-CIO pamphlet, "Labor Looks at the 87th Congress," prepared by the federation's Dept. of Legislation.

THERE IS NO EASY JUDGMENT to pass on the 87th Congress. It made a good, solid record of accomplishment on legislation vital to the welfare of the American people, but it also left undone far too much essential business.

On balance, the accomplishments outweigh the unfinished business. These accomplishments are particularly impressive in light of the paper-thin margin of support in Congress for key issues in the Kennedy Administration's legislative program. The 1960 election—which brought Pres. Kennedy into the White House—resulted in the loss of 21 liberal members of the House of Representatives. Thus the new Administration and liberals in Congress had to work hard against conservative opposition to constructive legislation.

During the previous eight years, long-sought and badly-needed social legislation was often pigeonholed by conservatives, tied up by out-of-date congressional rules, or killed by presidential vetoes. Fortunately Pres. Kennedy threw White House power into the legislative battle for liberal programs during the 87th Congress. Otherwise the record of the 87th would have been much worse.

Perhaps the most significant achievement of the 87th Congress was enactment of the broad new job-creating trade expansion program to increase United States foreign trade and to protect American workers. Another major achievement was extension of Fair Labor Standards Act wage-hour protections to 3.6 million previously unprotected workers and setups in the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour.

Other accomplishments of the 87th Congress were area redevelopment assistance for economically depressed communities, manpower development to upgrade job skills of unemployed workers and youngsters newly entering the labor force, emergency public works acceleration to provide jobs for the unemployed, a comprehensive job-creating and home-building housing program, public welfare reforms to help needy adults and children, social security pension increases, pay raises for federal workers, submission to the states of an amendment to abolish poll taxes, and drug industry controls to protect the American people.

IN THE FOREIGN POLICY FIELD, Congress endorsed and supported the imaginative new Peace Corps program, "Alliance for Progress" assistance to Latin American countries, and the new Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. In spite of perennial criticism of foreign aid, the 87th continued support for essential foreign aid programs after the President began reform and reorganization of foreign aid administration.

Although there were many solid accomplishments and achievements, the 87th Congress still left a substantial amount of unfinished business for the 88th.

First, the 88th Congress must overhaul and reform its rules of procedure. Far too often, liberal legislation proposed by Pres. Kennedy and supported by the AFL-CIO during the 87th Congress was killed in committees dominated by conservatives.

High unemployment remains an urgent challenge for Congress. Related challenges for the 88th Congress are lagging economic growth and automation. Area redevelopment aid, manpower development, youth employment programs and public works acceleration are steps in the right direction. But much more action and much more progress are essential.

The AFL-CIO wants a full employment economy with a full-time job for every worker who wants a job. This is essential not only in terms of human welfare but also in terms of national security. The AFL-CIO campaign for a 35-hour workweek is an answer to persistent high unemployment. It is a program we support because other full employment measures have been inadequate or ineffective.

Unfinished business left by the 87th Congress includes genuine, equitable tax reform, "medicare" health benefits for the aged, federal standards for unemployment compensation, aid to education at all levels, youth employment opportunities, aid for mass transit systems, establishment of a Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs, abolishing literacy tests to protect voting rights, and realistic reform of existing labor laws.

With their votes on Election Day the American people can decide whether the 88th Congress will meet these challenges and whether the will of the people will be effectively translated into law.

Morgan Says:

Congress' Inaction on Youth Bill Leaves Serious Social Problem

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AFTER THE PEACE CORPS shaped up so well it was logical that something along its lines be proposed for home use. The result was the Youth Employment Opportunities Act which Pres. Kennedy put on his "must" list of legislation last June. But Congress changed it from must to musty. It is one of the important bills gathering dust in a House Rules committee pigeonhole. The reason for its fate is monumentally simple: Rules Committee Chairman Howard Smith didn't like it. "Tell me," he inquired, in effect, at one point, "does this bill apply to Negroes?" Advised that it did and that the Youth Corps activity camps would not be segregated, the autocratic Virginia gentlemen, who is a walking bottleneck against progressive legislation, decided that the move had gone far enough even though the appropriate committees of both House and Senate had already approved it—in different versions.

Morgan

The cruel irony of Rep. Smith's action—or rather inaction—is reflected in the increasingly serious predicament of the age group the bill was designed to help. The latest government figures show that unemployment rose among teenagers in September. A citizen doesn't have to be a social worker to understand that a teenager with empty hours on his hands is a kind of human time bomb, capable of explosive damage to himself and his community unless his energy is fused to something constructive.

It is disturbing how we can brush aside understanding and ignore that threat. In hearings before the joint economic committee of Congress in August on the state of the economy and policies for full employment, an economist for the du Pont Company, Ira Ellis, appeared to minimize the importance of joblessness among the nation's youth, at least as an economic factor. "It seems to me," he testified, "that when we talk about unemployment, we ought to talk about the adult labor force, not boys and girls 14 to 19 years of age." This despite the fact that much unemployment is concentrated among the young, the unskilled and minority groups.

At that same hearing, Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) made the point that if you have a combination of all three categories, that is a youngster who is unskilled and, say, a Negro, the lack of a job strikes with triple intensity and explains, in part, where teenage "wolf packs" come from. Douglas called this organizing of delinquents in big cities not only "the most serious social problem that we have in the country," but an economic problem as well.

AUTOMATION, Research Dir. James Wishart of the Meat Cutters told the committee, does not hit employed workers (unless their plant is closed down) so hard as it hits young people because it dries up potential jobs, making it more difficult for them to get started to work in the first place.

This problem, coupled with the desperately depressing spectacle of increasing "drop-outs" of boys and girls from high school, thus increasing in turn the seriousness of juvenile delinquency, made some governmental response imperative. Legislation was drafted to revive, with a youthful accent, the depression-born Civilian Conservation Corps. Objective: help over the high hurdle of job-finding for unskilled young men and women who don't finish school, with a secondary target of providing more manpower for short-handed public service institutions and conservative projects. The Senate version was big and expensive—a permanent 30,000-member Youth Corps to cost 1.3 billion dollars the first four years, 400 million a year thereafter. The modest plans in the House authorized only a pilot corps of 12,000 persons for three years at an annual cost of 50 million dollars.

Some conservatives, Republicans and Democrats, criticized the plan for involving more federal funds. Others argued it would give the secretary of labor too much power in selecting urban Youth Corps projects and that it was inappropriate to have the Labor Dept. supervise what would be essentially conservation work in the field.

Admittedly the legislation was not perfect. A tidier, happier, perhaps even speedier solution would be for each community to tackle its own youth unemployment and delinquency problems fully. But most communities won't do the job that has to be done, some can't do it without outside financial help. Is the solution then to do nothing, or next to it, rather than let the federal government do anything to help?

This, in effect, is how Congress has disposed of a situation threatening the very fabric of our society.

On Labor News Conference:

Biemiller Calls for Election Of More Congress Liberals

THE FAILURE OF CONGRESS "to act vigorously" on programs to eliminate high, persistent unemployment can be remedied by the "election of more liberals in the November elections," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller has declared.

Appearing on Labor News Conference, a weekly interview program carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System's radio network, Biemiller said the AFL-CIO believes the two-year 87th Congress had made a "creditable record." It would have been a better record, he stressed, if there were more "troops" to support Kennedy Administration proposals.

The restrictive rules of both the House and Senate contributed to the disappointments of the legislative record, commented Biemiller, a former congressman. These rules must be revised, he urged, "if American democracy is going to continue to function in this very complicated world."

The director of the federation's Dept. of Legislation called also for more activity by citizens to express their views to members of Congress, asserting that "conservative, reactionary forces" have done a better job than liberals in this area.

Biemiller predicted that the 35-hour workweek proposal "will receive extended hearings at the next session of Congress, partly because of the continuing unemployment problem."

COMMENTING on the National Association of Manufacturers' drive on "curbing the monopoly power of unions," Biemiller said he expects that Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) and some of his colleagues in Congress "will be pushing the NAM program," and it is possible that hearings will be held.

He emphasized that the labor movement feels it already has been curbed "too much by recent congresses" and that "we are prepared to have it out because we are convinced we have justice on our side."

He expressed his conviction that "most of the voters in the United States are actually ahead of their congressmen. They are more liberal than their congressmen. The job is to make sure that those people vote on Nov. 6 and give us the kind of congressmen we need to pass a liberal program."

The American people, he urged, "should do more of a lobbying job than they have been doing."

Biemiller was interviewed by Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill Publications and Neil MacNeil of Time Magazine.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE TERRIBLE-TEMPERED Rep. Clarence Cannon, the antique Missouri Democrat who runs the House Appropriations Committee, is getting lavish praise from newspaper editorialists for his fight against federal spending. Mr. Cannon used to give Harry Truman saddle sores when Truman was in the White House and now he is giving saddle sores to the ranking members of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the official Democratic leadership of the House.

He is a bristling, tough-minded veteran, so familiar with the House rules that for years he served as parliamentarian to Democratic national conventions. He has had fights this year with Sen. Carl Hayden of Arizona, an even more venerable Democrat who runs the Senate Appropriations Committee, and with the potent Sen. Richard Russell of Georgia, second-ranking to Hayden, with whom few other members of Congress would care to tangle.

Cannon says the House has a constitutional right to originate all money bills and that the Senate is a second-stringer, with no power whatever to originate any appropriations.

Cannon joins the Republicans in hating and denouncing what they call "backdoor" spending, which isn't "spending" at all but the financing of services by Treasury lending through revolving funds, all authorized in due form by a majority of each house.

In short, Cannon is jealous of what he considers the prerogatives of the House and he would have given Abraham Lincoln fits in the financing of the Civil War. That is what the shooting is about.

ACROSS THE YEARS a pattern has developed in regard to federal appropriations that is perfectly familiar to students of Congress.

The departments ask the White House for certain funds that bureau and division heads consider desirable and the Budget Bureau, which is an arm of the President, kicks back the requests and tells the cabinet members to cut them down.

After a department's money requests have been cleared by the Budget Bureau, Mr. Cannon's House Appropriations Committee cuts them down some more. There are subcommittees that sit in judgment, basically, and the chairmen of the subcommittees are small-model dictators with the power of life and death. Mr. Cannon likes this system and he backs up his subcommittee chairmen, and so does the House.

The Senate Appropriations Committee then takes over, and the Senate is notably more sympathetic toward social programs than Mr. Cannon and his House subcommittee chairmen are. It is more sympathetic toward foreign policy programs. Generally speaking, the Senate raises the money bills the House has been willing to vote.

The rules of comity have then been applied in conference committee, and the final appropriation bills that emerged have been compromises between the House and Senate.

THIS IS THE WAY the system worked until Republicans began threatening parliamentary blockades to what they call "backdoor" spending and until Mr. Cannon decided he would have a prestige hassle over the question of whether the Senate had the constitutional right to say more than "ja" to a House money bill.

The quarrel may look like a brawl between a couple of elderly men—Cannon and Hayden—on prestige and prerogatives. It may look like a silly bickering on whether "half" the conference committee meetings sit on the House side instead of the Senate side of the Capitol and who presides. But it is much more.

The money power is at stake, and the appropriation of money is the test of what programs Congress really approves. The Senate's right to raise House appropriations to levels consistent with the Senate's concept of the general welfare is at stake.

This battle will have to be renewed in the new Congress. It is no powderpuff derby, no shadow fight. It involves the very simple issue of whether the entire Congress, both houses thereof, is willing to let a small minority that makes up the House Appropriations Committee dictate the public policies of the United States.

How to Buy:

Auto Insurance Rates Trimmed As Firms Intensify Competition

By Sidney Margolius

COMPETITION BETWEEN standard-rate auto insurers and rate-deviating mutuals and direct writers has erupted into a rate war. The standard-rate companies themselves are cutting prices through classification plans and "safe-driver" awards. What many drivers pay depends not only on the amount of dividend or discount a company gives, but on the driver's classification.

Especially if you have a young male driver in the family, or recent accidents or traffic convictions, or other classification problems, nowadays you need to consult well-qualified brokers as well as agents employed by the more usual rate-deviators. Since classification policies of different companies vary, a broker may know of one whose current classification system will save money in your situation.

In discussing with brokers and agents the rates applying to your situation, these factors should be considered:

- Is yours a "compact" car eligible for an extra 10 percent discount? (Most insurers define a "compact" as under 200 inches overall length and no more than 125 h.p.)
- Is it used for commuting, and how far?
- Is it operated occasionally by a young male? What is his age? Married? Steadily employed? Had driver training in school? Has he taken a psychological test? Is he in the upper portion of his class?
- How many convictions or citations have you had? If only one, can you be placed in a company which waives one? How many accidents and how serious?
- If there are two cars in your family, do you qualify for the second-car discount, or what classifications will give you the lowest cost?

You also may want to check on your present insurance by asking how your company has classified you and whether it has a merit-rating plan or subsidiary which can benefit you on the basis of your record, and also by comparing the rate you pay with quotations from other companies and brokers.

It is worth asking also how the company stands on the state of Illinois' listing of each insurer's ratio of lawsuits to premiums. Any broker should have a copy. A company with a ratio over 5 percent might be slow in settling claims. Incidentally, despite rumors, leading mutuals and other moderate-cost companies often have moderate ratios, the listing shows.

SOME MERIT-RATING companies have low rates for drivers with excellent records, and may be a choice for families with relatively low road exposure who drive carefully and keep their cars in good condition. As just one example, while Nationwide Mutual offers some savings from standard rates in various classifications, its subsidiary, Nationwide General, can be as much as 35 percent below it in some cases. But you also face the possibility that a series of violations or accidents can raise your rate so that even though this company won't cancel you, you could find yourself paying as much as 200 percent more than in the parent company.

Drivers with good safety and traffic records and no special classification problems are in position to shop the more selective mutual companies and other deviators, and the merit-rating companies.

Among large mutuals and direct writers which often give dividends or discounts, at least to the preferred risks, are such traditionally low-cost insurers as Factory Mutual, Lumbermen's Mutual, Mutual Service, Government Employes Insurance Co., State Farm Mutual, Federated Mutual, National Farmers, Nationwide Mutual, Safeco, Allstate, Employers Mutual, American Mutual, Farmers Insurance Exchange, Hardware Mutual, Pennsylvania Threshermen's, and Utica Mutual.

In addition, several specialized or more regional companies often offer reasonable rates: Farmers Mutuals of Madison, Wis.; Shelby Mutual and State Auto Mutual, with main offices in Columbus, O.; Keystone Auto Club Insurance Co., Philadelphia; State Auto Insurance Association of Indianapolis; Motor Club of America Group in New Jersey; Auto Club of Southern California; and California Casualty Indemnity Exchange.

Preferred Risk Mutual Insurance Co., Des Moines, Ia., offers substantial savings to non-drinkers.

But some of these companies are selective and in no case can any be considered the best buy for your classification or area until you have compared with other companies and with local brokers.

Consumer Survey Shows:

Auto, Yule Buying Prospects Are Good

CONSUMER SENTIMENT remains favorable toward the purchase of automobiles during the fourth quarter of 1962 and for good Christmas sales in general, the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center reports in its latest survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy.

A nationwide cross section of 1,300 adults in August and September indicates that the outlook for most of 1963 is clouded, and that the data do not lend support to those who hope for a more rapid rate of growth in the American economy.

A small decline has taken place in consumer confidence, continuing a trend noticeable between February and May surveys earlier this year, the report indicates. The latest reading of the SRC Index of Consumer Attitudes is 95 as compared to 96.8 last May and 98.7 in February, 1962. The Index is geared to consumer attitudes of the fall of 1956.

A long-range view of the new findings is far from comforting, SRC analysts point out. They foresee a "slow and gradual deterioration" of the economic situation "long before it has reached a fully satisfactory level."

A comparison of trends in consumer mood during the last three business cycles indicates that from 1960 to 1962 the upturn in sentiment was weaker and shorter than following either the 1954 or 1958 recessions.

The report balances both favorable and unfavorable indications:

FAVORABLE INDICATIONS: People's expectations regarding their personal financial situation remain favorable; intentions to buy autos remain unchanged at a high level; the proportion of people expecting price increases decreased moderately, and consumers are generally satisfied with prices; changes in the expectations of upper income people, generally well-informed, are at least as favorable as those of middle and low-income people.

UNFAVORABLE INDICATIONS: Many more people report having heard unfavorable than favorable economic news recently; Americans in general do not believe that the unemployment problem will be solved soon; concern with the cold war and the opinion that international tensions make for bad times persist among very many consumers.

Current business conditions are not viewed as good, but most people do not expect further decline within the next year—a vital factor since discretionary consumer demand is a function of both ability and willingness to buy, the report points out.

AMA Fixes Things Up For Parents of Doctors

The American Medical Association's objections to social security for doctors apparently doesn't extend to the parents of physicians.

An article in the AMA News, reported by the editor of the Ohio State AFL-CIO publication, News & Views, tells doctors how to put their parents under social security and at the same time get a "tax break" for themselves.

"For example," the AMA article read, "the doctor pays $10 a week to his mother for straightening up his office. He would deduct 3 percent from her wages and send it to the Social Security Administration, along with his 3 percent as employer."

This way, the article noted, the doctor could take a business deduction for this expense for himself while providing credits "toward social security benefits for his mother." Commented News & Views:

"That's what we like about the AMA, its great concern for the welfare of people who are doctors or doctors' parents."

In Midwest States

are close and bitterly-fought but that the Democratic tide that began to rise in 1954, when the party regained control of Congress in the middle of former Pres. Eisenhower's first term may not yet have run its course.

The authoritative reference guide to elections, Congressional Quarterly, lists all nine contests for governor as extremely close, with a "lean" to the Republicans in two states and the other seven rated as "doubtful."

Although the GOP now has 9 senators of 11, Congressional Quarterly lists only three states as apparently "safe" Republican again and three others as "leaning" Republican. Two are rated as either "safe" or "leaning" Democratic and three others are regarded as tossups — Indiana, Kentucky and Wisconsin.

Republicans are credited with prospects of 71 "safe" or "leaning" House seats, Democrats with 43. But the real battle is taking place in the 18 rated as "doubtful," for these are primarily seats the Democrats won in 1958 and lost in 1960 when the head of the ticket, Pres. Kennedy, ran behind congressional candidates rather than ahead of them.

"There is no limit" to the gains that might be made by groups seeking liberal members of the House, says one experienced midwestern political observer, if voters are aroused by Pres. Kennedy's present attempts to overcome the normal offyear apathy and go to the polls.

Kennedy has pointed out in his speeches that since the turn of the century, the party in control of the White House has lost an average of 39 House seats in midterm elections. A heavy vote would make such a loss extremely unlikely for the Democrats.

New York's Wage Floor Faces Test

New York — Mayor Robert F. Wagner has ordered city attorneys to be prepared to defend in court the constitutionality of New York's new minimum wage act against an expected challenge by employers.

By setting a $1.25 wage floor, rising automatically to $1.50 after one year, New York became the first municipality in the nation to legislate on wages. The increase, which goes into effect 30 days after the mayor signs the bill passed by the City Council and the Board of Estimate, is expected to provide immediate raises for 200,000 low-paid workers and benefit many more when the floor moves up to $1.50.

Equal Pay, TUC Bills Die as Congress Quits

Two labor-backed bills—equal pay for women and extended unemployment compensation—died with the adjournment of Congress despite last-minute efforts to beat the clock through legislative shortcuts.

When it became evident that the House-passed equal pay bill was not going to be considered by the Senate Labor Committee, Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) got the Senate to adopt a modified version of the equal pay measure as an amendment to an unrelated House bill. But the plan ran into a snag in the House.

While it is usually routine for differing versions of House and Senate bills to be sent to conference, a single objection in the House is enough to route the legislation through the Rules Committee which can either pigeonhole the measure or recommend that it be sent to conference.

An Ohio Republican, Rep. Frank T. Bow, objected to the conference. The bill went to the Rules Committee, which had just held its last meeting of the session. And there the measure died.

A similar effort was made by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) to revive the temporary unemployment compensation program through an amendment to a House bill dealing with consolidation of pension trust funds.

Although the TUC program had expired last spring, there was still enough money which had been raised through an increase in payroll taxes to permit the program to be revived until the 88th Congress convenes in January.

An amendment to that effect by McCarthy was adopted by the Senate. But the Senate then turned around and attached the substance of the original House bill to still another House-passed bill, which it then passed. The original bill, including the McCarthy amendment, was left pending on the Senate calendar at adjournment.

A supplemental appropriations bill, providing funds needed by various government agencies to carry out programs authorized by Congress after the regular budget had been acted on, was caught in the adjournment rush and failed of passage. However, the agencies affected are expected to spend the money out of their regular appropriations and come back to Congress for additional funds in January.

Wage Increase Delayed

Some 600,000 persons on civil service pension rolls will have to wait beyond the scheduled Jan. 1 effective date for the five percent increase in benefits voted by Congress. Funds to put the raise into effect were included in the sidetracked supplemental bill. Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., announced that the Administration will ask Congress to provide the funds as soon as it convenes in January.

A $400 million start on the $900 million emergency public works program approved by Congress was provided in a bill appropriating funds for other public works projects.

2 Unions Give $6,000 To Rutgers Labor Unit

New Brunswick, N. J.—Two more union contributions to the campaign for Rutgers University's Institute of Management & Labor Relations were announced on the eve of the scheduled dedication of the institute's new home. Auto Workers Local 824 gave $5,000 as its share of UAW Region 9's pledge of $50,000 and the Ladies Garment Workers added $1,000 to their previous contribution of $7,500, in memory of the late Arthur A. Elder.

BROOKLYN UNION MEMBERS held a huge register-and-vote rally at Longshoremen's Local 1814 headquarters, under the sponsorship of COPE. Above, some of the 14 sound trucks that toured Brooklyn streets advertising the rally. The audience packed the hall and overflowed into the streets to hear the speakers by an outside loudspeaker system.

Kennedy Hits GOP 'No-Saying' In Drive to Overcome Apathy

paign has stated that he does not "particularly enjoy driving around the country and making speeches" but that in view of the Republican record in the 87th Congress he couldn't think of "anything better to do" with his autumn weekends.

"I don't want to see the 87th Congress stand still for two years in the most difficult and dangerous and also the most promising time in the history of our country," the President said as he campaigned in Louisville for the election of Democrat Wilson Wyatt over Sen. Thruston Morton (R).

A President "wears many hats" as commander in chief of the armed forces and as the official with special foreign policy responsibilities," he acknowledged in Pittsburgh, "but he is also the leader of his party and in this country both of our parties have a function."

Kennedy indicated that he does not expect his campaign to "change votes" from Republican to Democratic. His hope, he said in a television interview with William Lawrence of the American Broadcasting Co., is to stir up enough excitement so that voters in key districts will flock to the polls Nov. 6.

"If we can arouse some interest and cause a bigger turnout, then I will feel I have done the job," the President said.

Wherever he went, the President taunted the Republicans with their reluctance to use the word "Republican" on their campaign literature.

Raps GOP Record

Morton, a former chairman of the GOP National Committee, "completely banishes the word from his billboards," Kennedy observed. "What is it about this party he once headed that makes him ashamed to identify himself publicly with it?"

In Indiana and in Michigan, in Maryland and New York, he ran the record of what he charged was "no-saying" by Republican members of Congress.

"We proposed a bill for urban affairs and 73 percent of the Republican members from Michigan voted against it," he said.

"We proposed a $1.25 minimum wage and 91 percent of the Republicans voted against it."

"I submitted a bill to make it possible for those living in our cities and suburbs, 75 percent of our people, to be represented in the cabinet, and 92 percent of all the Republicans voted against it," he said to another audience.

"Our Housing Act of 1961, the widest and most comprehensive in 13 years" saw "85 percent of the Republicans voting against it," he declared, and "85 percent" against the Area Redevelopment Act.

The President's program will keep him campaigning through the nation at least through Nov. 3—three days before the election.

Patrolmen Re-elect All Top Officers

Boston—The Railway Patrolmen, meeting here in convention, re-elected present officers and made a number of minor changes in the union constitution.

Elected for another term were Pres. William J. Ryan of Elizabeth, N. J.; Executive Vice Pres. John V. Macdonald, Boston; and Sec.-Treas. Cecil Smithson, Chicago. Q. T. Bean of Fort Erie, Ont., was elected a vice president succeeding George T. Cannon of Buffalo, retired. All other executive board members were re-elected without opposition.

The three-day gathering was attended by delegates from 35 U.S. and Canadian locals. The convention voted to change election procedures, including the election of local union officers for two years instead of one, the present requirement.

The delegates adopted a series of resolutions affirming union policy on legislative and economic programs of the AFL-CIO.

Smaller Growth Rate Seen for Labor Force

The Labor Dept. has taken a look at the trends of recent years and revised downward its earlier projections of labor force growth during the 1960s.

The recent trends show young men are staying in school longer and men 65 and over are retiring earlier.

The result, the Labor Dept. reported, is that the labor force is expected to increase by 12.6 million in the 1960-70 decade instead of by 13.5 million as forecast a few years ago.

In issuing revised projections for the 1965-75 period, the Labor Dept. estimated the labor force may total 85.7 million by 1970 and 93 million by 1975. It said the new projections were prepared in light of revised population estimates of the Census Bureau and of labor force trends since 1957.

"In evaluating this later experience," the department noted, "allowance was made for the likelihood that recent economic developments affecting labor force participation rates, such as curtailed job opportunities in the 1958 and 1961 recessions, were of a temporary nature."

The assumptions in both sets of projections are that the economy will operate "at relatively high levels of activity," that the size of the armed forces will not change significantly and that past trends in labor force participation rates for various age groups of men and women will continue.

The labor force changes foreseen for the 1960s, the Labor Dept. said, will be highlighted by the addition of 6 million young workers under 25 years of age—nearly half the estimated rise of 12.6 million. An additional 3 million will be adult women and 3 million more will be adult men.

For men 65 years and over, the report noted, the continuation of trends towards earlier retirement is expected to more than offset their expanding numbers in the population.

Between 1970 and 1975, the pattern of changes will be somewhat different. The number of young workers will rise much less sharply than in the 1960s—some 2 million—but there will be almost 3 million more men workers in the 25-34 age group. The labor participation rates among adult women probably will rise at a slower pace and population growth will be primarily responsible for an increase of 2 million among women 25 and over.

MORE THAN 10,000 PEOPLE greeted Pres. Kennedy and Michigan's Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson, running for re-election, when the President and governor visited Muskegon on a campaign trip. A voter reaches out to grasp Swainson's hand (right) as Kennedy mingles with the crowd.

Swainson Stock Rising in Race Against Romney in Michigan

Detroit—The race for governor in this state, which pits the Republican "new face," George Romney, against incumbent Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson, is generally rated second in potential importance only to the California battle between Democrat Edmund G. Brown and former Vice Pres. Nixon.

When the energetic Romney, the motor car manufacturer, entered the race, it looked as if he had Swainson "buried six feet deep," some Democratic spokesmen frankly admit. Now they are sure that Swainson stock is rising sharply in the political market and that Romney's appeal has slipped.

Their remaining question is whether there is "enough time" before the election for Swainson to reach his maximum strength and for Romney to continue his slide from a too-early "peak".

The registration figures in Wayne County (Detroit) are favorable to Swainson and the Democrats. In the upstate towns, usually a stronghold of Republican power, new voters have been registering heavily Democratic.

The Detroit News poll, which often has proved accurate in the past, showed that early in October the young Swainson off his two-year record was running neck-and-neck with Romney, despite September reports from visiting newspapermen that the Republican candidate seemed definitely ahead.

The GOP in this state has found 14 years of Democratic rule in the executive mansion in Lansing little short of unendurable. The party has resorted to a wide variety of candidates in its effort to recapture what used to be territory almost as solidly Republican as Vermont.

Romney was chosen to make the race against Swainson because he seemed to have many built-in attributes of victory. He was widely publicized as the salesman extraordinary who made American Motors a major automobile producer of "compact" cars. (This can kick back, because every time he charges the Democrats have "lost industry" for the state, someone points out that he himself took Nash-Rambler production and thousands of jobs out of Michigan into Wisconsin.)

In the beginning the aura of success nevertheless surrounded him. He was active in a so-called citizens' group organized two years ago to improve political relations between Democratic governors and a Republican-gerrymandered state senate. He plunged into constitutional convention activities that brought him wide newspaper coverage.

He is described as "vital", "dynamic", "ruggedly handsome". The Democrats call him "Buster" and suggest that his aura is thin, that the man himself is shallow. The proposed tax-reform program devised with fanfare by his "citizens' " group, they point out is simply the reform program repeatedly advanced by Swainson and by former Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams, which the Republican legislature repeatedly rejected because Swainson and Williams proposed it.

Swainson has clearly achieved solid and substantial gains. Not least are the gains he scored when he met Romney face to face in two "confrontations" during the second week in October—one a debate before Detroit's Economic Club, where he slugged the GOP candidate hard, the second a television debate that left Romney looking somewhat meeker than a man-eating tiger.

Next day Romney canceled campaign speeches to study the films in preparation for two more TV debates scheduled for statewide exposure.

Districts Gerrymandered

The congressional races—Democrats now have seven members of the House, the Republicans 11—are expected to produce few if any changes. The districts are gerrymandered to favor Republicans.

Michigan gained one seat through reapportionment after the 1960 census, and this at-large seat is contested by Neil Staebler, who as former state chairman built the Democratic organization that elected Swainson and Williams, and by former GOP Rep. Alvin M. Bentley.

Pres. Kennedy's recent hard-hitting Michigan tour gave a lift to the Democrats. They expect him to be back in the state once more before the election.

In Top Wisconsin Race:

Nelson Presses Bid Against Aging Wiley

Milwaukee—An aging and perhaps slipping Republican, Sen. Alexander Wiley, is running for a fifth six-year term against the most formidable challenger of his career, Democratic Gov. Gaylord Nelson in Wisconsin, and the battle is paralleled by the clash between State Attorney Gen. John W. Reynolds (D) against Philip G. Kuehn (R) for governor.

Dean of the Senate Republicans since the death of the late Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, Wiley has lived something of a charmed existence in his quarter century in Washington. A conservative, he fought for the St. Lawrence Seaway when the seaway could be made to appear a symbol of liberalism. A one-time isolationist, he switched in time to obtain the support of modern Republicans six years ago against the attacks of extremist Republican businessmen with whom this state is extraordinarily well populated.

Wiley's principal disadvantage is that, at the age of 78, he obviously does not care to debate or appear in twin performances with the vigorous 46-year-old Nelson.

Nelson is the only Democrat in this century to be elected twice as Wisconsin's governor. He began his political career as a La Follette Progressive, shifted to the Democratic Party as did many other Progressives when the Republicans came under the domination of the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy.

Nelson may be handicapped by the financial burdens loaded on most governors in recent years because of the necessity of raising taxes to finance necessary social services. His choice was a selective 3 percent sales tax, and some who had supported him were sharply critical. It is considered certain, however, that liberals will back him strongly when it comes to voting in November.

By one of the contradictions familiar in this state's politics, Kuehn is running for governor on a platform demanding an across-the-board sales tax to replace Nelson's selective levy, while the Democratic candidate, Reynolds, advocates substitution of a graduated income tax.

Kuehn Lost in 1960

Kuehn, a powerful factor in the GOP's state organization, is considered close to the Republican Party's most conservative wing. He was narrowly beaten two years ago when he tried for the statehouse, losing to Nelson.

The present House of Representatives lineup in Wisconsin is six Republicans and four Democrats and the districts were not changed by reapportionment after the 1960 census. In most of the districts, the incumbents appear to be safe, although Republicans are making an intense if quiet campaign to defeat five-term Rep. Lester R. Johnson in the 9th District.

Johnson's victory in 1953 in a special election was the first signal that former Pres. Eisenhower's 1952 presidential triumph was something less than a solid Republican success.

In the AFL-CIO Committee for Political Education voting guide, Wiley is listed as casting 28 votes against, 19 votes for proposals considered by labor as in the public interest. In 1961 his record by this standard slipped; it showed three votes in favor, six against public interest bills.

Long Favored In Missouri Senate Race

St. Louis—The major statewide race in Missouri is for the Senate, with incumbent Democrat Edward V. Long running against Republican challenger Crosby Kemper, Jr., a Kansas City insurance man. Long is widely known in the state and highly respected. Kemper is militantly conservative and publicly hostile toward moderates who question his maturity and judgment. He is not the kind of candidate this state's voters ordinarily elect.

Most of the Democratic House seats are considered safely in the party's lineup, although some party factionalism in the 4th District (west central) has caused doubts about the position of Rep. William J. Randall.

A key race is that involving Republican Rep. Thomas B. Curtis in the suburban St. Louis County district. Curtis, a six-term veteran, is rated as a leading GOP economics and social security figure, and he has a well-organized campaign. His Democratic opponent, Philip V. Maher, is keying his campaign to support of social security health care, trade expansion, intensified water purification and other Kennedy measures.

Yates Seeks 'Downstate' Illinois Votes

Chicago—Traditionally this state elects one senator from Chicago, one from "downstate," an area that means everything north, west and south of Cook County. The Republican candidate for re-election, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen, is the Senate's GOP floor leader, whose spellbinding oratorical style is out of fashion even among his fellow prima donnas in Washington but who is rated here as one of the most effective baby-kissing, hand-shaking politicians in the state's history. He is from "downstate" Pekin, a Peoria suburb.

The Democratic liberal who is attempting to take Dirksen's measure is Rep. Sidney R. Yates, seven times elected to the House and a candidate who got an ovation at the Illinois State AFL-CIO convention in early October.

The handicaps Yates faces are conceded; his assets are unmistakable. He will win, if he wins, on the basis of Cook County votes, on his record as a highly intelligent supporter of progressive legislation and from a possible falloff of Dirksen sentiment in normally Republican areas.

The handicaps are that Yates, like Democratic Sen. Paul H. Douglas, comes from Cook County and that he has never run before for statewide office and therefore is relatively little known.

To overcome the latter deficiency, Yates has been campaigning hard since early last spring in the midland cities—the heavily-populated urban communities of Bloomington, Springfield, Decatur, Champaign, Peoria, Jacksonville.

Scores Dirksen's Record

He has hit constantly at Dirksen's record which in the last two sessions of Congress has been solidly anti-Kennedy on domestic issues.

The authoritative reference publication, Congressional Quarterly, shows Dirksen in 1961 supporting 27 percent of Kennedy proposals on both foreign and domestic policy. (Yates supported Kennedy on 97 percent of the rollcalls.)

On the AFL-CIO COPE check list, Dirksen is shown as having voted across the years, 42 times against, only 6 times in favor of proposals labor considered important in the public interest. Yates is shown as having 55 votes in favor of such proposals, none against.

In a state so closely divided along political lines (Kennedy won in 1960 by only about 8,000 votes), campaign skill and other personal attributes often become decisive.

Dirksen's efforts to kill a strict drug-control bill made him vulnerable when the thalidomide scare forced the Senate Judiciary Committee to reconsider and send major portions of the original Kefauver bill to the floor for passage.

Even in downstate towns, Dirksen's votes against progressive programs have been re-examined by some normally Republican editors who are aware that jobs and help were needed—and are being provided—by the depressed areas bill, the emergency public works bill, the bill to retrain jobless workers, the bill to extend unemployment benefits for those whose normal state compensation was exhausted.

There are incipient Republican stirrings in Cook County; a bond issue for needed public works, sponsored by Mayor Richard J. Daley, was turned down by the voters last April; the city Board of Estimate has rejected departmental budget proposals.

Heavy Plurality Needed

It may be presumed, however, that Daley's Democratic organization will produce a heavy Yates plurality; Daley must seek re-election himself next February. Many labor groups have been active in registration campaigns. The key is whether downstate campaigning by Yates, plus the reconsideration being given to Dirksen's own record, will hold down the Republican margin outside Cook County.

The tightest congressional race involves Rep. Peter Mack (D) and Rep. Paul Findley (R), whose districts were thrown together by reapportionment. Illinois lost one seat of its 25. The new district would normally be rated narrowly Republican but Mack is a tremendous campaigner.

Spanish Booklets List Injured Worker Aids

New York — State benefits for workers injured on or off the job are outlined in two new Spanish language booklets ready for distribution, Col. S. E. Senior, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board, has announced.

Translated into English — in which the pamphlets also are available—the titles are What Every Worker Should Know About Workmen's Compensation and Disability Benefits — Questions and Answers About Disability Benefits to Employes. Copies in either language may be had at the board's executive offices, 50 Park Place, New York 7, N. Y., or at regional offices in Albany, Binghamton, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse.

Minnesota and the Dakotas:

Key Contests Seen Close In Upper Midwest States

Minneapolis—Two members of the Senate, three governors and 12 members of the House will be elected by voters in the vast upper central area of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. It is an arena in which Democrats have a chance to score some gains—but as in other sections of the country the contests still look extremely close, the eventual results dependent on which party puts forth maximum efforts most effectively.

Minnesota's Republican Gov. Elmer L. Andersen won his office two years ago by a squeak-through margin of 50.6 percent of the vote over Democratic incumbent Orville Freeman, who is now secretary of agriculture in Pres. Kennedy's cabinet. Running against him is Lieut. Gov. Karl Rolvaag, eight years in that office and an effective campaigner. The Minneapolis Tribune poll, highly respected for its record of accuracy in the past, shows that the race is very close.

Labor is giving strong support to Rolvaag, pointing out that Andersen failed to push improvements in the state's unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation systems. Andersen is considered unlikely to repeat his 1960 feat of reducing the normal Democratic pluralities in the Iron Range—the factor that enabled him to defeat Freeman.

A key House race pits Democratic State Sec. Donald M. Fraser against the veteran Republican Rep. Walter H. Judd in the 5th District (Minneapolis). This district would now be counted normally Democratic as a result of the reapportionment, and Fraser has an unusually fine record in four terms in the state senate.

Judd nevertheless is a powerful and adroit campaigner and the Republican Party has been pouring funds and speakers into the district, including former Pres. Eisenhower. A principal issue is social security health care and Judd, a physician, is getting substantial aid from the American Medical Association's political arm.

There is no Minnesota senatorial contest this year. In the 6th and 7th Congressional Districts, now held by Republicans, Democrats believe they have a fighting chance to win. The 7th District Democratic nominee is Harding C. Noblitt, a political science teacher who is running as a straight out Kennedy supporter. The incumbent Republican, Rep. Odin Langen, won the district four years ago on issues that involved personality rather than principle.

Democratic Gov. William L. Guy is facing a hard challenge in North Dakota from Mark Andrews, a farmer who is also GOP national committeeman. Andrews gains strength from the fact that Sen. Milton R. Young, a three-term Republican who enjoys a reputation for some independence that is popular in this maverick state, also is on the ticket. Guy nevertheless is by no means rated out of the running.

There is a chance of at least one upset, observers believe, in the two congressional races. In the 2nd District (the western part of the state), the Democratic candidate, Robert Vogel, is making a hard drive at two-term Republican Rep. Don L. Short. Vogel enjoys considerable Nonpartisan League support — a factor of importance, as shown when Sen. Quentin Burdick (D) won a special election to fill the unexpired term of the late Republican Sen. William O. Langer.

Democrats in South Dakota have the able former Rep. George McGovern as their candidate for the Senate against incumbent Republican Joe H. Bottum, who was appointed a few months ago to succeed the late Sen. Francis Case.

Bottum has run an energetic campaign but McGovern would be rated as having at least an even chance with adequate campaign funds. An additional Democratic handicap arose when McGovern suffered a slight illness that required hospitalization a month before the election. The race is still regarded as a tossup, with the outcome depending on how many normally Republican voters cross party lines to vote for McGovern.

Incumbent Republican Gov. Archie Gubbrud is challenged by Democratic former Gov. Ralph Herseth, who won his single two-year term in the Democratic landslide victory of 1958. Gubbrud is considered leading.

Governorship at Stake In Three Plains States

Lincoln, Neb.—The three-state Plains area of Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas votes Republican normally and voted solidly against Pres. Kennedy in 1960. The area is also losing population in proportion to the rest of the country; each state lost a seat in the House as a result of congressional reapportionment after the 1960 census.

In Kansas there are two Senate races. Two-term veteran Sen. Frank Carlson (R) is challenged by K. L. Smith, an employe of his county highway department, and Republican Sen. James B. Pearson is running against Paul L. Aylward, a Democratic Party official. Kansas does not elect many Democratic senators.

The Democratic candidate for governor, Dale E. Saffels, is the opponent of incumbent Republican John Anderson, Jr., who reclaimed the statehouse two years ago for the GOP by ousting former Gov. George Docking (D). There have been scandals in the Anderson administration that causes local observers to give Saffels a chance to win.

By reapportionment the only Democratic House member from Kansas, Rep. J. Floyd Breeding, is compelled to face Republican Rep. Bob Dole, and the combined district two years ago gave 51.5 percent of its vote to the GOP. Breeding has a COPE record of voting 29 times for and three times against bills considered by labor to be in the public interest. Dole's record is an unrelieved vote of 11 against the bills, none for them.

The new southeastern district, where Democratic State Sen. Wade A. Myers is running against Joe Skubitz, is considered a prime possibility for a Democratic victory. Skubitz is a former staff worker for the late Sen. Andrew Schoeppel and is rated an extreme conservative in a district that is in trouble economically.

Seaton in Race

In Nebraska, Democratic incumbent Gov. Frank B. Morrison is opposed by a Republican with a reasonably prominent national name, Fred A. Seaton, who was secretary of the interior in Eisenhower's cabinet. But Seaton is a chilly campaigner and personality issues may swing the election. There is no contest for the Senate this year.

The best chance for Democrats to pick up a Nebraska House seat is in the Omaha district, where Republican incumbent Rep. Glenn Cunningham has lost the state AFL-CIO support he used to have. Backed by labor is Democrat Thomas N. Bonner, a University of Nebraska faculty member. Cunningham's voting record, according to the COPE scoreboard, shows 10 votes for and 23 votes against proposals labor considered in the public interest.

In Iowa, where Democrats scored gains in 1958, they lost in 1960, and the Democratic candidate for the Senate, E. B. Smith of Iowa State University, has an uphill fight against incumbent Republican Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper, a three-term veteran. Democrat Harold E. Hughes, the state's commerce commissioner, is considered as having a better chance against Republican Gov. Norman A. Erbe.

Reapportionment in the state threw together two congressional districts represented by Democrats, but Rep. Neal Smith, who would inherit the post, is challenged by an unusually effective Republican candidate, Mrs. Sonja Egenes—first woman Republican ever to seek a congressional place in Iowa. An outstanding Democratic candidate in the 2nd (northeastern) District, Frank Less, is rated as having a fighting chance to oust Republican Rep. James E. Bromwell.

CURRENT COPE DRIVE of Chicago Div. 241, Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes, reached an all-time high of $5,265—including more than $700 from retired members who now live as far away as Ireland, Norway and Greece. Here a check is being presented to COPE Deputy Dir. Al Barkan (center) by Pres. Daniel J. McNamara (left) and Financial Sec. James J. Hill.

Wyatt Pressing Morton In Kentucky Campaign

Louisville—The border state of Kentucky, slung between the old South and the normally Republican strongholds of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, nearly always sends Democrats to the House of Representatives, elects Democrats as governor—but sometimes elects Republican senators. It now has two GOP senators, in fact. There seems at least an even chance that one of them, Sen. Thruston Morton, will be retired to private life in November.

Lieut. Gov. Wilson Wyatt, the Democratic nominee against Morton, is a former mayor of this city, an able campaigner, an attractive candidate of the type that flooded into Democratic leadership ranks beginning in 1948 and through the '50s.

Wyatt's appeal depends not only on his own qualities but also on Morton's vulnerabilities. From a state where the senators usually think it sensible to support liberal programs in Congress, Morton is a powerhouse in the Senate Republican conservative bloc.

On half a dozen key issues in the 87th Congress, Morton broke with the state's senior Republican senator, John Sherman Cooper, to vote with the GOP Old Guard against the depressed areas bill, against extension of coverage under the federal minimum wage law, against school aid, against health care for the aged under social security.

Morton is a former assistant secretary of state in the Eisenhower Administration, supposed to have some sophistication in political affairs. Yet in his campaign against Wyatt, whose record in public office makes him well known to the state's voters, the Republican candidate has felt driven to Nixon tactics (Wyatt was a leader in the anti-Communist Americans for Democratic Action, and Morton has used this fact as Nixon or Sen. Goldwater of Arizona might use it).

Registration Up

Labor has worked effectively to increase the registration of voters. It is expected to work effectively to build up the vote on Nov. 6.

The Democratic Party organization in the state, historically torn by feuds, is more nearly united than at any time in recent years.

The key to statewide results probably will be the vote in Louisville, which oddly enough swings back and forth rather violently between the parties. The city has sent Republicans to the House, although the incumbent is Democratic Rep. Frank Burke, a two-termer seeking re-election. Morton used to be Louisville's representative in the House; Wyatt was the city's mayor.

The state's current House delegation is seven Democrats, one Republican. One seat was lost by reapportionment, and the 88th Congress lineup is expected to be six Democrats, one Republican.

Bayh, Capehart Clash In Tight Indiana Race

Indianapolis—For the last two decades Indiana has been a political hurricane center, a state of violently shifting Democratic and Republican winds. Yet not for many years did Indiana's voters elect a Democratic senator until they chose Vance Hartke in 1958. This year, they may elect a second Democrat—State Rep. Birch Bayh.

The Republican incumbent, Sen. Homer Capehart, is running for a fourth successive six-year term. His career in national Republican politics runs back to the Thirties, when he sponsored a "grass roots" GOP conference on his farm to beat the drums against Franklin R. Roosevelt.

Bayh, only 34 years of age, is nevertheless rated as an "exceptional" Democratic candidate. He has served two terms as Democratic floor leader in the state legislature, two terms as house speaker.

Against Capehart, who would normally be a solid favorite for re-election, are his Senate vote against the Anderson-King bill to establish social security health care for the aged; his opposition to the expanded trade program that in the end picked up substantial GOP support; his efforts to cripple the 1961 minimum wage law with destructive amendments.

Against him, in addition, is a general impression of ineffectuality. In 18 years he has made no notable contribution to the Senate that would establish him as a force. He has been running against Pres. Kennedy by demanding an "immediate invasion" of Cuba by U.S. troops. Bayh's comment is that it is "detrimental" to our foreign policy for Capehart to "run around the country declaring war on an applause meter basis."

Labor has worked probably more effectively than ever before, according to observers in this state, in building up the registration lists, particularly in this capital city. Two years ago voters flocked to register on a basis that almost assured a Nixon victory over Kennedy on the religious issue. This year the Indianapolis new registration is lighter but also distinctly Democratic.

In 1960 Republicans won seven of the state's 11 seats, although two years earlier the Democratic congressional landslide left the GOP with only three House places. This year things may swing slightly back toward the Democrats, even though two-term Democratic Rep. John Brademas in the 3rd District is conceded to be in a tough re-election fight.

The Kennedy program, as well as organization factors and personal popularity, are issues in Indiana. The Republican congressional candidates are avowed conservatives generally; the Democrats are pro-Kennedy. Much depends, therefore, on which group of voters is interested enough in the off year elections to go to the polls Nov. 6.

Factory Hiring Shows Only 'Modest' Rise

Factory hirings showed only "modest increases" in August instead of the expected sharp rise, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

The hiring rate in manufacturing industries rose from 45 to 47 per 1,000. Layoffs were unchanged at 22 per 1,000, instead of showing the expected moderate decline, BLS said. The quit rate for August rose from 14 per 1,000 to 20, about as expected.

Federationist Article Points Out:

Job Lag Underlines Shorter Week Need

A "substantial" cut in working hours is a constructive method of spreading work opportunities and curbing the trend to rising unemployment and part-time work as long as the nation lacks policies to create jobs, the AFL-CIO has declared.

Problems involved in moving towards shorter working hours are discussed in an article entitled "Reducing Hours: Choices and Costs," appearing in the October issue of The American Federationist. The article is the third in a series prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and dealing with various aspects of the shorter hours movement.

Economy Slipping

It called attention to the recurrent recessions of the past decade, noting that recovery periods are getting shorter and weaker and the economy today is slipping again.

"Workers have borne the brunt of these economic failures through a continuing and tragic trend of recurring layoffs, part-time work schedules and an insufficient number of new job opportunities for a growing labor force," the article declared.

This is "a shocking waste of America's vast potential to produce," it added, pointing out that the economy has been growing at about half its potential.

"The Administration's attempts to boost the level of demand for the increasing volume of goods and services that can be produced have not been bold enough and have been largely frustrated by Congress," the article said.

Employment Lag Widens

The Federationist article emphasized that the rise in employment has been only 70 percent of the increase in the labor force during the past nine years, a lag expected to widen in the 1960s as labor force growth swings sharply upward.

"In the absence of policies to expand markets fast enough to match the economy's rapidly improving productivity and growing labor force," the article declared, "a substantial reduction of standard working hours represents a constructive method of spreading work opportunities and curbing the trend toward rising unemployment and part-time work."

The practical choice confronting workers, it was asserted, is not a good fulltime job versus reduced hours but rather a reduction in the standard workweek versus joblessness and part-time schedules.

The issue of shorter hours often is put in terms of "either more income or more leisure, but not both," the Research Dept. observed. This view sees the nation's need as greater production of goods and skirts the overriding problem of unemployment, it added.

Public opinion surveys, the article reports, show increasing support for shorter hours, particularly among union members. Gallup Polls showed a jump from a 21 percent "yes" vote for shorter hours in a 1953 poll to 29 percent "yes" in mid-1962; among union members, 42 percent favored a shorter workweek.

The article noted that a Machinists' poll in San Diego followed up Gallup in 1955 by putting the question in the context of cutting hours to spread work and forestall layoffs; 96 percent favored this approach.

The costs of cutting hours were calculated in terms of the percentage hourly pay hike needed to maintain pay at selected shorter workweeks; for example, a 14.3 percent increase would be needed if 40-hour pay was to be maintained on a 35-hour workweek.

The article recognized there would be variations by industry, but listed the major cost factors as follows: rate of productivity advance; industry cost structure; type and extent of changes required in equipment and methods; demand levels and trends; rate of use of plant and equipment and effects on labor costs.

Metal Trades Win at 2nd Navy Yard

Bremerton, Wash.—The Puget Sound Naval Shipyard here has granted the Bremerton Metal Trades Council exclusive recognition and bargaining rights for more than 8,500 workers at one of the nation's largest naval installations.

The council, representing 19 crafts, was awarded exclusive bargaining on the basis of a check of authorization cards signed by a substantial majority of employes in the unit, Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. announced.

Puget Sound became the second major shipyard to recognize local Metal Trades councils on an exclusive basis. Earlier the Brooklyn council won bargaining rights for some 11,000 workers at the New York Naval Shipyard.

Rear Adm. Floyd B. Schultz, shipyard commander, formally extended recognition at ceremonies attended by a delegation of union leaders headed by Council Pres. Paul C. Warner and Sec. Thomas W. Landon.

In other follow-throughs to Pres. Kennedy's executive order authorizing bargaining rights for unions which represent a majority of employes at federal agencies and installations, the Metal Trades Dept. is conducting major organizing campaigns at shipyards and other government installations throughout the nation.

A PEN USED by Pres. Kennedy to sign the historic expanded trade bill, generally regarded as the biggest single achievement of the 87th Congress, is given to AFL-CIO Pres. September Job Changes Seasonal; Unemployment Rate Unchanged

000 jobs as new car output moved into full swing, the report said.

Unemployment, however, declined by 400,000—the usual August to September change—to 3.5 million, leaving the jobless rate unchanged at 5.8 percent of the labor force. The rate has hung around 5.5 percent most of the year, the report noted.

Employers in various sectors of the economy are "adding to hours of work rather than adding to payrolls," Dr. Seymour L. Wolfbein, Labor Dept. manpower chief, commented in noting an upswing in the workweek and auto overtime.

"Factory employment," the job report said, "at 17.1 million was about 150,000 below its post-recession high in June (seasonally adjusted) with some losses in almost every group.

"On the other hand, the factory workweek, which has edged downward since April, rose by 0.2 hour between August and September to 40.6 hours. It normally shows little change at this time of year.

"The pickup in hours partly reflected the strong rebound in automobile production; in transportation equipment, the average workweek reached a 10-year high for the month of 42.4 hours, including 3.4 hours of overtime. Hours of work also firmed up in several soft-goods industries.

Overtime Average High

"Factory production workers averaged 3.0 hours of overtime in September, equaling the highest level since such data were first collected in 1956."

Traditionally, employers coming out of a recession pay overtime to workers for a spell before recalling laid-off workers or hiring new employes. This so far has failed to occur to a degree that would make a dent in unemployment, Wolfbein said.

Just why employers have failed to add to payrolls is "sheer conjecture," Wolfbein said in reply to questions. He said the Labor Dept. expects to take a closer look at the phenomenon. The given reasons for employer behavior usually relate to the business outlook and to such costs as fringe benefits when new employes are taken on.

The jobless family breadwinners experienced slight gains, according to the September report.

"The seasonally adjusted rate for adult men dropped from 4.9 to 4.6 percent, returning to the levels prior to the auto model changeover," the report said. "On the other hand, unemployment rates for both adult women and teenagers rose over the month."

Over the month, the total labor force—including the armed forces—fell by 1.6 million to 74.9 million in September. This total "usually contracts quite sharply" this time of year as young people give up work to return to school, the report said.

The over-the-year comparison showed a rise of 1.4 million between Septembers of 1961 and 1962; however, the report explained, the abnormal rise was due to a hurricane a year ago which "severely reduced" farm and other outdoor work.

The labor force was up by 1.4 million compared to two years ago. The government has estimated the labor force should grow by 1 or 1.2 million a year as the working age population increases.

The labor force has grown erratically this year, the report noted, ranging from a rise of some 200,000 in the first quarter to 600,000 in the second quarter and 1 million in the third quarter.

"For the nine-month period as a whole," the Labor Dept. said, "labor force growth has averaged about 600,000 or about 400,000 below what might have been expected on the basis of longterm trends in population growth and labor force participation."

Women 45 years and older—a main source of labor force growth in the past 15 years—appear to have slowed down their rate of entry into the work force, the report observed.

It singled out these trends in labor force participation rates for the third quarters of 1957-1962:

- Teenage boys are continuing their longterm downward trend because of increased schooling; with men 65 and over, a steady downward trend is related to earlier retirement since World War II.
- Men in the 55 to 64-year age bracket dropped significantly betwen 1961 and 1962, a possible reflection of the 1961 action enabling earlier retirement under social security.
- Women 55 to 64 years of age continued to enter the workforce at an increasing rate.

The report said longterm unemployment—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—totaled 900,000 in September, unchanged from the previous month. This is down 300,000 from a year ago but it is double the total of 456,000 longterm jobless of September 1957, before the 1958 and 1961 recessions.

Kennedy Urges Backing For U.S. Cultural Center

Pres. Kennedy has called on the nation to support a $30 million fund-raising campaign for a National Cultural Center in Washington, D. C.

In a proclamation carrying out a congressional resolution designating Nov. 26 through Dec. 2 as National Cultural Center Week, Kennedy gave a strong endorsement to the closed-circuit telecast on Nov. 29 which will benefit equally the the national center and local musical and theatrical activities in some 100 communities.

Herman D. Kenin, president of the Musicians and a member of the National Cultural Center's Advisory Committee on the Arts, termed the success of the drive "a vital matter to music and musicians and to all others in the performing arts."

Writing in the union's publication, the International Musician, Kenin said plans for the cultural center "are gratifying responses to years of patient demand that music and the arts be given a Washington stage commensurate with the prestige of our nation. . . . We must have a successful showplace in our U. S. capital if we expect successfully to propagate music and the performing arts in the 50 states."

Pres. and Mrs. Kennedy and former Pres. Eisenhower will appear on the telecast which will be shown at theaters and fund-raising dinners in major cities. Leonard Bernstein will be host and many of the nation's leading performers have donated their services.

The program, Kennedy said in his proclamation, is "designed to display the contributions of each of the nation's regions to our national cultural heritage."

U.S. Labor Pledges Support To Halt Soviet Aggression

Issue Up to Voters:

Liberals Hit AMA In Medicare Battle

The American voter holds the key to enactment in 1963 of the Kennedy Administration's program of social security health care for the aged, whose defeat in the Senate this year could have been turned into victory by a shift of two votes.

As the Nov. 6 election approaches, the medicare lines have been drawn between liberal candidates of both parties who favor the plan and conservatives who have stepped up their campaign against it.

The American Medical Association, arch-foe of the proposals set forth in the Anderson-King bill, is concentrating a major political effort in Connecticut with Democratic Senate candidate Abraham Ribicoff as its apparent target.

Ribicoff, until he resigned as secretary of health, education and welfare to run for the Senate, was the Administration's chief spokesman for the health insurance plan.

In the past six weeks, the AMA has twice sent its president-elect, Dr. Edward R. Annis, into Connecticut for speeches attacking federally financed old-age health insurance and the plan's supporters, among whom he specifically included Ribicoff.

On a broader scale, a rash of letters from doctors advising patients to vote against named candidates because of their support of "socialistic" government-sponsored health insurance has blossomed out in the final weeks before election. In addition, the national Blue Cross Association has suddenly come up with a series of half-page advertisements extolling new "amplified programs" of health insurance it says local Blue Cross plans are prepar-

Far West Trend Runs Democratic

By Willard Shelton

San Francisco—The Pacific Coast, the southwestern states, and the new states of Alaska and Hawaii have tended Democratic in recent years, and there is little expectation that the movement has changed.

Five of the six senators seeking re-election in the area are Democrats. Senators Ernest Gruening of Alaska, Carl Hayden of Arizona, Alan Bible of Nevada, Wayne Morse of Oregon, and Warren G. Magnuson of Washington are considered well ahead of Republican challengers.

Inouye Rated Ahead

In addition, Rep. Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii, running to succeed Democrat Oren E. Long, is rated ahead of his Republican opponent, Ben Dillingham.

Registration Drive Successful:

Meany Asks Big Vote In National Interest

The AFL-CIO's 1962 register-and-vote campaign turned to the job of producing the largest possible vote in the Nov. 6 elections after concluding a successful registration drive.

Pres. George Meany told all AFL-CIO affiliates and state and central bodies that "we must redouble our efforts to achieve a record vote this year, not as a partisan undertaking, but as a contribution to the national interest."

Meany's letter cited the "pressing danger of this hour" and labor's support for Pres. Kennedy's position that "our nation will fight to preserve freedom if we must." A record vote on Nov. 6 can be "a peaceful and effective blow for freedom . . . demonstrating to the world that Americans are aroused, alert, determined," he added.

The duty to vote must be driven home "to every union member and to every other citizen," Meany stressed, adding: "Vote as you please, but for the nation's sake, please vote."

Registration Up Sharply

Preliminary registration figures from across the nation indicated that in several-score major cities and counties the percentage of the voting age population eligible to vote has increased.

The figures showed also a net increase of registered voters in nearly all major cities and counties between January and November of this year, ranging from a few thousand in some areas to more than 265,000 in Los Angeles County.

The nonpartisan campaign was launched by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in February, 1962, to overcome off-year voter apathy and to turn out a large vote in the congressional and gubernatorial elections. The drive has been financed by the federation, its affiliated unions and state and local central bodies.

The historic midterm congressional election pattern is for a drop-off in the total vote of about 25 percent from preceding presidential election year. The 1962 labor register-and-vote campaign was de-

Free Latin Unions Also Back Stand

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has pledged Pres. Kennedy the "complete, unstinting support of America's organized workers" in the drive to prevent a Soviet takeover of the Western Hemisphere.

Meany declared immediately after Pres. Kennedy's television and radio speech to the nation on the Cuban situation that "in this hour of peril, the President has charted the only possible course for free men."

The federation president emphasized that "whatever it costs, the Soviet Union must be stopped and stopped now . . ."

"The President means business and so do we," he added.

The Inter-American Organization of Workers (ORIT), the regional organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which represents 27 million trade unionists in Latin America, declared its "strong support" of Kennedy's position.

'Absolutely Correct'

Sec.-Gen. Arturo Juaregui in a statement issued at ORIT headquarters in Mexico City, said that "we are asking the governments of South and Central America and member governments of the United Nations to support the United States at this moment."

Kennedy "is absolutely correct," the statement continued, "when he says that the military power which Castro created, thanks to the support of the Soviet Union, constitutes a menace not only to the

Personalities Seen Key In Mid-Atlantic States

By David L. Perlman

One hundred and thirteen of the 303 electoral votes which elected Pres. Kennedy two years ago came from the six Mid-Atlantic states of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware.

Five of these states have Democratic governors and while the area is represented by seven Republicans and five Democrats in the Senate, the House delegation is 54-47 Democratic.

Past performances, however, are often poor political guides to these states where vote-switching and ballot-splitting are common, and where personalities are often more persuasive than party loyalties.

In Maryland a liberal Democrat, Rep. Daniel B. Brewster appears to hold an edge in his bid to succeed Sen. John Marshall Butler, right-wing Republican who is not running for re-election. And despite a bruising primary campaign, Democratic Gov. J. Millard Tawes is generally conceded heading for re-election over an Old Guard GOP opponent.

In Pennsylvania, Sen. Joseph A. Clark is the front runner in his re-election race. His equally-liberal running mate, Richardson Dilworth, is in a neck-and-neck battle for the governorship.

In the New York election, both Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rocke-

Democrats Seek Gains In New England Area

By John M. Barry

Boston—A brother of the President seeking office for the first time, a Republican governor who has endorsed a Democrat as his successor, and a hot battle over the medicare issue have combined to enliven the New England political scene.

All six governorships and five Senate and 25 House seats are at stake on Nov. 6. On balance, where the incumbents are in danger or are retiring, it is the Democrats who stand to gain.

Here in Massachusetts, Edward M. (Ted) Kennedy, youngest brother of John F. Kennedy, is seeking the Senate seat held by the President until he moved up to the White House.

Kennedy won the Democratic nomination by a crushing 311,885-vote margin over State Atty. Gen. Edward J. McCormack. He is generally regarded as a heavy favorite to take the election, too.

His two opponents, Republican George Cabot Lodge and Independent H. Stuart Hughes, also are the products of families famous in Massachusetts politics. Lodge is the son of Henry Cabot Lodge, former ambassador to the United Nations whom the President displaced from the Senate in the 1952 election. Hughes is the grandson of Charles Evans Hughes, the late U.S. chief justice and 1916 Republican presidential candidate.

Shipbuilders Offer Plan To Strengthen Industry

Miami Beach, Fla.—A detailed program aimed at strengthening the American merchant marine and the shipbuilding industry and at stemming the steady loss of job opportunities was unanimously passed by the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers at their 21st convention here.

"It is time that the national welfare of the United States be reviewed," the delegates declared in an accompanying resolution, "because we may well see our merchant marine and shipbuilding industry going the way of the railroads, which are bankrupt, and our airlines, which are in precarious financial position. Can we afford to have the entire transportation complex of the United States rendered completely obsolescent?"

The focal point of the proposed program was the establishment of a merchant marine research institute, similar to those in some other seafaring countries, to serve maritime interests in terms of technological development.

Included in addition was a continuing labor-management committee to work out agreements "to increase the efficiency and productivity of the American merchant marine, its operation and its construction." The committee would have access to all resources of the federal government for cutting the cost of operating and servicing the seagoing merchant fleet "without either the worker or management required to bear the full brunt."

'Runaway' Fleet Return

Other points in the program included return of foreign-flag vessels to U.S. registry on an economically feasible basis; replacement of "our obsolete fleet" on a five-year planned basis; more liberal and flexible depreciation schedules for merchant vessels, and extension of tax-free construction reserve funds to the entire merchant fleet; scrapping of the present reserve fleet, and other steps to modernize the fleet and promote its use.

The delegates also warned that the closing of shipyards dissipates the unique skills required in the industry which "are replaceable only at the cost of considerable time and effort" in case of national emergency — and with world conditions as they are, "today it is very doubtful as to whether there will be any time to train men in the required skills."

The union constitution was amended to change the terms of officers from two to four years. Re-elected without opposition to the first of the new longer terms were Pres. John J. Grogan, Vice Pres. Andrew Pettis and Sec.-Treas. Ross D. Blood. Grogan and Pettis each had served six two-year terms; Blood was first elected in 1944.

The officers in addition to longer terms were voted salary increases of $2,500 a year, raising Grogan to $20,000 and Pettis and Blood to $17,500.

After considerable discussion the convention approved a formula for dividing the $1 per member per month which had been collected since the last convention for a defense fund under a resolution that limited the assessment to two years and referred its disposition to this year's parley.

Seventy-five cents of the $1 was voted to the international, with 50 cents earmarked for defense and 25 cents going into the general fund, and 25 cents was alloted to the locals. Dues were raised from $4 to $5 a month, with $2.50 per capita to the international. In a companion resolution the initiation fee was raised from a range of $10 to $15 to $10 to $25.

Cement Union Votes Raise In Per Capita

St. Louis—The Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers have voted new two-year terms for all top officers, approved salary increases for them and voted up a 15-cent increase in dues going to the international union.

The 300 delegates approved Pres. Felix Jones' call for new breakthroughs in organizing and bargaining, and authorized him to appoint an assistant to help direct and coordinate organizing activities in the United States and Canada.

The convention also voted to support the AFL-CIO drive for a shorter work week, with no loss in pay, to help spread employment; approved a health care plan for the aged under social security, health care in Canada, COPE, and Labor's March on Cancer; and agreed to back Canada's new labor college scheduled to start next spring in Montreal.

Returned to office with Jones was Sec.-Treas. Toney Gallo. Eight vice presidents were re-elected with only one office contested. Salaries of all officers will be raised 5 percent on Nov. 1, 1962, and again on Nov. 1, 1963.

The convention voted to increase the present $1.55 per month per capita to $1.70 next Jan. 1; re-establish the committee on Canada as a regular convention committee; chose Montreal for the 1964 convention city; and authorized locals to elect officers for one or two years at their own discretion.

Unanimous NLRB Decision:

Employer, Detective Agency Guilty of Labor Spy Charge

A West Coast aluminum firm and a detective agency it hired to furnish labor spies in the guise of "production workers" have been found guilty of unfair labor practices by the National Labor Relations Board.

The board in a unanimous 5-0 vote upheld charges by the Steelworkers that Harvey Aluminum, Inc., hired the Wallace Detective & Security Agency of Portland, Ore., for purposes of labor espionage at Harvey's General Engineering plant in The Dalles, Ore., in 1960, and then at the main plant in Torrance, Calif.

In a decision ordering the firm and the agency to stop their labor spy activities, the board said:

"The employment of undercover operatives to engage in labor espionage and surveillance of union activities has been condemned since the early days" of the labor law as a "flagrant violation of the rights guaranteed by Sec. 7." All members concurred in the findings of Examiner Martin S. Bennett that such conduct "interfered with, restrained and coerced employes in violation" of the law.

The full board also ratified the examiner's finding that the aluminum firm unlawfully fired two union sympathizers, and ordered them reinstated with lost pay.

The labor law, as amended in 1959, requires the filing of reports on money paid by employers for labor spying. Reports filed with the Labor Dept. last Apr. 6 show that Harvey Aluminum paid $15,758 to General Engineering for money paid by it to the Wallace Agency from June 1960 to September 1961.

No report has been filed by the detective firm, the Labor Dept. said, adding that it has taken steps to compel the agency to comply.

Second Case in Year

Last year the department went to court in another labor-spy case involving the hiring of undercover agents by the Olson Rug Co., big Chicago mail order firm. A federal court ordered Olson and the Illinois State Detective Agency to file detailed information on their activities in spying on the Textile Workers Union of America. The firm later was bought by another employer who has dealt with the union.

In the latest espionage case, management of the Harvey Aluminum firm decided to hire detectives while several unions, including the USWA, were trying to organize the Oregon plant, according to the examiner's report.

Harvey claimed the detectives were hired, not for labor espionage, but to ferret out theft, dope peddling, prostitution and the disposal of stolen goods. The examiner, and the board, found that while some thefts were uncovered, the major objective of the detectives was to spy out the activities of employes on behalf of union organization.

Said the examiner in a report accepted by the NLRB: "The unlawful labor espionage engaged in by all respondents discloses a clear-cut purpose to thwart the most basic guarantees" of the labor act.

All Espionage Banned

The board ordered the Wallace agency not to engage in labor spying or other interference with union activities for Harvey Aluminum or any other employer.

Harvey Aluminum was directed to notify its employes that it will not engage in any spying on their union activities, or discourage membership in the USWA or any other union.

At hearings before Bennett, two witnesses admitted they were hired to spy at The Dalles plant. One said he turned in more than 100 names of pro-union workers and the other turned in more than 36 names of union and anti-union employes.

The aluminum firm had been involved in three previous unfair practice charges. In one, the labor board set aside a 1959 election the USWA lost. In others the management was ordered to stop taking photos of handbilling, and to reinstate three fired employes with back pay.

'Too Old' Carpenters Collect for Lay-Off

Newburgh, N. Y.—Two carpenters fired from a highway construction job "because they were too old" have agreed to accept $552 each in back pay in a settlement obtained by the State Commission for Human Rights.

The men are Francesco Lisi, 62, and William F. Spooner, 64. They complained last July against the S. J. Groves & Sons Co., Minneapolis firm then working on Route 74 north of here. The firm agreed the men had been laid off after two days work and agreed to the settlement, the state agency said.

The pair found other jobs after the firing. They have received checks for three weeks' back pay for a 40-hour week at $4.60 an hour.

Sheet Metal Workers OK Retirement Haven

Miami Beach, Fla.—Delegates to the 31st convention of the Sheet Metal Workers authorized their executive officers to sponsor a haven for retired members at East Lake Wales, Fla.

The project, as outlined by Sec.-Treas. David S. Turner, would come under Sec. 231 of the National Housing Act, under which a non-profit sponsoring group can secure 100 percent government insurance on a mortgage covering housing for senior citizens. The Letter Carriers and the Postal Clerks have already initiated similar projects for retired members, both also on East Lake Wales.

The Sheet Metal Workers' proposal calls for construction of 500 rental units, including efficiency, one-bedroom and two bedroom apartments, with air conditioning, heat and other utilities except electricity included in the rent.

Specifically, the resolution authorized the general executive council to form a non-profit corporation to sponsor the project; to name a special retirement housing committee to represent the union in all stages of preparation and planning, and "to move ahead to a successful conclusion of this project" if circustances in the view of the officers and council warrant action before the next convention.

Certificates of recognition for 100 percent participation of members in $1 contributions to the union's Political Action League were presented to Local 111, Trenton, N. J., whose members gave more than $3 each; Local 51, Chattanooga, Tenn., just under $3 per member; and Local 159, Greensboro, N. C., more than $2 per member.

Pres. Edward F. Carlough announced that a special award will be presented to Oakland, Calif., Local 355, which had given the international union $1,800 for educational purposes.

With scant opposition, the convention voted to increase the per capita tax from $1.75 per member per month to $2.50. About 50 cents of the boost, the resolutions committee estimated, will be required to finance the expanded organizing program already under way which the officers said will be intensified.

In a companion resolution, locals were authorized to establish dues "sufficient to carry on" their affairs, but not less than $4 a month.

In other actions, the delegates:

- Completed a long series of constitutional amendments to bring the union into conformity with provisions of the Landrum-Griffin and Labor-Management Reporting Acts.
- Raised the salaries of the president and secretary-treasurer to $30,000 a year each, an increase of $5,000; gave raises of $3,000 to the vice president in charge of railroads, all international representatives and organizers, the organizing director and the chief international representative; and increases of $1,200 to all other vice presidents.
- Approved an officers' proposal to cover all members with insurance covering accidental death, dismemberment and loss of sight at a cost which could be absorbed without a further per capita tax increase.
- Voted to establish a trust fund for the pension program covering officers and staff members.
- Rejected a proposal calling on the officers "to promote" the reaffiliation of the expelled Teamsters "and other organized labor unions" with the AFL-CIO.

Dispatchers Membership Shows Jump

Las Vegas—The Air Line Dispatchers convention here heard reports that union membership has risen "substantially" over the past two years and authorized continuance of an educational campaign to improve the dispatcher's role on the airlines of the future.

M. M. Block of San Francisco, chairman of the ALDA's research committee, reported completion of a research project sponsored by the union and Leland Stanford University. Copies of a study, The Air Line Dispatcher in North America, by Karl M. Ruppenthal of Stanford, have been sent to the 26 lines with which the union has contracts.

The convention — one of the best attended in ALDA history —heard reports that new contracts have been signed with Eastern, KLM Royal Dutch, Scandinavian and Alaska-Ellis Airlines.

Re-elected for two-year terms were Pres. Robert A. Commerce and Sec.-Treas. Ernest A. Bressin, both of Washington, D. C. J. J. Blake, Los Angeles, was elected a regional vice president in place of Philip Klett, Seattle.

$1.25 in 30 Days, $1.50 in a Year:

Wagner Signs City Minimum Wage Law

New York—Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) has put his signature on a new minimum wage law designed to raise the income levels of 500,000 workers and has appealed for the cooperation of all New Yorkers with a six-man bureau appointed to administer the law.

Wagner named John M. Ekeberg of the U.S. Labor Dept.'s Wage & Hour Div. to head the bureau. He is on leave from his post as deputy regional director of the division's California office. Also "borrowed" from the federal government are James B. Mitchell, Nathan P. Epstein and Leo Friedman, who will work with two city appointees on a leave of absence basis.

In signing the law requiring private employers to pay at least $1.25 an hour to employes this year and $1.50 after one year, Wagner called the day historic and asked: "Who will dare say that less than $50 a week is enough to keep a family in even minimal decency?"

Calling the wage act "a new adventure in municipal law," the mayor said it was designed to "strike at the heart of one of our most serious social problems by raising the floor under wages" and helping to "insure the beginning of a living wage" for the lowest-paid portion of the city's work force.

The city acted, he went on, not on "reckless impulse" or abruptly but only after more than two years of study and hearings. As mayor, Wagner said, he would not want to place any business at a competitive disadvantage with those outside the city and said he would move rapidly if any significant harmful effects develop.

Effective in 30 Days

The law becomes effective 30 days after its signing. Employers have served notice they intend to challenge its constitutionality and city attorneys have been instructed to prepare a defense.

Among those who opposed the law was the Wholesale Laundry Board of Trade, which said through a spokesman that the law invades a field pre-empted by the state minimum wage law.

Unless the city law is overturned, the $1.25 minimum will become effective Nov. 21, almost two years before the state wage minimum rises to $1.25 in 1964. Federal law calls for a raise from a $1.15 minimum to $1.25 next September for certain workers, while other workers getting $1 an hour now under federal law will get $1.15 starting Sept. 3, 1964, and $1.25 one year later. Laundry workers are among those not protected by the federal act.

The City Council and the Board of Estimate, which have approved the new law, heard testimony that some 200,000 workers will have their wages raised to $1.25 an hour the first year, and 500,000 will benefit a year later from the $1.50 minimum.

The city law exempts fewer occupations than state or federal law. Among the 15 classes of workers exempted are baby-sitters in homes; bona fide executives, administrators and professional workers; members of religious orders and ordained clergymen; various classes of workers for non-profit agencies; federal, state and municipal employes; outside salesmen, and some part-time workers.

First Morristown Enka Pact Ratified

Morristown, Tenn. — The first contract between the United Textile Workers of America and the American Enka Corp. plant here has been ratified almost unanimously by members of UTWA Local 815.

The three-year contract covering 1,400 rayon fiber workers provides for seven paid holidays, vacations up to four weeks, company-paid hospital, surgical, sick and accident insurance; a paid-up life insurance policy for retirees at 65; rate adjustments of 3 to 20 cents an hour, and other benefits covering grievance procedure, seniority, arbitration, checkoff and a work assignment clause.

UTWA also has contracts at the company's Asheville, N. C., plants.

Meany Hails Hungarians On Uprising Anniversary

Human freedom and world peace are menaced "so long as Soviet troops occupy Hungary and the Hungarian people are under the yoke of Communist tyranny," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said on the sixth anniversary of the "immortal Hungarian revolution."

In a message to Msgr. Bela Varga, president of the Hungarian National Council, a center for that country's freedom fighters in the United States, Meany sent anniversary greetings on behalf of the AFL-CIO and added:

"We shall continue our unsparing efforts to hasten the day of freedom for Hungary, which is so vital for freedom and lasting peace through the world."

The dramatic Hungarian revolution of 1956 was sparked by workers and students whose deep-seated devotion to liberty spurred an uprising that toppled the Communist government. The rebellion was crushed, however, when Soviet Russian troops and tanks invaded the country.

In another message to Jozsef Takacs, president of the Association of Hungarian Students in North America, Meany declared that "liberty-loving mankind will always draw great strength from the heroism" of Hungarian students who, with workers, were "in the front line of one of the most inspiring fights for freedom in all history."

"Students everywhere, and especially in Africa, Asia and Latin America, have much to learn from your courage and idealism," he added. "They can serve mankind best by emulating your dedication to individual dignity and freedom and democratic nationhood."

peace of our hemisphere but to the whole world."

"Castro's Cuba today is a direct threat to the development of free institutions in this hemisphere and is the single greatest block against the economic development in peace and freedom of Latin America," he asserted.

The ORIT statement concluded with a declaration that the workers of Latin America "stand with Pres. Kennedy in this crisis."

"We call upon all friends of freedom in this hemisphere to give their uncompromising support in this effort to prevent Communist totalitarianism from spreading its tentacles around this hemisphere," it added.

The Executive Council of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., meeting in Honolulu, hailed the President's action as "a step to prevent war" and termed it "both prudent and necessary."

The council voiced "its full and complete support of the President" and his program "to halt any hostile forces from using Cuba as a springboard from which to attack the free nations of the Western Hemisphere."

The Maritime Trades Dept. also voiced its full support of the President and called for support of all affiliates to prevent Communist infiltration of Latin America.

Support of the President's position came from a long list of AFL-CIO unions in wires and letters to the White House and from members of the federation's Executive Council.

Latest Move by AFL-CIO

Meany's statement hailing the President's action was the federation's latest in a series of statements and resolutions warning of the Soviet threat to the hemisphere and detailing free labor's opposition to the Castro dictatorship.

The AFL-CIO, at its December 1961 convention, adopted unanimously a resolution declaring "we are proud of the fact that the free labor movement in Latin America was first to discover the falsity of the Castro propaganda, the subservience of its regime to Soviet Communist dictation and the subjugation of the Cuban workers and peasants to totalitarian enslavement."

The resolution pointed out that Cuba "has become a beachhead of the Communist international for the infiltration, subversion and ultimate conquest of the Americas." It warned that the Castro regime "is feverishly building a huge military machine for armed aggression against the free nations of Latin America."

At its February 1962 meeting, the AFL-CIO Executive Council expressed its full support of the Organization of American States and that body's action, which declared "the Cuban Communist regime incompatible with the principles of the inter-American political system" and voted to "exclude it (Cuba) from the OAS."

The council noted that as early as May 1960, the AFL-CIO had urged collective measures to isolate Cuba and to help the Cuban people regain "their democratic liberties."

NEW MEMBER of board of trustees of National Cultural Center, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, is sworn in by White House aide Herbert Miller, right. Upset Sought In Darlington Back Pay

One of the nation's largest textile chains—Deering, Milliken & Co.—has gone to court in an effort to upset a National Labor Relations Board decision ordering back pay and job offers for more than 500 South Carolina workers who were stranded when the Darlington Mfg. Co. closed its plant shortly before Christmas in 1956.

The landmark NLRB decision held that Deering, Milliken controlled the Darlington firm and its labor policies, and therefore shared responsibility for the unfair labor practices.

The Textile Workers Union of America also has asked appellate court review, on the basis that the NLRB should have required Deering, Milliken to reopen the Darlington plant as well as to offer its workers jobs in corporate-owned mills in other cities. The union request for review was filed in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, which is expected to consider the case, while the company filed its petition in the Richmond, Va., circuit court.

One of the key points in the NLRB decision which the company is trying to reverse is that Deering, Milliken and the Darlington firm were a "common employer." The labor board noted that Roger Milliken headed both firms and the Milliken family owned the majority of stock of both the parent corporation and the "affiliated" mills.

Also at issue is the power of the labor board to order back pay for the Darlington workers from the time of their dismissal until they are offered comparable employment in other Deering, Milliken mills—less earnings elsewhere.

Chemical Workers Pick Mitchell Again

Las Vegas, Nev. — Chemical Workers Pres. Walter L. Mitchell and all U.S. officers were returned to office without opposition at the union's 18th constitutional convention here.

Canadian Vice Pres. Gordon McIlwain did not seek reelection, and Tom Sloan, an ICWU representative for many years, was elected to fill the vacancy with no opposition. McIlwain was named Canadian research and education director.

Some 370 delegates representing more than 400 ICWU locals voted salary increases for the international executive board of $2,000 now and another $1,000 next year. Mitchell will now receive $17,000, Sec.-Treas. Marshall Shafer's pay goes up to $15,000, and the nine vice presidents will get $11,000 each.

Prior to this increase, ICWU officers had been given only one raise in nine years. In other action, the delegates:

- Defeated a resolution to give international officers four-year terms instead of two years.
- Launched a major apprenticeship and training program for chemical operators, with the assistance of key officials from the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.
- Called for support of the United Nations against right-wing attacks.
- Urged continued efforts to promote civil rights.
- Approved greater political action, including support of COPE and Canada's New Democratic Party.
- Pledged continued opposition to Chamber of Commerce drives for stronger management rights clauses.

NEW AMBASSADOR to Jamaica, William C. Doherty, is given the oath of office by Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg at State Dept. ceremony attended by leaders in government and labor. Doherty is the first American ambassador chosen from union ranks. Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson is behind Goldberg. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, at the right, were among guests at the ceremony.

Under Rail Labor Act:

High Court to Review Curb on Union Shop

The U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to review a North Carolina injunction limiting enforcement of a railroad union shop agreement.

A similar case, involving a Georgia injunction, was decided in June 1961. The Supreme Court ruled that union shop agreements under the Railway Labor Act are binding on all employes covered, but that individual members who disagree with particular legislative or political activities of their union may prevent the use of any part of their dues for such purposes.

Issues dealing with interpretation of the 1961 decision are still in dispute in lower courts and the Supreme Court review of the North Carolina case is expected to provide additional clarifying guidelines.

Both cases involve suits brought in the name of small groups of Southern Railway employes who maintain they should not be required to belong to a union or pay dues if they disagree with some of its actions or policies.

The North Carolina injunction prohibits the Railway Clerks and the Signalmen—which bargain for the dissident employes—from requiring the plaintiffs to join a union. However, if the unions present evidence to the court as to the portion of the dues which are "necessary and related to collective bargaining," they may collect that amount from the employes.

Among the issues which the unions asked the Supreme Court to review are whether a union shop agreement conforming to the Railway Labor Act may be enjoined because of union activities other than collective bargaining; whether it may be enjoined with respect to employes who did not inform the union of their craft of expenditures to which they were opposed, and whether it may be enjoined with respect to employes who are not members of the union and have not paid any dues or assessments to the union which bargains for them.

In its 1961 decision, the Supreme Court overturned a Georgia court's injunction which barred enforcement of a union shop agreement unless the unions abandoned political or legislative activity.

"The majority also has an interest in stating its views without being silenced by dissenters," the court said.

UAW Urges NAACP to Check Staff

Detroit—The work of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been "seriously weakened" by "certain NAACP staff people," the Auto Workers have declared.

Indiscriminate and inaccurate charges "which made large headlines but got little results" have "retarded progress," the UAW said, expressing confidence that "these differences can be worked out" so that the job of eradicating discrimination can be carried forward.

Noting the "cooperative and constructive relationship" between the union and the NAACP over the years, the UAW pointed out that "the American labor movement has made a great contribution in the struggle to advance the cause of civil rights and equal opportunity."

It urged decisive and determined action to "root out those remaining areas of discrimination" and promised the vigorous support of UAW leadership.

7 Awarded Back Pay From Firm That Moved

Chicago—An employer who closed his Chicago plant and refused jobs to seven workers who applied in other cities has been ordered by an arbitrator to pay back wages estimated at $9,000 per worker.

The employer, the Sivyer Steel Castings Co., shut its Chicago plant on Aug. 12, 1961, when the site was needed for the right-of-way of the new Southwest Expressway. The work was moved to the company's plants in Bettendorf, Ia., and Milwaukee, Wis.

Six of the displaced workers applied in person for jobs at the other plants. A seventh applied by telephone. All three plants were under contract to the Auto Workers in three different locals. All the applicants were rejected.

Robert G. Howlett of Grand Rapids, Mich., the arbitrator, directed the back pay award under the Chicago contract. He also required the company to mail application blanks and notice of job openings for a year to all other laid-off employes.

An employe who takes a job in the Iowa or Wisconsin plants must be given his moving expenses, including packing costs up to $550, if he stays for 90 days. The arbitrator retained jurisdiction to enforce compliance.

The company was directed also to give pro-rata vacation pay to all Chicago workers for vacation time earned between the June 1 cut-off date of the old contract and the Aug. 12 shutdown.

UAW Reg. Dir. Robert Johnston said the arbitration award was of great significance because it recognizes that "the obligation of an employer to his employes under a union contract does not cease when the plant closes down."

Harold A. Katz and Irving M. Friedman, UAW attorneys, said the contract provided that arbitration awards shall be final and binding.

Union witnesses testified at the arbitration hearing that the company was hiring new employes off the street in Milwaukee and Bettendorf at the time the Chicago applicants were turned away.

About 250 employes are entitled to vacation pay and re-employment opportunity under the arbitration award. UAW Intl. Rep. Andrew Strojny estimated about $75,000 is involved in immediate back pay.

Ambassador's Oath Taken By Doherty

William C. Doherty, the first trade union leader to be named to a major diplomatic post, has been sworn in as the first United States Ambassador to the newly-independent nation of Jamaica.

Doherty, who headed the Letter Carriers for 21 years and served on the executive councils of both the AFL-CIO and the former AFL, took his oath of office from Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, another alumnus of the labor movement.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, addressing the large group of dignitaries gathered for the State Dept. ceremony, spoke of the visit to Jamaica last summer which he and Doherty made as the two official U.S. delegates to Jamaica's independence celebration. Johnson said he had told the President on his return of the "face of friendship" which Doherty presented to the people of Jamaica.

It is "right and proper," Johnson added, that "the face of the United States" in Jamaica will now be "the face of friendship, the face of labor."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, and Letter Carriers Pres. Jerome J. Keating were among the trade union leaders present for the ceremony.

Other prominent officials present included Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Under Sec. of State George C. McGhee, Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), and the new Jamaican ambassador to the United States, Neville Noel Ashenheim.

Adding a note of informality to the State Dept. ceremony were more Doherty grandchildren than anyone was able to count to the nearest dozen.

Unions Push Drive for Strikebreaker Curbs

A committee of eight printing and newspaper unions has mapped a stepped-up drive for state and city laws restricting the use of strikebreakers.

Eight states and nine cities have enacted laws aimed at barring professional strikebreakers from being used in labor disputes. All except the Pennsylvania law, which dates back to 1937, have been adopted during the past two years as a result of labor-spurred campaigns.

Meeting in Washington, the union representatives explored ways of coordinating their legislative efforts, working more closely with AFL-CIO state and city central bodies and mobilizing labor and community support through an expanded information program.

Attending were representatives of the Typographical Union, Printing Pressmen, Newspaper Guild, Stereotypers, Photo Engravers, Bookbinders and Papermakers & Paperworkers, all AFL-CIO affiliates, and the unaffiliated Lithographers.

The new phase of the campaign is scheduled to get under way early in 1963, when most state legislatures will be in session. Spearheading the drive is the legislative subcommittee of the President's Committee of Allied Printing & Related Trades headed by ITU Pres. Elmer Brown and including Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen and Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild.

Printing unions have been among the chief victims of professional strikebreakers and of agencies which specialize in furnishing "replacements" for striking craftsmen to publishers.

Anti-strikebreaker statutes, known as Citizens' Job Protection laws, have been enacted during the past two years in Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Washington, Michigan and Louisiana.

Lathers Vice President Harold Weller Dies

Toronto, Ont.—Harold R. Weller, seventh vice president of the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers Union and the union's regional organizer in eastern Canada, died in a hospital here. He was 59, a charter member of the Toronto Building Trades Council and a labor leader for 38 years.

Unmployment Cost Far Exceeds Strikes

Des Moines—More workdays were lost through unemployment last year than through strikes during the previous 35 years, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared in a speech here.

Four million unemployed means a loss of 1 billion mandays of work, Wirtz declared. He added:

"If these people were working, we could build the 142,000 classrooms we need, clear the slums which breed juvenile delinquency, construct the roads and develop the recreation areas a growing nation requires."

Hall Protests Charge Of SIU Race Bias

New York—The Seafarers here strongly protested charges of racial discrimination and the manner in which they were made by two representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People against its West Coast affiliate, the Sailors Union of the Pacific.

SIU Pres. Paul Hall, in a letter to Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, said the allegations "were irresponsible and wholly inaccurate statements . . . which . . . not only have no basis in fact, but also do serious damage to the good name of the NAACP."

Hill, Carter Involved

The charges were aired in Washington by Herbert Hill, NAACP labor secretary, and Robert L. Carter, the association's general counsel.

Hall said the SIU and its affiliates will stand on their "otherwise-unquestioned record" in the matter of equal rights in employment and cited the fact that the SIU had only recently received an award from the Labor & Industry Committee of the Brooklyn branch of the NAACP. The "merit award" cited the union "in recognition and appreciation of valued service in the promotion of civil rights and better race relations through cooperation with the NAACP program."

The SIU president pointed out that both Hill and Carter had denied such an award existed and had further denied knowledge of a document inserted in the Congressional Record on May 18 by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), chairman of a special House Labor Subcommittee which investigated hiring practices in the Sailors Union.

Roosevelt described an SUP "statement of policy" that he inserted in the Record as "a significant step. . . . It is most gratifying to me to have received voluntary cooperation of the union to eliminate discrimination and advance the cause of human rights."

Hall's letter questioned Hill's role on behalf of the NAACP because of his record of making unsupported statements and an attempt "to cause a dispute within the labor movement" which does harm to the NAACP "in its primary and essential functions in the area of civil rights and equal rights for all Americans."

E. I. Manger Heads Davis-Bacon Office

Appointment of E. Irving Manger as head of the Div. of Wage Determination, which administers the Davis-Bacon Act, has been announced by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

Manger, a graduate of the University of Minnesota, had been with the Army Engineers since 1933 and since 1948 had been chief of labor relations in the Office of the Chief of Engineers.

Health Care in '63 Up to Voters Nov. 6

Battle Lines Drawn In State Campaigns

ing to offer elderly persons, but which upon investigation have proved to be nonexistent or nebulous. (See stories, Page 5.)

Specific Program

The bill sponsored by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. Mex.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) in contrast offers the aged a specific program of up to 90 days of hospitalization and 180 days of skilled nursing home care, plus outpatient diagnostic services and home nursing care and therapy. The cost, too, is specific—an additional one-fourth of 1 percent in social security payroll taxes for both employers and workers. This cost to the average worker amounts to about 25 cents a week. (See story, Page 5.)

The arguments of the AMA and the candidates who espouse its views bear all the earmarks of a calculated effort to confuse the voters.

The "socialism" cry, for example, invokes the specter of doctors working as government employes in federally-owned hospitals whose patients have no choice of physician.

But the implications of the "socialized medicine" slogan bear no relation to the system of insurance proposed under the Anderson-King bill. The proposed law states specifically that the government would in no way control, regulate or interfere with the practice of medicine or the administration or operation of participating hospitals.

Patients would continue to choose their own doctors and hospitals and the government would not provide a single medical service. Its function would be solely to provide basic health insurance for the aged, reimbursing hospitals for their services in much the same way that private insurers now do. The big difference would be that Anderson-King would enable individuals to pre-pay the premiums on the insurance during their working years.

Indicative of the confusion being spread by some candidates, either by design or through misinformation, is the argument that millions of persons not on social security or railroad retirement would be left uncovered by Anderson-King.

Actually, in its final form, the measure would have provided hospitalization insurance for all persons over 65 except those already beneficiaries of another federal program. The costs for those not eligible for social security or other government programs would be borne out of general funds.

A number of candidates opposed to Anderson-King have joined the AMA in embracing the Kerr-Mills Act, known as Medical Aid for the Aged (MAA), as the solution to the health care problems of elderly citizens.

Yet two years after its enactment, MAA has been put into operation in only 25 states and has benefited only a fraction of the nation's aged population—less than 1 percent as of last July. A major drawback is that it depends on the states for implementation, since it requires the appropriation of state funds to match federal contributions. Many states so far have failed to appropriate any funds, and in others the benefits are often minimal and vary widely.

So far, a few wealthy states have been the major beneficiaries of Kerr-Mills. In 1962, New York, Massachusetts and California accounted for more than 75 percent of all MAA recipients and six states received 91.6 percent of MAA federal funds.

A major AFL-CIO objection to Kerr-Mills is its reliance on the welfare approach through a requirement that recipients must meet a means test.

Attacked On All Sides

Ironically, some of those who support Kerr-Mills attack the Anderson-King bill as a dole or "handout."

This argument, the AFL-CIO suggests, ignores the insurance principle on which the entire social security system is built and which today provides 12.5 million retired persons with monthly checks based on contributions during their working lives and not on need.

"Most Americans prefer to pay their way, and they are enabled to do so by our social security system," the AFL-CIO points out.

"This is the system the Anderson-King bill would build on to protect the nation's families from some of the burdens of costly illness in old age.

"To prevent destitution is better than to meet it after it has occurred. The mechanism of social insurance is the best means of doing just this."

'Astronomical' Tax Hike Only 25 Cents on $100

A dominant and recurring theme in the American Medical Association's all-out attack on the Anderson-King bill's proposal for social security health care for the aged is the "astronomical" cost—a "17 percent increase in payroll taxes."

Where does the AMA get its 17 percent figure when the sponsors of the bill insist that payroll taxes, as they wrote the measure, will go up only an additional one-fourth of 1 percent?

The 17 percent figure might lead the typical worker to believe that Anderson-King would cost him another $17 out of every $100 he earns. Yet the actual cost will be only 25 cents more out of each $100.

Here's how the AMA does it:

Take the 1960 employe contribution of 3 percent on maximum earnings of $4,800:

$4,800 x 3 percent equals $144.

Now figure the one-fourth of 1 percent increase in the contribution rate as proposed in Anderson-King, plus the increase in the ceiling on earnings from $4,800 to $5,200:

$4,800 x .25 percent equals $12.

400 x 3.25 percent equals $13.

By simple addition, you get $25 and that is 17 percent of $144. See?

Not only does the calculation present a distorted picture of the actual costs of the Anderson-King program, the AFL-CIO points out, it further misleads because it is based on the social security contribution rate of 1960 (the present rate is 3.125 percent and is scheduled to go up to 3.625 percent in 1963).

Furthermore, the AMA's calculations ignore the fact that almost half the increased contribution for people earning more than $4,800 goes toward higher cash retirement benefits.

"The cost of adequate medical care for the aged must and will be met somehow," the AFL-CIO declares. "The question facing the nation today is largely one of how that cost should be distributed.

"It seems most equitable that instead of letting it fall arbitrarily and catastrophically, forcing large numbers of the aged to give up their independence and seek public charity, wreaking havoc with the family budgets of their children and causing a vast drain on state and local governments, as well as federal revenues—that instead of this a system should be utilized permitting people to contribute, while they are working and able to do so, toward coverage when they will need it."

USWA Cites Progress on Health Center

Miami, Fla.—Rapid progress towards establishment of a group pre-paid medical plan to provide improved health care for 20,000 residents of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., was announced here by Ted Goldberg, Canadian assistant director of research for the Steelworkers.

Addressing a luncheon session of the Group Health Association of America, Goldberg traced the steps taken by the steel union to seek better medical care for its members in the Canadian city, located between Lake Superior and Lake Huron. The USWA, representing several thousand workers at the big Algoma Steel Corp. plant, is the largest union in the city of 45,000.

Impetus for creating the group medical plan developed, the union official reported, when steel workers complained about a "very limited range of benefits" from their negotiated insurance medical program. Some 3,800 union members requested the Algoma management to deduct 50 cents a pay-day to subsidize research and inquiry, a sum later raised to $3.

In an election last month, more than 80 percent of eligible voters selected the health care center over the existing insurance plan.

Some 4,600 steelworkers have voluntarily asked Algoma to check off $135 from their pay so they may be sponsors of the new center. It is expected to go into operation in mid-1963.

Blue Cross Ads Branded 'Misleading'

The national Blue Cross Association is engaging in "misleading" and "untrue" advertising which is really "political propaganda unbecoming to a tax exempt, nonprofit, presumably public interest organization," Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.) charged in a speech to the Senate in the closing hours of the 87th Congress.

Williams cited half-page ads in several national magazines that "set forth the idea that local Blue Cross plans without exception are now expanding the effectiveness of their programs for senior citizens" and which urge readers to write or telephone their local Blue Cross for "full details."

"The ads are not true," the Senator declared, "and the Blue Cross Association knew they were not true in their promises when they had them run in our leading magazines."

Williams reported 33 local Blue Cross plans had been called on the day the ads first appeared. The pattern of response, he said, is displayed by these replies from the first four, alphabetically:

Arizona Blue Cross—"We have nothing on any new plan now."

Arkansas Blue Cross—"No idea when a new plan will take effect or what the coverage will be."

California Blue Cross, southern—"Don't know of any new plan."

Colorado Blue Cross—"Final arrangements on any new plan won't be made until the end of the year."

Williams charged that the Blue Cross management had demonstrated a willingness to become "not the defender of the public and its hospitals, but a tail to the AMA's high flown political kite."

The only possible purpose he could see for running the ads at this time, he asserted "is to give political candidates opposed to the Anderson-King bill something to wave in the air as they declare, 'I hold in my hand this advertisement by the Blue Cross Association announcing that throughout the country Blue Cross is about to meet the needs of the elderly.'"

Report on Kerr-Mills Makes AMA Backtrack

A new government report has demolished a "numbers game" the American Medical Association has been playing with the Kerr-Mills Act and has forced the doctors' lobby to backtrack on its claims that the medical needs of senior citizens have been solved by federal-state grants to the "needy" aged.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security has issued an analysis spotlighting the AMA's turnabout since April 1961, when full-page AMA advertisements in metropolitan newspapers proclaimed that 46 states were putting the Kerr-Mills Act into operation and predicting that it would shortly solve health care problems in all 50 states.

Thirteen months later, when the AMA hired an empty Madison Square Garden for a televised reply to Pres. Kennedy's plea for passage of the Anderson-King bill, the AMA claimed only 38 states were implementing Kerr-Mills but reiterated that this was the solution and no further federal action was needed.

Now, the AFL-CIO analysis points out, the AMA is taking the position that the "principle" of Kerr-Mills is sound—just give it time and the health needs of the senior citizens will be met.

A government report issued for August—the second anniversary of the passage of the law—has embarrassed the AMA into modifying its earlier line, the AFL-CIO declared.

According to the federal government there were only 24 states in August which made any medical assistance available at all to the elderly under the Kerr-Mills program—not 46 states or even 38 states. For the nation as a whole, only an average of 6.2 out of every thousand persons over 65 received any help.

"No one can seriously claim that there are so few who actually need help," the AFL-CIO declared.

Even among states providing assistance, the disparity is great. In Massachusetts, medical bills were paid for 36 out of every 1,000 older persons. In neighboring New Hampshire, only one person out of 3,000 was helped.

"Does the AMA contend that the need in Massachusetts is 108 times greater than in New Hampshire?" the AFL-CIO asked.

'Friendly' Family Doctors Tell Patients How to Vote

Those doctors opposed to the Kennedy Administration's program of health care for the aged financed through the social security system appear to be heeding the American Medical Association's plea to get active in politics.

Some of them have been taking the personal, family doctor approach to their patients.

"As a physician I am happy to participate in the campaign against polio and help other community activities which promote your welfare," a model letter begins. It then goes on—without reference to any specific issues—to describe the incumbent congressman in the district as "a liberal with socialistic tendencies."

The letter concludes by urging a vote against the congressman "to help stop the spread of socialism. . . ."

No one knows how many such letters are being mailed this month, comments Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security in the current issue of the American Federationist, AFL-CIO monthly magazine, "but it is clear the opponents of medicare continue to rely on scare and confusion as their basic weapons. . . ."

Cruikshank adds, however, that it is equally clear that where people are informed about the facts of the Anderson-King bill, "they are able to see through the smokescreen of 'socialism' and other misleading slogans of the opposition and willingly support the social security method of providing health insurance for the nation's aged."

Drawing the Line

PRES. KENNEDY'S historic speech drawing the line with the Soviet Union contained an essential truth that has been ignored too often in the overly-sophisticated discussions of foreign policy.

"The 1930s," the President said, "taught us a clear lesson. Aggressive conduct, if allowed to go unchecked and unchallenged, ultimately leads to war."

To the generation that lived through the 1930s of Nazi aggression, of piecemeal encroachment and seizure of free territory and free peoples until Hitler finally built up his strength to make a bid for world conquest, the Soviet missile build-up in Cuba is a grim reminder.

The arming of Cuba with missiles capable of inflicting destruction on the United States and the nations of Latin America is an aggressive act. The President spelled this out when he said:

"Nuclear weapons are so destructive and ballistic missiles are so swift that any substantially increased possibility of their use or any sudden change in the deployment may well be regarded as a definite threat to peace."

This is the issue in Cuba. The emplacement of missiles on the Communist-run island is an act of aggression. To allow it to go by unchallenged is to pave the way for another aggressive act somewhere else around the globe.

A Vital Benchmark

SIX YEARS AGO a major textile chain closed a mill in Darlington, S. C., and threw 500 workers out in the street because a union had won a representation election at the plant.

Last week, after prolonged hearings and litigation, the National Labor Relations Board ruled that shutting down the mill rather than bargain with the union was an unfair labor practice. This finding was unanimous. By a 3-2 majority the board destroyed the legal fiction that Deering, Milliken, Inc., was not responsible for the unfair labor practices of its affiliate, Darlington Manufacturing Co.

The board ordered the textile chain to pay lost wages to more than 500 Darlington workers and to give former employes at the Darlington mill preferential hiring at its other mills.

The NLRB has established another vital benchmark on the road to justice and equity in labor-mangement relations and given new hope to southern textile workers.

In the National Interest

THE CUBAN CRISIS has placed the 1962 elections in a new perspective. The national interest must now be the overriding concern rather than pure partisanship.

The national crisis re-emphasizes the "most precious right of free men," the right to political self-determination and the right of Americans to choose their own rulers.

On Nov. 6 Americans will be exercising that right in one of the most perilous periods in the nation's history. It is more important than ever before, therefore, that a record vote be achieved, as Pres. Meany has written all AFL-CIO affiliates, "not as a partisan undertaking, but as a contribution to the national interest."

Those who vote on Nov. 6, Meany stressed, "will be doing more than fulfilling their duty to participate in government. They will be demonstrating to the world that Americans are aroused, alert, determined."

'Trick or Treat?'

Howard K. Smith Says:

Cost of Political Campaigns Poses Problem for Democracy

The following is excerpted from a television broadcast by Howard K. Smith over the ABC television network.

IT COSTS A LOT to win an election. As Will Rogers once said, it even costs a lot just to get beat. And the cost is rising. In 1952, the minimum campaign cost to all candidates for all offices added up to $140 million. In 1956, the figure was $155 million. In 1960, the last presidential year, it was $175 million.

In New York City, the last contest for mayor in 1961 cost the candidates more than $3 million.

The present fight for the governorship of California, to cite only the most publicized of this year's contests, is expected to cost a minimum of $3 million and probably a great deal more.

Where all the money goes is obvious. With the number of voters to be appealed to multiplying, it means bigger campaign staffs, spending more money on ads, stickers, buttons, leaflets. With the competition for the voters' attention getting stiffer in this age of television, it means spending more money buying time on that expensive new medium. It takes more travel by more expensive conveyances like jet planes.

There is no denying that money has a great effect on our democratic process. Sometimes the effects are subconscious and very subtle, but they are always there.

In stating the case, however, we do not want to over-state it. There was a time when money was used in greater amounts to influence individual elections and more crudely than today.

No recent presidential candidate has spent as much trying to be nominated as did Leonard Wood, trying to capture the Republican nomination for President in 1920. Gen. Wood spent $1.75 million. That would equal nearly $5 million in today's money. He failed to get the nomination.

However, the most expensive single campaign in American history was that of John P. Mitchell trying to become mayor of New York in 1917. Mitchell spent over a million dollars. It amounted to $8 per vote. Compare that to the rough average of 15 cents a vote that the average American candidate pays today. Mitchell, incidentally, lost.

Those few incidents show that money does not always win. In fact, Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt had less money than his opponent in each of his elections and so did Truman; and so did Kennedy. But they all won.

What troubles conscientious people today is that Congress used to be jealous of its honor, and used to refuse to seat men in whose elections money played too crude a role. Today, Congress no longer seems to care.

There are congressional laws to regulate election expenditures, but the laws are disregarded or broken now as a matter of established practice. No single contribution is supposed to exceed $5,000. But due to the laxity of laws and enforcement of them, members of 12 American families contribute a million dollars to elections, 90 percent of it to one party.

THOUGH ALL members of Congress are supposed to file accurate accounts of all they spend, in the last election 10 senators and 65 congressmen neglected to file any accounts and no one protested. A senator some years ago acknowledged spending $600,000 for his re-election; but his account filed with Congress showed expenditures of less than $2,000.

There are congressional laws to regulate lobbyists or pressure groups in Washington. There is laxity about enforcing them, too. Many pressure groups do not register though law requires it. They are all supposed to file accounts of their expenses in pressuring Congress, but again laws are inadequate and are not enforced with any vigor. Many of these interests with huge funds to contribute to needy campaign chests of politicians blocked one piece of legislation after another in the now ended session of Congress.

But the new feature in the story is that there is hope. Five pieces of legislation on the subject were introduced in the last session of Congress, showing an increasing concern. Pres. Kennedy in a news conference became the first President since Theodore Roosevelt to ask for action to lessen dependence of U.S. democracy on a few wealthy people. He was promptly supported by Pres. Eisenhower, making it a bipartisan sentiment.

The President's commission on the subject under Dr. Heard of North Carolina recommended tax incentives to induce more small contributors to give to presidential campaigns. He asked for more publicity of real expenditures as a corrective to prevent abuses.

Morgan Says:

U. S. Foreign Service Far Better Than It Was Only a Decade Ago

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

THE SUBJECT of our little lecture is diplomats, especially American diplomats who, not so long ago, were being referred to derisively in and out of Congress as cookie-pushers in striped pants.

These emissaries still have to give and attend teas, cocktail parties, receptions, dinners and other musts on the social menu, booby-trapped with boredom, and they are still obliged, more often than they like to contemplate, to gussy themselves up in tuxedo and white tie and tails. But in spite of these burdens, the quality of U.S. ambassadors and their staffs has vastly improved, while the hardships they encounter and their heroic devotion to duty, in the main, go largely unappreciated and unsung.

Morgan

In the early days of diplomacy, princes had the good sense to pay more attention to their envoys' skill as negotiators than to their rank or affluence. Louis XI of France even sent his barber on diplomatic missions. Not until the 18th century, however, did a diplomatic service, in any modern sense, emerge. The elaboration of royal pomp and circumstance made it desirable that diplomats be courtiers and thus arose the aristocratic diplomatic class that survived into the 19th Century. Even after the Napoleonic wars, when the British Foreign Service was thrown open to competition, precautions were still taken to insure that it was manned by "gentlemen." Not until after 1914 did the British abolish the qualification of independent income.

We Americans have a long and not very illustrious history of appointing wealthy men to head our embassies abroad, usually as a reward for party contributions. According to Alexander Heard's valuable handbook, 'The Costs of Democracy,' 19 Eisenhower-appointed ambassadors contributed $218,000 to the Republican Party in 1956 alone. Yet by 1959 this "businessman's regime" had raised the proportion of career ambassadors in the Foreign Service to a record 69 percent. The Kennedy Administration is momentarily down to 63 percent but for the first time has put career men in all of Europe's major posts—London, Paris, Bonn, Rome and Moscow.

It would be stupid to argue that rich men can't be good ambassadors; several have served with distinction. Furthermore many non-career men without means have done brilliantly as ambassadors and it must be added that some diplomats coming up through the Foreign Service have been duds of almost unbelievable stuffiness.

BUT THE FACT of overriding encouragement is that though ambassadorial lemons of both career and non-career strains remain in some posts, our Foreign Service is enormously better than it was only a decade ago. Ironically, too few people appreciate the improvement or the obstacles under which it has been made. By comparison with business and industry—where some of them wind up on retirement—ambassadors are still underpaid, their salaries ranging from $20,000 to $27,500; more importantly, in some respects, their living allowances can be woefully stingy and it still requires major improvisation for a man without independent funds to meet the social and other demands of a major embassy.

Llewellyn Thompson has recently finished the longest assignment—five years—any American ambassador ever had in Moscow with the possible exception of John Quincy Adams in the days of czars. His patiently superlative service won tribute from the President, an unusually fine editorial in Life magazine, tempting offers outside government which he has turned down, and a painful case of gallstones.

One of the New Frontier's bright non-career ambassadors, William Attwood, a journalist by training, was crippled by polio soon after he reached Guinea in West Africa but though he has made a remarkable recovery and is back on the job with only a minor limp, the unsurprising lack of schools and medical facilities in the new republic separated him from his children, who are in school in the U.S.

These men are only two of a small army of dedicated diplomats to whom we of the general public owe a lot. Visiting firemen, especially visiting congressmen who are always so economy-minded at home, might well remember this the next time they descend on the embassy in Lower Slobovia and demand the best that the country and the ambassador have to offer.

'Budget Far Too Low':

Federal Boost Urged to Spur Vocational Education Program

THE DIRECTOR of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education has called for a "much larger injection of federal funds" into the nation's vocational education system to meet the training needs of 60 percent of U.S. school pupils.

Appearing on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public affairs program broadcast by the Mutual network, Lawrence Rogin said the $56 million budget for vocational education programs is "far too little" in view of the fact that a majority of U.S. school children have not had any specific job training.

Rogin cited statistics showing that:

- Only two out of evry 10 children who enter school in this country will finish college.
- Another two pupils will start college but not finish.
- Vocational training for the other school pupils does not reach a large number of youths who never get any specific training for a job.

A report by a presidential panel currently examining the vocational education system is expected early in November. Rogin believes it will be the basis for legislative recommendations by Pres. Kennedy to Congress in January.

Interviewed by Theodor Schuchat of School Shop magazine and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., Rogin said "this may be the most important thing that has happened to vocational education since the passage of the original Smith-Hughes Act in 1912."

In addition to the need for increased federal funds, Rogin cited another need—more public awareness of the vital importance of such education.

THE MAJOR PROBLEM, he said, is that while academic education is understood, vocational education for skilled work is understood by most school men and agricultural, vocational education is understood in rural areas, training for mass production or for "service" jobs is not related to the school curriculum or to employment possibilities in a meaningful way.

Vocational home economics, for instance, fails to train pupils to fill the need for waiters and waitresses in major cities, for cooks and chefs, for service workers in the whole food preparation industry—"it is still home economics in the traditional sense" of preparing for work at home, Rogin asserted.

U.S. schools are making headway, he reported, in reducing the percentage of pupils who will drop out—from 40 percent of the enrollment 10 years ago to 30 percent today. Unfortunately, he added, pupils who remain in school are "pushed into" general education programs, which give them neither vocational nor academic training, as a way to "hold them in school or off the labor market" a little longer.

"There is no reason," Rogin said, "why we can't do much more with them while they stay in school."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

LOS ANGELES—Former Vice Pres. Nixon, running in California for governor, is curiously different from the Nixon of the 1960 presidential campaign, when most voters thought they learned most about him.

In 1960 a fierce spotlight of national exposure beat upon him, and he acknowledged publicly and freely that Mr. Kennedy and Democrats generally were just as honest and patriotic and devoted to the public weal as he himself, and that he and they "agreed about goals."

After a few days of exposure to the current California campaign, an observer of the 1960 race begins to wonder which is the real Nixon. The insistent theme of the former vice president's speeches here against the Democratic candidate for re-election, Gov. Edmund G. Brown, is a skilled innuendo that Brown's administration is infested with Communists, or with dupes of Communists, or with softheaded liberals no whit better than Communists.

Back in 1955, Nixon's former campaign manager, Murray Chotiner, told Republican students gathered to be instructed in the techniques of political success that some "pink paper" happened to be available for Nixon's use in printing the Nixon-Chotiner version of the public record of former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, who had shown the effrontery to run against Nixon for the Senate.

"Pink paper" tactics began popping up all over the place as Nixon in the circumscribed area of California this year began his final drive to exterminate Brown politically. It was 12 years after his battle with Mrs. Douglas for the Senate, but the techniques seemed bewilderingly the same.

THREE SEPARATE and distinct slanderous documents were circulated widely among voters denouncing various Democratic groups or leaders as "leftist" and attacking Brown by picture and name so that by insinuation Brown also became a "leftist."

Two of the documents contained faked photographs slotting Brown into juxtaposition pictorially with "leftist" Democrats and with Comrade Khrushchev. A faked alleged quotation was used. The pictures were "cropped" and put together to make Brown seem to be bending his neck to internal enemies of the people or to Khrushchev while the Soviet dictator mocked us.

The "pink paper" of 1950 was translated into a "Little Red Book" of 1962, a thing compiled in the name of a self-proclaimed longtime former FBI "counterspy," Karl Prussion, to traduce Brown.

Nixon's managers and the Republican state chairman, Caspar Weinberger, disclaimed responsibility. Yet all through the Nixon campaign the onetime vice president kept beating at the theme of "softness" on communism, of public figures who are "dupes" of communism, of his own special insight into the issues of freedom and courage and integrity, in contrast to Brown's alleged blindness.

AWAY FROM the national spotlight, Nixon is apparently relaxed in public and private as it seemed he might never be again after Mr. Kennedy blew him apart in the first televised debate of the 1960 campaign. He thinks he blew Brown apart in their one televised confrontation of this state campaign, a debate before editors.

Brown has an unusual kindliness for a highly effective and proved political figure. It is almost as if he finds himself embarrassed that an opponent would seek office so hotly that known defamation of character becomes a weapon.

Whispering campaigns, the sly innuendo, the fake document, the exaggerated charge, the overheated campaign oratory, are not the sin of either party alone. There are scoundrels and fools on both sides in American politics. But with respectable candidates a line is drawn which they do not allow any underling to cross.

In California this year apparently anything goes in the Nixon campaign to beat Brown. The California Republican senator, Thomas H. Kuchel, has disassociated himself so effectively that his personal re-election campaign seems to be taking place in another state—if not another world.

THE FIRST CONTRACT in history for New York City school teachers and other teaching employes is signed by Pres. Charles Cogen, left, of the United Federation of Teachers, and Max J. Rubin, president of the city Board of Education. The contract gives teachers many benefits they never had before and is the first detailed agreement of its kind between the Teachers and a city school board, according to the union.

How to Buy:

Comparison Shopping Saves Money on New Kitchen Range

By Sidney Margolius

LOWER MEAT PRICES now available have lifted a big load from wage-earners. Farmers who struck for higher prices early this fall now are bringing more livestock to market.

Your Thanksgiving turkey will cost you a little more this year but turkeys are still relatively cheap.

November is a good month to shop for women's coats and dresses; stores cut prices beginning with the Veterans Day sales. You also will find lower prices on kitchen ranges and water heaters. Here are tips on November buying opportunities:

Ranges: A family in need of a new kitchen range should consider current values. Even lower-price models now offer features formerly found only on the deluxe.

Electric ranges now outsell gas ranges three to one, although gas usually heats up a little faster on all burners and is a little less costly to operate.

But electric ranges are generally considered cleaner and more convenient. For some time even moderate-priced electric ranges have offered clock timers to start and turn off ovens automatically. But now an increasing number of gas ranges provide timer controls, automatic ignition, automatic meat thermometers, signal lights and other conveniences.

Whether gas or electric, you have a choice of three styles:

Built-ins are space-saving and lend themselves to flexible kitchen arrangement. They are, however, most expensive both to buy and to install. Free-standing ranges are least costly and can be moved easily if a kitchen is rearranged. Slide-in ranges are a compromise between built-ins and free-standing ranges. They are less expensive than built-ins, but have their space-saving compactness. They fit flush against adjoining counters, but do not require any cabinet work.

Manufacturers produce a basic range to retail, for example, for $150, and then add what they call "step-up" features so that the $150 range finally becomes an ultra-deluxe model with a tag, in this example, of $270. It may not pay to buy the most deluxe range, not only because of the initial extra expense, but because each additional feature is another potential service problem.

Many women may find an automatic timer helpful, but if you do not usually stray far from the kitchen while preparing meals, a hand-wound buzzer timer for a dollar may be all you want. If you rarely use a large automatic griddle or a rotisserie or two ovens, you may be better off without them.

The many models at first will seem confusing, and undoubtedly add costs which the consumer must pay. But in this case the multiplicity does give you an opportunity to select the most suitable package of features for your needs.

HERE IS A COMPARISON of five different models of the same basic electric range offered by one large seller, showing the features available at each price (in this case).

Standard model at $150 for the 30-inch size is a well-made unit with a comparatively large oven (24x19x18); one fast-start 2,100-watt burner and three of 1,250 watts; a fast-heating oven that reaches desired temperature in less than four minutes; a raised-edge cooktop to prevent spill-overs, and removable trim rings, bowls, racks, guides and knobs for easy cleaning.

Middle model at $170 is the same range with a clock-controlled oven which turns on and off at pre-set times; a 60-minute buzz timer; lighted backguard, and a time-controlled appliance outlet.

Deluxe model at $200 has above features plus oven window and light.

Ultra deluxe model at $250 has all these features plus one automatically-controlled 2,600-watt burner which maintains the temperature you select; infinite switches with visual heat indicators instead of the usual seven-position switches; a 3.5-hour buzz timer; a second appliance outlet; fluorescent "instrument panel", a larger clock and additional trim. With a rotisserie, this model becomes $270.

Thus, the standard or leader model is an excellent value. For $20 more you can have a clock-controlled oven, which can be useful. For $30 beyond that, you basically get only an oven window and light, although still helpful. But for an additional $40, you get just one possibly-important additional convenience—the controlled 2,600-watt burner—plus a few refinements and decorations.

Food Buying Calendar: Both beef and pork are cheaper this month. But among best main-dish values are turkeys and broilers, now in heavy supply. Frozen orange juice, cranberries and apples also are priced low. Buy in bulk for best values. The Maryland Cooperative Extension Service points out that you pay 15 cents for one pound of apples but 8 cents if you buy by the peck (12 pounds), and 5 cents by the half bushel (24 pounds).

Nuclear Physicist Says:

U.S. Ahead of Reds In Space Science

ALTHOUGH THE SOVIETS have excelled in spectacular feats of space technology, they have failed to exploit as fully as the United States the scientific and practical value of earth satellites, according to Dr. Ralph E. Lapp, nuclear physicist, who contends that the United States is actually far ahead of the Soviet Union in space science.

This information is contained in Space Science, a new 60-cent pamphlet he wrote which was published by the American Library Association in cooperation with the Public Affairs Committee. This is the first in the series of Guides for Reading for an Age of Change on vital topics in the physical and social sciences and the arts.

The reading guides are designed to provide a summary of current knowledge on the subject and to introduce the intelligent reader to books that will help him keep abreast of new developments in various fields. To this end the guides contain an analysis by a leading authority and an annotated list of books for further reading, selected by specialist librarians.

In Space Science Lapp traces the development and uses of space exploration, explains rockets, satellites, problems of men in space, getting to the moon, to Mars, and beyond.

After explaining the various systems used to launch satellites into orbit, he tackles "man's role in space," declaring:

"There can be no question that man's entry into space, even if for a matter of hours, caused great excitement on earth. Confusion has been created, however, by those who have sought to justify these space flights as contributing to scientific knowledge. Instrumented satellites have relayed back to earth almost all the scientific data acquired on space missions."

Moon exploration projects also are explained, as well as a look farther into space and the possibility of life on other planets. The Reading for an Age of Change project was developed by the American Library Association, in cooperation with the Public Affairs Committee, and is supported by a grant from the Carnegie Corp.

How to Break the News Subtly That Mother-in-Law is Coming

By Jane Goodsell

HOW TO BREAK THE NEWS: To your husband that your mother is coming to stay with you for an indefinite period:

"Darling, remember those marvelous potato pancakes Mother made for you when she was here last summer? And wasn't it nice having somebody right here in the house to stay with the children when we went out so that we didn't have to hire a baby sitter? I'm sure you haven't forgotten how beautifully she darned your socks for you, too. Well, I've just had a letter from her and . . . ."

TO YOUR seven-year-old that he'd better not count on winning the grand prize in the Yum-Yum Dogfood Name-the-Puppy Contest:

"Darling, I think 'Brownie' is a wonderful and very unusual name for a dog, but you've got to remember that thousands and thousands of other people are sending in names, too. So you'd better wait and see whether you win before you go around telling people that you're going to spend your $10,000 on an English bike and a Shetland pony."

TO YOUR high-school freshman child that you haven't the faintest idea of what the Treaty of Ghent was:

"Of course I could tell you, dear, but it wouldn't be fair to you. For your own sake, you should look it up in the encyclopedia."

TO YOUR husband that your eight-year-old daughter is playing in a piano recital tomorrow evening, and he's got to show up:

"Honey, remember that article I was telling you about, the one written by the psychiatrist who said that little girls need to feel loved and admired by their fathers? I mean, it isn't enough just to tell a child that you love her. You've got to prove it by participating in the things that are important to her. So I know you'll feel that it's your duty to . . . ."

TO YOUR husband that you have volunteered his services to the P-TA as chief dishwasher at the Buckaroo Breakfast:

"Honey, I've done so much bragging about what a good sport you are, not grumpy like most husbands, but enthusiastic and full of fun and ready for anything. So when they asked me if you'd mind helping, of course I had to . . . ."

"My ego needed to feel how much $77.50 a week really is."

GOP Split in New Hampshire:

New England Gives Hope to Democrats

in both Democratic and Republican camps. Campaigning on a platform emphasizing nuclear disarmament and social welfare advances, he is given little chance of victory, but observers point out that he was able to gather more than 117,000 signatures on his nominating petitions.

Peabody Gathers Strength

Whether these represent actual votes and, if so, which major candidate stands to lose most from them are questions bothering Lodge and Kennedy.

In the gubernatorial race, Democrat Endicott Peabody, a former all-American football player at Harvard, is gathering strength from the Kennedy organization and in his own right, while emphasizing the need for state constitutional reform. His Republican opponent, incumbent John A. Volpe, was installed early in the campaign as a favorite despite a lackluster administration, but has been losing ground according to most observers.

Massachusetts labor, which has endorsed Kennedy, Peabody and the incumbent Democratic House members, is aiming for a high voter turnout with registrations at a record off-year level.

The state lost two seats to redistricting, one held by retiring GOP Rep. Laurence Curtis, who was defeated by Lodge in the Senate primary. Pitted in a hot contest for the new combined 5th District are Rep. Thomas J. Lane (D) and Rep. F. Bradford Morse (R). In the northeast section of the state, an able New Frontiersman, George J. O'Shea, Jr., is showing surprising strength and is given a 50-50 chance of taking the 6th district from the GOP incumbent, William H. Bates.

GOP Split

The campaign in New Hampshire is drawing national attention because of the biggest Republican donnybrook in the state's history which may just tip the scales for the Democratic candidate for governor, John W. King, and his running mate for one of the two Senate seats at stake, Thomas J. McIntyre.

Objective observers say New Hampshire Democrats have never been so well organized or so unified while the GOP has never been so torn by intra-party warfare stemming from a bitter primary battle.

Incumbent Gov. Wesley Powell, who has had wide Democratic support, was defeated in his Republican primary bid for a third term by John Pillsbury, majority leader of the General Assembly.

In a statewide television message, Powell threw his endorsement to King, the minority leader, labelling Pillsbury a "lobbyist" for the Public Service Co. and an advocate of a sales tax. At the same time, he insisted that "Old Guard obstructionists" had caused his primary defeat because of his appointment of Maurice J. Murphy, Jr., instead of Sen. Styles Bridges' widow, to the seat left vacant by Bridges' death.

McIntyre's opponent, Rep. Perkins Bass, may also lose the votes of many Republicans who supported his three opponents in the GOP primary—Mrs. Bridges, Murphy and Rep. Chester Merrow.

McIntyre, a liberal supporter of the Kennedy program is conducting a strong campaign against the conservative Bass. In 1954 he came within 400 votes of winning the 1st District House seat.

Ribicoff in Close Race

In Connecticut, Abraham Ribicoff has returned from Washington to encounter some disaffection over his leaving the governorship to become Kennedy's first secretary of health, education and welfare only to return to run for the Senate.

But "Abe" is a household word in the state and his opponent, GOP Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, is frequently known as "two other guys."

Ribicoff's identification with social security health care for the aged has made the Anderson-King bill a prime issue in the campaign, leading the American Medical Association to send spokesmen, including Dr. Edward R. Annis, its president-elect, into the state to oppose him.

In an effort to overcome his "recognition" handicap, Seely-Brown has been vigorously trudging from door to door in subdivisions distributing potholders bearing his name.

Observers see a tight race—much tighter than when Ribicoff was elected governor in 1958 by nearly 250,000 votes—and predict that Gov. John N. Dempsey will lead the ticket in his bid for re-election against Republican John Alsop. Nevertheless, Ribicoff still is regarded as the favorite.

Turnout Holds Key

A one-day visit to the state by Kennedy, before the international crisis, drew huge crowds and lifted the State AFL-CIO's hope of a big turnout among workers on Nov. 6. The size of the vote could tell the story for Ribicoff and the Democratic candidate for the at-large House seat, Bernard P. Grabowski, who is opposed by an ultra-conservative, State Sen. John M. Lupton.

Dempsey's popularity also may help the Democrats take the House seat being vacated by Seely-Brown in the 2nd District. Bidding for it are William St. Onge, Democratic mayor of Putnam, and Moses Savin, former mayor of New London.

Republican Maine and Vermont and Democratic Rhode Island are considered likely to remain that way, except that reapportionment has added to Democratic strength in Maine's revised 2nd District, giving the labor-backed Democrat, William D. Hathaway, an even chance against the GOP incumbent, Rep. Clifford G. McIntire. COPE gives McIntire a "zero" on his 87th Congress record, listing him wrong on all 11 key votes.

FIRST WOMAN named a U.S. labor attache is Margaret L. Plunkett, a career civil servant in the Labor Dept. Miss Plunkett, who holds three degrees from Cornell University, has been assigned to The Hague.

CONGRATULATIONS ARE EXTENDED to Gerald A. Lamb (second from right), Democratic candidate for state treasurer of Connecticut, following his endorsement by the State AFL-CIO's legislative, political and educational convention. Shown from left are: Pres. John J. Driscoll of the state labor body; David Holmes, chairman of the Fair Practices Committee of Auto Workers Local 1604; Pres. Joseph Falcone of the Greater Waterbury Labor Council; Pres. James Morris of the New Britain branch of the NAACP; Lamb; Shepherd Brock, fair practices committeeman for Rubber Workers Local 93.

Conservatives Aid Republicans, Some Victories Scented in South

More Republicans are running for office in the South than for many years—and there is a reasonable chance that some of them will be elected.

Not enough to create a genuine two-party southern political system; but enough to make it clear that in southern conservative circles it is no longer considered improper to be publicly identified as a Republican.

Two factors appear to play a major part in this shift in sentiment—race relations and the national economic policies of the Democratic Party.

The breach over these issues was sharp enough 14 years ago to cause the breakaway of a "states' rights" party that gave the electoral college votes of four states to Strom Thurmond, then governor and now senator from South Carolina. It was strong enough two years ago to take Mississippi out of the Democratic camp and swing its electoral votes to Gov. Ross Barnett for President.

Now there are seven governorships at stake, eight Senate seats, 112 in the House.

Democrats are considered certain to retain the state houses in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee (in Alabama and Georgia there is no Republican opposition). In Arkansas, the GOP is waging an unusually active campaign, but incumbent Democrat Orval Faubus seems assured of victory over the GOP nominee, Willis Ricketts.

In Oklahoma, outside observers give the Republican nominee, former State Rep. Henry Bellmon, an even chance against Democrat W. P. Atkinson, largely because of local issues and Democratic factionalism.

Texas Fascinating

The case of Texas has fascinating overtones. The state last year elected its first Republican senator in this century, John Tower, and many business conservatives have moved frankly into the Republican Party. One of them is the GOP candidate for governor, Jack Cox, running against Democrat John B. Connally, former navy secretary in the Kennedy Administration. Texas liberals are dissatisfied with what seems to them an effort by Connally to appease the conservatives, but the Texas AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education has endorsed Connally.

Texas seems certain to re-elect Republican Rep. Bruce Alger (Dallas), and may elect Desmond A. Barry over Democratic Joe Pool for a new at-large congressional seat. In the doubtful category is listed the far western 16th District, where incumbent Democratic Rep. J. T. Rutherford is being challenged by the Republican Ed Foreman.

All southern Democratic senators seeking re-election are rated certain of victory. It is typical of Republican signs of strength, however, that the veteran Sen. Lister Hill is strongly challenged by a Republican rival who is also a former president of Associated Industries (a little NAM) and who charges that Hill has been "too liberal," too closely associated with national Democratic policies.

The same pattern may be seen in South Carolina, where Democratic Sen. Olin D. Johnston is under attack from a Columbia newspaperman, William D. Workman, Jr., and a surprisingly strong GOP organization. The Workman theme: Johnston is "too liberal," too friendly to labor.

In House races, two contests are of national interest.

In the 3rd Tennessee District (Chattanooga), the liberal Wilkes T. Thrasher ousted incumbent Rep. James B. Frazier in the Democratic primary, partly on the issue of social security health care. Now the medical society political forces are backing Republican William E. Brock III, an outspoken conservative, and so are some of the former Frazier Democrats.

Davis Primary Loser

In the Georgia 5th District (Atlanta), another Democratic conservative incumbent, Rep. James C. Davis, was beaten in the Democratic primary, and a gangup is forming against the victor, Charles L. Weltner. The Republican nominee is L. J. O'Callaghan, a conservative, who seems likely to get powerful support from influential Atlanta conservative businessmen.

Three other House seats where Republicans are rated by Congressional Quarterly, an impartial reference service, as having a fair chance of winning are the Florida 11th District (Orlando), the North Carolina 9th, the South Carolina 2nd (Columbia). In various other districts, particularly in Florida, Democratic incumbents are still rated as favorites primarily because they vote conservative in Congress.

Aid Sought for Victims Of 'Bulldozer' Upheaval

The AFL-CIO has called on Congress to give special help to America's displaced persons—the more than 1 million poor and elderly citizens forced to move from their homes by projects such as expressways, public housing and schools.

Presenting a four-point program for the relief of victims of the "bulldozer revolution," Sec. Boris Shishkin of the federation's Housing Committee recommended that federal, state and local governments share in supplementing the rent of elderly persons who cannot afford suitable new housing.

Shishkin called for human conservation in a nation which has "quickly and warmly responded to distress wrought by human upheavals" outside its borders. Testifying before a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), he made these points:

- There is need to expand and reinforce the public housing program so that elderly eligible persons may take advantage of it.
- Congress should expand the program authorizing direct loans to private nonprofit corporate sponsors of housing for the elderly, add to the loan funds available for housing for those displaced by public land acquisition, and make other amendments to provide housing for elderly persons.
- The AFL-CIO recommends an entirely new program under which federal, state and local governments would, by rent supplementation and other means, aid the dispossessed to rehouse themselves in suitable living quarters.
- The law should be changed to make sure that federal funds or assistance to construction or rental of any housing be provided only when such housing is available to all "regardless of race, creed, color or national origin."

STRONG BOOST for Democratic candidates in Maryland was given by Pres. Kennedy at a giant rally in Baltimore before he cut short his political appearances because of the international crisis. With the President are Daniel B. Brewster, left, candidate for the Senate, and Carlton R. Sickles, running for Maryland's new congressman-at-large seat.

Maryland Senate Race Lifts Democrats' Hopes

Baltimore—Maryland Democrats have high hopes this year of electing Rep. Daniel B. Brewster to the Senate seat of retiring John Marshall Butler, a far-to-the-right-wing Republican.

Butler, during his two terms in office, voted "wrong" on 44 out of 46 key issues, according to the COPE tally. To succeed him, the Republicans nominated another right-winger, former Rep. Edward T. Miller, whose score while in Congress was "wrong" on 26 of 31 rollcalls considered by COPE.

Most observers think Brewster, a popular congressman with 20 out of 21 "right" voting record, has an edge in the race.

A closer contest is on for the state's new congressman-at-large seat. The Democratic standard-bearer is Carlton R. Sickles, strongly supported by labor on the basis of an outstanding record as chairman of the Labor Committee in the Maryland House of Delegates. Republican Newton I. Steers has been campaigning intensively throughout the state.

Despite a bruising primary, Democrats appear to have closed ranks behind the re-election bid of Gov. J. Millard Tawes. His opponent is a former congressman, Frank Small, Jr., who does not appear to be getting the independent support Republicans need to offset a heavy Democratic registration edge in Maryland.

A Kennedy Democrat, former Rep. John R. Foley, is trying to regain the seat he lost in 1960 to the state's lone Republican congressman, Charles M. Mathias. On the state's Eastern Shore, Democratic Rep. Thomas F. Johnson is still considered ahead in his reelection race despite his recent indictment on conflict-of-interest charges. The issue may, however, have hurt the Democrats statewide.

Sears Ordered to Pay Damages to RCIA Local

Seattle—An arbitrator has found Sears, Roebuck & Co. guilty of a willful violation of the contract it formerly held with the Retail Clerks and ruled that it must pay damages for money losses sustained by RCIA Local 1207 here.

The contract expired in 1960 but Sears unilaterally abandoned a union security provision while it was still in effect, said Arbitrator J. B. Gillingham, an economics professor at the University of Washington.

The issue was whether Sears had refused to carry out a long-standing union security arrangement known in Seattle as the "steward system" under which both union and management had encouraged new employes to join the union. Finding that the big retail chain had abandoned this agreement without any legal justification, Gillingham ordered Sears to pay the union more than $600 in damages and sustained wage claims brought by the union as grievances of individual employes.

RCIA said: "The conduct of Sears Roebuck in Seattle typifies the company's anti-union policy. Its policy has not changed."

The Retail Clerks have, in an effort to change the management's anti-union security and anti-labor policies, urged all union members to buy no Sears products until the policy is changed. The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted in 1960 to back the boycott, which has since been supported by the free labor movement all over the world.

Several months ago Local 1207's charges against Sears for its refusal to write any form of union security into its contracts were upheld by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner.

Clark Considered Ahead:

Pennsylvania Apathy Yields To Faster Campaign Tempo

Harrisburg, Pa.—A hard-fought election campaign appears to have dispelled the apathy which a few weeks ago enveloped the political picture in the nation's third largest state.

Sen. Joseph A. Clark, running on his record as a staunch liberal, has forged into what most observers consider a lead over his GOP opponent, Rep. James E. Van Zandt.

Van Zandt has tried to splatter Clark with a "soft on communism" charge. But the smear has failed to take hold and may have boomeranged. Clark is quick to retort by listing Van Zandt votes against aid to South Korea, Greece, Turkey and Nationalist China and asking, "Who is really soft on communism?"

On the gubernatorial level, grass roots workers say the campaign of GOP Rep. William W. Scranton has "peaked out" and the Democratic drive to elect Richardson Dilworth is on the upswing.

Scranton, a personable, one-term congressman from a prominent family (the city of Scranton is named after his ancestors), has been stressing Pennsylvania's still-heavy unemployment

He has come up with nothing more concrete, however, then a promise that he would establish a committee of 50 prominent citizens, backed up by another committee of 1,450, which in turn would rest on a "committee of 100,000" to boost the virtues of the state.

Dilworth No Straddler

Dilworth, a team-mate of Clark in ridding Philadelphia of a corrupt Republican machine and transforming it from a GOP to a Democratic stronghold, resigned as the city's mayor to make the gubernatorial race. He has been hitting hard and scored well in two public debates. He has taken an unequivocal stand in favor of a highly-controversial school district consolidation law and has refused to straddle hot local issues.

Democrats hope that the tremendous crowds which have turned out for Pres. Kennedy throughout the state will make it easier to turn out the vote on election day.

Labor's well-organized register-and-vote drive is credited as a major factor in a Democratic bulge in new registrations. The statewide figure as of last May was 52 percent Democratic, but 68 percent of the new registrations have been Democratic.

The congressional reapportionment which cost Pennsylvania three House seats has thrown two veteran congressmen into the same district—liberal, labor-backed Rep. George M. Rhodes (D) of Reading, and conservative 72-year-old Rep. Ivor D. Fenton (R). The race has been considered a toss-up, but Rhodes currently is believed to have a slight edge.

Elsewhere, only one incumbent Democrat—Herman Toll of Philadelphia—appears to face a serious threat, and it would be rated an upset if he were unseated by Republican Frank J. Barbera.

First-term GOP Rep. George A. Goodling of York County is being strongly challenged by Democrat Earl D. Warner in a marginal district. Also a major Democratic target is the northwest district, including Erie, which had been represented for eight terms by Republican Carroll D. Kearns.

In the GOP primary, Kearns was narrowly beaten by James D. Weaver, a physician. The primary wounds have not healed and Democrat Peter J. Joyce is making Weaver's vehement opposition to social security health care for the aged a major campaign issue.

Two other Democrats are given an outside chance of capturing Republican seats. Author James A. Michener is attracting considerable independent support in his effort to oust Rep. Willard S. Curtin in a traditionally Republican stronghold, which includes Bucks County. And Democrat William D. Gombar is not conceding the seat vacated by Scranton to Republican Joseph M. McDade.

Redistricting to Affect Vote in Eastern States

feller and Democrat Robert M. Morgenthau have labor committees of union leaders supporting their candidates. The same is true in the Senate race between Republican incumbent Jacob K. Javits and Democrat James E. Donovan. Neither the State AFL-CIO nor the New York City Central Labor Council have made endorsements in the gubernatorial or Senate contests.

Redistricting, based on the shifts in population shown by the 1960 census, will reduce the region's congressional delegation by four this year. Losses of three seats in Pennsylvania, two in New York and one in West Virginia outweigh one-seat gains in Maryland and New Jersey.

Most significant is the political impact of the openly partisan redistricting in New York—a gerrymander skillfully carved by a Republican legislature to give the GOP the best possible chance of capturing the maximum number of congressional seats.

Based simply on past voting performances in the revised districts, the expected outcome would be a Democratic loss of six seats in the House and a Republican gain of four.

The outcome isn't that cut-and-dried, however.

For example, in the fast-growing Long Island area, the Republicans not only expected to fall heir to two new districts set up there, but changed the boundaries of the 1st District, which Democrat Otis G. Pike won for the first time in 1960 by less than 3,000 out of the 372,000 votes cast. This was supposed to ensure Pike's defeat, but observers think that he now has a very good chance of re-election.

Likewise one of the new "Republican" districts may elect Democrat Joseph A. Daley over Republican John W. Wydler.

Other New York districts which the early prognosticators conceded to Republicans, but where Democrats have a chance for upsets, include the Bronx district of GOP Rep. Paul A. Fino, opposed by Democratic Rep. Alfred E. Santangelo, who has been redistricted out of his Manhattan seat; the Brooklyn district of Democratic Rep. Hugh L. Carey, gerrymandered in a seahorse-shaped pattern to help former Rep. Francis E. Dorn regain the seat for the GOP, and the 35th District, where Rep. John Taber is retiring after 40 years as a bulwark of the Republican Old Guard in Congress. Democratic Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, whose former district was eliminated, is running a strong race in Taber's normally-Republican area against GOP State Sen. Janet Hill Gordon.

National attention has been focused on the West Virginia race where the districts of Democratic Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey and GOP Rep. Arch A. Moore, Jr., have been consolidated.

Kennedy personally kicked off the campaign to elect Bailey, a vigorous liberal during his eight terms in Congress and second in seniority on the House Education & Labor Committee. Other top Democratic leaders have gone into the district to campaign and the State AFL-CIO is making a massive effort to turn out the vote needed to elect Bailey, whose COPE tally for the 87th Congress was 9-2 "right" as compared with a 7-3 "wrong" margin for Moore.

The redistricting cost Bailey a strong Democratic county and the 1960 congressional vote in the new district gives the Republicans a 16,500 edge. Despite this handicap, Bailey is given at least an even chance and State AFL-CIO leaders say he has taken the lead.

Incumbents Favored

Democratic incumbents are favored to retain their seats in the four other West Virginia districts.

New Jersey picked up one extra seat in the new Congress, and it appears likely to go to Democrat Edward J. Patten, Jr., of Perth Amboy, although the Republicans are campaigning hard.

Two of the closest races are expected in the 11th District for the seat vacated by Democratic Rep. Hugh Addonizio when he was elected mayor of Newark, and in the 12th District, where there will be a repeat match between incumbent GOP Rep. George M. Wallhauser and Democrat Robert C. Peacock. In 1960, Wallhauser squeaked in with only 50.4 percent of the vote.

Joseph G. Minish, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson Labor Council, is the Democratic candidate in a hard-fought race against Republican Frank A. Palmieri in the 11th District.

One of the closest congressional elections in 1960 was for Delaware's lone seat, won by Democrat Harris B. McDowell, Jr., with 50.5 percent of the vote. It will be close again, but McDowell is rated a slight favorite.

Meany Urges Workers To Get Out Vote Nov. 6

signed to contain this drop-off and to bring about the widest possible voter participation in the balloting. The major emphasis between now and election day will be to get these eligible voters to the polls.

Percentages of Increase

Indicative of the trend are the following figures showing the percentage of voting-age population registered in 1960, compared to 1962:

Los Angeles County, 70.8 to 77.8 percent; Chicago, 75 to 80 percent; Cook County (Ill.), 72.6 to 79 percent; Detroit, 82 to 85 percent; Wayne County (Mich.), 82.8 to 87 percent; San Francisco, 68 to 72.3 percent; Cuyahoga County (O.), 74.5 to 76.1 percent; Baltimore, 67 to 71.1 percent; Minneapolis, 79 to 83 percent; Cincinnati, 78.1 to 80.7 percent; Oakland, 73.8 to 82 percent; San Diego, 68.5 to 81.2 percent; Indianapolis, 72.6 to 79.9 percent; New York City, 60 to 64.4 percent.

COPE Dir. James McDevitt hailed the response of union members to the voter registration campaign but warned that "only half the job has been done."

Unless workers and their families turn out at the polls on Nov. 6, he emphasized, labor-backed programs such as health care for the elderly, school aid and unemployment benefits will be dead for another two years.

"By failing to vote," McDevitt said, "a union member becomes his own victim."

California Contest Is Close:

Brown-Nixon Race Study in Contrasts

Los Angeles—The biggest single political contest of 1962, the race for governor of California between incumbent Democrat Edmund G. (Pat) Brown and former Vice Pres. Nixon, is a startling study in contrasts. Most spokesmen of the campaign camps agree on only one thing, that the contest is close.

Brown, whose record across four years has been recognized in national magazines as excellent, is fighting a low-key battle. Nixon, whose exigencies require him to win this one or go down the drain as a Republican political force, is running a carefully-timed, carefully planned operation based on the strategy attack.

Victor in 1958

Brown won four years ago by a million-vote margin over former Republican Sen. William F. Knowland. He likes to stress his constructive achievements—an agreement on water development reconciling the historic mutual hostility of northern and southern California, his "master plans" for higher education, recreational development, highway development.

He talks to his audiences about growth that will push California past New York by the end of the year, that will swell the present 17 million people within eight years beyond 20 million.

He is earnest and unemotional in his platform style for formal speeches. In a long series of "telethons," in which he answers before the cameras sundry telephoned questions, he talks precisely about state problems and repudiates too-simple or too-glib "solutions."

Against this Brown record and Brown style, Nixon has thrown an unrelenting assault apparently designed to drive the governor on the defensive about coddling Communists, coddling narcotics peddlers, coddling criminals, tolerating unemployment growth, spending the taxpayers' money wastefully, being hostile to private enterprise.

Notoriously Volatile

California is notoriously volatile in politics. Democratic registrations outrun Republican registrations by 3-2 margin, but as many as a million Democrats may vote Republican with some regularity and 300,000 to 400,000 Republicans may vote Democratic.

Nixon was forced to fight through a bitter Republican primary with a state assemblyman, Joseph Shell, who accused the former vice president of temporizing and compromising with liberalism. Shell has now fully endorsed Nixon for governor, but he won 35 percent of the primary vote. And he is astutely preparing to pick up the pieces of the state Republican Party if Nixon should fall.

Nixon's campaign seems tailored to get Shell's right-wing Republicans to work hard for him, pull right-wing Democrats over to his side, push middle-road Democrats into apathy.

Brown called off most of his campaigning when the Cuba crisis broke, suggesting that the national interest should be placed first. Nixon promptly endorsed the President's action on Cuba and kept on campaigning.

Other State Battles

Behind and beneath the Brown-Nixon contest are hundreds of others—Republican Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel seeking re-election aganst Democratic nominee Richard Richards; 38 battles for seats in the House of Representatives; bitter conflicts involving the peculiar western-state system that invites popular referendums on an extraordinary variety of complex proposals on the best way to handle higher education systems, Communist subversion and state senate reapportionment.

The election results here seem to depend certainly on the size of the vote. In 1958, when Brown beat Knowland, turnouts of angry voters included union members indignant about the senator's endorsement of a proposed "right-to-work" law and others convinced that Knowland wanted to go to the State House in Sacramento primarily as a base for presidential campaigns.

In the 1954 offyear, Democratic intraparty confusion and dissension cut down the total election turnout so sharply that the party's candidates suffered an almost total disaster.

In this campaign, Brown has talked about the civil rights advances he has promoted, the strengthening of unemployment and workmen's compensation programs, the effort to stimulate employment and business prosperity, the necessity of raising taxes to provide social programs.

He proposed to Nixon, in the aftermath of the Cuba crisis, that the Republican nominee halt the rainfall of leaflets and booklets scurrilously insinuating that various Democratic nominees were "soft on communism," but the public proffer was mildly phrased, almost diffidently put forth.

Nixon Keeps It Up

The night before, in suburban Inglewood, Nixon had reiterated his emphasis on his chief campaign issue—the "internal menace" of communism to the strong American republic.

Brown is a proved vote-winner; he was twice a successful Democratic candidate for state attorney general during the Republican years when Earl Warren was elected governor.

Nixon has never lost a statewide campaign. He won California against Kennedy in 1960, when absentee ballots counted after the voting booths were closed gave him a narrow margin.

Registration in some areas this year is high—in Los Angeles County and in San Diego particularly. Northern California is normally rated liberal and pro-Democratic, southern California an area where Democrats must work hard to win. The actual turnout on Election Day should determine whether Nixon ends up a winner or a loser and Brown gets another term.

THESE VOLUNTEERS at COPE headquarters in Milwaukee keep the telephones busy checking on voter registration. Along with scores of other COPE volunteers, they will follow-up with a get-out-the-vote drive on Election Day. Two telephone headquarters are being used to accommodate all the volunteer women working in the campaign.

Trade Body Lobbyists Active In Ohio GOP Comeback Drive

Cleveland—In this state, swept by the Democrats four years ago as Republicans trapped themselves in a campaign for a so-called "right-to-work" law, the GOP is hoping for a comeback.

The Republican state organization, headed by Ray C. Bliss, is one of the most effective in the country, and helped carry Ohio against Pres. Kennedy in 1960.

Issues in the state campaign this year appear similar to those in Michigan, Colorado and other areas where Democrats won power in the face of a Republican tradition.

An able Democratic Governor, Michael V. DiSalle, had the courage to sponsor tax increases for schools, mental health facilities, old age assistance and other social services. The GOP, having regained blockading power in the legislature in 1960, checked further expansion. Republican campaigners now accuse DiSalle of fostering "hostility" to business and of being a spendthrift.

In addition, a conglomeration of trade association lobbyists known in Columbus as the "third house" of the legislature, was exposed in mid-September as having decided to pour money and effort into an all-out drive to protect Republican control of the Senate, which they regained by a narrow margin two years ago.

Cincinnati Enquirer and Dayton Daily News stories reported simultaneously that the business lobbyists were aiming an all-out effort to defeat three Democratic state senators, another Democratic senate candidate, and State Rep. Ralph Rudd, whose seat is not considered essential to House Republican control but who has voted for liberal proposals.

"It will be a sorry day for the workers of Ohio" if the big business lobbyists can "purge" members of the legislature "who voted for more decent unemployment benefits," commented Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO.

DiSalle's opponent in his campaign for re-election is State Auditor James A. Rhodes, who tried for governor eight years ago and was beaten by the Democratic maverick, Frank Lausche.

Lausche Favored

Lausche, a notorious Democratic "loner" whose remarkable pulling power has kept him in office for many years, is running for U.S. Senate re-election. His Senate record of 67 percent opposition to Kennedy programs reveals why he is frequently given little more than token opposition by the GOP. His Republican opponent, John Marshall Briley, has ample campaign funds but is rated as unlikely to push Lausche out of public life.

Lausche's presence on the ticket, however, lends little help to DiSalle. The governor is countering the Rhodes challenge with one of the most extensive personal campaigns in the state's history, and has visited each of the 88 counties.

DiSalle is concentrating his late campaign in the cities after having received a friendly response in midsummer in normally Republican rural areas. He is making a straight-out issue of what he charges is GOP state legislative subordination to business lobbyists.

New House Seat

Ohio gained one seat in the U.S. House as a result of reapportionment after the 1960 census and it is being contested at large. The Republican nominee, bearer of a famous name, is Robert Taft, Jr., currently majority leader of the Ohio House.

The Democrat is a part-time political dabbler named Richard D. Kennedy (no relation of the President), who emerged winner of an 11-candidate primary contest.

Kennedy managed to get himself disavowed by the Democratic state convention and backed by members of the John Birch Society and right-wing Republicans by trying to strike out pro-civil rights clauses in the state Democratic platform.

DiSalle, among other Democratic leaders, has announced he will not vote for Kennedy.

Democratic Trend Persists in Far West

10 Seats Added

The present lineup of the area in the House shows a slight Democratic margin, 26 to 22, and this seems certain to be increased.

Reapportionment following the 1960 census has added 10 House seats—eight in California and one each in Hawaii and Arizona. Objective observers foresee Democratic victories in five or six of the new California districts, in both the new Hawaii and Arizona districts, and probably small net gains in addition.

The swelling Western population, most spectacular in California but by no means confined here, will exert steadily increasing influence on national affairs. The party split may run as high as 35 Democrats and 23 Republicans after the Nov. 6 election and is expected to balance Republican gains from the gerrymander of House districts in New York and possible Democratic defections on civil rights in the South.

The race between Brown and Nixon is the key gubernatorial contest in the West, and both campaigners are battling with techniques and vigor of a contest on the national scale.

The best guess of observers, two weeks before the election, was that the results depended on the "swing" vote of the so-called independent voters and the number of union members who repeat their 1958 outpouring of ballots for Brown.

In Oregon, Republican Gov. Mark Hatfield has built something of an independent record that is expected to aid his re-election campaign against Democratic Atty-Gen. Robert Y. Thornton.

Republicans in Danger

Two other GOP Governors, William F. Quinn of Hawaii and Edwin Q. Mechem of New Mexico, are rated as in danger of defeat. Democrat John A. Burns was barely defeated by Quinn in 1960. Mechem's victory was even more of the splinter variety; the Democratic candidate is Jack M. Campbell.

Gov. William A. Egan (D) won handsomely in Alaska in 1958, and his only apparent danger is that the current Republican nominee is the strongest GOP vote-getter in the state, Mike Stepovich, who barely fell short of winning a Senate seat four years ago.

In Arizona, incumbent Gov. Paul Fannin (R) is seeking a third term. He is getting an unusually hard battle from the Democratic nominee, Sam Goddard, who points out that Arizona is "the only state that refused federal aid to the schools" and federal aid on juvenile delinquency.

Goddard, former Democratic state chairman, is backed by the State AFL-CIO. The issue is whether conservatism of the Barry Goldwater type, practically invented by the state's junior senator, has run its course.

Democratic Gov. Grant Sawyer of Nevada, running for a second term, won by nearly 60 percent of the vote four years ago. There is no sign that the Republican nominee, Mayor Oran K. Gragson of Las Vegas, can overcome the margin.

Federal Programs Needed:

New Drive Urged To Add More Jobs

Failure of the American economy to reduce the nation's persistently high unemployment rate in 1962 has made it clear that private spending alone will not provide enough push to add the required new jobs, the AFL-CIO has declared.

What is needed urgently, the Dept. of Research asserted in the October issue of the American Federationist, are "government programs and policies which will help to stimulate the economy and help to create more employment opportunities."

Pointing out that Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers estimated in 1961 that 4.8 million additional jobs would be needed by 1963 to get the unemployment rate down to 4 percent—a rate still too high for a full employment economy—the department concluded in a study made for the Labor's Economic Review section of the magazine:

"The necessary pickup has not materialized. Fewer than 1 million new jobs have been added since the beginning of 1961, with the result that over 4 million people remain unemployed.

"If adequate job opportunities are to be made available in the months and years ahead, further action by the government is essential—to spend money for much-needed roads, schools, hospitals and public works; and to adopt fiscal and monetary policies, including lower interest rates, which will help to stimulate economic activity."

Worse than It Looks

Actually, the magazine observed, the unemployment situation in 1962 is much worse than the official figures indicate. While the seasonally adjusted rate has been 5 percent or higher for 58 consecutive months, the average 5.5 percent figure does not include:

- People who are able to find only part-time jobs, though they want to work full time—approximately 2.5 million persons who, if the equivalent figure of 1 million totally unemployed persons were added, would raise the unemployment rate to 6.5 percent instead of 5.5.
- Many jobless workers who are not counted because of the method used to measure unemployment—the jobless figure includes only those "actively seeking work."

It is primarily this situation, the study said, which has been responsible for the failure of the labor force — employed or unemployed—to grow as expected.

Whereas the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1957 forecast a labor force of 74.9 million in 1961, the prediction came short by 700,000. For the full year of 1962, it said, the labor force probably will register no more than 75 million—nearly 1 million less than government estimates made only five years ago.

Compared with other countries, the U.S. growth rate has been lagging behind all nations except Canada. The reason: the economy of the U.S. has not been generating the number of jobs needed to meet our requirements; the labor force is growing and increased productivity makes possible greater output with less labor.

The AFL-CIO researchers said the unemployment problem can best be met through:

- Increased economic growth at an annual rate of at least 5 percent through measures such as a large-scale federal public works program; an income tax cut concentrated among low-wage earners; more effective use of tax, budget and money policies.
- Improved unemployment compensation to benefit the half of the work force not now covered; better benefits, for a longer period, and broader coverage.
- More attention in collective bargaining to scheduling of work and overtime, transfers and layoffs, retraining, and compensation for laid-off workers.
- More action by labor, management, community and government on shortening the work week
- Other measures to combat unemployment due to discrimination because of age, sex or color.

IAM Urges Seizure of Lockheed

The Machinists have called on the government to take over and manage the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. in the national interest until management has reached a fair and equitable settlement with its 36,000 IAM employes.

The takeover request came in a message to Pres. Kennedy from IAM Vice Pres. E. R. White, Long Beach, Calif., and Pres. Tom McNett of IAM District 727, charging that Lockheed is the only one of five major aerospace contractors "openly defying" the contract settlement guidelines laid down by Kennedy and a fact-finding board named to help settle air-space disputes.

Saying that Lockheed management "has no intention" of settling with the union in talks now going on, and that it is a "ward of the government with every dollar of profit coming from the government," the IAM noted it has twice postponed strike deadlines and is reluctant to set another in view of the Cuban emergency.

White and McNett said the IAM has "exhausted all avenues" of peaceful settlement and "there lawfully remains only the strike weapon."

Lockheed-IAM negotiations will move Tuesday from the West Coast to Washington. The main point at issue is a union shop clause, recommended by the fact-finding board and accepted by four other firms, subject to approval by a two-thirds membership vote.

NEW LABOR CENTER at Rutgers University, financed by unions as a part of the university's Institute of Management & Labor Relations, was dedicated at a campus ceremony attended by some 1,700 union members. Those taking part included, left to right, State AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Lewis M. Herrmann; Vice Pres. Milton Weihrauch and Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; New Jersey Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D); Rutgers Pres. Mason W. Gross, and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.).

1,700 Unionists Attend Dedication Of Rutgers Institute's Labor Wing

New Brunswick, N. J.—Free public education in the United States was largely achieved through the effort of the labor movement, an enthusiastic crowd of some 1,700 unionists and their families was told at dedication ceremonies for the labor wing of Rutgers University's Institute of Management & Labor Relations.

The building, believed to be the first of its kind in the United States, was erected at a cost of $650,000 with funds solicited from unions.

Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, one of the main speakers, traced the intertwined history of education and unionism in this country.

"If the labor union movement has a culture and tradition, and I trust it has, it must be preserved by such centers as the one at Rutgers," Carey declared, observing that the labor movement and free public education trace their beginnings to the early 19th century.

He credited a militant unionism with the establishment of free and later compulsory education and emphasized that labor today must campaign for free college education as an extension of the 130-year struggle.

Carey said the center gives promise of bridging the gap between management and labor and predicted that it might become a national center for research in the labor relations-management field. He also called for the construction of similar institutes throughout the country.

Schnitzler Hails Center

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, in a message to the center, hailed the dedication as an event which may "ultimately surpass the first intercollegiate football game in the annals of Rutgers."

Expressing his pride as a native of New Jersey, Schnitzler observed that in bringing about the center, the state AFL-CIO and the state university had "forged a partnership that will long endure to the continuing benefit of both and of all the citizens of New Jersey."

Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey AFL-CIO informed the crowd that the education of union members is essential in the face of mass media which give a distorted picture of unions as "corrupt." The center, he said, must deal with many pressing problems, "including a lack of understanding among some union members of labor's historic battle."

New Jersey Gov. Richard J. Hughes said that the state's future "will depend greatly on our ability to innovate in the field of higher learning" and called the center "a dynamic beginning rather than a culmination of effort." "We see here tangible evidence of labor's concern with the perspectives of education as well as the technicalities of industrial relations," he said.

Vice Pres. Lewis M. Herrmann of the State AFL-CIO, master of ceremonies for the dedication, was cited by Pres. Mason W. Gross of the university as being in large part responsible for the labor wing. Herrmann introduced enabling legislation for the institute as a state senator in 1947 and headed the fund raising committee for the labor wing.

Swedish, Dutch Unionists Attend

Other speakers included U.S. Sen. Clifford P. Case and State Labor Commissioner Raymond Male. Swedish and Dutch labor union heads were among those at the head table.

The institute offers advanced union leadership training, self-study programs, managerial training, research and public education. Eventually, the center will have a three-building complex with management and public wings.

Dr. Irvine L. H. Kerrison, director of development, said the school now is studying the role of women in the labor force, the complexities of mediation, and in-plant medical facilities in New Jersey.

Lawyers, with the cooperation of bar associations, are being trained in contract negotiations and arbitration at the institute.

It is expected that automation, foreign competition, retraining of the work force and the unionizing of white collar workers will be subjects that the institute will study.

Union Cooperation Hailed On Disclosure Reports

Strong praise of organized labor for continuation of its "high standard of cooperation" in administration of the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act has been expressed by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

His statement was made upon release of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports' 'Summary of Operations' for fiscal year 1962.

The summary shows that 5,408 investigations were conducted by the BLMR as a result of complaints or, on a sample basis, to assure that the records required by LMRDA to be maintained did in fact support the reports. Of the 3,174 cases closed during the year, 1,263 indicated no violation, while 1,911 or 60 percent disclosed some deficiency in the reports or other violation of the Act, mostly of a technical nature.

In 96 percent of these violations, however, voluntary compliance was achieved, the secretary said.

More than a quarter-million reports of all types have been filed by unions, employers and consultants since the law was enacted. The bureau has these reports available for public disclosure in Washington and in appropriate area offices throughout the country.

Negro Hirings Up Sharply in Federal Jobs

Opportunities for Negroes in federal employment have improved sharply in the past year, Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, has reported.

The most significant fact revealed in a June survey of government employment, Johnson said, was that the number of Negroes in the middle and upper brackets of Classification Act employes has increased more than four times the overall rate.

"More than half the stepup in jobs for Negroes," Johnson said, "is in positions in grade GS-5 and above. This is a sound demonstration that the government is setting its own house in order in reaching toward the goal of equal employment opportunity without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

Asserting that the survey does not reflect special privileges for Negroes but rather the result of insistence by Pres. Kennedy on hiring and promotions on merit, Johnson said the nation is a long way from full achievement of its goal of equal employment opportunity but has made "remarkable progress."

Size of Vote Seen Decisive In Tight Election Contests

From September's 5.8%:

Jobless Rate Down To 5.5% in October

By Robert B. Cooney

The key seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment declined in October to 5.5 percent—where it has hung most of the year—from September's 5.8 percent, the Labor Dept. has announced.

Unemployment dropped by 218,000 to 3.3 million, according to the summary job report. Ordinarily, there is little change between September and October.

The total labor force — which includes the armed forces—totaled 74.9 million, unchanged from September. The labor force, which has been lagging in its growth rate for over a year, had been expected to grow by about 100,000 over the month. It is 800,000 above a year ago; it was expected to be 1 to 1.2 million higher.

Some observers have speculated that failure of the labor force to reflect proportionately the continual increase in the working-age population indicates some people are not actively seeking work because they feel jobs are not generally available.

The 5.5 percent jobless rate for October means 55 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force are actively seeking work and cannot find it.

The October report showed the adjusted jobless rate for adult women dropped sharply, from 6.1 percent in September to 5.6 percent. The rates for adult men and teenagers were virtually unchanged at 4.5 and 13.3 percent, respectively.

Total employment reached 68.9 million, a high for October. Nonfarm jobs rose seasonally by 315,000 to 63.4 million.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz welcomed the October report as

'62 Profits May Reach New Record

Despite year-long, high and persistent unemployment and a generally sluggish economy, corporate profits are heading for an all-time record high in 1962.

The Wall Street Journal's quarterly report on earnings predicts annual profits after taxes of "near $26 billion" or more than $1 billion higher than the record set in 1959.

Labor economists estimated that changes in depreciation schedules put into effect earlier in the year by the Administration, plus existing depreciation allowances, would produce a cash flow to corporations of about $52 billion after payment of all costs and taxes.

They estimated also that the total amount invested in plant and equipment for the year would fall below the cash flow figure despite a substantial increase in dividend payments.

Cash flow is the amount of re-

Calls Charge 'Unspeakable':

Hartke Attacks GOP 'Politics' Cry on Cuba

Republican leaders have charged Pres. Kennedy with creating the Cuban crisis for political purposes two weeks before the elections and at the same time are claiming that the GOP prodded the President to act "forcefully."

The rash of GOP attacks and charges came as the President cancelled all personal participation in the election campaign and ordered all members of his Cabinet to pull out of any partisan activity on behalf of Democratic candidates.

Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.), chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee, termed the GOP charges "unspeakable," adding that "responsible Republicans must be filled with revulsion."

He warned that the Republicans have a "deep responsibility" not to misuse the Cuban crisis issue in the campaign and urged former Pres. Eisenhower to "give further consideration" to following Kennedy's lead and remove himself from the campaign.

The political charge on the Cuban crisis came first from the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee in its Newsletter dated Oct. 26. The publication declared:

Text of Attack

"The timing of Mr. Kennedy's announcement—just two weeks before a national election—gave it a distinctly political ring. The statement that it was only because the White House had just discovered the existence on Cuba of missiles capable of striking American cities sounded brazenly false inasmuch as this had been known for months."

The GOP committee said there were doubts the President would take a firm position on Cuba because of the "New Frontier pattern of seeking an 'accommodation' with the Communists everywhere else in the world."

Impact of Cuba Crisis Uncertain

By Willard Shelton

Under the shadow of the crisis of Soviet missiles in Cuba the American people will go to the polls Nov. 6 to elect 435 members of the House, 39 members of the Senate and governors in 35 states.

The election results, giving the country and Pres. Kennedy the Congress that will serve the two years leading up to the 1964 presidential campaign, seemed to depend, as usual, on the number of people actually voting.

The composition of the new Congress would substantially determine whether Kennedy could anticipate stronger support for major domestic programs blocked by the conservative coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats in the previous sessions.

The nature of the new Congress —its personalities as well as mere party division—also seemed certain to play a part in relations between the President and the legislators on vital foreign policy issues.

The campaign seemed to many observers marked in a number of states with unusual citizen apathy —although apathy is a disease familiar in off-year elections. Whether the sudden emergence of the crisis with the Soviet Union and Cuba would stir "silent" voters into going to the polls remained an enigma.

The Republicans, who historically have scored gains in the last three decades whenever voter participation was low, seemed hopeful principally of victories at the state

Unanimous NLRB Finds Sears Guilty of Retail Clerks' Charges

The National Labor Relations Board has unanimously held Sears, Roebuck & Co. guilty of unfair labor practices by failure to bargain in good faith in 1960-61 with the Retail Clerks and its Seattle, Wash., Local 1207.

Upholding the findings of Trial Examiner Martin S. Bennett, the full-member board held that Sears interfered with, restrained and coerced its employes in these respects:

- Refusing to meet with a duly designated representative, Murray Plopper of the international union.
- Refusing to put an agreement on sales commissions into a signed contract.
- Refusing, in advance and during negotiations that continued through 30 meetings, to incorporate any agreement on union membership, such as the steward system, into a signed contract.

The board ordered the nationwide retail chain to bargain with "any designated representative" of Local 1207 concerning the provisions of a 1 percent commission program and a union membership program, or any other conditions of employment, and if an understanding is reached, to embody it in a signed agreement.

The board accepted the trial examiner's report that Sears as a matter of national policy had deliberately "obfuscated" and "frustrated" the collective bargaining process.

The record, Bennett asserted in his intermediate report, "well warrants the conclusion" that Eli Dorsey, general counsel for Sears in Seattle, "most probably because he (1) was hamstrung by Sears policy from Chicago and (2) was confronted with the problem of other Seattle department stores, obfuscated the issue and frustrated the collective bargaining process by insisting that even if agreement was reached on these two issues, viz., the 1 percent commission and the membership problem, they could not be placed in a written contract."

The board's decision held that

Productivity Outstripping Factory Pay

American labor productivity has risen faster than factory wages during the past year and a half, Walter W. Heller, chairman of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, has reported. Labor productivity in manufacturing has risen about 6 percent since the low point of the recession in early 1961, while factory wages, including fringe benefits, rose somewhat less, he said.

In an address before the National Association of Business Economists in Washington, he noted that the discrepancy between wages in the United States and those paid abroad has nar-

ORIT Stresses Plight Of Cuba Under Castro

Mexico City—The turn of events easing world tension over Soviet missile bases in Cuba has not resolved the issue of war and peace posed by Soviet domination of the Castro regime, Gen. Sec. Arturo Jauregui of the Inter-American Organization of Workers (ORIT) has declared.

In a telegram to U Thant, Jauregui urged the acting secretary general of the United Nations to keep in mind the plight of the Cuban people during his mission to the island to discuss arrangements for UN verification of the dismantling of the missiles. Jauregui's message said:

"Thanks to Pres. Kennedy and the firmness of the free world as well as your own attitude as head of the United Nations, a terrible conflict seems to have been avoided.

"Yet the fact remains that Cuban people are still enslaved under a totalitarian despotic regime imposed by force. What better evidence of foreign domination over tragic Cuba can there be than the fact that the final decisions about the missile bases were made by a power outside of the Western Hemisphere?

"On behalf of 26 million workers in North and South America freely and voluntarily organized into the Inter-American Organization of Workers, we ask you while you are in Cuba to keep in mind that the Cuban nation is still suffering under the domination of an imperialist power and the Cuban workers lack the basic freedoms guaranteed by the United Nations charter.

"The issue of war and peace in this hemisphere will inevitably remain in doubt so long as Cuba is a Soviet satellite, its destinies decided not by the Cuban people but by a handful of men in Moscow."

Unemployment Declines To Rate of 5.5 Percent showing "a substantial improvement in the economy since January 1961." He pointed out employment is a "record high" for the month and unemployment is at a "three-year low."

"There can be no doubt," Wirtz said in commenting on the economy's performance under the Kennedy Administration, "that the recession we found then is ended and that the nation's economy is moving ahead once again."

He said area redevelopment, manpower training, trade expansion, loans and business tax incentives are programs of a government "which does not believe that recessions and unemployment are inevitable."

"Nevertheless, we have still much work to do to make our economy operate at its full potential," Wirtz said. "While a great improvement in the unemployment situation has taken place, there are still far too many unemployed workers in the nation. We cannot rest in our efforts until the unemployment figure is reduced to the lowest rate possible in a highly mobile and ever-changing economy."

The October job summary showed long-term unemployment —those jobless 15 weeks or longer—totaled 865,000, or about the same as in September. In this group are 450,000 persons who had been out of work for six months or longer.

ILPA Issues Summons to Convention

The official call for the 1962 convention of the Intl. Labor Press Association has been issued by ILPA Pres. Bernard R. Mullady and Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester.

The organization, representing more than 350 publications of the AFL-CIO, the Canadian Labor Congress and their affiliates, will meet Nov. 29 through Dec. 1 at the Sheraton-Cleveland Hotel, Cleveland. The ILPA executive council will meet in Cleveland the day before the convention opens.

This year's theme, "Labor and the Consumer," will be treated in four hour-long workshops featuring such participants as Sidney Margolius, whose "How to Buy" column is carried by many union publications, and Sam Burger, assistant editor of Consumer Reports.

Awards for journalistic excellence in the ILPA's annual competition will be presented at the convention banquet, and the winning publications will be analyzed at another workshop on the final day.

Scheduled as principal speakers are Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., of the Newspaper Guild and AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Wage Hearing Set For Battery Industry

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has set Nov. 19 for a hearing to determine the prevailing minimum wage in the battery industry under the Walsh-Healey Act. The meeting will be held in Labor Dept. headquarters in Washington.

rowed during the past four years. Factory wages in the U.S. have climbed 13.2 percent against 39 percent in West Germany, 30 percent in France and Sweden, 19 percent in Italy and 16 percent in Great Britain, he pointed out.

Living costs have remained more stable in the U.S. than abroad, Heller said. He cited the 4.9 percent rise in American prices since 1958 compared with 20 percent in Japan, 19 percent in France, 10.5 percent in Great Britain, 10 percent in West Germany and 8.5 percent in Italy.

He repeated warnings that the first half of next year could see the economy either catch its "second wind" or slip into a "mild recession." He expected a "good advance" during the last quarter of 1962, but said that the first half of next year would show which way the economy is going.

Documented Charges Filed:

ICFTU Asks United Nations Study Soviet Anti-Semitism

New York—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has asked the United Nations to investigate anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and has furnished the world body with evidence that discrimination against Jews is "part and parcel of government policy" in the USSR.

Irving Brown, ICFTU representative to the UN, called for "an uncompromising, relentless investigation of the repression by the Soviet Union of the rights, guaranteed by the UN Charter, of all men to human dignity and freedom."

In submitting a detailed memorandum of "fully corroborated" charges to the UN Social Committee, Brown declared:

"The free trade union movement has followed with deepening anxiety the ever-expanding program of Soviet anti-Semitism aided, abetted, encouraged and legalized by the Soviet government."

The facts, he said, "add up to a wholesale violation of human rights and persecution of innocent people because of their religious or cultural origin."

Included in the agenda for the UN Social Committee is a discussion of "racial prejudice and national and religious intolerance."

The ICFTU's 5,000-word memorandum charged that Soviet Russia has discriminated against nationality, religious and individual rights of its Jewish citizens. Government-controlled mass communication media are used "to arouse hatred against the Jews," the document charged.

While all persons born of Jewish parents must list their nationality as Jewish in the identification papers each Soviet citizen must carry, virtually all cultural and religious Jewish activity has been forbidden, the ICFTU said.

It cited as examples:

- The liquidation of virtually all remnants of the once flourishing Jewish newspapers, literary journals, theaters and schools.
- The closing by the state of scores of synagogues all over the USSR and the denial of permission to construct new synagogues. In addition, private prayer groups of religious Jews have been dispersed by the state.
- While other religions are permitted to have central organizations and maintain religious academies, no central body is permitted for the Soviet Union's Jewish congregations and only one small academy provides rabbinical training. Likewise, no Hebrew Bible has been published since 1917.
- As a result of a deliberate policy of "exclusion," Jews have "virtually disappeared from positions of major responsibilities" in many fields, especially in the diplomatic service and the Army.
- Nationality quotas have sharply reduced the number of Jews accepted for admission to universities. Their proportion has dropped from 13.5 percent in 1935 to 3.1 percent. "The disappearance of Jews from leadership positions in political life has been striking," it said.
- Newspapers, and especially the provincial press, carry articles attacking Jewish religious customs and institutions and listing the names of persons who follow Jewish religious practices. The attacks on Judaism go far beyond the general anti-religious attitudes fostered by the Soviet government.
- During a five-month period in 1961, six Jewish lay religious leaders in Moscow and Leningrad were sentenced to long prison terms "on spurious charges of espionage," chairmen of congregations in six major cities were deposed and the governing body of the Moscow rabbinical academy—the only one in the USSR—was disbanded.

NLRB Urged to Adopt 3-Year Contract Bar

The AFL-CIO has asked the National Labor Relations Board to extend to three years, from the present two, its limit on the period an existing union contract serves as a bar against another representation election.

In an amicus curiae brief filed with the NLRB, the federation further urged the board to make the change effective immediately, applying it to pending representation cases as well as future cases.

The issue has arisen in three board cases involving petitions for new elections at the end of the second year of three-year contracts. These elections would be permitted under the NLRB's present two-year rule.

In two of the cases, however, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has asked the board to adopt a three-year rule and to deny the representation petitions of the unaffiliated United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Involved are bargaining rights now held by the IBEW at plants of Westinghouse Electric Corp., Staunton, Va., and General Cable Corp., Sanger, Calif.

In the third case, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers holds a three-year contract covering General Cable employes at Tampa, Fla., formerly represented by an unaffiliated union. The IBEW, which once held the contract at the plant, sought recognition when two years of the existing pact had ended, but has since asked that its name be withdrawn from the ballot. The unaffiliated Teamsters have intervened, however, and the NLRB is proceeding with the case.

The board has set Nov. 9 for oral arguments and Nov. 5 as the deadline for filing briefs.

The IUE also advocates the three-year rule and urges its immediate application.

In its brief, the AFL-CIO argues that the present two-year contract bar tends to limit the length of collective bargaining agreements to two years, since a longer contract would be binding for its full term on the existing union but not on an intruding, rival union.

"A rival union can thus appeal to the employes on the basis that it will be free to negotiate immediately for new benefits after two years of a three-year pact are up, while the incumbent union is not," the brief notes.

But contracts of longer duration than two years have advantages to both unions and management in stabilizing relations, and are tending to increase in number, the AFL-CIO brief declares.

In line with this demonstrated preference, the board should lengthen the maximum contract bar period to three years, the federation states.

As to when the new rule should take effect, the AFL-CIO said it does not perceive "any substantial equity which weighs against giving immediate effect" to the change, and pointed out that the existing two-year rule is advantageous only to a raiding union.

OLDTIMER AND NEWCOMER is the dual role of Norman Monroe, left, as he applies for union membership minutes after receiving a pin recognizing his 30 years of service in the District of Columbia Sanitation Dept. Accepting the application card is Warren Morse, business agent for Local 1 of the State, County & Municipal Employes, which has applied for formal recognition as bargaining representative for the department's employes.

Union Editor Gets Manpower Post

James J. Clarke, editor of the Ironworker, official publication of the Iron Workers, has been named assistant for manpower training by H-E-W Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze.

At the same time John W. McCollum was named staff assistant. Both will work under the direction of Under Sec. Ivan N. Nestingen on the training program set up under the Manpower Development & Training Act and the Area Redevelopment Act.

Clarke, with the Iron Workers for the past three years, has been a consultant to the secretary since the Manpower Development & Training Act was enacted last spring.

Shoe Workers Benefit:

Major Gains Won In Joint Bargaining

St. Louis—Pattern-setting contracts have been negotiated here by two AFL-CIO unions with the nation's two largest shoe manufacturers—Intl. Shoe Co., employing some 15,000 workers in four states, and the Brown Shoe Co., with 12,000 employes throughout the Midwest and South.

A joint negotiating committee of the United Shoe Workers and the Boot & Shoe Workers represented the workers and the two-year agreements have been ratified by members of both unions at the plants.

The Intl. Shoe agreement, worth 11.5 cents an hour to the company's employes, was reached with the help of federal mediators just hours before union members in Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri were scheduled to strike.

The settlement which broke the bargaining deadlock provides two annual raises of 3 cents an hour, coupled with higher incentive rates for nearly half the jobs. It provided also:

- A seventh paid holiday, Memorial Day.
- An increase in company-paid hospital benefits from $12 a day to $21 a day.
- A two-step increase in the women's sickness-accident benefit plan to bring them up to the level of benefits provided for male employes.

The company also agreed to the union's request for a joint study of the pension plan with the aim of reducing the voluntary retirement age to 62, with no loss of benefits, and liberalizing the life insurance plan for early retirees.

The joint negotiating committee included Pres. George Fecteau and National Dir. Russell Taylor of the United Shoe Workers; Pres. John Mara, Vice Pres. J. W. McGonigal and Regional Dir. Joseph Esselman of the Boot & Shoe Workers, and local presidents from both unions.

The traditional pattern-setting role of Intl. Shoe in industry negotiations was confirmed when a similar agreement was reached and ratified with the Brown Shoe Co., second largest in the industry. In addition to the general wage increases, piece-rates on the lowest-rated incentive jobs were raised 5 percent in two steps.

The United Shoe Workers currently are in negotiations with the Florsheim Shoe Co. in Chicago, covering 2,000 members, and with two employer associations in New York representing 100 firms with some 10,000 employes. The Boot & Shoe Workers have negotiations coming up later this year with a number of major employers.

TENANTS OF BIG SIX TOWERS will have a panoramic view of Manhattan and Queens when New York's newest union-backed housing development is ready for occupancy. Seven buildings, 15 to 18 stories high, will have 981 suites in garden type apartments separated by grass plots, play space and parking areas. New York Typographical Local 6, known to union men as "Big Six," and the city of New York are partners in the $16 million undertaking. The photo shows how construction has progressed.

Applications Deluge 'Big 6' Housing Units

New York—More than 52,000 applications have been received for the 981 apartment units that Typographical Local 6 and the city of New York are building in Queens.

The $16 million housing development, covering six city blocks in the heart of the borough, will consist of seven buildings, each 15 to 18 stories high. Called Big Six Towers, it will be a limited-profit development permitted by state law and operated by I. D. Robbins for the union, under supervision of the city's Housing & Redevelopment Board.

All the suites will be cooperatively-owned at $550 a room, and tenants will pay a monthly carrying charge of $21 a room. Plans call for 208 three-bedroom suites, 472 with two bedrooms, 270 with one, and 31 efficiency-type suites. Of the 981 units, 755 will be provided with private balconies.

Frederick G. Frost, Jr., & Associates, architects, cite these unusual features of the development:

The buildings will cover less than 13 percent of the 11-acre site.

Usable ground area is greater than the 13 percent figure would indicate because the upper stories are cantilevered in such a way that they overhang the ground space.

Plans call for an X-shaped building with eight cross-ventilated apartments per floor; circular sitting and play areas; and a continuous promenade mall attractively landscaped, with adequate space for traffic within the community.

The ground floor of each building will be reserved for entrance lobbies, offices and community rooms. Outdoor parking spaces will be provided in a "decentralized" plan.

Strikers Mark Anniversary In Jamestown

Jamestown, N. Y.—Striking members of the Furniture Workers observed the first anniversary of their strike against the Jamestown Sterling Corp. here with a picket line demonstration joined by workers from other AFL-CIO unions in the area.

"We've Only Just Begun to Fight," and "The First Year Is Always the Hardest," said signs carried by stout-hearted workers who have vowed to win the strike "no matter how long it takes."

At the demonstration, pickets expressed their gratitude to unions and union members who have helped them in response to an appeal in their behalf made at the recent convention of the New York State AFL-CIO.

A major feature of the strike has been a concerted drive by the Furniture Workers, assisted by the AFL-CIO Union Label Trades Dept., to educate the public not to buy Jamestown Sterling furniture made by strikebreakers.

Firm Attacked Rockefeller

The strike began Oct. 3, 1961, when management failed to agree on terms for a beginning contract.

A panel appointed during the strike by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) made settlement recommendations which the union agreed to accept. The company rejected them, however, in what UFWA called a "harshly-worded attack" on Rockefeller. The state AFL-CIO has asked the governor to help implement the recommendations made by the board he appointed.

Cross Indicted On Charge of Embezzlement

A federal grand jury has indicted James G. Cross, former president of a union expelled from the AFL-CIO, on charges of embezzling $70,000 in union funds as part of an attempt to "fix" a 1959 perjury trial. Cross was acquitted on a directed verdict of the perjury charge.

Cross, who was president of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers when the AFL-CIO expelled it in 1957 and set up the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, was accused of first embezzling $35,000 in the perjury trial conspiracy and then, in 1960, embezzling another $35,000 in an effort to conceal the original theft.

The indictment, returned in Washington, D. C., also named five other former union officials and a New York lawyer in the alleged conspiracy.

Two Aerospace Groups Turn Down Union Shop

Aerospace workers, by majorities ranging from 59.8 to 54.2 percent, voted in favor of union shop clauses at North American Aviation, Inc., and General Dynamics-Convair plants but the result fell short of the 66.67 percent mandated by new contract agreements.

The result left the Auto Workers at North American and the Machinists at Convair with maintenance of membership clauses requiring present members to retain membership during the term of the contract, but did not reduce the determination of the two unions to seek union shop clauses in aerospace negotiations. The IAM still is negotiating with the Boeing Co. and Lockheed Aircraft Co. Previously Douglas Aircraft had agreed to an agency shop contract.

The union security issue was a major one in this year's negotiations. A special panel named by Pres. Kennedy to head off strikes in the industry had recommended that the companies agree to accept union shop clauses if workers approved the proposal by a two-thirds vote in secret-ballot elections supervised by the National Labor Relations Board.

First to vote were UAW members at North American. With 35,029 workers eligible, the vote was 19,232 in favor, 12,899 opposed. A union spokesman cited as one major obstacle the problem of explaining the union shop to new employes—17,000 in two years.

IAM members voted next at Convair. With 19,392 eligibles, the vote was 9,268-7,822. Here again, observers said, there are thousands of young workers, many without previous work experience.

Employes of Ryan Aeronautical Co., where the UAW has the contract, voted on the union shop Nov. 1. The result will be announced when challenges are disposed of.

Meanwhile the U.S. Mediation Service continued efforts to get an agreement between the IAM and Lockheed, which has been unwilling to let its employes vote in union shop elections. Labor and management negotiators at Boeing scheduled a meeting Nov. 1 with a presidential fact-finding board.

Appeals Court Upsets Rail Entrance Picketing

New York—A 2-1 decision by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here has upset a National Labor Relations Board ruling upholding the right of a union to picket a railroad entrance to a struck plant.

Although the decision dealt with a 1960 incident during a Steelworkers strike against the Carrier Corp., its significance stretches into the broad area of court interpretation of Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Act provisions dealing with "secondary" picketing.

Chief Judge J. Edward Lumbard dissented from the decision and both the Steelworkers and the NLRB have announced they will ask the full circuit court to rehear the case. Union attorneys also said that if a rehearing is denied, the Supreme Court will be asked to review the case.

During the Carrier strike, the union placed pickets at tracks entering the plant gates along a narrow right-of-way owned by the New York Central. Train crews refused to enter the struck premises, and railroad supervisory officials were brought in to make deliveries and pickups at the plant site.

The picketing, management contended, was illegal activity affecting an employer not directly involved in a labor dispute.

The union and the NLRB contended that the situation was analagous to clearly permissible picketing which results in truck drivers refusing to make deliveries to a struck plant, and that the ownership of the railroad tracks did not change the situation.

They argued that a 1961 Supreme Court decision, involving picketing during a General Electric Co. strike, made it evident that a union may picket a gate not used by company employes in order to seek to prevent the company from maintaining normal operations during a strike.

In the GE case, the separate plant entrance was used by contracted maintenance employes.

The appellate court decision, written by Judge Sterry R. Waterman, asserted there was no directly guiding precedent in the case. The opinion ruled that picketing must be directed at employes of the company and must be conducted so as to minimize its impact on "neutral" employes.

The third judge hearing the case, Thomas W. Swan, did not sign the opinion but concurred in the result. Swan, now retired from full-time service on the bench, was assigned to the case under procedure permitting such voluntary service.

Sears, Roebuck Found Guilty of NLRB Charges

this constituted failure to bargain within the meaning of two sections of the law, and also found the firm guilty of violations in two other cases complained of by the union.

The board rejected the union's charge that Sears fired one of its salesmen, Jack Hays, for union activities.

Local 1207 has represented Seattle employes of Sears since 1940, and its last contract expired May 15, 1960. Previously the firm had announced it was withdrawing from participation in the steward system but was willing to inform new employes that the union was the recognized bargaining agent.

Hearings conducted by Bennett produced testimony that Sears management "in Chicago" objected to Plopper's presence at negotiations and said it would be a mistake "in view of the existing boycott of Sears by the international union."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted in 1960 to back a boycott by the Retail Clerks of Sears products until its anti-union bargaining policy is changed.

Just before the NLRB decision was issued, an arbitrator found Sears guilty of a willful violation of its contract with Local 1207, and ordered it to pay more than $600 in damages and sustained wage claims of individual employes.

ANNUAL PEACE AWARD of the Catholic Association for Intl. Peace was presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a luncheon in New York by Dr. William O'Brien (right), president of the association and director of the Institute for Foreign Policy at Georgetown University, Washington.

Catholic Peace Group Gives Award to Meany

New York—The American trade union movement recognizes that it has "a responsibility to workers throughout the world," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared at a luncheon in his honor given by the Catholic Association for Intl. Peace.

The association presented its 1962 peace award to Meany, honoring him as "an American whose outstanding achievements have helped further the Christian principles of justice and charity in international life."

Meany told the luncheon guests that he accepted the award as representative of the American trade union movement rather than as a personal honor.

In a telegram to the luncheon, Pres. Kennedy called Meany "one of our country's distinguished ambassadors for peace."

Meany has "led American trade unionism during the most critical times in our history," the President asserted. "Because of his leadership, a strong link has been forged between American labor and the free world."

Meany has been a partisan for labor, Kennedy noted, and "also a partisan for peace and freedom. This has been the work of a lifetime of the man you honor today. I am delighted to join my fellow Americans in congratulating him."

Other congratulatory messages came from New York Mayor Robert F. Wagner, New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and others.

Meany himself cited Samuel Gompers, William Green and Matthew Woll, among early leaders, and David Dubinsky, Joseph A. Beirne and George M. Harrison of the present day as among labor leaders who have made important contributions to the furthering of world peace.

Meany noted that Gompers, six weeks after the start of World War I, introduced a resolution at the 1914 AFL convention in Philadelphia spelling out his philosophy on peace. The resolution asserted that when the war is ended "some sort of international instrumentality should then . . . look into the differences in the economic condition of peoples over the world with the idea of closing the gap between those who have plenty and those who have little."

Meany pointed out that this philosophy led to the establishment of the Intl. Labor Organization.

Today, he said, labor is carrying on its principles of international cooperation through such institutions as the American Institute for Free Labor Development for Latin American workers, and labor schools set up by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the AFL-CIO in Uganda and Ghana.

"All these things represent a basic American philosophy," Meany declared, "a philosophy that has its basis in the Declaration of Independence, in the idea that there is a Supreme Being, in the belief that the dignity of the individual is far more important than the power of a great state."

Welfare Local Wins Raises, Caseload Cut

New York—Substantial pay increases were won by social workers and other employes of this city's Dept. of Welfare in an agreement which averted a scheduled strike by Local 371 of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Nearly 2,000 union members voted overwhelmingly to accept the city's "final offer" which provides pay boosts ranging from $540 to $600 in a two-year agreement. The union also won a 20 percent reduction in case loads for social investigators.

On the eve of the strike deadline, the union and the city had agreed on the salary increases for the social workers but were deadlocked over wage increases for clerical employes and homemakers. The way was cleared for a settlement when the city and the union agreed to submit the unresolved issues to arbitration.

Greatest Rise in 4 Years:

Cost of Living Index Jumps; Labor Dept. Sees No 'Trend'

The government's Consumer Price Index rose six-tenths of 1 percent from August to September—its biggest jump in more than four years—but a Labor Dept. spokesman said the increase signaled no new price "takeoff."

The CPI for September registered a record 106.1 as computed against the base of 100 representing average prices in the 1957-59 period. This means that selected goods and services costing $10 about five years ago now cost the consumer $10.61.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics attributed the sharp increase for the month, which put the index 1.4 percent higher than its level a year ago, chiefly to big price rises for meat, eggs, clothing and gasoline.

BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague, noting that a rise of this size might lead to the question of whether a new price jump was in prospect, declared: "I can safely answer no, it is not."

Clague said he expected prices to level off in October, or perhaps even decline.

He also emphasized that the September increase bore no relation to the crisis over Cuba, since the data were collected before the emergency. With food in abundance, he said he did not expect the crisis to lead to excessive stockpiling and a further rise in prices "unless something more happens."

In a speech to the National Association of Business Economists, Dr. Walter H. Heller also discounted the significance of the sharp jump, asserting that such increases "have to be put in a comparative setting."

Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, noted that in recent years prices have been rising faster in Japan and all Western European nations than in the United States. He noted, too, that labor costs since the low point of the 1960-61 recession have risen less than in any comparable period following other post-war recessions.

The September increase in the CPI was the largest since March 1958, when the index went up seven-tenths of 1 percent. Clague said that half of last month's rise came from higher food prices, which rose a full percentage point. Biggest factors, he said, were a seasonal increase in the price of eggs and the withholding of livestock from markets by midwestern farmers. The National Farmers Organization called a recess in its "meat" strike Oct. 3, and Clague noted that meat prices have since dropped back toward their August level.

Price rises in apparel, up a full 2 percent, and gasoline, up 3.8 percent, also helped kick up the index. The Labor Dept. said the increase for clothing exceeded the seasonal rise that occurs when stores introduce fall and winter clothing lines. It noted that prices of women's and girls' clothing fell off more than usual last January and that the recovery was also proceeding at an unusual pace.

The September rise in the index will mean pay increases of 1 to 3 cents an hour for nearly 60,000 workers covered by contract escalator clauses in the auto industry.

U. S. Seen Still Engaged In Struggle for Freedom

The United States, as well as Africa, is engaged in an "unfinished struggle for freedom," Maida Springer, AFL-CIO international representative, told participants in a two-day Africa Institute held at American University in Washington, D. C. Students and professors from 20 colleges took part in the program.

Mrs. Springer, addressing a dinner session of the institute, reminded the group that the United States, too, is a former colony which was once considered by many in the Old World to be backward and incapable of self-government.

Speaking of the continuing battle for freedom, the AFL-CIO representative said attempts to prevent James Meredith from entering the University of Mississippi posed "perhaps the gravest constitutional crisis we have known since the Civil War." She noted that the federal government had mobilized thousands of troops "to protect the rights of a single citizen," and added:

"Our government's prompt action to safeguard the rights of this young American was a reassurance to those of us who often become discouraged by continued evidence of irrational racism."

Women, in both the United States and Africa, have played a pioneering role in social progress, Mrs. Springer noted.

"It is no accident," she said, "that Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina — anti-labor, anti-Negro states—are states in which women are denied the right to serve on juries.

"The unfinished struggle for freedom has many facets, and the complete emancipation of women is a part of this whole, not only in America but worldwide."

She told the group, including students from a number of new African nations, that "human history shows that the struggle for human freedom and dignity is not finished when national independence is achieved."

"If anything," she emphasized, "it just begins."

Fired Unionists To Get Jobs Back

Boston — Two members of the Boot & Shoe Workers, fired more than two and a half years ago for trying to organize the Bangor Shoe Co. at Bangor, Me., have been ordered reinstated with full seniority and back pay estimated at about $13,000 each.

The reinstatement order of the National Labor Relations Board had been challenged by the company but the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Oct. 24 upheld the NLRB decision, Brad Hamilton, the union's New England regional director, announced.

PROBLEMS OF AFRICA'S "unfinished struggle for freedom" were themes of a two-day institute at American University. Maida Springer, AFL-CIO international representative, was one of the featured speakers. Left to right: Robert Zwinoira of Southern Rhodesia; Mrs. Springer; Vernon McKay, Johns Hopkins University; and Alphonce Okuku, Kenya.

Labor Gives a Hand to Young Africans

For the second year in a row, AFL-CIO unions have helped provide summer jobs for African students studying at American colleges. For many of these students, living on bare subsistence allowances during the school year, employment during the summer months is essential if they are to continue their education.

With the help of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, a number of students found temporary jobs in shops under union contract and others were employed directly in union offices.

Pictured here is a cross-section of the young Africans who worked during the summer in union headquarters—performing useful services for the U.S. labor movement, learning at first hand of an important aspect of American life, and bringing to their co-workers a vivid realization of the common aspirations of people the world over.

HOME FOR Lucretia Babin is the new nation of Sierra Leone. She points it out on the map to Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, where she was employed last summer.

A VISITOR from Tanganyika, C. R. Tamibo, is shown around a Seafarers hall by Alphonce Okuku of Kenya, employed by the SIU under the AFL-CIO Summer Placement Program.

SUMMER JOB for P. J. Joshi, center, born in India and living in Kenya, was with the National Maritime Union. He is shown with NMU Rep. Robert Nesbitt, left, and Assistant Research Dir. Solon DeLeon at union headquarters in New York City.

AFL-CIO ITSELF employed three African students, Harrison Nwozo and Julius Anamalechi of Nigeria, and Violet Lewis of Sierra Leone. With them are federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (left) and Intl. Rep. Harry Goldberg.

WORKING WITH Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters is Danielette Nelson, a student from Liberia. Thirty-four national and international unions employed African students last summer and had high praise for the ability of the young men and women.

Election Day, 1962

THE POLITICAL REALITY of the 1962 congressional elections is that, in all probability, a minority of the population of voting age will decide the outcome.

In the 10 previous midyear elections dating back to 1922, the percentage of adult citizens participating has never exceeded 50 percent. In the last three off-year contests the participation rate ranged from 41.6 percent in 1950 to 43.4 percent in 1958.

The nation has not done much better in presidential elections. In the 11 presidential contests since 1920 a 60 percent or better participation rate has been achieved only three times, 1952, 1956 and 1960.

If a turnout of as high as 45 percent can be obtained this Nov. 6 and the results bear out the widely predicted close contests, then as little as 23 percent of the population of voting age may determine the complexion of the 88th Congress and the governors of a half-dozen key and populous states.

The communications media of the nation at all levels, national and community organizations, political parties and organized labor have hammered away incessantly in the past six months, and for many years previously, on the need to register and vote if our democratic form of government is to remain vigorous and effective. Despite these efforts, the record shows that only a minority of the voting age population marks ballots or turns voting machine levers on Election Day.

THE INCREDIBLY LOW voter participation in the southern states is part of the answer, but not all of it. In the 1958 midterm elections the six lowest voter participation states were in the South, ranging from a 5.2 percent turnout in Mississippi to 14.5 percent in Texas.

But even the high-scoring states did not cover themselves with glory. The six highest in the 1958 balloting ranged from Connecticut with 66.1 percent to Wyoming with 61.2 percent.

The answer to the apathetic response of the electorate lies in penetrating the average voter's "why bother" attitude. This is compounded of equal parts of cynicism perpetrated by the "politics is a dirty business" viewpoint, an essential failure to debate and discuss the basic issues in a campaign and the emphasis on the personality and glamor of the candidates.

There is also a group in American political life that intrinsically distrusts the people, that distrusts the widest possible participation in political decisions, that prefers to operate in the context of a narrow but predictable electorate.

THERE ARE no easy answers, only a determination to keep hammering away at the register-and-vote campaign, to perfect more effective precinct and ward communication and organization so that every possible voter is personally contacted on the need to participate in democracy's decisions.

And there is the continuing struggle to pierce the smog of cynicism and materialism and to make clear to every American that his every decision, his every action, is affected by political decisions made by men and women elected by the voters.

Peace and security, full employment, social progress and civil rights—the major problems and challenges of our times—are political problems. Their solutions are in the hands of the voters and the persons they choose to represent them.

Your Key to Democracy

We're Still Trailing:

Other Democracies Lead U.S. In Voters Who Actually Vote

DESPITE A GROWTH in the size of the American vote which follows the growth of the country, the United States continues to lag behind other democracies in the proportion of eligible voters who actually go to the polls.

This is particularly true in mid-term elections when the vote falls behind the quadrennial presidential level. In 1958, the most recent mid-term election, only 45,655,000 people voted for members of the U.S. House—43.4 percent of the potentially eligible voters.

If, in 1962, the same proportion were to vote, 47,600,000 persons would vote for members of the House this Nov. 6. But even that relatively low figure might not be achieved if the numerous reports of unusual voter apathy prove to be correct.

Voting percentages in other recent mid-term elections were 42.5 percent in 1954, 41.6 percent in 1950. (Figures for mid-term elections always apply to votes for the House since House candidates are up in every district.)

Presidential vote percentages are substantially higher than the mid-term levels, but still below levels in other countries. An all-time record was set in 1960 when 63.8 percent of the eligible voters—68,836,385 in number—cast ballots in the Kennedy-Nixon race. The vote for House members in 1960 was 64,124,310—59.4 percent of the eligible total.

The previous high presidential year vote participation figure was hit in 1952, when 61,551,919 voters—63 percent—went to the polls in the Eisenhower-Stevenson contest. In 1956 presidential voting participation dipped to 60.4 percent.

By contrast, elections during the last four years in the democracies of Western Europe have produced these percentages: Great Britain, 78.7 percent; Italy, 93.7 percent; West Germany, 87.7 percent; Norway, 79.1 percent; Switzerland, 68.5 percent.

A number of factors based in U.S. law and custom contribute to the country's relatively low voter turnout, adding to the drop-off from pure voter ignorance and apathy.

In the south, many states have virtually barred Negroes from voting. Literacy tests, the poll tax and other legal devices have been used. Congress this year approved a constitutional amendment barring the poll tax in federal elections and primaries. If ratified by three-fourths of the states within seven years, it will become the 24th Amendment.

Negroes voted for the first time in 40 years in Louisiana's East Carroll Parish (county) after a U.S. district judge certified 26 Negroes as qualified to vote under the 1960 Civil Rights Act. An Administration bill to make anyone with a sixth grade education eligible to pass a literacy test for voting in federal elections was shelved May 15 after a southern filibuster.

Anti-Negro terrorism as a result of registration drives prompted Pres. Kennedy to say on Sept. 21: "I don't know any more outrageous action which I have seen . . . than the burning of a church" in Georgia because of Negro efforts to register. The President said "the right to vote is very basic. If we are going to neglect that right, then all of our talk about freedom is hollow."

Millions of persons included in the Census Bureau's estimate of citizens of voting age are barred from voting simply because they have moved and cannot meet residency requirements which range up to two years in some states.

THE AMERICAN Heritage Foundation said that in the past six months there have been 800,000 new brides who are unable to vote because their names have been changed and they have to re-register. Census Bureau Dir. Richard M. Scammon estimated in 1960 that 13 million of the supposedly eligible voters were "legally disqualified."

Other major reasons for involuntary non-voting:

- The insane, convicts and idiots are prohibited from voting.
- In some states, paupers, persons in a poor house or prison, or those who have been disenfranchised because of corrupt election practices, as well as vagrants and those who have engaged in duels, cannot vote.
- Residents of the District of Columbia do not elect a member of the House, although residents may now vote for President.
- Residents of federally owned property, regardless of location, are voteless.
- Members of the armed forces can vote only with some difficulty.

Morgan Says:

Kennedy Is Given High Mark For Handling of Cuban Crisis

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

THERE IS A TENDENCY in responsible Washington quarters, both diplomatic and domestic, to give Pres. Kennedy very high marks for his handling of the Cuban crisis. In the action which climaxed in the remarkable Soviet agreement to defuse, in effect, their offensive missile threat within the Western Hemisphere there was a blend of courage, statesmanship, teamwork and foresighted attention to detail not often seen in any world capital.

Morgan

This cool, dedicated functioning of the Administration high command undoubtedly was more felicitous in its result than the handling of the Bay of Pigs invasion by the same principals was ruinous. And the stakes were far, far higher, involving as they did a direct power confrontation between Washington and Moscow.

Perhaps this impressive performance could not have come at a more opportune time for the President himself. An uncomfortable feeling had been gaining ground in Congress, in the country, in NATO and elsewhere that for all his brightness and vigor, Mr. Kennedy might not be so decisive in the clutch as the awful responsibilities of world leadership demanded.

Bitterly unfair as they were, the taunting signs mocking the President on his barnstorming rallies with the admonition of "less profile and more courage" left corrosions of doubt. But today those misgivings are stripped away. The President's firmness has given him new stature within the country, within the Western Alliance and, most important of all, in Red Square, Moscow.

This conceivably could change the whole psychological atmosphere and balance of power in the cold war. As the Administration views the situation there is no gloating but much caution in its attitude.

How does a government as massive as ours cope with a crisis? Inevitably the main burden falls on a few men. In this case it was a baker's dozen—the President, Vice Pres. Johnson, Sec. of State Rusk, Defense Sec. McNamara, Treasury Sec. Dillon, Atty.-Gen. Kennedy, Gen. Taylor, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, CIA head John McCone, Deputy Defense Sec. Gilpatric, Under-Sec. of State George Ball, Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson, Soviet affairs expert; and chief presidential advisers McGeorge Bundy and Theodore Sorensen.

Most of these men met twice a day at the White House from the day the President saw photographic proof of offensive Soviet missile bases in Cuba. From that it was clear major counter-action was called for. After the President abruptly returned from Chicago the decision for a "selective quarantine" had emerged in a kind of synthesis of agreement that did not bar wide discussion but was not bruised by any internal debate on "hard" versus "soft" lines.

What was functioning was a kind of war cabinet with Bundy, the attorney general and McNamara the inner cog of it. A strong feeling of camaraderie developed along with a sort of sixth sense in which one secretary anticipated another's needs. The President himself dominated the scene, demanding and swiftly ingesting every scrap of salient intelligence.

Yet important details were not overlooked. Mr. Kennedy remembered that Charles Bohlen, the new U.S. ambassador to France, was in mid-Atlantic aboard a liner. He had to be called and guardedly briefed. Dillon, due at a hemisphere economic conference in Mexico City, had to know the government's probable decision in advance. Ex-Sec. of State Dean Acheson was flown to London with reconnaissance photos and advance copies of the President's broadcast to fill in the British, on to Paris to brief NATO and de Gaulle, then to Bonn to see Adenauer. John McCloy, banker and disarmament expert, was summoned from a business trip in Germany to bolster Adlai Stevenson at the United Nations, where McCloy's own contacts were also wide and respected.

HISTORY MAY CRITICIZE the Administration's evasiveness about charges of the Soviet missile build-up in Cuba days, even weeks, before it was officially revealed. The government's answer, logical but not totally convincing, was that earlier intelligence was not firm and that secrecy was vital to make our counter-move a full surprise to the Soviets. Actually a handful of correspondents had the main thrust of the story some hours before the President spoke but withheld it at White House request.

News Sec. Salinger meanwhile had coordinated the information offices of State, Defense and USIA. Special attention was paid to the needs of foreign correspondents whose dispatches might critically affect reaction. A score of congressional leaders was summoned from their campaigns for an 11th hour briefing, the diplomatic corps got some advance backgrounding at State and then the President revealed to the world his decision which, six days later, was crowned with success.

And this was the operation which the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, in its wisdom, had characterized in the midst of it as a "brazenly false" vote-getting maneuver. Khrushchev, apparently, believed it, even if some Americans did not.

Labor News Conference:

Staunch West Berlin Hailed for 'Spine and Spark' in Face of Reds

ANYONE WHO KNOWS communism at first hand hates it and is ready to react against it, an AFL-CIO representative just back from Berlin said in describing the "spine and the spark" of West Berliners in the face of the Communist threat.

Harry W. Flannery, radio co-ordinator for the AFL-CIO, observed in a network radio interview over the Mutual Broadcasting System that the West Berliners are on an "island" surrounded by Communists and have seen their relatives and friends risk death to flee the eastern sector.

Hence, he said, "they are bound to have spine; they are bound to be inflamed against communism as no other people almost anywhere else in the world."

Flannery, who was a network correspondent in Berlin during and after World War II, was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference, by Alex Uhl of Press Associates, Inc., and John Herling of the National Newspaper Syndicate.

He agreed with West Berlin Mayor Willi Brandt that if the people of East Germany had a chance to express themselves they would vote against communism and pointed out that vast numbers of refugees who have fled from behind the wall already have "voted with their feet."

FLANNERY, the author of "Assignment to Berlin," said that on his recent trip he found prosperity and high morale in Free Germany, even though the economy has leveled off to a growth rate of about 3 percent from past highs of 6 or 8 percent.

"They don't seem to be alarmed about this," he commented, recalling interviews with German political, labor and business leaders. "They figure that this will continue to mean there is full employment."

He lauded the trade union movement for playing a key role in preserving the economy of the city and contributing to the staunch spirit of its citizens.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE McCARTHY-TYPE campaign being operated for former Vice Pres. Nixon's campaign for governor in California has its parallel, surprisingly, in behalf of Republican Sen. Thruston B. Morton in Kentucky. In his case it is peculiarly repelling.

The Lexington, Ky., Herald on Oct. 11 denounced a so-called Operation Alert in which GOP speakers were sent into the state's 120 counties, with "uniform material" furnished them, to "tear down the character" of Morton's Democratic rival for the Senate, Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt.

Some of the speakers, the Herald remarked, "must have approached their task with a certain amount of revulsion." Some were "undoubtedly overcome by nausea after reading the material handed them." Still, they made the speeches. The Louisville Courier-Journal, discussing the same saturation assault, said the smear was intended to make it appear that Wyatt is a "far-out left winger" whose election "would endanger the nation's security."

Weeks earlier, the Courier-Journal had exposed the deliberate fake of a quotation from its own news columns in a pamphlet slyly titled "The Danger of the ADA and Wilson Wyatt," handed out at the Kentucky State Fair in the "Thruston Morton booth."

This precious document began with a sentence purporting to quote the newspaper's longtime Washington correspondent, Robert L. Riggs, as having written that the name of Americans for Democratic Action was a "synonym" for "Communist sympathizer." Riggs had actually written the exact opposite—that "enemies" had reversed the facts about the anti-Communist organization in "one of the great image-making jobs" of our time.

MORTON IS a former assistant secretary of state. He is a man of intellect and national repute, whether an observer agrees with his domestic political viewpoints or not. He is presumed to have a grip on the fundamental decencies of our kind of political democracy.

What are we to think when Morton must be reproached in print by the Lexington Herald for "cheap, sinister, gutter-type campaigning" in which on television he has assailed communism and "by innuendo and fast talking endeavored to give the impression" that Wyatt personally somehow "subscribed to some of the tenets of communism"?

As for former Vice Pres. Nixon in California, the Democrats have now obtained court restrainers against distribution of three "documents" his people have been circulating against Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Nixon's obstacle to political resuscitation.

Hundreds of thousands previously had been flooded out to voters, complete with "cropped" pictures and "unrelated" quotations intended to make it appear that Brown, a decent citizen with a fine public record, was cringing to Khrushchev, was "applauding" alleged left-wingers. In the latter case, the New York Times reported, the picture used was one of Brown greeting "a little girl suffering from poliomyelitis" and the photograph was "trimmed to eliminate the girl."

THE LATE SPEAKER SAM RAYBURN, whose tolerance of political foibles was broad, occasionally arose on bipartisan occasions in the sick McCarthy era to warn that decent Democrats could not forever endure the imputations of half-treason, the traducings, that the then senator from Wisconsin had made his sad, soiled stock in trade.

Mr. Sam spoke very firmly on these intimate occasions, and he got no argument from a Republican of equal stature who was then his party's House leader, Joseph W. Martin of Massachusetts. Martin is an honorable man in his own right and he understood exactly what Speaker Rayburn meant when he warned, "Our backs are getting very sore." They respected each other as Americans of differing party affiliation should.

Exaggeration, mounting ambition, the burning desire to win, the overstatement in the heat of a campaign—all of these are understandable. The campaign deliberately founded on known distortions of facts, on personal slander, is not, and it does not deserve to win, in any state, at any time.

THE CHALLENGE of the bulldozer to city dwellers, and particularly to aging persons dislocated by construction projects, was outlined by Boris Shishkin (right), secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, in testimony before a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.).

How to Buy:

High-Pressure Dance Lessons California Promotion Scandal

By Sidney Margolius

THE PERSISTENT high-pressure promotion of dancing lessons now has erupted into a statewide scandal in California. As in Missouri, New York and other states, California lawmen found that some studios have induced people to sign contracts amounting to as much as $10,000 for "lifetime" dance lessons.

In Santa Barbara, State Atty. Gen. Stanley Mosk said, such long-term contracts may have extracted over $100,000 from local would-be dancers. California authorities have served investigative subpoenas on dance studios in Oakland, Sacramento, Pasadena and Glendale, calling on them to produce their records of sales and fees charged.

Both the Arthur Murray and Fred Astaire organizations have claimed that they are not responsible for any high-pressure selling by local studios bearing their names, since they merely franchise the local operations.

However, one investigator who made a nationwide study of dance studios, told me that the Murrays set quotas which the franchise-holders must meet, and also put pressure on them by sales contests and other devices. The studios in turn put pressures on their "dance analysts" and instructors to push students' long-term contracts, and pay the salespeople extra commissions on such contracts.

A St. Louis grand jury charged that "Arthur and Kathryn Murray are constantly putting pressure on their local outlets to sell . . . (They) send voluminous printed sales material to the St. Louis studio 'educating' the St. Louis instructors in the 'art of selling.' These materials encourage the use of emotional high-pressure pitchmanship . . . ".

One investigator reported that an Arthur Murray manual advises salesmen:

"It is time to show that the emotional problem that brought your student to the school can be smoothly solved with the magic possession of the dancing skill that you have the power to impart. That means that you must know your student's needs, his emotional reasons, his secret desires and personal problems so that you can prove the services you have to render can iron out his difficulties."

THE GRAND JURY invited the Murrays to testify, but they said they could not because of previous commitments. They answered, as they had to a Federal Trade Commission complaint against them, that individual employes or studios "may have engaged in isolated practices not approved by the organization, but when reported, these isolated practices have been corrected."

Let's make it clear here that this report is not intended to criticize all dance studios. Various authorities say that there are many that do not use the high-pressure tactics questioned by the law-enforcement agencies.

But even the more ethical commercial studios charge much more than anyone who wants to learn to dance usually needs to pay. Local adult-educational programs and often other community organizations offer dance instruction for adult groups at very low prices.

Some of the long-term contracts sold by high-pressure methods are shockers. One investigator found that a Boston mill worker signed $12,000 worth of contracts with a Fred Astaire studio. She not only spent all her savings but gave the studio manager a deed to her home. In Oklahoma City, three dance-studio promoters were charged by the county attorney with persuading an elderly widow to part with $33,000 in cash and property for lessons.

One young school teacher in St. Louis testified that she signed up for five lessons at a Murray studio to learn the Latin dances. But she was subjected to so much pressure to buy a longer contract that she finally abandoned even the remaining lessons she had bought, and reported that she had never had even one full hour of the instruction she had paid for.

UM Research Center Report:

Post-65 Income Dips Sharply, Study Shows

OLDER PERSONAL or family units have substantially lower incomes than younger ones, but low incomes are commonly temporary among younger families and permanent among the aged, the University of Michigan Survey Research Center reports.

Average income reaches its peak among those in their forties and declines slowly among those in their fifties and rapidly among people over 65. Average assets are highest in the 55-64 year age group and decline slightly among those over 65.

The distribution of assets among the spending units 65 years and over is much more unequal than among younger units. The average assets data are greatly influenced by the small proportion of aged with sizable asset holdings. While the average assets of those 65 and older are similar to those 55 to 64 years old, 34 percent of the former have practically no liquid assets at all (less than $100 in bank deposits and bonds) as against 28 percent of the latter. Net worth data, including home ownership and investments and deducting debt, show that 23 percent of those 65 and over have net worth under $1,000 as against 14 percent in the 55 to 64 years group.

Forty-three percent of spending units over 65 reported having had what they called large medical expenses for doctors, nurses, and hospitals in 1961 against 36 percent in the 55-64 age group and 39 percent among all those between 35 and 64.

These data consider only aged people with some income who form independent spending units. In addition, there are about 2 million aged individuals excluded from the tabulation because they have no income and form a part of the spending units of their children or other relatives.

Among these older spending units, those with relatively high income tend to have sizable assets, while those with low income tend to have small assets. It appears that there are close to 4.5 million spending units 65 and older who had a 1961 disposable income of less than $2,000 (including social security benefits). Forty percent of these units have practically no assets, and most of them have no medical insurance either.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Come to Think of It, Who Ever Heard of an Inhibited Art Critic?

By Jane Goodsell

ALL OF A SUDDEN a lot of people I know have discovered art with so much enthusiasm you'd think it had just been invented. Ever since, I've been faced with the problem of what to say when they showed me their latest paintings—the ones they'd just bought or those executed by a member of the family who's painting for therapy.

Sometimes there didn't seem to be anything to say. When, for instance, the painting consisted of a tiny black dot in the corner of a huge gray canvas. Or even worse, a still life painted by Aunt Bessie with her own two hands.

Still, I felt that common courtesy required me to say something nice, and I murmured compliments with my fingers crossed behind my back. After all, I didn't want to hurt anybody's feelings.

Now I realize that my attitude was old-fashioned, and I have good news for those of you who are still trying to be polite. It's no longer necessary to hide your true feelings about your friends' paintings. In art circles, insult is now considered the highest form of flattery.

I knew nothing about this new etiquette when we bought our first painting (a smudgy abstract) a couple of months ago. We bought it partly because we like it, and partly because we were embarrassed that we didn't have a painting when everybody else did. We could hardly wait to show it to our friends.

Well, talk about disappointment! Never have I been so shocked and hurt. Our friends, normally a polite and courteous group, were downright rude about our painting. One old friend sneered at it for several moments and walked off without saying a word. Another regarded it with raised eyebrows and ventured the opinion that it was hanging upside down. Even our highbrow friends expressed no enthusiasm. They just squinted at it.

CRESTFALLEN, I sought out one of my arty friends and told her sadly, "Nobody likes our painting, I'm afraid."

"Don't be ridiculous!" she snapped. "You don't want other people to like it. That would ruin the painting for you."

"It would?" I asked. "How come?"

"Because," she explained, "you have a highly personal response toward the painting. You bought it because it communicates a special message to you. You see things in it that other people don't. If everybody liked your painting, it would lose its meaning for you. Don't you see?"

"Yes," I said, which was an exaggeration.

But the more I ponder it, the better I like this theory. If nobody is supposed to like anybody else's paintings, then insult is the highest form of flattery. I'm no longer hurt by my friends' insulting remarks about my painting. It simply proves that they don't understand it—that they lack the imagination and perception to see in it the beauty that I do.

In Public Interest:

Federal Stake Seen In Key Negotiations

Dallas, Tex.—Federal intervention to induce peaceful, voluntary labor-management contract settlements in the public interest should go "as far as resourceful and imaginative government leadership can carry," a union attorney declared at the Southwestern Legal Foundation's 9th Annual Institute on Labor Law.

In a discussion of "The Third Seat at the Bargaining Table," Plato E. Papps, general counsel for the Machinists, said that collective bargaining decisions in vital industries "have a substantial impact upon the national economy and the public as a whole," and the government has "a legitimate stake" in the process.

He vigorously rejected a management viewpoint that unions should be subjected to various new legal restrictions.

New York Attorney John H. Morse, speaking for management, said the ultimate cost of government intervention in collective bargaining, beyond mediation or conciliation, would "far outweigh the advantages to be derived."

Management 'Remedies'

He proposed application of anti-trust principles to unions, urging amendment of national labor laws to outlaw industrywide bargaining, restrict negotiations to the individual employer and union, and forbid outside assistance or financial aid.

This type of management thinking, Papps declared, "would avoid the problem by destroying the predicate—the right of workers to self-organization and collective bargaining—on which it rests."

The real object of such proposals, he suggested, is to give management the unilateral right to control wages and working conditions and deny workers the right to challenge a company's decisions.

"That approach," the IAM counsel continued, "might very well reduce the impact of strikes on the national economy. But it would do so at the expense of reintroducing the very inequality of bargaining power between labor and management, and the very depression of labor standards, which Congress found it essential to the national welfare to correct."

Workers are bitterly opposed to dictation of wages, hours and working conditions by either management or government, he noted, but if they had to make a choice they would "unhesitatingly" choose dictation by government.

"They would necessarily do so," he said, "because the interest of the government, being that of the whole people, is not as wholly adverse to the workers' interest as is the interest of management. After all, management can properly claim to represent only the interest of stockholders in the business and it must seek in their interest to maximize profits at the inevitable expense of the workers' interest in improving their condition.

'Accommodations' Needed

"On the other hand, much as labor might wish it were not so, the impact on the national welfare of its power effectively to challenge management's unilateral decisions likewise cannot be ignored. It follows that accommodations must be made in some manner for the public interest in labor-management decisions and disputes."

Federal Mediation Dir. William E. Simkin pointed out that the mediation service actually enters only about 7 percent of the 100,000 bargaining situations called to its attention each year.

He defended the government's use of alternatives to the Taft-Hartley Act injunction in seeking peaceful settlements, and observed that under the language of the law "any device agreed to voluntarily by the parties is clearly intended."

Among such devices he listed the special boards appointed by the President in the aerospace industry, the Atomic Energy Labor-Management Relations Panel and the Missile Sites Labor Commission.

Agreeing that excessive third-party intervention could weaken or even destroy collective bargaining, Simkin expressed the conviction that with no intervention at all "the minority failures of collective bargaining would lead to new restrictive legislation that could nullify many of its past and present achievements."

USS SEAWOLF, one of the Navy's pioneering nuclear-powered submarines, had a group of union officials on board during recent maneuvers near its New London, Conn., base. They were invited as representatives of the workers who build, equip and supply the Navy's ships, submarines and planes.

8 Unionists Cruise on Nuclear Sub

New London, Conn.—Eight union officials got a first-hand look at the Navy's undersea operations on board a pioneering nuclear submarine, the USS Seawolf.

The union leaders, representatives of tens of thousands of AFL-CIO members who work on Navy contracts or in naval shipyards, took part in diving maneuvers as the submarine was put through its paces.

Among those on board the Seawolf during the all-day operation were AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers; Sec.-Treas. Clayton Bilderback of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.; Pres. John J. Grogan of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers; Pres. Russell K. Berg of the Boilermakers; Pres. Daniel E. Conway of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept.; Sec.-Treas. William E. Fredenberger of the Firemen & Oilers; Henry H. Ore, special representative of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters.

Before and during the maneuvers, top Navy officers briefed the group on the Navy's submarine program, the training of nuclear submarine crews and the role of the Polaris fleet.

Keenan, serving as spokesman for the union observers, voiced the AFL-CIO's appreciation for the Navy's role in the national defense and outlined the federation's programs in the international field.

Leading U.S. Role Urged In Vocational Training

The federal government must exert far more leadership and invest much more money in vocational education "if the nation is to meet its economic and social problems and maintain its role as a leader of the free world," an AFL-CIO spokesman recently declared.

The union position, presented to a presidential panel of consultants on vocational education by Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Education, envisioned vocational training as high school-plus rather than as a substitute for high school.

"Vocational education is broader than job training," the report asserted. "It includes general education in reading, writing, mathematics, science and other subjects. . . . Good general, all-around education is a prerequisite for acquiring technical proficiency needed for the skilled occupations."

Schoemann, president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, an AFL-CIO vice president and former head of the Board of Education in his native Milwaukee, said even this basic education is not enough.

"Today training is never finished," his report declared. "To remain employed a worker must train all his working life to keep up and to anticipate the technological changes in his occupation. . . .

Updating Needed

"The AFL-CIO believes that the present vocational programs have to be considerably updated before they can meet the vocational needs of our mid-century economy."

Specifically, the report said, the problems that vocational education will have to solve are as follows:

- "How to train youth for entering employment in a rapidly changing economy.
- "How to teach new skills to workers whose jobs are lost because of technological changes.
- "How to prepare inexperienced and untrained young workers who have not completed school.
- "How to improve teacher training.
- "How to keep abreast of ever-changing technological progress."

Present programs are not adequately meeting these problems, Schoemann said.

"Funds are insufficient," he asserted. "Facilities and equipment are often obsolete and, in many smaller urban areas, lacking altogether. Curricula and training methods are often out-of-date and do not adequately teach the skills required in today's industry. There is a shortage of teachers sufficiently acquainted with new materials, production techniques and skill requirements."

The report recommended remedial measures on each point, including extending the principle of area (rather than district-by-district) programs to all categories of vocational education; counselling services at least equal to those available to college-preparatory students; expansion of vocational education to the 13th and 14th school years, and flexibility in applying funds for training, such as now exists under the Area Redevelopment Act and the Manpower Development & Training Act.

"Vocational education does not create jobs and does not avoid employment," the report emphasized.

More Data Needed

"However, an employe with higher skills can avoid unemployment longer than a worker with lesser skills. Moreover, we need not only more knowledge about the labor market but also detailed information on job vacancies and skill needs on the national, state and local levels. . . .

"The Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare should initiate studies to evaluate the adequacy or inadequacy of training programs and the quality of curricula and instructors. The department should develop experimental training programs and should become a clearinghouse for information in all areas of vocational training."

Indian Unions Support Defense Against China

New Delhi—India's trade union movement has pledged its full support to the defense of the nation against Chinese Communist invasion and has called on the nation's employers to join with workers in avoiding any work stoppages during the emergency.

Gen. Sec. S. R. Vasavada of the Indian National Trade Union Congress declared that the border invasion means that "expansionist China has become more aggressive" and that India's freedom is at stake in the battles being fought along the frontier.

In a public appeal "to the sense of patriotism of the employers of our country," Vasavada asked them to agree to "settle all differences by negotiations and arbitration" to prevent any slowdown of equipment for the fighting front.

"Let every employer and employe remember that stoppage of work at this critical moment amounts to betrayal of our soldiers," the union leader declared.

For Indian workers, he declared that from "now onwards until the aggressors are driven out from our country, we shall resolve our differences amicably by negotiations. If negotiations fail, we will accept arbitration. We will do everything humanly possible to avoid stoppage of work."

Meanwhile India, whose insistence on a form of "neutrality" which appeared to many critics as leaning over backwards to avoid irritating the Communist bloc, received a swift response from the United States to its request for defensive arms, while Soviet Russia announced in the United Nations its support of Red China's territorial claims and canceled its sale of jet fighters to India.

In a shakeup of the Indian government, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru personally assumed the portfolio of defense minister, replacing V. K. Krishna Menon and assigning the latter to the department of defense production. Menon had been sharply criticized for an apparent pro-Soviet and anti-American bias.

Bookbinders Pick Connolly As President

The Bookbinders have elected John Connolly of Local 176, Norwood, Mass., as president and Betty Whittaker of Local 28, Toronto, Ont., as fifth vice president in the only contested races in a nationwide referendum.

Elected without opposition were Sec.-Treas. Wesley A. Taylor and five vice presidents: William Stasiak, Chicago; William S. Hogan, San Francisco; Marion Moran, Buffalo; Joseph Hellman, New York City; and Julia Shanahan, St. Louis.

All will take office in January for four-year terms. Connolly succeeds Pres. Joseph Denny, retiring Dec. 31 on pension after 16 years of service in international office. Referendum ballots were tabulated by a board of electors headed by Austin E. Dolan and including Estelle Krohr and Mary Wright, all of Washington, D. C.

60-Man Local Fetes Blind, Aged, Orphans

Cincinnati—The Private Police & Watchmen's Union, Local 13130, has received recognition for a unique hobby—holding annual parties for groups of orphans, blind and "golden age" clubs.

The Cincinnati Association for the Blind has sent the union a letter thanking members for being hosts to more than 100 sightless persons at the last baseball game of the season in Crosley Field.

The union provided cigarettes, refreshments, and "eyes" for the blind men and women who sat in box seats behind home plate at the outing held for them every year.

The local, with only 60 members, also raised $140 last year for the purchase of Braille writers. Since then it has held parties for Girls Town orphans and the sisters who teach them, a show for senior citizens and another for 85 blind persons.

Frank Kestler is president and Joseph F. Lisi secretary of Local 13130. Isidore ("Izzy") Harris has been union public information man since he retired 15 years ago from a trunk factory in Norwood and became a private policeman at Crosley Field and other sports and amusement centers.

Durkin Park Honors Late Union Leader

Chicago—This city has dedicated a 10-acre park on the Southwest Side to an outstanding native son, the late Martin P. Durkin, secretary of labor in the first Eisenhower cabinet and former president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William L. McFetridge, vice president of the Chicago Park District Board of Commissioners, presided at the ceremonies at which Mayor Richard J. Daley formally presented the Martin P. Durkin Park to the community.

The park adjoins a public school, and a joint school board-park district program will offer activities in physical education, dramatics, arts and crafts and music.

A special tribute was paid Durkin's widow and family at the dedication.

Durkin was secretary of labor from January to September of 1953. Earlier he had been director of the Illinois Dept. of Labor, serving under three governors.

His trade union career began in 1922, when he was elected business manager of Chicago Pipe Fitters Local 597. In 1942 he became general president of the union, leaving to join the cabinet and returning upon his resignation. He died in 1955.

Among government and union leaders at the dedication were Illinois Dir. of Labor Robert R. Donnelly, a member of Chicago Electrical Workers Local 134; Assistant State Labor Dir. Sam Bernstein, and Vice Pres. Albert Towers of the Chicago Federation of Labor & Industrial Union Council.

Ruttenberg Named Research Adviser

AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg has been named a member of the subcommittee on research of the National Manpower Advisory Committee.

The committee was appointed by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz to advise him in administration of the Manpower Development & Training Act and is headed by Dr. Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University.

Chairman of its subcommittee on research is Dr. William H. Nichols of Vanderbilt University, who represents agriculture on the committee. Among other subcommittee members is Dr. Richard A. Lester, Princeton University economist who is well-known as an arbitrator in labor disputes.

Federal Traffic Code Urged for Highways

Chicago—A federal code for road traffic safety and an overall safety code for auto manufacturers have been urged by members of the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council.

The Labor Conference, meeting here on the eve of the 1962 National Safety Congress, called for reduced emphasis on speed and horsepower in cars and urged legislation to allow state labor departments to write their own safety programs instead of going to a legislature for approval of updated regulations.

Labor conference members also voted to participate in a plan for accelerated action in state traffic improvement programs, learn-to-swim programs, improved building and fire codes, and engagement of a safety education supervisor in every school system.

The Publications Committee unveiled the Safety Guide for Unions, a 240-page book designed to educate and assist union officers, committeemen and members in promoting on-the-job and off-the-job safety. The Guide is the product of five years work by the committee and has been approved by union health and safety experts.

Pres. Howard Pyle of the National Safety Council presented testimonial plaques to George Brown, 1961-62 Labor Conference chairman, and Lloyd Utter, Safety Council vice president for labor, for their contributions in promoting safety. Brown, former assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, is deputy director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Standards. Utter is safety director for the Auto Workers.

Labor Conference officers installed for 1962-63 are Utter, vice president for labor; Chairman Hunter P. Wharton, president of the Operating Engineers; Vice Chairman Victor Whitehouse, safety director for the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Sec. Robert M. Wilkins, manager, Labor Dept., National Safety Council.

Labor Booklet Hits Merger Of Rail Lines

A new pamphlet by the Railway Labor Executives' Association tells "Why the PANYC Merger Must Be Stopped." The coined word in the title is taken from the abbreviations for the two giant railroad systems that have asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to unite—the Pennsylvania and the New York Central.

The pamphlet quotes New York Central Pres. Alfred E. Perlman as saying a little more than a year ago that such a merger would not be "in the public interest."

The RLEA pamphlet asks: "What's the rush now, Mr. Perlman? Has the public interest changed in these few short months?"

In summarizing the reasons why the proposed merger should not be permitted, the RLEA declares:

- "It is bad for the nation because it hampers economic growth.
- "National defense would suffer from reduction of rail capacity.
- "Communities left without railroad facilities would wither.
- "Shippers would pay more for less efficient freight service.
- "Merchants would get slower deliveries; goods would be more costly.
- "Housewives, with prices of food and necessities rising, would suffer.
- "Farmers would be hit twice. They'd pay more to ship their products and for the things they buy."

ONE OF THE FIRST COPIES of Safety Guide for Unions, publication sponsored by the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council, was presented to George T. Brown (left), Labor Conference chairman and former assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, by Machinists Grand Lodge Rep. J. George Eichhorn, chairman of the conference publications committee, at a meeting in Chicago.

Secretariat Acts:

World Unions Map White Collar Drive

Organization of all white collar workers in the free world is now more essential than ever, officers of the Intl. Federation of Commercial, Clerical & Technical Employes declared at a meeting in Washington, D. C.

If human freedom and union freedom are to flourish and expand, the white collar workers' movement must be strengthened, said General Sec. Erich Kissel and Pres. Joseph Hiscock at a press conference marking the first meeting of the IFCCTE executive committee in the Western Hemisphere.

U.S. Backed on Cuba

The delegates unanimously adopted a resolution expressing "deep concern" about the world situation arising from the establishment of Soviet missile bases in Communist Cuba.

They agreed that the threat to American countries of these bases had provoked counter measures taken by Pres. Kennedy and urged the heads of states concerned, and the United Nations, in full realization of the gravity of the situation, to "use every possible endeavor to bring about a settlement which will remove the danger to world peace created by the Cuban crisis."

Kissel said the international trade secretariat has 77 affiliated national unions with almost 4 million members in 44 countries and that, in spite of the fact that non-production workers are "very difficult to organize," the organization will continue its efforts to bring an estimated 55 to 60 million such workers the benefits of union organization.

"We believe our efforts will prove an effective barrier against inroads by communism and contribute to the preservation of peace with freedom," Kissel told reporters.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany welcomed the delegates to Washington. After a tour of the White House they met to discuss the possible effect of the European Common Market on organizing activity; the boycott of the Retail Clerks and the labor movement against Sears, Roebuck & Co., and trade developments.

Offices in Holland, Peru

The secretariat has headquarters in Amsterdam, Holland, and a regional office in Lima, Peru.

The chief objectives of the IFCCTE, it said in a statement, are to organize and educate the officers and members of non-manual workers' unions in the free world.

Information on how to set up and operate unions is in great demand, and the secretariat's collection of comparative data on collective bargaining gains by other white collar unions has helped affiliates gain many benefits, it said.

Reporting on activities in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, Kissel said "these are key areas in the struggle for human dignity and trade union freedom." The IFCCTE has eight affiliates in Asia and 12 in Africa to be used as a nucleus in building toward the "economic, social and political security" of commercial, technical and clerical workers in developing nations.

Two U.S. union officials are on the 14-member IFCCTE executive committee — AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge, who also is president of the Retail Clerks; and J. Howard Hicks, Office Employes secretary-treasurer.

NMU Wins Recognition in MSTS Fleet

New York—The National Maritime Union has been recognized as exclusive bargaining representative of 2,700 non-officer seamen employed by the Military Sea Transportation Service on the 39 vessels of its Atlantic area fleet.

The recognition was accorded in an official notice from Adm. Harry Hull, commander of the MSTS Atlantic fleet.

Exclusive recognition is the highest of three types provided in Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order 10988 on the rights of federal employes to union representation and collective bargaining, the others being "informal" and "formal."

MSTS is a branch of the Navy operating transport and service vessels manned by civil service personnel. It granted recognition to the NMU following meetings in which the union demonstrated that a "wide majority" of the seamen had named NMU as their bargaining agent.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said the union is now receiving bargaining proposals from MSTS crews and would enter into negotiations as soon as possible.

The NMU recently celebrated the 25th anniversary of its founding at a dinner attended by some 1,500 representatives of labor, industry and government with proceeds going to the Ghandi Society for Human Rights.

Dr. Martin Luther King, honorary president of the society, lauded the NMU for its battles to eliminate discrimination from ships under contract with the union.

Other speakers included Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists, Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), Robert M. Morgenthau, Democratic candidate for governor, and Ralph E. Casey, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute.

Algeria Joins ILO; 104th Member-Nation

Geneva—Algeria has become the 104th member-nation of the Intl. Labor Organization, Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse has announced.

In a letter to Morse, the Algerian government declared its acceptance of the ILO constitution and said it would remain bound by the obligations of the 42 international labor conventions which had previously been made applicable to Algeria by France.

At Meeting in Honolulu:

Building Trades Dept. Votes Aid to Organizing in Hawaii

Honolulu—Labor must keep pace with the rapid industrial growth of the 50th state, the executive council of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. decided at its fall meeting here.

The council pledged support of an organizing campaign by the Honolulu Building Trades Council, whose affiliated unions already represent 6,000 construction workers.

It also promised assistance to Sec. Jack Reynolds of the Honolulu council in establishing an educational program for local union officials. This will be conducted through seminars at which seasoned union leaders and university staff members will give courses on the history and philosophy of the trade union movement, the practical operation of trade union affairs and general economics.

Reynolds emphasized the desirability of developing local leadership instead of importing top officers from the mainland. He reported that the construction industry is about 80 percent organized in Hawaii and can be fully organized within the coming year with the proper impetus and support.

Standards in Hawaii still lag behind those on the mainland, he said, especially in fringe benefits in which improvement will be the main goal in negotiating 1963 contracts.

The visiting building trades leaders made inspection tours of the booming industrial areas in Hawaii. They spent almost a full day at the shops and military installations at Pearl Harbor. Defense is still the biggest business in Hawaii, involving expenditures of $400 million yearly. Sugar and pineapples come next, but tourism may soon exceed them.

New Refinery Seen

West of Pearl Harbor, Pres. C. J. Haggerty and other AFL-CIO Building Trades Dept. officials inspected the new $65 million refinery of the Standard Oil Co. of California, built with union labor. The refinery is supplied with crude oil by means of pipelines running under the ocean floor two miles out to deep-sea anchorages, where tankers from Sumatra and Arabia unload. Finished products also are sent by pipeline to Pearl Harbor, the airports and power plants, as well as the main storage plant in Honolulu.

Later the visitors made a special trip to inspect Hawaii Kai, a huge housing development undertaken by Henry Kaiser. The noted industrialist personally conducted the union officials around the tract, laid out from mountain foothills to the shores of the Pacific around Koko Head. By 1970, he said, 12,000 homes will be built there along with schools, churches, shopping centers, a luxury hotel, a marina and three golf courses.

Because of the high cost of "finishing" lots, including dredging, filling and removing volcanic boulders, the new homes will sell at from $22,500 to $60,000. The cost of construction labor, however, is considerably less than on the mainland.

Honolulu's population has increased 142 percent since the end of the war, the union leaders were informed, and the number of tourists has increased 600 percent to 300,000 a year. New hotels, office buildings and superhighways are constantly being built.

The construction boom has spread to the other islands which make up the new state of Hawaii, where promoters are erecting resort hotels in the hope of attracting tourists seeking "unspoiled" native atmosphere.

This was the first meeting of a major AFL-CIO union group in Hawaii.

OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY service won for Pres. Harry Boyer (center) of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO the Austin Donoughe Memorial Award of the Pennsylvania United Fund at its meeting in Harrisburg. The presentation was made by William F. McIntyre (left), president of the organization, to the acompaniment of warm praise for Boyer by Gov. David L. Lawrence (right). He is also Chairman of the State Board of Public Welfare, the Pennsylvania Human Relations Committee, the State and Local Welfare Commission and the Governor's Committee of 100 for Better Education.

Union to Help Hunt Role Of Asbestos in Cancer

New York—Members of the Asbestos Workers here have agreed to cooperate in a study of the possible link between asbestos dust and lung cancer in a union which has lost 200 members by death in the last 10 years.

The study will be made over a two-year period with the help of a $60,385 grant by the Health Research Council of the City Health Dept. to Mt. Sinai Hospital.

The council said reports of Asbestos Workers Local 12's health and welfare fund will be made available to Dr. Irving J. Selikoff and Dr. Jacob Churg of Mt. Sinai, along with medical and surgical reports on living and deceased union members. Also special clinical and laboratory facilities for examination of workers will be installed at union headquarters here.

The study is designed to uncover any signs of asbestosis or other occupational diseases. Since 1935, studies here and abroad have indicated that lung cancer claims 20 times as many victims with asbestosis as with other diseases. Selikoff described asbestosis as a serious lung disease caused by inhaling particles of asbestos.

Most of the previously reported deaths from cancer occurred among asbestos workers in the textile industry but there are now 3,000 other uses for asbestos, including sound proofing, heat insulation, fireproofing, car undercoating, flooring and roofing.

Selikoff said members of Local 12 will be examined for lung damage possibly caused by other insulating materials, such as fiber glass and rock wool. Health hazards connected with asbestos are present, he said, only during the industrial processing of the material.

The research study is designed to develop safety devices and procedures for workers in the industry. Plans for it were worked out with the aid of Pres. C. W. Sickles and Vice Pres. George Rider of the international union and Pres. Nicholas Lucich and Sec. John Bogovich of New York Local 12.

Ontario Labor Backs Aid for Arbitration

Toronto, Ont.—Government has a responsibility for recruiting, training and developing arbitrators to serve in labor-management disputes, the Ontario Federation of Labor maintained in a brief filed with a provincial commission studying the whole field of arbitration.

The OFL, the Auto Workers and the Ontario section of the Canadian Bar Association all proposed the establishment of a province-sponsored association of arbitrators to end the shortage of qualified personnel that reduces the full effectiveness of grievance procedures.

The provincial labor body also urged the commission, which is headed by Deputy Atty. Gen. Eric Silk, to bolster such an association with government grants, provide it with research and placement services, and guarantee a minimum income to persons entering the field.

The Toronto Newspaper Guild, which also suggested establishment of a professional association, in addition proposed that judges—the source of most impartial arbitrators—be released from other duties for full-time service in the field if they choose to specialize in arbitration. The UAW suggested recruitment of laymen to serve also.

Pension Plans Given New Reporting Form

A new one-page Form D-3 for use by administrators of small welfare and pension plans covered under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act has been adopted by the Labor Dept., Assistant Sec. James J. Reynolds has announced.

Under an amendment which became effective last June 18, no financial report is required of plans which at all times during the plan year covered fewer than 100 persons. The new form provides a simple method for a plan administrator to advise the Labor Dept. that no report need be filed because fewer than 100 participants were covered, Reynolds said.

Pennsylvania Anti-Bias Group Notes Progress

Harrisburg, Pa.—The Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission has reported successful operations in the first year of a broadened and accelerated attack on discrimination.

Harry Boyer, chairman of the commission and also president of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO, filed the group's sixth annual report with Gov. David L. Lawrence (D).

The year through this past February, Boyer said, includes "the historic period in which the protection of Pennsylvania's anti-discrimination legislation was extended to the areas of housing, public accommodations and education, in addition to employment."

The challenge faced by the commission, Boyer noted, was to administer and enforce new anti-discrimination legislation without sacrificing the caliber of the employment program.

The report stated that the commission had among other things:

- Adopted new regulations and operating procedures to cover the new areas of jurisdiction.
- Created two new divisions—housing and research; named directors for each and created a regional office for central Pennsylvania.
- Processed complaints in housing (56) and public accommodations (50) while handling more employment cases than in the previous year (206 compared to 189).
- Accelerated educational programs in the employment area.
- Launched educational programs in housing and public accommodations, including popular pamphlets on the new laws, discussion programs for white residents to lay the foundation for Negro neighbors, special projects to ease the entrance of the first Negro families into housing projects and neighborhoods.

Federal Action on Jobs Urged in U.S., Canada

Montreal—Heavy unemployment in Canada and the United States demands greater government action by both nations, the executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America declared at its meeting here.

The AFL-CIO union, an affiliate of the Canadian Labor Congress, called for a Canadian Full Employment Act, reduction of the retirement age from 70 to 65, establishment of a $1.25 minimum wage by provincial legislatures, and creation of a comprehensive national health services plan.

In resolutions dealing with U.S. economic problems, the TWUA council asked increased public works appropriations in 1963, a reduction in income taxes with the main benefit to low-income groups, and establishment of a 35-hour workweek.

The executive council criticized the failure of Congress to provide funds requested by Pres. Kennedy to set up a federal research program into new uses and markets for textile products and to finance more effective policing of textile imports by the U.S. Customs Bureau.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock said failure to approve the research funds "delays constructive efforts to increase the competitive capacity of the U.S. textile industry and its ability to expand in new areas which would provide new employment for workers displaced by current technological developments."

level, particularly in major industrial states.

There was no observable prospect of a sweeping GOP breakthrough in House and Senate seats that would pull the opposition party even close to control of Congress, despite the long tradition that the party holding the White House loses House seats, sometimes heavily in off-year elections.

Current Party Lineup

The party lineup in the present Congress—which will still be the Congress that serves until January if the President should feel the necessity of a special session—is 64 Democrats, 36 Republicans in the Senate, 261 Democrats and 174 Republicans in the House, with two vacant seats which had been held by Democrats.

House membership will drop to 435 in the 88th Congress. Republican campaign leaders in the latter part of the campaign abandoned earlier claims that they might pick up the 44-seat net gain needed to give the GOP bare control.

Candid party spokesmen mentioned a maximum net gain of 10 as more likely and Democratic Party campaigners refused to concede even these. A net shift of from 3 to 5 either way was the estimate of some students.

Impartial observers rated the election as unusually close, with apparent party support in many states so evenly balanced that the results seemed literally unpredictable.

Many factors could be rated as likely to influence election results, some with imponderable effects:

- Two weeks before the election, Pres. Kennedy pulled out of the partisan election campaign, withdrew Vice Pres. Johnson and ordered all Cabinet members to drop their scheduled political speeches.

For a week the President himself remained almost literally a prisoner in the White House, dealing constantly with reports on the Soviet rockets and the issue of how they were to be removed, while a naval blockade and aerial reconnaissance maintained vigilance over Cuba.

He had campaigned heavily through early October and he had major appearances scheduled for the last two weeks in key states. He was rated by Democratic candidates as extremely helpful in rousing enthusiasm and helping build up the prospective vote.

Republican Party campaigners instantly countered with a heavy partisan assault charging the White House with political motivations in reacting to the crisis with the Soviet Union and Castro's Cuba, and continued an unceasing barrage accusing the President of previous timidity. Former Pres. Eisenhower announced formal approval of Kennedy's actions, but led GOP speakers in claiming that Republican pressure had "prodded" him.

Eisenhower continued to campaign while top Democratic leaders remained under orders to follow the President's example and provoke no partisanship.

- The registered-and-qualified voter total was relatively high as the lists closed—nearly 83.5 million citizens, a rise of 6.8 million from the last off-year election in 1958. This was still 1.2 million lower than registration for the presidential election in 1960.

Some state officials estimated an extraordinary total vote running as high as 65 percent of the registration, which would mean a turnout of 55 million—a whopping increase of more than 9 million from 1958.

1958 Turnout High

The Census Bureau pointed out, however, that the 1958 election was the high-tide mark for voter participation in off-year elections since before World War II—nearly a quarter of a century ago. In that year 59.5 percent of the registered voters went to the polls—representing 43.4 percent of the voting age population.

A 43.4 percent turnout of the voting age population in 1962 would mean that 47.6 million would go to the polls—an increase of 2 million from the off-year total of 1958.

- A factor of significance in registration of voters was an active campaign by citizens' groups and labor, including the AFL-CIO, in working to increase the number qualified for the polls. The results would still depend, however, on who actually voted and where.

Previous elections have revealed a pattern of heavy voting participation in suburban areas where Republicans have concentrated much strength and in "silk stocking" city wards. Voting in middle-income and low-income areas has been smaller. An increase in registered and actual voters in 1960 was credited by Democratic leaders and impartial students as responsible for Kennedy's narrow victory over former Vice Pres. Nixon.

The 1960 election also indicated, however, the normal GOP suburban pluralities had shrunk while the Democratic percentage climbed. A continuation of this trend would have a major effect.

- Other factors of importance would be the extent of revolt among conservative southern Democratic voters against national policies of the Kennedy Administration—expected to be relatively small—and the size of the certain rise in voting by Negroes, both North and South.

Republican hopes of gains in the governorships were centered in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and California. In most cases, the contests seemed extremely close.

The GOP could not expect in any case to win governorships in enough states to produce a majority of the electoral college vote in a presidential election. Republican victories for Nixon in California, George Romney in Michigan and Rep. William W. Scranton in Pennsylvania would nevertheless have a substantial effect on the choice of nominees for President and Vice President two years later.

In New York, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller was seeking a heavy plurality in his re-election campaign, and it was expected that if he got it he would drive immediately for the GOP nomination in 1964. Democrats who had nominated Robert M. Morgenthau were seeking to trim the Rockefeller margin sharply if they could not defeat the governor.

LABOR WOMEN had a prominent place at the first annual Union County Fair in Elizabeth, N. J., and the theme of the exhibit above, appropriately, was labor's role in the community. Shown with leaflets about AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, senior citizens housing and union label merchandise are, from left, Mrs. Anita Halasz and Mrs. Minnie Martin of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 221, and Pat Woods of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1470. The fair had an attendance of 45,000. Pres. James Rafferty of the County AFL-CIO Council was a member of the sponsoring committee.

Attack on REA Co-ops Laid to 'Work' Forces

Farmers have again been warned that "right to work" law forces also are trying to destroy the rural cooperatives that provide low-cost electric power to the nation's farms.

F. H. Spivey of Marietta, Okla., president of the Red River Rural Electric Association—a major electric co-op in the Southwest—urged farmers to join union members to defeat "right to work" proposals in Oklahoma and other states, and attacks on farmers' rural electric systems.

"It's time we farmers realize that the National Association of Manufacturers, the Council of State Chambers of Commerce, the John Birch Society and others supporting this legislation aren't worrying about the average Oklahoman's welfare," said Spivey.

"It is essential that we farmers guard against being separated from our real friends. Their help will be needed to defeat future anti-co-op measures that are sure to be introduced by the right to workers in state legislatures."

The statement cited attacks on rural electric cooperatives by "work" supporters, and lobbying in Congress for legislation to strip the REA of its lending authority. In Indiana, the same group was declared to have conducted a campaign to block construction of a $60 million generating plant to provide low-cost power for southern Indiana farms.

The Oklahoma REA leader charged that "a few selfish industrialists" promoting "work" laws are trying to turn farmers against organized labor for their own advantage.

"As a farmer and REA member, I'm opposed to the reactionary groups so eager to destroy the right of free Oklahomans to join together for their mutual benefit," said Spivey.

It is a matter of record, he said, that Oklahoma wage earners and their friends in the legislature have championed the cause of REA and other farm co-ops and that on many occasions "legislation harmful to farmers would have been enacted" if they had failed to oppose it effectively.

Corporate Profits Move Toward Record High

ported profits plus depreciation allowances.

For the July-September period the Journal reports a 9 percent increase over the same period in 1961 and a rate about the same as the $25.6 billion rate set in the second quarter of the year.

Early indications of fourth quarter prospects, the Journal declares, "suggests the profits in the current three months could come close to those of a year earlier," a quarterly rate of $26.3 billion. This rate has been exceeded only once in the past—during the Korean War—when earnings hit a $27 billion rate.

The increases in third quarter profits were widespread, with only 7 of the 30 groups into which the Journal placed the reporting companies showing declines from the same period a year ago.

Taking note that new depreciation rules issued by the Treasury and the new tax credit law passed by Congress will affect this year's fourth quarter results, the Journal said that out of 11 groupings that showed an increase in the third quarter, seven are expected to show additional quarter-to-quarter increases in the current period.

According to the business paper's calculations, after-tax profits were at an annual rate of $26.1 billion in the first three months of the year, dipped slightly to $25.6 in the second quarter and will be a bit higher in the third quarter.

During the same period the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment has remained basically unchanged at 5.5 percent of the labor force and in August and September moved up to 5.8 percent.

reluctance to crack down hard on Castro" because of the "absence of any effective move to eliminate the true danger to our security—the intermediate missiles mounted and aimed at American cities."

While the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee was charging the President with exploiting the Cuban situation for political purposes, former Pres. Eisenhower continued to stump the country for Republican candidates, sharply attacking the Kennedy Administration but supporting the President on his Cuban policy.

Eisenhower, however, also told a GOP rally in Syracuse that the President had been able to act forcefully in Cuba because of Republican prodding and preparedness policies. The present military readiness of the nation would not exist, he said, without the work of the eight years of his Administration.

On domestic policies he bitterly attacked the Democratic regime, charging that "these people (the Kennedy Administration) will make the pork barrel the emblem of the republic."

The GOP campaign committee charged that the Kennedy Administration since taking office had allowed the Soviet Union to take over Cuba "and convert it into a Red missile base."

President's Support Up In House

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy can count on more support for his program in the new House of Representatives than he had during the 87th Congress even though the Republicans picked up two seats.

Kennedy backers—the liberal, northern wing of the Democratic Party—scored net gains, including several upsets in traditional GOP strongholds. California alone added nine liberals to Democratic ranks. Some of the new Republican seats, on the other hand, were captured from the GOP's allies among southern Democrats and mark no gain in the voting strength of the conservative coalition.

Another plus factor for the Administration was the election of several new Democrats from the South who are more likely than their predecessors to support the President on key votes.

The two-seat Republican gain was the poorest showing by an opposition party in any mid-term election since 1934. The GOP had set as its target capture of the House and had talked confidently of picking up enough seats to give the conservative coalition unchallenged voting domination.

Going into the election, the Democratic majority was 261-174, not including two vacancies last held by Democrats.

Nearly complete returns indicate a 259-176 Democratic margin. One of the Democratic victories will require a new election in California's 1st District, where voters elected a Democrat—who had

THE BIG ONE the Democrats won in the election was the California governorship, which Gov. Edmund G. Brown retained in a bitter contest with former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon (R). Here Brown is shown with Mrs. Brown among supporters in Los Angeles just after claiming victory.

Twelve Knocked Out:

Discontented Voters Shift Governorships

By John M. Barry

The Republicans took three big prizes in Tuesday's gubernatorial elections—the state houses in Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania—but they missed the biggest prize of all when California voters crushed the political comeback attempt of former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon.

Of 35 governorships at stake, 12 changed hands and five others came close to it as a general pattern of voter discontent with state administrations, whichever the party, emerged from the balloting.

The new national line-up, with some races still in doubt, was Democratic 34, Republican 16.

The switches reversed historical tradition in three cases when the GOP elected a governor in Oklahoma for the first time in the state's history and the Democrats established strong beachheads in Republican country, winning both Vermont and New Hampshire and coming close enough for a recount in Maine.

The Republicans also turned out Democratic incumbents in Colorado and Wyoming. But the Democrats in turn captured control additionally in Hawaii, Iowa, Massachusetts and New Mexico to give the parties a numerical standoff.

Looming behind the 1962 contests for governor was the 1964 presidential race and the competition among Republican aspirants for the privilege of opposing Pres. Kennedy.

Remaining high on the list is New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller. He also faced two new rivals as automaker George W. Romney defeated Michigan Gov. John B. Swainson and Rep. William W. Scranton gained an impressive margin over Richardson Dilworth to

Democrats Pick Up 4 More Senate Seats

A net gain of four seats in the U.S. Senate capped the Democratic congressional victory in Tuesday's election, boosting the party's margin in the chamber to 36 and adding liberal support for Pres. Kennedy's program.

The new Senate will be made up of 68 Democrats and 32 Republicans as against the current 64 to 36 lineup.

Not since 1934 had the party in the White House added Senate seats, and not for 20 years has the Democratic majority been so great.

The Democrats won 25 of the 39 Senate contests, ousting GOP incumbents in three and replacing retiring Republicant in three others, while losing two seats of their own.

Carroll Loses

The gains were scattered across the East and the Midwest. The losses both occurred in the Rocky Mountain states, where Sen. John A. Carroll of Colorado, a staunch member of the party's liberal wing, fell to an avowed conservative, Rep. Peter H. Dominick, and incumbent Sen. John J. Hickey of Wyoming was beaten by the man he had turned out as governor in 1958, Milward L. Simpson.

On the Democratic plus side, 34-year-old State Rep. Birch Bayh, Jr., scored a startling but decisive upset over Indiana's senior senator, Homer Capehart, who was bidding for his fourth six-year term.

Also in the upset category was Confidence Vote Highlights Election

By Willard Shelton

The Kennedy Administration looked forward with increased confidence to the next two years as voters gave the President and his party a rare expression of confidence for a mid-term election.

For the second time in this century—unparalleled except in the 1934 election during Franklin D. Roosevelt's first term—the party holding the White House fought its way in off-year balloting to an increased plurality in the Senate, an approximate standoff in the House, an approximate standoff in governorships.

The net effect appeared to be a somewhat stronger liberal instinct in the Senate because of the defeat of conservative Republicans and perhaps a slight shift in that direction also in the House as well. Republican gains in the South knocked out conservative Democrats in three of four cases, and liberal Democrats won most new seats in the rapidly growing Far West.

In the major single contest attracting national attention, Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California scored a smashing victory over former Vice Pres. Nixon—and presumably ended Nixon's public career by giving the California Republican his second galling defeat in two years.

Nixon, who had driven hard at Brown in an intense campaign, saw his dream of recapturing national power in the Republican Party via the state house engulfed as Brown rolled up a plurality beyond Democratic calculations. Nixon berated reporters in an embittered farewell press conference indicating he would sign out of public life.

The Republicans came up with two new prospects for national leadership when George Romney, an automobile executive, was elected governor of Michigan after 14 years of Democratic administration and Rep. William W. Scranton, 42-year-old multimillionaire whose family gave its name to its home town, defeated former Mayor Richardson Dilworth of Philadelphia for governor of Pennsylvania.

They gained encouragement, too, when Ohio, a third big industrial state, switched parties to elect a Republican as governor—James A. Rhodes—and when Gov. Nelson Rockefeller won re-election in critically important New York.

In the overall sweep, however, Democrats scored as a party what must be rated a historic victory—losing only two seats net in the House, gaining four seats to add to their already topheavy Senate margin, matching the Republicans in winning six governorships to balance off the six they lost.

They did it, moreover, while the country was under the tension of a critical confrontation with the Soviet Union over rockets in Cuba and when Pres. Kennedy had totally withdrawn himself, the Vice President and cabinet members from the partisan campaign.

The effect of Cuba may remain imponderable—but the voters showed unmistakably that they did not credit Republican efforts to ascribe a political "timing" motive to Kennedy's announcement of the crisis and did not distrust his handling of the time of danger.

The candidate who had tried to fight his re-election campaign almost exclusively on a charge that Kennedy did not move fast

Majority of Candidates Backed by Labor Win

Candidates supported by organized labor won from 60 to 70 percent of the senatorial, gubernatorial and House races in the Nov. 6 election.

The endorsements include those of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, the political action groups of federation-affiliated unions, the Railway Labor Political League and the Mine Workers.

In the 39 Senate races these groups supported a total of 32 candidates, of whom 23 or 72 percent won. There were 29 candidates endorsed by COPE alone, of whom 20 were victorious.

In the gubernatorial races there were 25 labor endorsed candidates in the 35 races, of whom 16 won for a 60 percent mark, while one race was still undecided. COPE-endorsed candidates won 15 of 24 races.

In House races there was a total of 367 endorsed candidates, of whom 215, or 60 percent, were victorious. Of the 332 endorsed by COPE alone, 193 were winners.

COPE endorsements and those of other labor political action groups are made at the state and congressional district levels by state AFL-CIO and other state labor groups.

Endorsements are based primarily on the records or the espoused programs of the candidates in terms of a wide number of economic, welfare and labor issues.

In a number of senatorial, gubernatorial and House races neither candidate was endorsed by any labor group. In a few areas, labor groups split on the endorsement question and both candidates for the office had the backing of some union body.

Democrats Victorious In New England Races

A Democratic surge in New England brought the party two new seats in the U.S. Senate, preserved its six-state total of 14 House members, and nearly produced a clean sweep of governorships.

Startling upsets for the governorships of Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, the return of Abraham A. Ribicoff to elective office and a big plurality for the youngest member of the Kennedy family were among the highlights.

In Vermont, Democrat Philip H. Hoff surprised even his own supporters in defeating the Republican incumbent, F. Ray Keyser, by about 750 votes. Hoff, endorsed by the State AFL-CIO, piled up big majorities in the industrial cities to offset losses in rural areas.

As expected, GOP Sen. George D. Aiken, who also had labor's support, was returned to office.

New Hampshire Democrats landed a "one-two punch" as John W. King of Manchester became the first member of his party in four decades to be elected governor and Thomas J. McIntyre of Laconia won the U.S. Senate seat left vacant last November by the death of Styles Bridges.

King walloped his Republican opponent, John Pillsbury, by nearly 40,000 votes. The one-sided victory was attributed to a combination of circumstances.

King's bid was given a big lift by Republican Gov. Wesley Powell, who broke with his party after losing his primary bid for a third term.

McIntyre also benefited from the Republican split in defeating conservative Rep. Perkins Bass by about 10,000 votes in the short-term Senate contest. In the closing days of the campaign, most supporters of liberal GOP Rep. Chester Merrow—who had the all-out support of labor in his unsuccessful primary bid for the Senate nomination—swung behind the Democrat.

Republicans returned Sen. Norris Cotton to another full term and elected conservative Louis C. Wyman and relatively liberal James C. Cleveland to the House to succeed Merrow and Bass.

Connecticut Gov. John N. Dempsey scored an impressive 66,000 vote plurality over John Alsop to lead his ticket and win re-election.

Former Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff, who was Pres. Kennedy's first secretary of health, education and welfare, won a closer victory over Rep. Horace Seely-Brown for the seat being vacated by GOP Sen. Prescott Bush.

The success of the ticket leaders also helped Democrats retain the four House seats they held, including the election of Bernard P. Grabowski to the at-large seat being vacated by Frank Kowalski, and to pick up a fifth in the district now held by Seely-Brown.

Edward M. Kennedy rolled to an anticipated big win over George C. Lodge for the Massachusetts Senate seat once held by his brother, the President, who had defeated Lodge's father, Henry Cabot Lodge, to get it.

The surprise in Massachusetts was a narrow victory for the governorship by Endicott Peabody, who posted a margin of about 3,500 votes over the Republican incumbent, John A. Volpe.

The two parties shared the state's two-seat congressional redistricting loss. Retiring GOP Rep. Laurence Curtis lost his Senate primary bid and Democratic Rep. Thomas J. Lane fell in a contest with Rep. F. Bradford Morse for the new 5th District.

Maine also lost a House seat to redistricting, making the total decline for New England three seats. With the Connecticut gain for the Democrats offsetting their Massachusetts loss, the Republicans absorbed the entire reduction in representation and now hold only 11 House seats in the six-state area.

Maine Gov. John H. Reed squeezed back into office by less than 800 votes and his Democratic opponent, Maynard C. Dolloff, announced he would seek a recount.

The Rhode Island governorship race was one of the closest in the country and may not be decided for another two weeks, when servicemen's absentee ballots are counted. Democratic Gov. John A. Notte went into the election without the endorsement of the State AFL-CIO and emerged with a plurality of only 166 votes.

Nearly a Landslide:

Biggest Democratic Gains Scored in Western States

The Pacific Coast and southwestern states gave Democrats something approaching a landslide sweep in an eight-state area that includes the far-distant states of Alaska and Hawaii.

The smashing defeat of former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon by Democratic incumbent Edmund G. (Pat) Brown for governor of California was only the most sensational hard-fought campaign battle.

Five Democratic liberal senators were re-elected handsomely—Ernest Gruening in Alaska, Warren G. Magnuson in Washington, Wayne Morse in Oregon, Alan Bible in Nevada and Carl Hayden (senior member of Congress) in Arizona.

In addition, Hawaii's voters named Democratic Rep. Daniel K. Inouye as Senate successor to retiring Democrat Oren E. Long. Inouye, a war hero and the state's most widely known political leader, overwhelmed Republican Ben Dillingham by a 2-1 margin and will be the Senate's first member of partly Japanese ancestry.

Only one Republican incumbent, Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel of California, was up for re-election. Rated a political moderate, Kuchel won over Democratic State Sen. Richard Richards by a margin approaching 300,000 despite Brown's mounting plurality over Nixon.

The Democrats held the three governorships they entered the campaign with and picked up two of the four statehouses previously held by Republicans, giving them victories in five of seven states.

Democrats also changed their eight-state House margin from 24-22 Democratic to a whopping 36-21 balance in their favor.

Democratic incumbents lost two seats—one in California and one in Washington—but knocked out three Republican incumbents in California and won an Oregon seat previously held by a Republican.

Of 10 new House seats given the Far West under the 1960 census reapportionment, Democrats won eight, including six of eight new districts in California, one in Hawaii and one in Arizona.

In the governorship races, Hawaii's former territorial delegate in Congress, Democrat John A. Burns, reversed the results of the 1960 election to defeat Republican Gov. William F. Quinn by a surprisingly large 4-3 margin.

In New Mexico, Democrat Jack M. Russell scored over incumbent Republican Gov. Edwin L. Mechem, an in-and-out runner for office for 10 years.

Democratic governors re-elected, in addition to Brown in California, were William A. Egan in Alaska, who defeated the state's strongest Republican vote-getter, Mike Stepovich, in a close race, and Grant Sawyer in Nevada, who overwhelmed Republican Oren K. Gragson.

The Republican governors who survived the sweep were Mark Hatfield in Oregon, victor by nearly a 3-2 margin over Democratic challenger Robert Y. Thornton, and Paul Fannin in Arizona, who won by a reduced margin over Democrat San Goddard.

In the House races, California voters turned out three right-wing Republicans, two of them avowed members of the John Birch Society. These were Representatives John H. Rousselot, a one-termer, 10-year veteran Edgar W. Hiestand and Gordon L. McDonough, an 18-year member. The only loss was Democratic Rep. D. S. Saund, who was hospitalized and unable to campaign.

In Washington, Democratic Rep. Don Magnuson lost in the 7th District (Seattle), but in Oregon the Democrats gained the 4th District when GOP Rep. Edwin R. Durno tried and lost in a bid for Senate nomination, and Democrat Robert B. Duncan ran successfully for the House seat.

California's districts were heavily revised by the Democratic legislature in what Republicans labeled a gerrymander, but Democrats pointed out that 10 years earlier the districts had been gerrymandered the other way by a GOP legislature, and that changes this year were partly corrective.

In the state's 21st District (Los Angeles), Democrat Augustus F. Hawkins became the first Negro to win election to Congress from west of the Mississippi River. Also noticeable was that the Republican candidate in the northern 1st District, Donald H. Clausen, was beaten even though his Democratic opponent on the ballot, Rep. Clem Miller, had been killed in an aircraft crash during the campaign. It was too late for Miller's name to be removed, too late for a new candidate to be named, and a special election now will be held to fill the vacancy.

Irving Bucklin Dies; Long with AFL-CIO

Irving Bucklin, who for 35 years worked in the offices of the secretary-treasurers of the former AFL and the AFL-CIO, died in Washington after a long illness.

He joined the AFL staff under the late Sec-Treas. Frank Morrison and for many years took the minutes of meetings of the AFL Executive Council. He retired in February 1962. Burial was in Pawtucket, R.I.

Upper Mountain States Show GOP Advances

Republicans captured the top offices in the upper Rocky Mountain states behind a conservative current strongly influenced by local factors.

The GOP won two governors' chairs from Democrats in Colorado and Wyoming. Of five Senate seats up in the region, the Republicans ousted Democratic incumbents in Colorado and Wyoming and held GOP seats in Utah and Idaho. Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho) survived the conservative swing in winning re-election.

With the House seats previously divided in the region, 7 Democratic, 4 Republican, the GOP gained by picking up two Democratic seats in Utah, making the new division 6 to 5 GOP.

The biggest single upset was the victory of Rep. Peter H. Dominick (R) over incumbent Sen. John A. Carroll (D) in Colorado's senatorial contest.

Following is a roundup of the five-state area of Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah and Montana:

Colorado—The conservative swing was most obvious—and perhaps ominous as well—as Republican voting strength turned out against a background of a tough-minded and progressive tax system enacted by Democrats three years earlier.

Carroll, a one-termer who squeaked by in 1956 despite an Eisenhower landslide, was defeated by an aggressive campaigner in Dominick. The senator-elect, in his one House term, voted wrong 11 times out of 11 key votes listed for him by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. The liberal Carroll had been endorsed by COPE, railway labor and the Mine Workers.

Gov. McNichols Loses

Gov. Stephen McNichols (D) was beaten by John A. Love (R). COPE-endorsed McNichols carried the election burden of having pushed through a sharp boost in state income taxes three years earlier, mainly for the purpose of improving the state's schools, colleges and other institutions. He put capital construction on a pay-as-you-go basis and built up a cash surplus in the state treasury.

Four House seats remained divided between the parties. Democratic Reps. Byron Rogers and Wayne Aspinall won re-election over William Chenoweth and Leo L. Sommerville, respectively. Republican Rep. Donald G. Brotzman defeated Conrad McBride (D) and Rep. J. Edgar Chenoweth (R) defeated Albert J. Tomsic (D), state House speaker.

In the legislature, Republicans won a majority in both houses and took almost half the Denver seats.

Idaho—Gov Robert E. Smylie (R) won re-election over Democrat Vernon K. Smith, who campaigned in favor of legalized gambling. COPE, vigilant on the perennial "right-to-work" campaign, had endorsed Smylie as an able and trustworthy chief executive.

Democratic Sen. Frank Church won a second term in besting conservative lawyer Jack Hawley. In the contest for the unexpired four-year term of the late Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R), former Gov. Len B. Jordan (R) defeated five-term Rep. Gracie Pfost (D). Jordan had been named to the seat by Smylie last summer.

Democrats won the two House seats. Rep. Ralph R. Harding took a second term in traditionally Republican territory by beating Orval Hensen (R). In the other contest, Compton I. White (D) defeated Erwin H. Schweibert (R).

Wyoming—This state went to the GOP, reportedly on a conservative swing generated by the issue of the "self-appointed senator." Two years ago, the then Gov. J. J. Hickey resigned to receive appointment to a Senate vacancy by successor Jack Gage. Both men went down to defeat. Ex-Gov. Milward Simpson (R) won the Senate seat and Clifford Hansen (R), chairman of the state university's board of governors, became governor. In the at-large House contest, Rep. William Henry Harrison (R) won over Lou Mankus (D).

Utah—Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R), a conservative and former head of the National Association of Manufacturers, defeated Rep. David S. King (D).

Republicans took both House contests, with Laurence J. Burton ousting Rep. M. Blaine Peterson (D) and Sherman P. Lloyd defeating Bruce S. Jenkins (D).

Montana—With only the state's two House seats being contested, Rep. Arnold Olsen (D) won re-election over Wayne Montgomery (R) and Republican incumbent James F. Battin won a new term in defeating Leo Graybill, Jr.

Kennedy Gains New Backing in House

Liberal Democrats Strengthen Ranks

died—the late Clem Miller—over his live Republican opponent.

With redistricting as a result of the 1960 census having drastically changed the political map, the two key states in the battle for control of the House were New York and California.

Gain in California

California was the big gainer in the population shifts—with eight new congressmen for a total of 38. While the Democrats were favored to win at least six, the state has been so politically volatile that the GOP had hopes of an even split. Instead the Democrats have picked up nine congressmen, including the Clem Miller seat, while the Republicans lost one. In terms of solid, liberal gains, this was the most significant congressional shift in the nation.

In New York, which lost two congressional seats this year, pre-election indicators pointed to a Democratic drop of at least six seats and a Republican gain of four or more. In the 87th Congress, the lineup was 22 Democrats and 21 Republicans.

The Republican-controlled legislature, with the backing of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, had carefully gerrymandered the state's congressional districts to give every possible advantage to the GOP. In addition, Republican candidates had hoped to benefit by the coattails of the party's two biggest statewide vote-getters—Rockefeller and Sen. Jacob K. Javits.

It didn't work that way. Hard-campaigning Democrats clung to seats they were expected to lose and captured a couple of supposedly rock-ribbed Republican districts. When the last voting machine had been tabulated, the GOP ended up with the same number of congressmen as before —21.

While incumbents generally fared well, there were some exceptions on both sides of the aisle.

Here are some of the House races which attracted national attention:

- Three John Birch Society members in California—all Republicans were defeated, including incumbent Reps. John H. Rousselot and Edgar W. Hiestand.
- A veteran liberal, Democratic Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey was a victim of reapportionment in West Virginia when he was thrown into a race with Republican Rep. Arch A. Moore, Jr., who once again proved his voter appeal. Kennedy had come into the district to boost the Bailey campaign.
- In Pennsylvania, labor-backed Rep. George M. Rhodes (D) was put in the same district as a conservative Republican, Rep. Ivor D. Fenton. Rhodes won handily.
- One of Florida's four new House seats went to former Sen. Claude Pepper, an addition to the liberal Democratic ranks.
- In a major upset, Democratic Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, gerrymandered out of his own seat, moved into the district represented for 40 years by Old Guard Republican John Taber—and won it. Taber did not seek reelection but the GOP candidate was highly-favored.
- In two major Tennessee races in which social security health care was an issue, the result was divided. In the Chattanooga area, Democrat Wilkes T. Thrasher, Jr., who had won an upset primary victory over a conservative incumbent, was defeated by Republican W. E. Brock. But in the Nashville area, where a challenged primary had resulted in both Democrats running without party designation, the liberal won. Labor-backed Richard Fulton defeated incumbent Rep. J. Carlton Loser, even though the Republicans withdrew their candidate so as not to split away any of Loser's conservative support.
- Democrat Neil Staebler won an upset victory in Michigan's congressman-at-large race. In another at-large contest, Robert A. Taft, Jr., easily defeated a Democrat who had been repudiated by Ohio party leaders because of his segregationist views.
- Veteran Republican Rep. Walter H. Judd was defeated by Donald M. Fraser in Minnesota and veteran Democratic Rep. Peter F. Mack, Jr., was a redistricting casualty in Illinois.

Republicans Gain Strength In South

Conservative Republican candidates showed important new strength in the southern states, picking up a governorship, four additional House seats and coming close to winning a Senate seat.

The 1962 elections accentuated a trend of the past few years of conservative southern Democrats shedding their historic party label and switching to the GOP.

Democratic factionalism and a number of purely statewide issues were responsible for the election of State Rep. Henry Bellmon as the first Republican governor in the history of Oklahoma.

His victory was nearly matched by GOPer James D. Martin, a former president of Associated Industries of Alabama, who gave labor-backed Sen. Lister Hill (D) the closest race of his long career, losing by about 7,000 votes.

In South Carolina, Republican William D. Workman showed strength in his race against Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D) but failed to round up enough votes effectively to challenge the veteran labor-supported senator.

Democrats won the six other governorships up this year and the other six Senate seats at stake.

Republican Jack Cox ran a strong race against former Navy Sec. John B. Connally for the gubernatorial chair in Texas but failed to show the support stemming from a reported switch by conservative Democrats.

Conservatives Matched

In the House, Republicans won seats in the 16th Texas District, 11th Florida District and the 8th and 9th Districts in North Carolina. Typical of the relatively no-choice contests was the race in the North Carolina 8th District, where Rep. A. Paul Kitchin (D) and Rep. Charles R. Jonas (R) were thrown together by redistricting. Both have solidly conservative records but Jonas won.

In the 88th Congress there will be 12 Republican congressmen from southern states: Florida, 2; North Carolina, 2; Oklahoma, 1; Tennessee, 3; Texas, 2; Virginia, 2.

Negroes Win Election To National, State Office

Voters have elected more Negroes than ever before to Congress and to important state offices.

Democrat Augustus F. Hawkins, Los Angeles, won a House seat in a new California district to become the first Negro congressman from that state. Four Negro House members won re-election—in New York City, Chicago, Detroit and Philadelphia.

Edward T. Brooke, Republican, was elected Massachusetts attorney general—the only GOP state candidate to win.

Connecticut voters, choosing between two Negroes for state treasurer, elected the Democrat, Gerald A. Lamb.

In Michigan, Democrat Otis M. Smith won a full term on the state Supreme Court.

In Georgia, Leroy A. Johnson, Atlanta Democrat, became the first member of his race in 50 years to win a state Senate seat.

Mrs. Charles E. White of Houston, Tex., only Negro member of the city Board of Education, retained her seat.

Redistricting Brings Shifts in House Seats

Most of the shifts in the political complexion of the House took place in the 25 states which gained or lost seats as a result of population changes.

In the nine states which gained representation in the new House, Democrats picked up 16 seats and the Republicans won five additional representatives. Not all of the changes in these states resulted from redistricting. In Maryland and Texas, for example, new at-large seats were won by Democrats, but Republicans defeated incumbent Democrats in unchanged districts to give the GOP a net gain while the Democratic strength remained the same.

In the 16 states which lost House seats, the net shift was a Democratic drop of 18 and a Republican loss of four.

Geographically the Democrats fared best in the West, where a pre-election Democratic margin of 25-22 in the area's congressional delegation leaped to 36-21. Both the before and after totals include the seat of the late Rep. Clem Miller (D-Calif.).

GOP Gains in South

The largest Republican pickup was in the South, where the 104-8 Democratic majority was trimmed to 100-12, a net gain of four for the GOP.

House shifts took place in the following states:

ALABAMA — Reapportionment cost the Democrats 1 seat.

ARKANSAS—A 2-seat Democratic loss through reapportionment.

ARIZONA—A Democrat won the state's new seat.

CALIFORNIA—The state picked up 8 seats, Democrats picked up 9, including the 1st District where a new election must be held because of Miller's death. Among incumbent Republicans defeated were two John Birchers—John H. Rousselot and Edgar W. Hiestand. Long-hospitalized Democratic Rep. D. S. Saund lost his bid for re-election.

CONNECTICUT—Democrat William St. Onge picked up a Republican seat.

FLORIDA—With four new seats at stake, Democrats gained 3, Republicans took 1.

HAWAII—The state's new seat went Democratic.

ILLINOIS—Redistricting was a major factor in a 1-seat pickup for the GOP, a 2-seat loss for the Democrats.

IOWA—The state's two Democratic congressmen were thrown into the same district; result, one less Democrat. Neal Smith was the survivor, Merwin Coad the casualty.

KANSAS—Redistricting cost the Democrats their lone congressman, J. Floyd Breeding.

KENTUCKY—New districts helped bring about a Democratic loss of 2, GOP gain of 1.

MAINE—From 3 seats to 2, still all Republican.

MARYLAND—New Frontiersman Carlton R. Sickles won the new at-large seat. But the Republicans gained 1 by defeating Democratic Rep. Thomas F. Johnson, hurt by a conflict-of-interest indictment.

MASSACHUSETTS — Each party gave up 1 seat here.

MICHIGAN—The new at-large seat was won by Democrat Neil Staebler.

MINNESOTA—Democrat Donald M. Fraser upset Republican Rep. Walter H. Judd as a 6-3 GOP margin became a 4-4 split (minus 2 Republicans, plus 1 Democrat).

MISSISSIPPI—Now there are only 5 Democrats, all Dixiecrats. The lone moderate was redistricted out.

MISSOURI—One less seat, 1 less Democrat.

NEBRASKA—One less seat, 1 less Republican.

NEW JERSEY—Democrats won the added district, also filled a vacancy last held by a Democrat.

NEW YORK—The GOP gerrymander wasn't as effective as anticipated. Two Democratic districts were abolished but the Republicans failed to gain any seats.

NORTH CAROLINA—One less seat, 2 conservative Democrats less, 1 more conservative Republican.

OHIO—Robert Taft, Jr., won the at-large seat for the Republicans, Democratic Rep. Robert E. Cook lost to Oliver P. Bolton, an ex-GOP congressman whose mother also serves in the House (minus 1 Democrat, plus 2 Republicans).

OREGON—It's now 3 Democrats instead of 2.

PENNSYLVANIA — The state lost 3 seats, Republicans 2, Democrats 1. In a battle of two incumbents, Democrat George M. Rhodes beat Republican Ivor D. Fenton.

TENNESSEE—Add a Republican, subtract a Democrat.

TEXAS—One more Texas-style Republican.

UTAH — The Democrats lost their two seats to the GOP.

WASHINGTON—The GOP gained a seat at the expense of Democrat Don Magnuson.

WEST VIRGINIA—Veteran Democrat Cleveland M. Bailey was the victim of the state's 1-seat loss.

Split Ballots Re-Elect Incumbents In Mid-Atlantic Election Contests

It was a good year for incumbents in the six mid-Atlantic states of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware.

Democrats and Republicans each re-elected a governor and a senator—Governors Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) in New York and J. Millard Tawes (D) in Maryland, Senators Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.)

The two major statewide races not involving incumbents were split. The GOP captured the politically-powerful statehouse in Pennsylvania, ending eight years of Democratic governorships, as William W. Scranton ran far ahead of his ticket to win by 470,000—55 percent of the vote.

In Maryland a liberal Democratic congressman, Daniel B. Brewster, easily won the senatorial seat vacated by arch-conservative Republican John Marshall Butler. Brewster's 174,000-vote margin represented more than 60 percent of the vote.

Rockefeller's victory in New York was by a considerably smaller margin than his supporters had anticipated. Not only did his 518,000 plurality slip below 1958, but his vote-getting ability was dwarfed both by Javits, who won with 975,000 votes to spare, and Democratic Controller Arthur Levitt, who was swept back into office with a nearly 800,000-vote majority.

While the new Conservative Party—founded by Republicans who considered Rockefeller and Javits "too liberal"—did not affect the election results, the 119,000 votes it polled for its gubernatorial candidate assured it of a permanent place on the ballot.

Reapportionment was chiefly responsible for changes in the congressional picture as the area's representation dropped from 101 to 97 in the House. The pre-election division was 53 Democrats, 47 Republicans and one vacancy in New Jersey last held by a Democrat. The new lineup is 51-46 Democratic.

The Republicans failed to pick up extra House seats they had hoped would result from their gerrymander of New York's congressional districts, and the Democratic loss was limited to the two-seat drop in the delegation.

In Pennsylvania, Scranton's coattails proved too short to give much help to congressional candidates as Clark and 13 Democratic congressmen won handily, forcing the GOP to absorb the loss of two of the three House seats taken from the state by reapportionment.

Delaware's lone congressman, Democrat Harris B. McDowell, Jr., elected by the thinnest of margins in 1958 and 1960, won a third term by a more comfortable plurality.

New Jersey's new seat was won handily by Democrat Joseph G. Minish, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson Labor Council. Maryland's extra seat was won in an at-large race by Democrat Carlton R. Sickles. The Republicans picked up a Maryland district mostly as a result of the pre-election indictment of Rep. Thomas F. Johnson in the state's savings and loan scandals.

In West Virginia, redistricting cost the seat of Democrat Cleveland M. Bailey, an eight-term liberal who was second in seniority on the House Education & Labor Committee.

capture the Pennsylvania governorship.

Eliminated from the scene, however, was Nixon, who lost by more than 300,000 votes to Gov. Edmund G. Brown.

In what he called his "swan song," Nixon bitterly castigated the press at a news conference and declared: "You won't have Nixon to kick around much longer."

The Republicans also scored a major victory in Ohio, where State Auditor James A. Rhodes lived up to his vote-gathering reputation, defeating the Democratic incumbent, Michael V. Di Salle, by more than a half-million votes.

The GOP followed a mountain states Republican trend into the state houses in Colorado, where John A. Love defeated incumbent Gov. Stephen L. R. McNichols, and in Wyoming, where Clifford Hansen, a rancher, beat Acting Gov. Jack Gage.

In Oklahoma, former State Rep. Henry Bellmon capitalized on Democratic factionalism and local issues to defeat W. P. Atkinson and become the state's first Republican governor.

Races Are Close

For the Democrats, Endicott Peabody clung to an upset margin of less than 3,500 votes over Massachusetts Republican Gov. John A. Volpe and there was a strong possibility that Volpe would seek a recount.

Recounts also were in prospect in Vermont, where Philip H. Hoff edged Gov. F. Ray Keyser to reverse a Republican tradition that has stood for 109 years; in Maine, where Gov. John H. Reed defeated his Democratic opponent, Maynard C. Dolloff by about 300 votes, and in Minnesota where Lt. Gov. Karl Rolvaag, Democratic-Farmer-Labor candidate, and incumbent Gov. Elmer L. Andersen were locked in a neck-and-neck race which may not be determined for weeks.

Solid Democratic victories were posted, however, in New Hampshire, where John W. King, minority leader of the General Assembly, defeated the majority leader, John Pillsbury; in Hawaii, where John A. Burns was successful in his second bid for the governorship over William F. Quinn, the victorious 1959 candidate; in Iowa, where Harold E. Hughes unseated Republican Norman A. Erbe, and in New Mexico, where Jack M. Campbell ousted the GOP incumbent, Edwin L. Mechem.

The Rhode Island race still was in doubt as the AFL-CIO went to press. Democratic Gov. John A. Notte, Jr. held a 166-vote lead over John H. Chaffee, but some 7,000 absentee ballots remain to be counted, including more than 900 from servicemen who have until Nov. 21 to return them.

Three Democratic governors in the South had no Republican opposition—George C. Wallace in Alabama, Carl E. Sanders in Georgia and Donald S. Russell in South Carolina.

The Democrats also elected former Navy Sec. John B. Connally in Texas and State Atty. Gen. John W. Reynolds in Wisconsin against strong Republican opposition

Incumbents returned to office by the party included William A. Egan (Alaska), Orval E. Faubus (Ark.), John N. Dempsey (Conn.), J. Millard Tawes (Md.), Frank B. Morrison (Neb.), Grant Sawyer (Nev.), William L. Guy (N.D.), and Frank G. Clement (Tenn.).

Republicans re-elected included Paul Fannin (Ariz.), Robert E. Smylie (Ida.), John Anderson Jr. (Kan.), Mark O. Hatfield (Ore.) and Archie M. Gubbrud (S.D.).

Auto Caravan Carries Food To Strikers

Hastings, Minn.—A caravan of about 50 cars and trucks, laden with canned goods and other food and manned by union members from the Twin Cities area, brought needed relief and heartening cheer to the 400 striking members of Oil Workers Local 6-717 at the Smead Manufacturing Co. plant here.

The gifts came from the St. Paul Trades & Labor Assembly and many of its affiliates, including five OCAW locals; the six locals in Machinists District 7; Roofers Local 96; Public Employes Local 8; Lathers Local 483; Packinghouse Workers Local 167; Bookbinders Local 14, and Local 110 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The food was stored for the time being in strike headquarters, which are in the garage of Mr. and Mrs. Hy Linsted.

When the strike began, the union was unable to have a headquarters near the plant because of a narrow state highway in front of it and the fact that the company owns the land across the road. State police forced the union to take down two pup tents it had erected to give pickets a measure of protection from rain.

The workers were befriended by Mr. and Mrs. Linsted, owners of the house closest to the struck plant, who opened their garage for use as headquarters and gave the union free use of their home and their telephone. Neither is a member of the union or an employe of the Smead plant.

NLRB Sets Aside 'Superseniority'

"Superseniority" for strikebreakers again has been struck down by the National Labor Relations Board in an order awarding up to $20,000 in lost pay to strikers whom an Alabama company refused to recall when the strike ended.

A board panel of three members approved a stipulation under which the Independent Lock Co. of Alabama settled a charge of unfair labor practices brought by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at Selma, Ala.

IUE Local 793 struck the plant during a contract dispute a year ago and was out eight days. Most of the strikers were not recalled, and replacements were hired instead. Management now has agreed to recall those who have been replaced, firing strikebreakers and new employes if necessary, and to put all others on a preferential rehiring list. Workers entitled to back pay will get 10 percent now, the balance within six months.

Work Stoppages Show Slight Drop In August

Work stoppages and man-days of idleness in labor disputes in August showed a slight drop from July, according to a preliminary estimate by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Radical Right Loses 2 House Seats

The radical right lost its congressional foothold in the elections with the defeat of two John Birch Society members in California. But in New York, the new Conservative Party secured enough votes to win a permanent place on the ballot.

Republican Reps. John H. Rousselot and Edgar W. Hiestand of California, both avowed Birchers, were defeated in their re-election bids. A third Republican Bircher in California was turned back by Democrat George E. Brown. In Texas another Bircher seeking a congressional seat under the Republican banner was routed by Democrat Rep. Walter Rogers.

The Conservative Party in New York won about 119,000 votes for its gubernatorial candidate, David H. Jaquith, short of the 200,000 the party anticipated but more than the 50,000 needed to win a permanent place on the state ballot for the party.

Democrats Pick Up 4 Seats in Senate

Gain Gives New Backing To Kennedy

the victory of Wisconsin Gov. Gaylord Nelson over the veteran Alexander Wiley, dean of Senate Republicans.

In South Dakota, former Rep. George McGovern posted a hair's breadth margin of 273 votes over the GOP's Joe H. Bottum, who had been appointed a few months ago to succeed the late Sen. Francis Case. Both sides leveled charges of voting irregularities and Bottum announced he would contest the result.

McIntyre Beats Bass

For the first time since 1936, normally Republican New Hampshire will send a Democrat to Washington. Granite State voters chose Thomas J. McIntyre, 46-year-old former Laconia mayor and an all-out supporter of the Kennedy program, to fill the seat held by Maurice J. Murphy, Jr., since the death of Sen. Styles Bridges. McIntyre benefited from a bitter Republican feud to edge conservative Rep. Perkins Bass.

Retiring Republicans also were replaced by Democrats in Connecticut, where former Gov. Abraham Ribicoff took a close race from Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, and in Maryland, where liberal Rep. Daniel B. Brewster led his ticket in defeating former Rep. Edward T. Miller, an arch-conservative.

Famous names focused national attention on the Massachusetts Senate race, but to most observers the contest never was in doubt and Edward M. Kennedy, youngest brother of the President, turned back George Cabot Lodge, son of the former ambassador to the United Nations, by an expectedly big margin.

It was closer in Pennsylvania, but Sen. Joseph S. Clark escaped the voter disaffection that lost the state house for the Democrats. He defeated his GOP challenger, Rep. James E. Van Zandt.

Javits 'Wins Big'

The GOP had its own big winner—Sen. Jacob K. Javits of New York, who bested James B. Donovan by nearly a million votes and in the process out-polled his running mate and presidential hopeful, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

Democratic disappointments included the failure of Kentucky's Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt to overcome Sen. Thruston B. Morton, former chairman of the Republican National Committee; the loss of Rep. Gracie Pfost by a slim margin in her bid for Idaho's short-term Senate seat held by Republican Len B. Jordan; and failure of normal Democratic margins to develop in Chicago for Rep. Sidney R. Yates in his long battle to upset Illinois Sen. Everett McK. Dirksen, the Senate minority leader.

Rising Republican strength in the South was evident in a strong challenge to Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama, who emerged with a razor-thin margin from a race in doubt until the last votes were counted. Another southern moderate, Sen. Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina, staved off a conservative GOP effort with less difficulty.

The election in Hawaii will give the Senate its first Nisei, Rep. Daniel K. Inouye, who succeeds retiring Sen. Oren E. Long to keep the seat in the Democratic column.

Midwest Voters Edge Back Toward GOP

Voters of the 13-state Midwest, stretching from the Appalachians to the Rocky Mountains, turned ever so slightly back to the area's traditional Republican moorings on Nov. 6, but the trend was neither uniform nor did it indicate profound changes in feeling.

The biggest Republican gains came when automobile maker George Romney beat incumbent Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson in Michigan and State Auditor James A. Rhodes overwhelmed Democratic Gov. Michael V. DiSalle in Ohio.

Swainson, who won the governorship in a desperately close race in 1960 as successor to former Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams, lost this year to Romney's well-planned and well-financed campaign by an unofficial margin of about 90,000 votes, although other Democratic statewide candidates won their races.

Swainson's financial program had been turned down by the Republican state senate, although Romney is expected to advance approximately the same program.

Di Salle became vulnerable when the Democratic organization disintegrated, and this year the effective liberal support he had in 1958, when a proposed "right-to-work" law was endorsed by Republican candidates, was less evident.

Some GOP Losses

In the governorships, however, the GOP suffered one upset loss. Iowa's voters turned out Republican Gov. Norman A. Erbe and replaced him with Democrat Harold E. Hughes, the state's commerce commissioner, by 40,000 votes.

Left unsettled was a race between Karl Rolvaag, labor-backed Democratic lieutenant governor for the past eight years, and Republican incumbent Elmer L. Andersen.

In the Senate races, Democrats scored three major victories—starting with only two of the 11 Senate seats up this year and emerging with five.

A 34-year-old state representative, Democrat Birch Bayh, Jr., defeated three-term incumbent Republican Sen. Homer W. Capehart, who made what he called Pres. Kennedy's "softness toward Castro" his central campaign theme in Indiana. Bayh, pulling heavy votes in normally Republican small towns and rural areas, beat him by a vote of 904,000 to 894,000.

In another upset, Democratic Gov. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin ended the Senate career of Republican Sen. Alexander Wiley, who has served four full terms and was seeking a fifth. Wiley, whose campaign activities exposed a certain petulance toward the process, lost by a margin tallied unofficially at about 50,000 votes.

The third Democratic victory came in South Dakota, where former U.S. Rep. George McGovern narrowly defeated interim Republican Sen. Joe H. Bottum. A recount is in prospect.

McGovern, who lost by a close vote two years ago to Republican Sen. Karl Mundt, has been serving as Food for Peace director in the Kennedy Administration. His victory over Bottum, rated a strong campaigner, was particularly remarkable because he survived a brief illness and hospitalization within a month of the election.

In the House, Republicans scored a net gain of only one—leaving them with a substantial majority of 80 in the area as against 52 for the Democrats, but they scored few knockouts against Democratic incumbents.

The Democrats dropped a net of five seats but all five were attributable to reapportionment. Seven of the states lost one seat each after the 1960 census and two—Michigan and Ohio—picked up one seat each, which were contested at large.

Staebler Wins

Neil Staebler, former Democratic state chairman, won the Michigan at-large race, defeating former Republican Rep. Alvin Bentley, who two years ago was also beaten in a try for the Senate.

Ohio sent Robert A. Taft, Jr., son of the late senator, to the House in the new at-large race in that state. Taft, who has served eight years in the legislature, easily beat his Democratic opponent, Richard D. Kennedy.

In the Midwest's most spectacular single House race, veteran Republican Rep. Walter Judd of Minnesota was defeated in the state's new 5th District (Minneapolis).

He was beaten by Donald Fraser, a labor-backed Administration supporter who centered his attack on Judd's opposition to social security health care and other domestic issues, and upset pre-election polls.

A three-term liberal Democrat, Rep. Frank W. Burke, was beaten in Kentucky's 3rd District (Louisville) by a self-described Goldwater-type conservative Republican, M. G. (Gene) Snyder, who was rated the beneficiary of an unusually large Louisville margin for Republican Sen. Thruston Morton over Kentucky's Lieut. Gov. Wilson Wyatt, the Democratic challenger.

The Republican Senate leader, Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, was re-elected by a 300,000-vote margin over Democratic Rep. Sidney R. Yates.

Long Re-elected

Sen. Edward V. Long of Missouri won handsomely, 625,000 to 490,000 on incomplete returns, from a conservative Republican opponent, Crosby Kemper, whose campaign promoted some factionalism in his own party. Also re-elected was conservative Democratic Sen. Frank W. Lausche of Ohio, who defeated John Marshall Briley by nearly 700,000 votes, on the complete unofficial count.

Republican incumbent senators in the Midwest re-elected included Bourke B. Hickenlooper in Iowa, winner by 57,000 votes; Milton Young in North Dakota; and Frank Carlson and James B. Pearson in Kansas.

Republican governors re-elected included John Anderson, Jr., in Kansas and Archie Gubbrud in South Dakota. Democrats re-elected were Governors William L. Guy in North Dakota and Frank B. Morrison in Nebraska.

The 1962 Elections

THE MOST SIGNIFICANT factor in the 1962 election results is that the conservative coalition has been stopped cold and rolled back slightly.

The intense and vigorous campaign waged by GOP conservatives and southern Democrats against the liberal programs of the Kennedy Administration failed. The Administration scored a net gain in both the House and Senate in support for its policies.

Where the Republican Party triumphed in state house races, the candidates were of the moderate or mildly liberal stripe. The GOP gains in the South, both in actual victories and an increased vote, demonstrated only that a long overdue realignment is in the making, with conservative Democrats identifying themselves finally with the GOP.

The stemming of the conservative drive, led forcefully by former Pres. Eisenhower and Vice Pres. Nixon, shares top billing in the election results with the Administration's real upset of the off-year election tradition that the party in power loses strength in Congress. This "law" of political life had held up since 1934, when FDR's New Deal program won strong mid-term support from the voters.

In the 1962 election, the Administration not only picked up program support in Congress but the Democratic Party gained seats in the Senate and held the Republicans in the House to an anticipated gain of two seats.

This holds particular interest also because the reshifting of many congressional district lines based on 1960 census figures favored the election of conservative Republican congressmen in the new districts on the basis of past voting history, etc.

TURNING BACK the conservative drive, however, does not automatically provide the needed gain of liberal votes in the House —the graveyard of liberal programs in the past two years. There will be an intensive struggle in the 88th Congress for the liberal measures the nation so badly needs to cut unemployment, improve social welfare programs and move forward on civil rights.

There is a new opportunity to build liberal strength on the record of the 88th Congress.

If 1962 holds out any promise for the future it is that the voters will support in 1964 a Congress that enacts the Administration's programs in the next two years.

THE DEFEAT of Richard Nixon in his bid for the governorship of California is perhaps one of the most important elements in the turning back of the conservative drive.

Since his emergence on the national scene as a Republican congressman from California, Nixon has mouthed the words of a moderate but in fact, since 1952, has been an effective leader of the conservative coalition.

But beyond this he has spread through American political life the technique of the campaign based on the innuendo, the half-truth, the smear. His removal from the political scene by the voters of California can only result in a healthier political climate throughout the nation.

Church Group Speaks:

Poverty 'No Longer Necessary,' Is Called Ethically Intolerable

The following is excerpted from a report issued by the Division of Christian Life & Work and the Division of Home Missions of the National Council of Churches entitled "The Churches and Persistent Pockets of Poverty in the USA." The report is not an official statement of the National Council or its constituent member churches.

POVERTY PUTS severe strain upon the family, already threatened by the rapid changes of modern life. It leads often to the disruption of family patterns, the accentuation of tensions between husband and wife or between the generations, desertion or divorce, illegitimacy and the loss of privacy and dignity in a crowded home.

Poverty means deprivation for the community: poor schools with high drop-out rates, the social costs of bad health and crime, the thwarting of human capabilities and the loss of their potential contribution, excessive mobility, intensified class stratification, deprivation of public services, loss of able leadership, and inability to attract the industries that might rescue the community from its plight.

Poverty means trouble for the entire nation: class divisions leading to class conflict; attenuation of educational and cultural services; the weakening of economic growth, national security, democratic processes, and political stability; a lessened capacity to contribute to the welfare, peace, and freedom of the world.

Poverty also has serious consequences for the Church. Its outreach is seriously restricted in depressed areas. Some churches and church programs, while rendering important service, often tend to reinforce separation of rich and poor, white and non-white, both in the community and in the household of faith. More serious, the churches are frequently unable to provide adequate ministries in depressed areas because of inadequate financial support and the lack of well-trained and dedicated leadership. At the same time we recognize with appreciation the relevant, dedicated and effective ministries which have been provided by churches of various cultural backgrounds.

While the church must forever seek effective ways of bearing relevant witness to the poor through the word, the sacraments and the works of Christian charity, such ministries may never be the substitutes for vigorous and imaginative support of public policies and programs designed to remove the causes of poverty and to rehabilitate its victims. Poverty is a "luxury" neither the church nor the nation can afford. . . .

AMERICAN SOCIETY has not been indifferent to the problem of poverty. Efforts to alleviate, prevent, and cure it have taken the forms of individual charity, organized private welfare, public assistance, social insurance, and other public programs.

These measures have made important contributions in cushioning the effects of poverty. By maintaining the family's or individual's purchasing power in the crises of unemployment and old age, unemployment insurance and social security have not only reduced the hardship on those directly concerned but have mitigated the spread of distress to others. Training programs have, in individual cases, helped to cure economic distress.

None of these methods, however, nor all of them together, have thus far offered a broad cure and elimination of poverty. In order to move toward this goal, these programs need regularly to be reexamined—some to be changed, others to be abandoned, and some new ones perhaps to be initiated. The magnitude of this continuing problem requires the cooperation of private and public agencies at the local, state and national level.

Today, for the first time in human history, the great productive potential of our economy and the creative imagination of our citizenry provide the means to eradicate poverty and alleviate its evil consequences.

In view of the rapidly increasing economic interdependence of our world, America's plans for the elimination of poverty can no longer be nationalistic or isolated. They must take account of the tragic depths of poverty which characterize wide stretches of the globe.

America and other highly developed countries possess the productive and technical skills which, if fully applied, could drastically reduce and eventually eliminate poverty from our world.

We affirm the crucial responsibility of all church agencies and of all local congregations to engage in systematic efforts to increase awareness of the extent of persistent poverty in the United States and its effect upon persons, families, communities, and the nation. The fact of poverty and the possibility of its elimination should be understood and interpreted in the light of our Christian faith. Because poverty is no longer necessary, it is ethically intolerable.

Morgan Says:

Mariann Is Told that Life Holds More Than Love and Laughter

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

I GOT A LETTER from a girl named Mariann in Laramie, Wyo., written when the world was holding its breath in fear of war over Cuba. Eased though the latest crisis may be, she raised points which in their penetratingly personal way are as vital as any White House announcement or Kremlin communique and demanding, therefore, attention both urgent and tender because they go to the heart of the matter—the fate of the human race in face of the cataclysm the next time around.

Morgan

"Being too young to remember World War II," she wrote, "and too young to have understood the Korean conflict, on the eve of perhaps another war, I need the answers to some questions. I don't need to ask what war is. It is cold fact. I don't need to ask why there is war. History and psychology give as good answers as can be given. I do need to ask this: what attitude can one take toward war? How can you face tragedy, fear, sorrow, and anger if you have never known them?

"I am 19, a college student, married. How can I stand to see my husband die? What must I do to preserve my sanity and emotional balance when the world is crazy and aflame? How can I face my shattered plans and build new ones not knowing what tomorrow will be?

"The answers to these questions must partly be found inside myself, I know, but also we, of my generation, need to hear advice from those who have lived in war-time." . . .

Do I hear any volunteers?

Mariann's questions, of course, are ageless and they measure, with shame for us all, the imperceptible progress mankind has made toward real maturity and wisdom.

As the Washington Post put it, "We have escaped this time," but in view of the dismaying evidence that the existence of thermonuclear power has not transformed the dynamics of power politics in the world, "it will not be wise to turn back, in relief and in prayer to the tasks and occupations and diversions that engaged us before there was a Cuban crisis. Men of good will everywhere must seek an alternative to war and the threat of war as an instrument of policy. Until and unless this is done, the only choice vouchsafed to mankind, in the end, may be the right to choose the crisis that will not yield to conciliation and compromise."

And that, frankly, is not a very safe or appealing choice.

STILL, IN CONSIDERING Mariann's persistent questions, it gains us nothing but disaster to turn away from the threat of war as if its new horrors automatically canceled out the threat. It is monstrous that war and the threat of war are still the instruments of policy. It is monstrous but it is a fact. And it was that fact that Pres. Kennedy bravely faced last week. Those of his countrymen who criticize him, those in Britain and elsewhere who condemn him, should more clearly and honestly remember Munich. If the democracies, ours included, had shown the will to fight soon enough and had stiffened it with timely preparation, Hitler's madness might conceivably have been held in leash without war.

But if the overly idealistic have not learned that appeasement is not only not restraining poison but meat to the aggressor, the warhawks have not learned much either. They refuse to see or have not realized that the path along the brink was narrowed. Their slings and arrows are now equipped with nuclear warheads and to aim them wantonly down the other side is the bravado of fools.

Khrushchev is not exactly the western ideal of a reasonable man but he gave new evidence of not being a madman either. He knows how narrow the path along the brink has become and he must have watched with growing respect as Kennedy trod without faltering.

If he did there should be fresh hope and new impetus toward lowering other world pressure points still dangerously near the boil. But the hope should not be wild and giddy, for the impetus is bound to get bogged down again in the tedium of negotiation and the stubborn treachery of man's relations with man. It is the thrusting paradox of that peculiar substance called the human spirit that it can be summoned to the noblest heights of courage, sacrifice and selflessness in a crisis—a crisis which need not have come if only those heights could have been approached without it.

It is this towering irony that Mariann of Laramie is rebelling against. She will learn to face tragedy, fear, sorrow, anger and even a good deal of danger because they are the stuff of life along with its bits of beauty, love and laughter. But what she and the rest of us must refuse to adjust to is the monumental folly of mankind's self-destruction and in the respite that has been given us we must refuse with a little more purpose and perspicacity than we have shown in the past.

Harrison Tells Management Parley:

Labor and Industry Must Share Automation's Job-Loss Problem

EMPLOYERS should be as concerned as unions with finding solutions to the job-displacement problems of automation, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks declared recently in Washington.

Harrison, an AFL-CIO vice president, told a management conference that "what ails the national economy is lack of customers" and not "lack of efficiency."

"All the scientific progress you can muster, all the productivity increases you achieve, all the cuts in unit labor costs you can bring about, will be meaningless without full employment."

Noting that the conference on transportation and cargo-handling problems had on the agenda the question of whether "labor" will "meet the challenge" posed by the changing nature of the work force, Harrison told the group:

"I agree that we are faced with that challenge; but so are you."

He said unions recognize that the problem is more far-reaching than merely that of recruiting white collar workers, technicians and engineers "so as to maintain or increase the membership in trade unions."

Neither is it enough, he said, "for management to exercise all its ingenuity to make its operations more efficient."

WHILE THE LABOR movement is aware of the broad range of the automation challenge, Harrison told the employers' group:

"There are far too many in your ranks who do think it is enough to apply in ever-increasing degree the substitution of machines for men. There lies the great difference between us."

In addition to governmental action which is needed, Harrison said, private employers must accept "responsibility" for the solution of social consequences resulting from automation.

He suggested as guidelines:

- Employers contemplating technological change should consider "any adverse effect upon employment opportunities and dislocation of the work force" as "part of the real cost of making the change."
- Timing of changes so that normal attrition and expansion would "preserve work opportunities."
- Advance retraining of employes wherever possible, and relocation "without any financial burden to the worker."
- Wage rates should reflect the new skills and increased productivity.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE LIFE OF THE GOVERNORS of the states is not a happy one under present circumstances. The Republican gains over Democratic governors in the industrial states were more than matched by a revolt against Republican incumbents in New England and scattered other states ranging from the Midwest to far-off Hawaii.

In an election in which the major parties fought to almost a dead standoff in Congress, a great many incumbent governors took a beating.

This is another "hate-the-governors" year, just as 1960 was, remarked one certified Washington political analyst. And why do the voters "hate the governors"? Because the state executive who tries to meet the need for more schools, higher pay for teachers, better roads, expanded and improved mental health programs, consumer programs, is compelled to seek new and higher taxes.

The voters are showing—and have been showing by the frequency with which they defeat proposed bond issues that in the past they would have approved—that they don't like any more state taxes.

NOT ALL INCUMBENT governors were beaten, of course, on Nov. 6. Gov. Edmund G. Brown scored a resounding victory over the formidable former Vice Pres. Nixon in California and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller won re-election in the country's other largest state, New York. Incumbent Democrats and Republicans managed to hang on in Maryland, Kansas, Nebraska, Arizona, and—of course—Democrats won in the traditionally Democratic southern states.

But in the 29 states outside the Solid South, the party out of power won the governorship in 12, and in others the races were very close.

This is an extraordinary shift of the outs against the ins—the more so because in other offices 1962 was not particularly a bad year for incumbents, in the House or in state offices generally.

Two Democratic senators, John Carroll of Colorado and J. J. Hickey, went down in the general Republican Mountain State tide. Democrats gained six formerly Republican seats, but three were to replace retiring or deceased senators. GOP incumbents to lose were Homer W. Capehart in Indiana and the venerable Alexander Wiley in Wisconsin, who were defeated by able, attractive and far younger opponents, and Joe Bottum of South Dakota, who was recently appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Sen. Francis Case.

The choice of the governors is a difficult one. If they try to raise taxes for more revenue to support better state services, they invite defeat. If they ignore the problems of their states, they invite defeat for lack of the moral courage to lead.

THE SAME PATTERN was observable in 1960. The Democrats threw Republicans out of the state houses in seven states; the Republicans won six governorships previously held by Democrats. Twenty-seven state houses were at stake outside the South, and the incumbent party lost in 13.

In the case of Orville Freeman of Minnesota, who had been given high marks by objective observers, he was the victim of his conviction that a state income tax was needed. In the case of Gov. John B. Swainson of Michigan this year, he became the victim of the resentment of suburban voters living near Detroit who detest the city's tax on income they earn in the city. (He was also the victim of the Republican legislature's refusal to let him get through a new state revenue plan.)

The turnover does not suggest that running for governor can be viewed by ambitious public figures at a high road to a long career.

Neither does it suggest that local governments can legitimately raise much of a clamor about "states' rights" and indulge in the shallow argument that the states can meet problems cheaper and better than the federal government can. They aren't doing it.

This is entirely apart from the other factor that the federal tax system is more equitable than the tax systems of the states, because the federal government gets more of its revenue from graduated levies on those with greater ability to pay.

"Shall we say $50 a month retroactive to the first of last month, Mr. Bullard?"

How to Buy:

'Convenience Foods' Dearer Than U. S. Pamphlet Indicates

By Sidney Margolius

THE U. S. AGRICULTURE DEPT. is distributing a new pamphlet called "Convenience Foods In The Grocery Basket." It can mislead you into unnecessary extra food costs if you take it too literally.

This latest effort by the department to push convenience foods claims that "in the quantities purchased by this country's discriminating housewives," convenience foods actually save you money as well as time.

But analysis by this department, and questioning of the USDA Economic Research Service, shows that these conclusions are based in some part on fallacious comparisons. The government economists just were not comparing the same qualities.

We're here to testify that although some convenience foods cost little or no more than their home-prepared counterparts, most cost much more, and you still can save money by doing your own cooking. Nor is the saving of time as much as the Agriculture Dept.'s survey claims.

In fact, that consumer-minded lady Senator, Maurine Neuberger (D) of Oregon, who does her own cooking, is so perturbed about this pamphlet that she has raised serious questions about the department's approach to consumer information about manufactured foods. Mrs. Neuberger is especially concerned that moderate-income families may be misled into making uneconomical purchases. She points out as one questionable example that the USDA compares canned beef stew with home-prepared beef stew to show that the canned stew costs less. Obviously there can be wide differences in the quality of the two versions of beef stew.

MAIN DISHES: As well as the beef stew, the USDA claims that a 6.6 ounce serving of chicken chow mein costs 66 cents for the canned type; 85 cents for frozen chow mein and $1.02 for home-prepared. But when we questioned the department, it admitted that in the examples of home-prepared beef stew and chicken chow mein, the standard home recipe did contain more meat. You bet it does.

We have a sample of frozen chicken chow mein right here as this is written. The label lists the ingredients in order of importance as "celery, onions, chicken . . ." etc. That means there are more each of celery and onions than chicken.

COFFEE: The USDA includes instant coffee as a convenience food. In fact, the lower cost of instant coffee is one of the chief reasons why the survey concludes that convenience foods in the quantities usually bought are cheaper than cooking yourself. It is true that many families do use instant coffee to save both time and money. But most users, in this department's experience, do not consider that it has the same flavor as home-brewed coffee.

VEGETABLES: The department also compares dehydrated potatoes with fresh mashed potatoes. But it does not point out that the fresh mashed potatoes retain more of their vitamin C.

The survey also reports that it is cheaper to serve frozen or canned corn than fresh corn cut from the cob, and you save time, too. Canned corn takes one minute to prepare and frozen, eight minutes from refrigerator to stove, while fresh corn takes 21 minutes to husk, trim and cut from the cob. But let alone the fact that the fresh corn has more vitamin value, who buys corn on the cob to slice the corn off before eating?

FRUITS: Another big saving in money and time is shown in the survey by the use of frozen orange juice compared to home-squeezed. The USDA survey finds that frozen juice costs 16 cents and takes two minutes to prepare; canned, 15 cents, one-quarter minute; store-squeezed, 28 cents, one-quarter minute; home-squeezed, 30 cents, four minutes.

But the USDA economists could as well have classified the frozen concentrate as the home prepared version, and the store-squeezed as the convenience version. Then its whole survey would have collapsed because it wouldn't have been able to show this single big saving. Or if it had considered that the fresh orange might be served whole to a family's kids instead of squeezed into juice, its claim of time saving also would have collapsed. Here, too, the USDA has omitted to say that the fresh orange juice has more vitamin C.

This is not to deny the value in time of some prepared foods. Of the popular mixes, pie mix seems to have most time saving. The department found an incomplete mix (prepared from crust mix and dried apples) costs no more than home-prepared but saves 12 minutes. However, a complete mix (prepared from crust mix and canned apple mix) does cost more. Frozen apple pies were found to cost less than ready-to-serve pies.

From Soup to Nonsense

Virtue Can Be Its Own Reward Just So Long as It's Loud Enough

By Jane Goodsell

EVERYONE THESE DAYS is giving up someing. My best friend has given up cigarettes, and she says she feels like a new woman. She looks like one, too. She's gained 15 pounds.

My uncle has given up coffee, and now he says that he sleeps like a baby. It's a fact. He does. He had dinner at our house the other evening, and he dozed off during dessert.

Now, don't get me wrong. I have nothing but admiration for people who have the will-power to give up their bad habits. I give them full credit. What I can't give them is my undivided attention when they talk about it—which is practically all the time. I'm tired of listening to people who buttonhole me to boast that they've gone on a low-fat diet or given up smoking or sworn off drinking.

I'd like to be able to light up a cigarette without being reproached by an ex-smoker who eyes me sorrowfully as he recounts the inspirational saga of his successful fight to break the nicotine habit and begs me to follow suit. I'd like to eat a chocolate eclair without being lectured by a low-fat zealot on the perils of cholesterol.

I think it's high time people stop talking about the things they've given up, and start talking about something else. As a subject for conversation, I rank How I Broke Myself of the Habit on a par with My Gall Bladder Operation.

I REMEMBER WHEN I used to love parties. People talked about all sorts of things—baseball, politics, movies, sex, real estate. They exchanged jokes and gossip and recipes. Today parties are like group-therapy sessions.

Everybody sits around swapping melancholy statistics on life expectancy rates, comparing cholesterol levels and bragging about how long it's been since they smoked a cigarette or ate butter.

These dreary confessionals don't inspire me to give up coffee, cigarettes and poly-saturated fats. But lately I've begun to wonder. Maybe I'll give up people who have given up something.

8,598 More Classrooms Needed in Just 1 State

Indianapolis—Indiana's education system needed 8,598 school rooms as of last May 1 to bring it up to generally accepted standards, according to an account of a poll of school superintendents printed recently in News and Views, bimonthly organ of the Indiana AFL-CIO.

Mayor Says:

'Diffused' City Rule Barrier to Planning

THE MAYOR OF A LARGE American city is of the opinion that in many cities, government is so "diffused" among many boards and agencies that it is difficult to get any organized action for municipal planning.

While problems of city welfare, taxation, redevelopment, traffic and education have grown more complicated, Mayor Arthur Naftalin of Minneapolis says, the prevalence of "weak-mayor" systems, lack of civic leadership and rurally-dominated legislatures have hampered efforts to find solutions.

Naftalin's views appear in an interview issued by the Center for Democratic Institutions.

Many American cities, he says, including Minneapolis, are beset by problems of leadership because legislative and administrative responsibility is divided among dozens of agencies.

One of the most serious difficulties of the city is that its economic and political life is "inextricably bound up with its future relationships with the suburbs," yet city governments do not have the authority to deal with their problems on a metropolitan basis, Naftalin says.

"Each municipality has its own police force. Yet we know that about 30 percent of the people we apprehend in Minneapolis live in the suburbs. Sewage disposal is another clear-cut case. . . . Water supply is clearly a metropolitan problem."

The mayor declares that cities are being forced into economic competition with the suburbs for new factories and businesses, that they are losing their younger population to the city's outlying areas, and that these trends have a ruinous effect. He sees no "ultimate solution to the overall problem."

"You can't go on indefinitely contracting out your waterworks to suburban communities," he said. "Sooner or later you face the problem of controlling the rate structure and of insuring the water supply, of preventing pollution, of capital outlay for expansion of the central waterworks."

Most cities are just "patching up" their problems, not solving them, he thinks.

Many of the cities' troubles, he says, arise because "our legislatures reflect rural control and have been relatively indifferent to the plight of the cities." This has "prevented aggressive action on the municipal level."

Naftalin regards the automobile as a menace which causes "frustration and fumes," and "eats up space." He says the freeway "is no solution because it generates an even greater flow of traffic."

One need of the city is a national tax structure which would help remove "the grossest forms of competition among municipalities in one metropolitan area," he declares.

Hospital Bias Ban Hailed by GHAA

Enactment of a law by Nassau County, N. Y., prohibiting discrimination by hospitals against physicians associated with group medical plans has been hailed by the Group Health Association of America as "a major service to doctors and patients alike."

Dr. Frederick D. Mott of Detroit, GHAA president, sent telegrams of congratulation to Palmer D. Farrington, Hempstead, N. Y., the presiding supervisor of Nassau County and sponsor of the legislation, and County Executive Eugene H. Nickerson.

"Your action will encourage subscribers and members of group health plans in communities throughout the country," he said. "In too many cases they have been deprived of the full use of medical and hospital facilities because their physicians have been barred from professional access to them.

"Speaking for GHAA and its affiliated organizations with a membership of several millions, we offer our gratitude and compliments for this constructive piece of legislation."

The World Mourns:

Eleanor Roosevelt Dead at 78; 'Defender of Underprivileged'

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is dead.

The woman whose compassion and instincts led her to become the tireless defender and voice of the underprivileged finally succumbed to a long illness. She was 78.

"All the world mourns for Mrs. Roosevelt," said AFL-CIO President George Meany, "and nowhere will her loss be more keenly felt than in the ranks of labor.

"This gracious and compassionate lady instinctively understood the problems and aspirations of workers. And, for her, to understand was to act."

Mrs. Roosevelt once said that she began her education when she left society life to visit sweatshops and slums. She said she found children falling off their benches from sheer fatigue.

Since then, she was to be found where she was most needed, articulating the needs of the common people everywhere.

She worked in settlement houses in the slums. She pioneered in the fight to end child labor. She fought for sharecroppers in the 1930s and for migratory families in the 1950s. She put herself on the side of labor in the turmoil of the depression years. During the war she visited troops in the Pacific, and in Britain experienced everything from "Brussels sprouts to Buckingham Palace."

She worked hard to eradicate infantile paralysis through the March of Dimes campaigns which memorialized FDR's birthday. Even while ailing she helped launch a new drive against cancer, personally thanking the AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 for its $1 million campaign for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation.

If it was becoming apparent in the early postwar period that misery and oppression were global, it was urgently obvious to Mrs. Roosevelt. She could have been found anywhere, visiting refugee camps and helping the hungry and promoting the ideals and activities of the United Nations.

And yet her commitments to the promise of America remained strong. Though slowed down by ill health and advanced years, she was to be found this past summer chairing a citizens' inquiry into the violence and injustices committed against Freedom Riders in the South.

Meany said in summing up her contributions to humankind:

"No one can ever tabulate the lives that were brightened, the slums cleared, the sweatshops eradicated, the suffering mitigated through her unflagging battle against misery and oppression. It has never been more truly said of anyone that the world is a better place because she lived.

"Workers can best pay their debt of gratitude to Mrs. Roosevelt in the way she herself would have wanted: by striving to carry on and strengthen the code she personified, the code of honor, patriotism and humanitarianism, of high principles and practical action to effectuate them."

Mrs. Roosevelt never flinched from acting on her beliefs. She was a working writer, reporter and observer and joined the Newspaper Guild in 1937.

In her own words to the 1961 AFL-CIO convention:

". . . The labor movement—and perhaps I can say my movement, too . . . I feel that it is part of our job to keep alive the ideals that you started with, the ideals of really helping the people to better conditions, to a better way of life which is part of the basis of democracy."

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

Flags at Half-Staff For Mrs. Roosevelt

Pres. Kennedy ordered that flags be flown at half-staff at all government buildings and installations in the U.S. and overseas "as a mark of respect to the memory of Mrs. Anna Eleanor Roosevelt."

Mrs. Roosevelt will be buried beside her late husband, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in the Rose Garden at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Kennedy, who announced plans to attend the funeral, paid tribute to Mrs. Roosevelt as "one of the great ladies in the history of this country." He said "her memory and spirit will long endure among those who labor for great causes around the world."

4 Labor Spy Suits Filed on L-G Reports

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has filed civil suits in U.S. district courts against two employers and three labor "consultants" on charges of failing to file adequate reports on arrangements to "spy" on labor organizing attempts.

Harvey Aluminum, Inc., of Torrance, Calif.; three of its officials and Wallace A. Ummel, doing business as the Wallace Detective Agency in Portland, Ore., are charged in a District of Columbia suit with failing to file required reports on an agreement under which Ummel spied on company employes during an organizing drive by the Steelworkers.

Last month the National Labor Relations Board voted unanimously to uphold union charges that the company hired the agency to provide labor spies in the guise of production workers and ordered it to stop, and also to reinstate two fired employes. Harvey previously had filed a report, which Wirtz called incomplete, listing payment of $15,758 to the Wallace agency.

Two suits charging violation of the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act (Landrum-Griffin) were filed in Charlotte, N. C., against National Welders Supply Co., Inc., and Robert E. Lee and two detective agencies he owns, all of Charlotte.

National Welders and Lee are charged with filing "false, erroneous and incomplete" reports about an arrangement under which Lee was to get information about the Operating Engineers.

Also filed in D. C. District Court was a charge that the Cascade Employers Association, Inc., of the Pacific Northwest, and three officials failed to report an arrangement with two Oregon companies—Continental Construction Co., Inc., and Morse Bros.—to influence employes during a Teamsters organizing drive. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests.

Board Kills NMU Bid for Fleet Vote

The National Labor Relations Board has rejected a request of the National Maritime Union for a fleetwide collective bargaining election among unlicensed seamen on ships operated by Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., out of Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports.

The decision was signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. They upheld dismissal of the NMU election request by NLRB Regional Dir. Ivan C. McLeod in New York. Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom concurred in the result.

The majority said crewmen on seven ships voted five years ago to be represented by the Seafarers when the ships became part of the Mormac fleet, that for five years the employer and the two unions have adjusted to it, and that no change in the unit would warrant a reevaluation.

The opinion cited the fact that David L. Cole, the "highly experienced arbitrator under the AFL-CIO no-raiding agreement," had ruled that the NMU, in filing the election petition, violated the agreement.

The NMU has refused to accept the arbiter's decision and has been found to be in noncompliance with the federation's internal disputes plan and therefore subject to sanctions under the AFL-CIO constitution.

5th Furniture Union Victory Won in Maine

South Paris, Me.—The Furniture Workers have won their fifth victory in an intensive organizing campaign begun in Maine last January.

Workers at the Paris Mfg. Co. here cast 100 votes for the UFWA and 48 for no union in a representation election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer said the union has been "shocked" to find wages and working conditions in Maine frequently as bad as those in anti-labor "right-to-work" states and will continue its drive to improve conditions.

The earlier victories, involving 350 workers, were at Ekco Tebbets, Inc., Locke Mills; C. B. Cummings Co., Norway; Stowell Spool Co., Bryant Pond; and Kendall Dowel Co., West Bethel. At the first-named plant the union won a 7-cent wage increase and improved insurance benefits in a 2-year first contract.

30 Railroad Telegraphers Given Notices of Layoff by North Western

Chicago—The first 90-day advance layoff notice under a new agreement between the Railroad Telegraphers and the Chicago & North Western Railway has been served on 30 Iowa station agents represented by the union, the railroad has announced.

Rail Telegraphers Pres. G. E. Leighty, here for a meeting of union general chairmen on the New York Central Lines, said he will investigate to make sure that all terms of the contract are complied with.

The C&NW said it will furlough 30 workers as part of a station agency consolidation if approval is granted by the Iowa Commerce Commission. Last month the commission concluded hearings on the C&NW's proposal to consolidate seven agencies.

After a 30-day strike of telegraphers, the union won an agreement worked out by a presidential panel and an impartial arbiter providing for 90-day advance notice of layoffs to allow time for discussion of conditions. If agreement cannot be reached during the 90-day period, these terms become effective:

- Workers whose jobs have been abolished shall receive an allowance equal to 60 percent of recent average earnings, to be paid for periods ranging from two to 60 months and based on seniority.
- Instead of a furlough allowance, workers may elect to take a lump-sum separation allowance up to a maximum of 12 months' pay after five or more years of service.

Before the strike the union had tried unsucessfully for five years to get the C&NW to agree on job protection terms.

The union set a June 12 strike date on the NYC but called the walkout off when Pres. Kennedy named a special emergency board to get the facts. The board reported that job abolition by management had imposed hardships on employes and recommended a series of protective devices, including advance notice to laid-off workers and allowances for employes whose jobs are abolished.

UAW Helps Train 20 Arab Refugees

Detroit—The Auto Workers have given $10,000 to the United Nations Relief & Works Agency to provide two-year scholarships to train 20 young Palestinian Arab refugees as automotive mechanics.

The grant was made from the union's Intl. Free World Labor Defense Fund, which is financed by the interest on the UAW's $45 million strike fund. The UNRWA program includes vocational training, and the skill for which the UAW gift is earmarked is urgently needed in the developing Arab countries.

AFL-CIO Gives India $1,000 for Defense

An appeal by India for contributions to a defense fund to help the nation repel Communist China's invasion of India's frontier has met with an immediate response from the AFL-CIO.

Immediately after the Indian Embassy in Washington set up the fund to handle contributions from Indian citizens in the United States and from Americans desirous of helping, Pres. George Meany announced a $1,000 contribution by the AFL-CIO.

Meany wrote Indian Ambassador Braj Kumar Nehru of the AFL-CIO's "deep concern and growing indignation" at the Chinese Communist's "unprovoked assault" against India.

Election in Single Unit Authorized by NLRB

The National Labor Relations Board, reversing one of its regional directors, has voted to grant the petition of the Textile Workers Union of America for an election limited to a single plant.

By a 3-1 vote the board directed that a representation election be held within 30 days at the Calhoun, Ga., plant and warehouse of Dixie Belle Mills, Inc.

The three-man majority said it has not been the board's policy to compel unions to seek representation in the most "comprehensive" grouping, or in any larger unit, when an appropriate unit is compatible with that requested.

The crucial question is whether the unit requested is appropriate, said the majority, finding that it was for these reasons: the Dixie Belle plant was a "substantially separate" operation from another plant owned by the same company 20 miles from Calhoun, with integrated management only at the top levels; there is no interchange of plant employes, except for deliverymen; no seniority list is maintained for transferred employes; there is no bargaining history for any of the plants involved.

The union petitioned for an election only at Calhoun but management objected, saying that the only appropriate unit should include 1,100 employes of a subsidiary plant at Dalton, Ga.

The NLRB regional director agreed with the employer but was reversed by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

2 USWA Strikes Win Pattern Pacts

Youngstown, O.—Strikes of two Steelworkers' locals here have ended in ratification of new contracts containing the basic steel "package" at plants of the General Fireproofing Co. and Hill Hubbell & Co., a division of the National Casting Co.

The General Fireproofing strike affected 2,200 workers for 58 days. They returned to work with a three-year pact providing a cost of living increase in the second year, plus 5 cents an hour increase in each of two years and improved fringe benefits, including pensions, vacations and supplemental unemployment benefits.

Brown Director Of Freedom House

New York—Irving Brown, representative at the United Nations of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, has been named a director of Freedom House, which is dedicated to freedom for all people.

Also named a director at the same time was Eric Sevareid, radio and television commentator.

Regional Offices Being Opened In 4 Cities by Women's Bureau

The Women's Bureau of the Dept. of Labor has announced the opening of regional offices in four major cities to serve better the needs of women in the labor force.

An increasing number of feminine workers and a continuing demand for information on protective laws and training programs led to the decentralization move, announced by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Mrs. Esther Peterson, Women's Bureau director and assistant secretary of the department.

Meeting in Washington at a training conference, the new regional directors visited AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, a member of the President's Commission on the Status of Women, in one of a series of discussions designed to find out what services the community considers most important.

Schnitzler called the opening of regional offices an "excellent" way to bring Women's Bureau services closer to workers and communities and urged labor people to take advantage of the new service.

Mrs. Peterson said regional offices have been opened in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco, and an Atlanta office is due to open after Jan. 1. The following directors will serve under supervision of Mrs. Agnes M. Douty, chief of the field services division, at these locations:

Marguerite I. Gilmore, 105 W. Adams Street, Chicago 3; Mrs. Madeline H. Codding, 630 Sansome Street, San Francisco 11; Diane McKaig, 1371 Peachtree Street, N.E., Atlanta 9; and Dorothy M. Pendergast, 18 Oliver Street, Boston 10.

Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Douty said the new field officers will serve the needs of workers and give special attention to:

- The need for legislative changes affecting women workers.
- Opportunities for training to meet specific demands.
- Gathering data for bureau analysis.

The newly-assigned regional directors formerly worked out of headquarters in Washington. They reported a continuing concern by women workers for information on day care for children of working mothers, and on laws governing the hours of labor, night work, and lifting of weights.

At a meeting of the President's Commission here Oct. 1 and 2, a study group headed by Schnitzler reported that a double pay standard exists among many employers. The group recommended that wage discrimination against women should be prohibited by federal law and that, until such a law is enacted, Pres. Kennedy should give serious consideration to an executive order forbidding sex discrimination by employers holding government contracts.

Double Pay Standard Cited for Men, Women

Many employers practice a double standard of pay for men and women doing similar work, the Labor Dept. has reported.

In a booklet called Economic Indicators Relating to Equal Pay, 1962—Pamphlet 9, Government Printing Office—the department's Women's Bureau lists the results of a survey of job-hiring orders received by employment offices in five cities in 1961. All were in states which do not have equal pay laws.

About 120 examples of job orders with wage differentials were found in the five cities. Both skilled and unskilled jobs were listed, ranging from auditor, accounting supervisor, bookkeeper, clerk and typist to counter worker and dishwasher.

The cities were not identified, but hiring rates showed these variations:

- Bookkeepers, from $60 to $85 a week for women, and from $65 to $100 for men.
- Cooks, from $35 to $50 for women, from $45 to $65 for men.
- Counter workers, from $33 to $45 for women, and from $35 to $50 for men.
- Dishwashers, $1.31 an hour for women, $1.42 for men.
- Grocery checkers, $60 women, $75 men.
- Elevator operators, $1.40 women, $1.60 men.

The booklet also cited a Census Bureau report that the 1960 median wage income—the midway point—was $3,293 a year for women and $5,417 for men.

Mrs. Esther Peterson, Women's Bureau director and assistant secretary of labor, said in a foreword to the booklet that 22 states have laws requiring equal pay for equal work, but not all women workers in such states are covered by the law.

In other states, the only protection women workers have is by union contract or voluntary employer policy, she said.

U. S., Japanese Unions Pledge Friendship

A move to bring about a closer working relationship between a U.S. and a Japanese electrical manufacturing union has been formalized with a joint declaration.

The pact was signed here by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, headed by Pres. James B. Carey, and the Federation of the Electrical Workers of Japan (Denki Roren), under the leadership of Pres. Yukichi Takehana.

The joint declaration, containing six points, stated that the two unions, over the past several years, have "endeavored to enchance the mutual understanding and the ties of friendship between the labor movements of both countries. . . ."

In the joint declaration they made these pledges:

- To work for social justice, world peace and international fair labor standards.
- Oppose all forms of totalitarianism and colonialism.
- Accept the basic concept of reciprocal trade as profitable to both countries.
- Work through the Intl. Labor Organization, United Nations and other organizations to aid workers and their unions.
- Initiate exchange programs of specialists of the two unions.
- Exchange economic and collective bargaining data.

Daniel Battle Reopens:

Open-Shop Firm Assails Union in Ads

The Daniel Construction Co., placed on the unfair list of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters because of its bitter resistance to union organization, has bought full-page advertisements in newspapers throughout the South to denounce the union.

"War declared on southern workers," the ads charged in big headlines.

"You challenge the principles which we in the South believe in and fight for," Charles E. Daniel, head of the company, declared in an "open letter" to Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters.

Schoemann, who signed a notice barring union members from working for Daniel because of the company's "substandard" conditions and "unfair" activities, ridiculed the charge that it was the union, rather than the company, which is hostile to southern workers.

"The plain fact is that we have contracts with hundreds of employers in the South—employers who are fair and are willing to abide by the law," he pointed out.

The new chapter in the battle to organize one of the South's biggest open shop construction operations came nearly a year after a disputed National Labor Relations Board election resulted in a 684 to 347 vote against union representation.

Irregularities Cited

The Plumbers cited a long list of irregularities in the election, including firing and threats to fire union supporters and voting by supervisors, in a petition asking the NLRB to throw out the results and order a new election.

Noting that the NLRB has not yet acted on the petition, the union's notice to its members said that Daniel has continued its efforts "to undermine our organizing drive." It added:

"To permit the membership to continue working for the Daniel Construction Co. . . . will enable Daniel to gain the benefits of having, as a source of employes, the skilled plumber and pipefitter members" of the union "while operating as an open shop contractor without an agreement."

Schoemann termed the company's advertising campaign "typical" of the firm's anti-union policy.

"The moment it becomes apparent that we are making progress in our organization campaign, Daniel begins attacking our union as anti-South," he charged.

Step In Organizing

Pointing to the large number of fair employers under union contract in the South, Schoemann said the union's action "is another step towards organizing the open shop contractors who are presently undermining the wages and working conditions" that "local unions and members have fought so hard for so many years to establish, preserve and improve."

Schoemann said the union is "confident" that the NLRB will throw out the election results at Daniel on the basis of "evidence of gross intimidation of workers by company supervisors."

Work Laws Cut Pay, New Survey Shows

So-called "right-to-work" laws which prohibit union shop agreements have acted as a "damper and brake" on wages in the 19 states which have adopted them, according to a study by a leading economist.

The National Council for Industrial Peace said the study by Prof. Milton J. Nadworny of the University of Vermont "constitutes a direct refutation" of the National Right to Work Committee's claims that "right-to-work" laws have brought economic benefits.

"Not only have 'right-to-work' states not been catching up in wages and income with states having free collective bargaining, but they have been falling farther behind the national pace," Nadworny reported.

He cited government statistics showing that the gap between high wage levels in states which permit the union shop and low wages in states with "right-to-work" laws has steadily widened in the past 11 years.

Nadworny noted that 12 of the 19 states had "work" laws in effect in 1950. He said:

"If we examine hourly rates paid in the 12 states, we find that in 1950, their average was 25 cents below the United States average. In 1961, the average hourly rate paid in those states was 31 cents below the national average."

For all 19 states, the economist declared, the same comparison shows an average hourly rate 21 cents below the national level in 1950, and 23 cents lower in 1961.

A comparable widening of the wage gap is shown in statistics dealing with weekly wages. The gap widened from $8.39 to $9.81 for the 12-state group and from $6.86 to $7.14 for the 19 states.

Likewise, per capita income in the "right-to-work" states averaged $292 below the national level in the 12-state group in 1950 and $404 below the national average in 1961. The 19-state comparison showed the $281 deficiency in 1950 growing to $379 in 1961.

The Vermont economist concluded:

"The supporters of 'right-to-work' laws have consistently stated that such legislation brings economic benefits to the states. If we accept their claims that wage and income changes are the results of 'right-to-work' legislation, it is obvious that these laws act as dampers and brakes, and not as stimulators of improvement and progress."

4th Election Set At Gabriel Plant

Cleveland, O.—The National Labor Relations Board has set Nov. 20 as the date of a fourth election at the Gabriel Co., auto parts manufacturer, between the Machinists and the unaffiliated Teamsters.

The latter union failed to win a majority in the last election when two challenged votes were counted for the IAM, which has held bargaining rights at Gabriel for 40 years.

IAM Local 233 won a majority in the first Teamster raid on the 950-member plant in 1961 but the NLRB set aside the result on the ground that the IAM had distributed marked sample ballots prior to the vote. Another election late last year went to the Teamsters, 480-419, but it was voided because of "fearful" threats by anonymous and persistent telephone calls to IAM leaders.

87 Affiliates to Participate:

Unions Pledge Aid in Drive To Wipe Out Race Bias

The AFL-CIO is joining the government in a vigorous drive to erase all traces of racial discrimination from the ranks of trade unions.

Federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, has notified Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson that 87 national and international unions representing some 9 million members have volunteered to sign fair practice pledges at a special White House ceremony Nov. 15. The number may well exceed 100 by that time, according to the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

Johnson will sign the agreements for the government as chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

The agreements are part of a "Union Program for Fair Practices" worked out by the committee in consultation with Schnitzler and the Dept. of Civil Rights. They are similar to the "Plans for Progress" signed earlier by a number of industrial firms, including the nation's biggest defense contractors, aimed at insuring fair employment policies.

The pledges will commit each union to:

- Accept all eligible applicants for membership, without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.
- Seek management agreement on nondiscrimination policies in all conditions of employment, including hiring, tenure, work assignments, training programs, promotions, transfers and facilities.
- Refuse to charter any local union on a segregated basis and to end membership segregation in any locals where it now exists.
- Seek management agreement on clauses guaranteeing nondiscrimination in joint apprenticeship programs.

The program is voluntary for AFL-CIO affiliates but was given the firm support of the federation's Executive Council at its meeting last April.

The council action was followed by a letter from Federation Pres. George Meany "strongly recommending" that all affiliates coöperate with the President's Committee in signing the pledges "to give effect to the civil rights policy and program" adopted by the federation at its 1961 convention.

Legislation Also Sought

The convention's civil rights resolution encompassed all the points now sought in the program advanced by the President's committee and, additionally, set up strengthened internal machinery for enforcement of the AFL-CIO's anti-discrimination policy.

It also urged enactment of a federal fair employment practices law and enforceable state legislation, plus issuance of an executive order banning discrimination in housing which is insured or aided in any way by federal agencies.

Meany reminded AFL-CIO affiliates that the committee's establishment by executive order of Pres. Kennedy "marked the beginning" of an all-out campaign against discrimination in federal employment "and in all employment under federal government contracts." The committee is empowered to bar government contracts to firms practicing discrimination.

Responsibility for Safety Up to Labor, Employer

Chicago—"I've seen an unbelievable emphasis on safety develop since the days I was a hard rock miner, a coal miner and a logger," Treas. Peter Terzick of the Carpenters told a labor session of the 1962 National Safety Congress here.

At a panel discussion on labor-management safety cooperation at the plant level, Terzick said a person's security depends on the keen awareness of safety on the part of all those around him.

"The chief responsibility for safety rests with us, labor and management," he said, "but the key man is the one at the machine or on the scaffold."

Al E. Brown, secretary-treasurer of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, on the same panel, said that "today, more than any time in the past, employers realize that they need the assistance and support of their employes if their business venture is to produce a salable product at a reasonable profit and to enjoy continuity of operation."

"The evidence of this is apparent when one looks at the effort put forth to encourage their employes to purchase stock, participate in pension programs, and to read the propaganda issued to acquaint their employes with the problems of industry," he added. "Why not, then, in the field of accident prevention?"

The NSC Labor Conference presented its highest award—the Harry Read Memorial Award of Honor for Distinguished Service to Safety—to the Rubber Workers. The Read Award for Outstanding Service went to the Laborers' Union.

Awards for meritorious service were given Auto Workers Local 599, Flint, Mich.; Machinists Lodge 1339, Denver; Distillery Workers Local 146, Linden, N. J.; and Hayward Webber, the local's safety committee chairman.

Office Workers Repel Raid Try by Teamsters

An office employes' local of the Teamsters cannot claim bargaining rights for employes of another Teamster local, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled, because of what it said was a conflict of interest.

Three board members, upholding the objections of Office Employes Local 33 to an attempted "raid," dismissed a petition filed in Pittsburgh, Pa., by Office & Clerical Employes' Local 72 of the Teamsters for an election seeking certification to represent five employes of Teamsters Local 249—a bookkeeper, cashier, telephone operator, typist and cashier-typist. The workers are now represented by OEIU Local 33. The Teamsters were expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

NLRB Members Philip Ray Rodgers, John H. Fanning, and Gerald A. Brown threw out the Teamsters petition. They pointed out that the employer and the petitioning union are both members of Teamsters Joint Council 40; that contracts negotiated for the workers would have to be submitted to the international union and the joint council for approval; that the international could prevent the execution of a contract; and that it also has a determining voice in grievances and strikes.

Citing a 1957 decision in an Oregon Teamsters case, the panel again declared "a union which has allegiances conflicting with the purpose of protecting and advancing the interest of the employes it represents . . . cannot be a proper representative of these employes."

Business Rep. Martin McDermott of Local 33 said he foresees no problem in negotiating a new contract with Local 249 for the five workers whose last contract expired June 1.

Major Area Joblessness Drops Again

The number of major areas with 6 percent or more unemployment dropped to 41 in October, continuing the gradual decline of the past three months.

The Labor Dept. reported a drop of three areas from the 44 in September as well as a decline of 12 among smaller labor market centers. A year ago in October 1961 68 of the 150 major job areas in the nation had 6 percent or more jobless.

The area report tended to reflect the drop in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in October to 5.5 percent from 5.8 percent in September. But the high level of unemployment indicated by the 5.5 rate shows also in the area figures.

In 1959, before the onset of the 1960-61 recession, the number of major high unemployment areas was 32. The low point since 1957 was in January 1960, when the figure was 31.

In October the three major areas showing improvement—dropping out of the 6 to 9 percent unemployment category to 3 to 6 percent classification—were Waterbury, Conn., Jersey City and New Brunswick, N. J.

The Labor Dept. said that expansion in manufacturing payrolls was a major factor in reducing joblessness in these areas.

Claude Simmons Dies, SIU Vice President

Paramus, N. J.—Representatives of maritime unions paid final tribute to Claude Simmons, vice president of the Seafarers, at last rites here.

Dead at 42 of cancer, Simmons went to sea as a deckhand at 15 and joined the SIU when it was founded in 1938. Elected vice president three years ago, he was in charge of contract enforcement and negotiations for 40,000 members of SIU's Atlantic & Gulf Coast district.

His widow and three children, of River Edge, N. J., survive.

AFL-CIO Support Pledged For Democratic Algeria

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has pledged the aid of American labor to the Algerian people in their struggle to build a nation "zealously devoted to promotion of free trade unionism and all other fundamental freedoms."

In a cable to Algerian Premier Ben Bella marking the anniversary of the beginning of the Algerian struggle for national independence, Meany said U.S. labor is confident the nation will overcome "not only the remnants of old colonialism but also the sinister plans of Soviet imperialism and colonialism to subvert their hard-won independence."

In another cable to the Algerian trade union movement (UGTA), Meany pledged the "unstinting support of more than 13 million members (of the AFL-CIO) for your inspiring determination and efforts to fulfill the democratic and social objectives of the historic Algerian revolution."

American labor, Meany pointed out, "rejoiced in Algeria's triumph over colonial tyranny as a victory for the forces of freedom everywhere." A free and democratic Algeria, he said, has a great future.

High Court Rule Asked On 'Runaway' Job Rights

Detroit—Auto Workers who lost their jobs when their plant "ran away" to Tennessee have asked the U.S. Supreme Court to clear up the issues arising from conflicting court rulings and arbitrators' decisions on the vesting of job rights.

Five former employes of the Ross Gear & Tool Co., acting for themselves and 716 other members of UAW Local 80 laid off when Ross moved its Gemmer Mfg. division to Lebanon, Tenn., filed a petition for review of a ruling last July by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Cincinnati.

1st Ruling Upset

The 6th Circuit reversed a decision by U.S. District Judge Fred W. Kaess here that the employer could not avoid accrued seniority obligations by shifting his plant. The five petitioners, represented by UAW General Counsel Harold A. Cranefield, are asking the high court to review the 6th Circuit ruling on the ground that it conflicts with other Appeals Court decisions in two similar cases — Glidden-Durkee Famous Foods and Metal Polishers vs. Viking Euipment Co.

Requesting the Supreme Court to answer four questions raised in plant relocation cases, the Auto Workers told the court that the United States is experiencing a wave of such relocations, nearly all raising difficult legal and other problems.

Pointing out that many of the legal problems generated by plant runaways have come before lower courts and arbitrators and are on their way through appeals procedures, the five petitioners assert:

"At present, courts and arbitrators are going in both directions, some following the Glidden and Viking decisions, some following the 6th Circuit" in Ross Gear.

"It is important that this basic conflict be settled before more confusion arises."

The questions posed by the UAW attorney are these:

- Are individual rights of employes under union contracts also federal rights for which federal law must be fashioned?
- Are seniority and recall rights limited to the geographic area named in the recognition clause of a labor-management contract?
- Do such rights continue when the plant moves to a new location even if the contract is silent on the subject?
- Do they become vested rights that continue even after the contract expires, if the contract is silent on the subject?

The petitioners assert that a review is needed of the interpretation of two provisions found in all collective bargaining contracts—the recognition clause and the seniority provision. Questions 2, 3 and 4 are of "great practical significance," they pointed out, because they arise out of the current wave of plant relocations.

On questions 2 and 3, the petition asserts, the 6th Circuit is in conflict with the Glidden and Viking decisions, which declared that employes have vested rights in their jobs.

Decision Reversed

An outgrowth of the Ross Gear case came in a Williamson County, Ill., Chancery Court. The state court earlier had made a ruling based on the U.S. District Court decision in the Ross Gear litigation and since has reversed itself because of the 6th Circuit ruling.

The latest decision was that the Sangamo Electric Co. cannot be ordered to give jobs to employes at Marion, Ill., who lost their jobs and seniority rights when a plant was moved to South Carolina.

Peace Corps Hails USWA Job Protection

A Peace Corps "leave of absence" provision in a new contract between the Steelworkers and the National Can Corp. has been hailed by Dir. Sargent Shriver of the corps as "the best clause to date" in protection of a volunteer's re-employment rights.

"Such a pact demonstrates labor and industry's support for the Peace Corps concept and further backs the belief that volunteers will be even more valuable to industry on their return," he said, adding the hope that similar clauses will be incorporated into other labor-management agreements.

The clause grants Peace Corps volunteers "re-employment rights under the same conditions as returned members of the military service" if they have "satisfactory" release from the corps, report for work within 90 days after release, and can perform the work to which their seniority entitles them.

The contract covers about 2,700 National Can employes in Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, California and Illinois.

At its recent convention, the USWA called on unions and employers to cooperate to make job security available for Peace Corps volunteers and heralded the Corps as one of the New Frontier's "most positive and imaginative programs."

Democrats Score in Mid-Term Voting

Nixon's Career Ended In California Defeat

enough or drastically enough on Cuba was Indiana's onetime isolationist Sen. Homer W. Capehart—and he lost in a startling upset to Democrat Birch Bayh, who persistently supported the President.

Nixon did not gain votes perceptibly by suggestions that his own foreign affairs experience made him peculiarly qualified for the state house in Sacramento at this juncture of affairs, and Sen. Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin did not save himself from defeat by suggesting the President needed a man with his experience in Congress.

For the President the election results unquestionably were a deep personal satisfaction—not least because they offered a new chance to advance major domestic policies that would have been rated dead had his opposition scored substantial gains in the usual mid-term election pattern.

The hard fact remained that the House of Representatives—chief obstacle to those programs in the 87th Congress—will be substantially similar to the old House. The conservative coalition of northern Republicans from "safe" small-town or rural districts and of southern Democrats of similar background appears only slightly reduced in size.

Southern Democrats who opposed great sections of the domestic tax, labor and general welfare program will remain in the new 88th Congress as chairmen or powerful ranking members of the key House and Senate committees.

An element of yet unmeasureable significance will be the gradual effect on conservative Democrats of their knowledge that many must run again in 1964 on a ticket presumably to be headed by Kennedy as a Democratic President seeking re-election on a Kennedy national platform.

In the vast assortment of election contests fought out in all 50 states these additional factors seemed significant:

● There was a large amount of ballot-splitting. Democratic Sen. Joseph S. Clark won re-election in Pennsylvania although Dilworth lost to Scranton for governor. Republican Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel won in California although Brown smashed Nixon and Democrats carried all other statewide contests.

● Rockefeller clearly emerged as the foremost candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1964, unobstructed by the difficulties Nixon might have raised as governor. Romney and Scranton are new faces, but they lack national experience politically and are otherwise untested for wearing power. Rockefeller suffered some damage perhaps when his plurality dropped slightly from his margin in 1958 and he ran far behind Sen. Jacob K. Javits, who won by close to 1 million votes, and behind other statewide New York candidates.

The Republican victories in Pennsylvania and Michigan may have lacked substance. Democrats won their other statewide elections in both states, and in Pennsylvania held on to the state legislature. Only in Ohio did a Republican sweep approach total proportions.

● The Rocky Mountain states were the source of greatest Republican strength, with the Midwest something of a standoff and Democrats running strong in New England and on the Pacific Coast.

● Republicans made a new surge in the South, picking up five new House seats in southern and border states to add to four previously held and running up larger protest votes than usual against veteran Democratic candidates who were assailed for "liberal" views. Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama barely survived an all-out Republican attack founded largely on the charge that he is "too friendly" to Kennedy's New Frontier.

● The southern Republican drive involves a built-in party danger, however, since it is intensely anti-civil rights as well as deeply conservative. Negro voting in both South and North, which expanded this year as well as in other recent elections, also remained solidly Democratic in most contests.

GEORGIA'S FIRST NEGRO STATE SENATOR in 92 years was elected in the 38th District in Atlanta—Leroy Johnson (D), a lawyer, who is shown with his wife, Cleopatra, and son, Michael, 12. Johnson defeated Republican T. M. Alexander, also a Negro.

George Meany Foundation Created To Further Ethical Understanding

New York—Establishment of the George Meany Foundation to "further the understanding of the ethical principles by which all moral men live" was announced here. The foundation was created by trade union friends of the AFL-CIO president, and has already chosen its first two projects:

1. Sponsorship of one program each year in "The Eternal Light" television series, produced under the auspices of the Jewish Theological Institute and broadcast weekly over the National Broadcasting Company TV network. This year's program devoted to the life of William Green, late president of the AFL, will be seen on Nov. 25.

2. Sponsorship of a series of lectures at the Institute for Religious and Social Studies of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. This series, under the general title of "The American Character: The Search for Self-Understanding," is already in progress.

The Meany Foundation has been established within the Herbert H. Lehman Institute of Ethics at the seminary.

Pres. George Harrison of the Railway Clerks is president of the foundation. Joseph D. Keenan, secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, is treasurer. M. S. Novik of New York, the AFL-CIO's radio and television consultant, is secretary.

The foundation, its sponsors said, is "linked with the name of George Meany, whose commitment to principle and to the welfare of the working class is being met in the highest ethical tradition."

"The Eternal Light" series has for more than 15 years been recognized as one of television's finest public service presentations. It has often dealt with labor subjects; one of last year's offerings, "Young Sam Gompers," covered the early life of the AFL's founder.

The foundation-sponsored program on Green—10 years after his death—will be entitled "Never Ask What Country." The script is by Morton Wishengrad, distinguished TV, radio and stage writer whose play, "The Rope Dancers," was a recent Broadway hit. Broadcast time on the NBC network will be 1:30 p.m. (EST).

Future foundation-sponsored TV programs will portray the lives of other trade union figures, such as Philip Murray, late president of the CIO, or will deal with issues of vital importance to labor. After their network showing they will be available in film, tape or script form to schools, religious institutions, community centers, unions and independent radio and TV outlets.

The lecture series is presented at 11 a.m. each Tuesday at the seminary, Broadway at 122nd Street. Attendance is open to clergymen, theological students and other graduate students of all faiths. The next lecture, Nov. 13, will be "The Impact of Religion," by Dr. Joseph L. Blau, associate professor of the philosophy of religion at Columbia University.

In succeeding weeks the subjects will be "The Impact of Industrialization," by Theodore W. Kheel, impartial chairman for the New York transit industry; "The Impact of Urbanization," by Dennis J. Clark, executive secretary, New York Catholic Interracial Council; "The Impact of Politics," by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) and "The Impact of Mass Communication," by Dr. Richard T. Baker, associate dean of the Graduate School of Journalism, Columbia.

Dr. Roger L. Shinn, who is William E. Dodge, Jr., professor of applied Christianity, Union Theological Seminary, is chairman of the series.

Residential Education Programs For Union Staffers End 2d Year

Ann Arbor, Mich.—The second and final year of an experimental 10-week residential program for full-time union staff and local officers recently was completed at two universities in cooperation with the National Institute of Labor Education.

The courses were conducted by the labor programs of the University of Michigan-Wayne State University Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations here and by the New York State School of Labor Industrial Relations at Cornell University in Ithaca.

Twelve leaders from nearly as many international unions were graduated from each institute. They were chosen for the training on the basis of their applications and recommendations by a selections committee consisting of university and union labor educators.

Here the students spent an average of 30 hours a week in class or participating in more informal evening sessions. They studied economics, political science, sociology, psychology and the development of and current problems of the labor movement, with university professors as instructors.

Each week they also spent 10 to 20 hours on reading assignments. Each course was tailored to the problems and needs of union leaders, and there were special "one-shot" programs on such topics as social insurance in the U.S., union structure and political effectiveness, technology and society and the European Common Market.

Some students reported they got as much benefit from writing "term papers" as from classroom work. Each student chose a topic and under the guidance of one or more instructors, researched and analyzed it.

With nine weeks of study under their belts, the students had a final week of intensive full-day discussions with union speakers.

The experimental program was financed by a grant from the Fund for Adult Education to NILE and is now undergoing final evaluation. With continuing interest in long-term residential labor education programs such as these, the establishment of non-residential projects in 10 or 15 metropolitan centers in different parts of the country has been proposed.

The Michigan phase of the program was under the direction of Hy Kornbluh, director of the labor program at the university.

Head of Union Fired, $3 Billion Bank Fined

Vancouver, B. C.—The Vancouver branch of the $3 billion Bank of Montreal has been fined the maximum of $1,000 for illegally discharging Pres. Marshall W. Bluck of Office Employes Local 387.

Bluck was fired for "inefficiency" after 27 years of service, and Magistrate Bernard Isman agreed with the union's contention that the allegation did not stand up. Union evidence indicated Bluck was moved from Vancouver to Montreal to remove him from this city during a union organizing drive.

Unions Agree on Targets In Joint Organizing Drive

THE LOS ANGELES pilot organizing campaign was announced to a heavily attended press conference by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who expressed his great satisfaction at the voluntary agreement reached by federation affiliates to undertake the drive.

Council Approves Los Angeles Plan

By Saul Miller

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has approved funds and manpower to launch a pilot organizing drive in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in 1963. The objective is 750,000 unorganized workers employed by 3,000 firms.

Pres. George Meany reported that AFL-CIO affiliates cooperating on the drive have reached unanimous agreement on allocating 400 organizing targets and that a joint committee of local and international union officials is working out targets among the other firms.

"This will be a test of our ability to organize" based on cooperation from normally competing affiliates, Meany said, stressing that the AFL-CIO had been trying to set up this type of program for a number of years. He added that he was very much impressed with the progress made so far.

The federation's General Board, at a meeting following the two-day session of the council, discussed the program in detail and the pilot project won strong support from a number of speakers.

The project highlighted the fall meeting of the council which praised Pres. Kennedy's "firm course" in Cuba and pledged him labor's full support, expressed its satisfaction with the federation's register-and-vote campaign and analyzed the 1962 elections, finding a net liberal gain in the new Congress.

Teamsters Condemned

The council also strongly condemned a raid by the Teamsters, expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests, against the Communications Workers and pledged its full support to the CWA. (Story Page 2.)

Civil rights also was a top agenda item and the council instructed Meany to write the National Asso-

AFL-CIO Backs U.S. On Cuba

The AFL-CIO "fully supports" the Administration's "firm course" in dealing with the Cuban crisis, the Executive Council declared in a resolution praising Pres. Kennedy for forcing the Soviet Union to remove its missile bases from the turbulent island.

"We heartily approve its (the government's) action in thwarting the dangerously aggressive Soviet move in Cuba against the peoples of the New World and the peace of all mankind," the resolution asserted. "We commend our NATO and OAS allies for backing America's stand."

Survival at Stake

The council said that the "very survival" of the U.S. as a free nation was threatened by "the Soviet establishment in Cuba of bases for atomic missiles which could destroy vital centers of the U.S. and Latin American republics."

What the Soviet government was trying to do while "continuing its maneuvers" in Berlin, the resolution continued, was to bring about a "drastic shift in the international balance of power." If Moscow had succeeded, the U.S. would have been exposed to "Soviet blackmail, intimidation and military assault," the resolution said, and the Reds' "capacity for aggression" would have been so strengthened that "the entire free world would have been at the mercy of Moscow."

"Pres. Kennedy rendered the highest service to the security and freedom of our country, to human liberty and world peace," the AFL-CIO leaders said, "by mobilizing sufficient armed strength to force the Kremlin to remove its rockets from Cuba.

"Our government's decisive action deterred Soviet aggression, raised America's international prestige as an effective protector of world peace and freedom and

Rural Domination Prevails:

Conservatives Add to Strength In State Legislature Elections

By David L. Perlman

Conservatives have picked up new strength in state legislatures, according to an AFL-CIO News survey of election returns throughout the nation. Although a few states took token steps to give more representation to city dwellers and suburbanites, most legislatures remained firmly under conservative rural domination—regardless of party label.

In the two-party states, where the Democratic-Republican lineup provides at least a rough approximation of liberal and conservative strength, all but one of the switches in control of the legislature favored the GOP.

Hawaii an Exception

Hawaii was the lone exception. There Democrats took the state Senate away from the Republicans, in addition to keeping control of the House, electing a governor and making a clean sweep of the congressional delegation.

In Colorado and Utah, however, the Republicans took both houses of the legislature away from the Democrats. In Pennsylvania, the GOP broke a tie to win the Senate and apparently also captured the House, although several close contests are subject to reversal after a count of absentee ballots.

Equivalent to a GOP victory is the new conservative control of the Minnesota House, where candidates run without formal party designation. The GOP also won the Indiana Senate and kept the House, dashing any hope of immediate repeal of the "right-to-work" law. Control of the House in Alaska and Oregon hinged on the absentee ballot count as the AFL-CIO News went to press. Democrats had held a majority in both cases.

The 1962 state elections marked an almost complete erosion of the beachheads the Democrats won in a series of upset victories in 1958.

In that year, Democrats captured one or both houses from the Republicans in 16 states, while the GOP was unable to make any inroads on Democratic strongholds.

Two year later, in 1960, the GOP came out ahead in shifts of party control in nine states, Democrats made new gains in two states, and one state was a standoff, with control of the two houses switching.

Five GOP Switches

The 1962 returns add up to five Republican switches—with a possibility of seven—and one switch to the Democrats.

One big Democratic gain of

Drive to End Job Bias Pledged by 120 Unions

An historic step in the fight against discrimination was marked Nov. 15 when 120 AFL-CIO unions representing over 11 million members voluntarily agreed to fair practice pledges at a special White House ceremony.

Pres. Kennedy told the union leaders, assembled in the East Room, that labor support of his program for equal employment opportunity was in the finest traditions of the labor movement—to aid those least privileged in society.

The drive against discrimination, the President said, is both an "old cause and a new cause" because unions grew out of the needs of the underprivileged and today a major sector of the battle is discrimination.

It is natural, he added, that the labor movement is the core of the effort to provide better opportunities for all and this new program demonstrates that the work of the labor movement is never done, it goes on and on.

Hailing the signing of the agreements, Kennedy said the union leaders must make sure that labor "practices what it preaches" in this area as well as invites, encourages and stimulates equal opportunity for all.

The President's remarks climaxed an impressive ceremony in which union representatives signed agree-

William Green's Life On NBC-TV Nov. 25

A television program based on the life of William Green, late president of the former AFL, will be broadcast on the NBC network Nov. 25 at 1:30 p. m. (EST).

Sponsorship of the program is one of the first activities of the George Meany Foundation, established by trade union friends of the AFL-CIO president to "further the understanding of the ethical principles by which all moral men live."

The telecast will be seen as one program in "The Eternal Light" series produced under auspices of the Jewish Theological Seminary. It is titled "Never Ask What Country." The script is by Morton Wishengrad, TV, radio and stage writer.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR a cooperative campaign by the AFL-CIO and the National Urban League to eliminate the last vestiges of discrimination in the trade union movement were presented to the AFL-CIO Executive Council by Whitney Young, executive director of the league.

Teamsters Condemned For Assault on CWA

The AFL-CIO has strongly condemned a raid by the Teamsters on the Communications Workers and has pledged its full support to the CWA.

The federation's Executive Council asserted in a resolution that the CWA is being subjected to a "reckless, divisive and ruthless raid" by the Teamsters, a union expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests.

"This raid threatens the welfare and security of all telephone workers," the council declared. "It must and will be beaten back."

"The AFL-CIO strongly condemns the raid of the IBT and all other such raids. The AFL-CIO pledges its full support to the CWA. It calls upon all affiliates to do likewise. It will do all possible to combat this raid and all other such raids."

On Nov. 9 the Teamsters petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for an election among 17,200 CWA members at Western Electric Co. installations.

"So long as there is a threat of a raid," the CWA said, "there will be turmoil in this bargaining unit. The minute the votes are counted the raid will be over and CWA can go on to its trade union job of bargaining contract improvements for these installers."

Recently a CWA trial court voted to expel 19 members and to suspend two others for plotting to switch installers into the truckers' union. One of those expelled was Kenneth Silvers, former national director of CWA's installation unit.

CWA said it has evidence that last July 19 Teamsters' Pres. James R. Hoffa sent a letter advising all IBT officials that Silvers was "heading up a full-scale campaign" to organize telephone installers.

At a September meeting the CWA executive board adopted a resolution asserting that the truckers' union under Hoffa is "guilty of repeated acts of attempted strike-breaking, unwarranted jurisdictional raiding and lack of decency, candor and trade union morality."

Council Lauds Leadership of Green, Murray

A tribute to the memory of William Green and Philip Murray, who died 10 years ago, was paid by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in a memorial resolution to them as men who "helped immeasurably to improve the lives of all Americans."

Murray had been president of the CIO for 12 years when he died Nov. 9, 1952. Green had been president of the AFL for 28 years when he died 12 days later.

"They made our free enterprise system not only more vigorously healthful, but more considerate of the needs of all our people," the resolution observed. "They helped build America into supremacy in the free world, into being a champion of the rights of those everywhere who were oppressed by economic and political tyrants."

The council agreed to "do all we can to try to further the principles of social justice and the democratic way of life according to the example" they have set.

High Court Upholds Jail For Presser

The Supreme Court has affirmed the conviction of a Teamsters' official on a charge of obstructing a Senate Special Committee investigation into the union, which was expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt elements.

By voting 4-4 the court refused to set aside an eight-month jail sentence for William Presser, president of Cleveland Joint Council 41 and of the Ohio Conference of Teamsters. Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, latest appointee to the court, did not participate in the voting. Presser's counsel, Edwin Knachel, said in Cleveland he will ask for a re-hearing of the appeal.

U.S. District Court in Cleveland had found Presser guilty of tampering with Joint Council records. The records, the court was told, showed the purchase of champagne buckets as Christmas gifts from the council to eight persons, including a federal judge and a congressman, now deceased.

A committee investigator testified that Presser showed him records, and that when he returned later they had been torn to conceal the names of the intended recipients.

Presser had appealed his conviction. In an earlier case, he was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusing, on the advice of his legal counsel, to answer questions of the Senate committee headed by Sen. John McClellan (D-Aak.).

strengthened the morale and political posture of the free world.

"The energetic measures taken by the U.S. led to a major political setback for the Soviet aggressors, headed by Khrushchev. The Soviet rulers backed down because they were confronted by superior American strength and not because of their devotion to peace."

Peace Strengthened

While prospects of world peace were improved by America's action, the resolution asserted, the Soviet retreat does not mean that this country can relax, because "Castro's Cuba continues to serve as a base for Communist subversion and Soviet provocations in the New World" and the Berlin crisis continues.

Moscow's "ultimate and unalterable aim" continues to be domination and remolding of the world," the resolution went on, citing Communist China's attack on India as an evidence of that country's "determination . . . to conquer and dominate all Asia." American capacity to meet Communist aggression, the statement declared, is the "decisive force which stands between the national freedom and security of all independent countries and their subversion and domination by Communist imperialism."

The Executive Council assured the government it can count on continued "wholehearted and active support of the AFL-CIO" in:

- "Accelerating its efforts to insure American military superiority.
- "Expanding efforts to secure closer political and economic, as well as military, cooperation with the European and Latin American democracies.
- "Insisting on manned on-site inspection by the United Nations or any other effective international authority to make sure that all missiles, bombers, nuclear warheads and other offensive weapons are removed from Cuba.
- "Continuing aerial surveillance of Cuba until such time as UN inspection or, as Pres. Kennedy has proposed, any other 'equally satisfactory means of international verification is effected.'
- "Making clear and emphasizing through radio and other channels our friendship for the people of Cuba, our determination to see them free of all foreign domination and exploitation, our readiness to help them overcome their present miserable economic conditions and enjoy the benefits of the Alliance for Progress Program, once they establish a government of their own choice through free elections.
- "Redoubling efforts to enable ORIT affiliates to play active roles in advancing the Alliance for Progress program.
- "Providing India with all means required for protecting its territorial integrity and national survival.
- "Utilizing our country's prestige, as the leader of the free world, to rally our allies for manifesting the greatest determination and united strength to protect the freedom of West Berlin.
- "Intensifying a worldwide campaign for support of the U.S. program for gradual general disarmament through adequate international inspection and control."

Labor Renews Backing For OCAW Strikers

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has voted to continue its full support of 5,500 striking members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers and has urged members of every affiliated union to help carry out economic sanctions against the five companies involved.

Such sanctions, the council said in a statement, include the return of oil company credit cards by union members and sending letters of support for the strikers to companies where OCAW members are on the picket line.

The council, calling the strikes "very serious," said that in nearly every case they were brought about by action of management, and that apparently they follow a "Chamber of Commerce pattern" in pressing for "management rights" clauses.

When the strikes started, OCAW representatives pointed out that other union groups also are struggling for existence against the oil giants—2,200 members of 14 unions including the Metal Trades and the Operating Engineers, and 1,000 members of an unaffiliated union.

All are cooperating, they said, while managements strive to keep plants operating with supervisors, office help and hired guards.

These strikes were listed in a resolution of support:

- Mobil Oil Co., 416 members of OCAW Locals 7-389 and 7-456, out since June 26, and 690 members of Locals 7-210 and 7-644, on strike since Aug. 7, Involved are Mobil installations at E. Chicago, Ind.; E. St. Louis, Ill.; Detroit and Trenton, Mich.; and Casper, Wyo.
- Shell Oil Co., 2,225 members of Local 4-367 near New Orleans, La., and Houston, Tex., and at Wood River, Ill., on strike since Aug. 19.
- Climax Molybdenum plant at Climax, Colo., where 1,527 members of Local 2-24410 have been out since July 18.
- Smead Mfg. Co., Hastings, Minn., 500 members of Local 6-717 on strike since Aug. 27.
- Glascote Products Co., Cleveland, 150 members of Local 7-87 on strike since Aug. 1.

The Executive Council asserted that where strikes are against major oil or chemical companies, they have been called because of "management demands to eliminate clauses which have been in collective bargaining agreements for many years and were won by long, hard bargaining."

These and other demands for "management prerogative" clauses, the OCAW said, would "set workers in the petroleum and chemical industries back 20 years."

The OCAW expressed gratitude to the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions for their moral and financial assistance and urged them to reaffirm their "splendid cooperation" in this "bitter struggle."

The Executive Council at its September meeting voted to contribute $5,000 to the OCAW strike against Mobil, Shell and other companies. Pres. George Meany sent letters urging all unions to come to the aid of the strikers. Since then only one strike has been settled.

GIFTS OF FOOD from Twin Cities unions for striking members of Oil Workers Local 6-717, at the Hastings, Minn., plant of the Smead Manufacturing Co. were stored in the garage of Mr. and Mrs. Hy Linsted, neighbors of the plant who parked their car in the driveway so the union could have the building for a strike headquarters. Shown after the arrival of a 50-car caravan are, from left, Mrs. Adeline Linsted, Pres. Fred Schultz of OCAW Local 6-715 in St. Paul, Financial Sec. Helen Herrmann of the striking local, and OCAW Intl. Rep. Russell Trout.

Unions Pick Targets In Los Angeles Area

ciation for the Advancement of Colored People protesting that trying to have unions decertified by the National Labor Relations Board was not the way to fight racial discrimination.

The council also heard Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, propose a program to eliminate the last vestiges of racial discrimination from the trade union movement through stepped-up cooperation between the league and the AFL-CIO.

The Los Angeles pilot project was set in motion at the spring meeting of the council when a working paper was presented aimed at getting unions in various fields to join in a comprehensive organizing campaign under AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston.

The 750,000 unorganized workers in the area are engaged in hard and soft goods manufacturing, government, food and drink, hotels and miscellaneous industries. Meany said that there are 750,000 organized workers in the area providing a base for the organizing drive.

Agreement has been reached, Meany reported, on which union or unions will organize in 400 agreed-on targets involving about 100 hard-goods plants and 300 soft-goods firms. All unions involved have pledged to aid the union assigned an organizing target.

The federation president said that international unions involved have allocated more than $250,000 and that the AFL-CIO will appropriate $150,000 to $175,000 for the drive.

Daniel in Charge

Franz Daniel, AFL-CIO assistant director of organization, will be in charge of the pilot project and four coordinators will be provided by the federation. Other unions have agreed to allocate manpower.

Steering committees of the unions in Southern California in the hard and soft goods fields initially have adopted a four-point program as a guide to selecting and assigning target plants to unions. Where several unions show an interest in a plant, there is an arrangement for voluntary arbitration and decision if necessary.

Meany told the General Board, composed of the chief officers of all affiliates and trade and industrial departments, that none of the determinations and organizing assignments in the Los Angeles area will set a pattern or precedent for any other organizing work.

He declared that organizing is a necessity not only in terms of the trade union movement but in terms of the national interest—that unionized workers would stimulate the national economy through increased purchasing power.

The AFL-CIO today represents more workers than it did at the time of merger seven years ago, less the unions expelled because of corrupt domination, Meany said. But this situation is not good enough, he added, because while unions have maintained their numerical strength, they have not kept up their strength as a percentage of the growing work force.

Cuba Action Hailed

In its resolution on the international crisis, the council declared that "our government's decisive action deterred Soviet aggression, raised America's international prestige as an effective protector of world peace and freedom and strengthened the morale and political posture of the free world." (Story Page 1.)

The council warned that "the Soviet retreat does not mean that this country can relax," because "Castro's Cuba continues to serve as a base for Communist subversion and Soviet provocations in the New World" and the Berlin crisis continues.

On the 1962 elections, Meany told reporters that a review of the results indicated the prospects for liberal legislation in the new Congress "are at least as good as in the last Congress." He said that there are five more liberal votes in the House and four more in the Senate.

The register-and-vote campaign showed that labor did better "than ever before" and the AFL-CIO is very satisfied with the results, he said.

On relations with the NAACP, Meany said his letter to the organization would say that the AFL-CIO wanted to work with the NAACP but not under "the circumstances we are faced with" in the activities of its labor secretary, Herbert Hill.

Other Actions

In other actions, the council:

- Received a report on the 10-month record of operations under the internal disputes plan showing effective operation of mediation in a majority of the 142 cases received. (Story this page.)
- Gave strong support, including financial aid, to a group of Negro doctors in Chicago engaged in a federal court fight to end discrimination in hospital admissions and staff appointments. (Story Page 4.)
- Voted to continue full support for the 5,500 striking members of the Oil Workers against five companies and urged all affiliates to help in carrying out economic sanctions against the companies. (Story Page 2.)
- Appropriated $150,000 to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for the purchase of a new headquarters building in Brussels.
- Voted $5,000 to a group of printing trades unions in their drive to secure passage of laws prohibiting strikebreakers from being imported across state lines.
- Voted $35,000 for the National Planning Association for its work in 1963.

The next meeting of the council will be held in Miami Beach, Fla., starting Feb. 18.

Council Voices Pride In Doherty Record

The AFL-CIO Executive Council extended its "warmest congratulations" to Vice Pres. William C. Doherty upon his appointment as U.S. ambassador to Jamaica, and in a resolution added its "commendations for the general excellence" of his service to organized labor.

Doherty retired recently as president of the Letter Carriers and was named ambassador to the newly-cerated island republic by Pres. Kennedy.

"We look with pride," the resolution said, "upon his record, his wise counsel and undeviating efforts in behalf of all labor but we are pleased that our nation and the free world now will benefit from the services of this talented and dedicated man."

THE GENERAL BOARD representing all AFL-CIO affiliates and trade and industrial departments discussed the Los Angeles organizing program in detail and heard reports from Pres. George Meany and Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston.

Board Drops NAACP Union Bias Charge

The National Labor Relations Board's Atlanta regional office has said it will dismiss unfair labor practice charges brought against the union by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"I assume that the NAACP's motion to revoke the Steelworkers certification, which is based on the same allegations, will meet a similar fate," said Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald.

The NAACP had charged that Negro members of the USWA employed at Atlantic Steel Co. were subjected to separate lines of promotion and other forms of discrimination.

'Only Action Possible'

The NLRB decision to dismiss the case for lack of evidence "was the only action possible in light of the facts and the program for the elimination of discrimination which the Steelworkers Union has put in effect as a result of collective bargaining," McDonald observed.

He said his gratification over the NLRB action was "tempered" by the prospect that segregationists would "seek to make capital of this defeat for the NAACP." The defeat, he said, was not suffered by "the movement which the NAACP represents to eliminate discrimination where it actually exists," but by "irresponsible elements" attacking the organizations "which have done the most to eliminate discrimination."

Internal Disputes Plan Marked by Mediation

In the first 10 months of its operation, the AFL-CIO's Internal Disputes Plan has chalked up a record of settling complaints through mediation, Pres. George Meany reported to the Executive Council.

Of the 142 cases filed under the plan, 100 have been either settled by mediation or are still in the mediation process. Impartial Umpire David L. Cole has made 31 determinations with seven cases still pending.

Cole found in 10 of the 31 cases that there was no violation of Art. XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution containing the plan. Of the 14 appeals from his findings to the appeals subcommittee, 10 were denied, one was withdrawn and three are pending.

Eight complaints of noncompliance with his determinations were received and the subcommittee achieved compliance in three cases, found noncompliance in four, and one case is still pending.

Currently two unions, the Journeymen Stonecutters Association and the National Maritime Union, are in noncompliance and sanctions required by the plan are in effect. The Stonecutters are involved in two cases.

Of the 142 cases filed under the plan, 73 have been resolved through mediation. In the remaining 27 cases, Meany said, "there is every reason to believe that a number of these will be settled voluntarily."

Meany has named a two-man council subcommittee to study the operations of the plan to date in light of any improvements that may be necessary. Recommendations for changes, if needed, will be made at the next AFL-CIO convention. The subcommittee is composed of Vice Presidents Al J. Hayes and James A. Suffridge.

Meany also expanded the appeals subcommittee from six to 10 members to facilitate the handling of cases, naming Vice Presidents Jacob S. Potofsky, Karl F. Feller, Lee W. Minton and George M. Harrison.

The six members who have served since the plan's inception are Meany, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Presidents Suffridge, Hayes, Joseph D. Keenan and Joseph A. Beirne.

Koppers Pact Ends 6-Month OCAW Strike

Kobuta, Pa.—A six-months' strike in which members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers held firm against attempts of Koppers Co. management to "gut" their agreement has ended in ratification of a new and improved contract.

Members voted to ratify only after five clarifying changes had been written into the contract. One involved a work rule change which management demanded and the strikers first turned down, then accepted after explanatory language had been added.

The strike began Apr. 30 when management of the giant Pittsburgh firm insisted on 14 major changes in contract language, according to OCAW District Dir. Tony Sabitine. When the first workers were recalled to duty Nov. 12, the agreement remained virtually unchanged, Sabitine said, except for these improvements:

- A wage hike of 10 cents an hour, with a wage reopener after one year.
- Severance pay for retirees.
- Improved pension benefits.
- One job rate for each job, including the rate for learners.
- Improved sick pay and hospitalization benefits, and new language spelling out worker rights on seniority, work assignments, outside contracting, and other issues.

While the 600 strikers walked the picket line—a few also rowed a picket boat on the Ohio River—management used supervisors to keep up production at the big chemical and plastic plant here.

'Living Memorial' Urged To Honor Mrs. Roosevelt

The AFL-CIO has pledged itself to work with other Americans to establish "a living memorial" to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

"The AFL-CIO, with all the rest of the world, mourns the loss of Eleanor Roosevelt," the AFL-CIO Executive Council said in a statement at its quarterly meeting.

The council paid tribute to the late widow of FDR as "a woman of humanitarianism, honor, principle and patriotism." Mrs. Roosevelt's compassion for those who worked in the sweatshops and for the poor in Asia, her distress at misery everywhere and her concern over injustice always will be remembered, the council said.

But, the group added, "there should be a living memorial" to the revered woman who died Nov. 7 after a long illness.

AFL-CIO Backs Fight On Hospital Staff Bias

The AFL-CIO Executive Council gave strong support, including financial aid, to a group of Negro doctors in Chicago engaged in a federal court fight to end discrimination in hospital admissions and staff appointments.

Declaring that such discrimination is "by no means" confined to Chicago, the council voted an initial contribution of $5,000 to help in the legal fight to abolish restrictive practices by the hospitals.

The council also recommended that AFL-CIO staff departments, especially the general counsel's office, give "all appropriate assistance" which may be sought by the Negro doctors who have brought the anti-trust suit in U.S. District Court.

The matter was brought to the council's attention by Chicago Flat Janitors Union, Local 1 of the Building Service Employes, which declared in a resolution that certain Cook County hospitals "have consistently restricted and limited appointments of Negro physicians to their hospital and medical staffs and restricted and limited admissions of Negro patients."

The resolution further charged that in applying such restrictions, the hospitals "have worked in conjunction" with Blue Cross and Blue Shield, the Chicago Hospital Council, the Illinois Hospital Association and the Chicago Medical Society.

In finding that the complaint was indeed justified, the Executive Council declared that the suit brought by the Negro physicians presented "more than a local issue since the decision there will affect similar practices throughout the country."

Such discriminatory practices, the council declared:

- "Are a proper concern of the labor movement since they directly affect the operation of health and welfare plans negotiated by unions, making impossible the provision of equal health benefits to workers of different races who are covered by such a plan."
- "Run contrary to the principle of improving the quality of medical care in this country long supported by the AFL-CIO and others" and "provide the most serious limitation on the freedom of choice by both patient and physician."

The council said that while the issue had "definite civil rights aspects, we do not consider it primarily a civil rights matter."

"It is essentially a matter of making high quality health services available to all citizens, with assurance of free choice of physician and hospital," the statement said.

Labor's Economic Review Says:

Gap Between Top and Bottom Of Economic Ladder Widens

While most Americans are better off financially than they were five years ago or 15 years ago, the gap between those at the top and bottom of the economic ladder shows no signs of narrowing. In fact, it has widened slightly in recent years.

This unequal division of U.S. wealth is analyzed in Labor's Economic Review, a feature of the November issue of the American Federationist, official AFL-CIO magazine. The analysis, prepared by the Dept. of Research, is based on the latest available data, including a new government survey.

Despite impressive statistics showing steady growth in "average" family income, the gains have been unevenly distributed. Neither high tax rates on upper-income brackets nor the impact of welfare legislation has brought about any leveling of the extremes.

In 1955, for example, the high 20 per cent of the nation's families received 43.2 per cent of the total after-tax family income, while the lowest fifth had only 5.2 per cent.

By 1960, the family income of the bottom 20 per cent had gone up $205, but that of the top 20 per cent had risen $2,485. As a result, the top fifth received 43.8 per cent of the total income, while the share of the bottom fifth had slipped to 4.9 per cent.

Disparity Really Greater

The AFL-CIO analysis notes that if profits from capital gains had been added to the income figures, the disparity in the division would have been even greater.

A U.S. Dept. of Commerce study on family income distribution "establishes these major points," the AFL-CIO analysis declared:

- "While postwar family income averages have been rising significantly and all income brackets have benefited, the gain of the neediest has been shockingly small and the income share of the groups at the bottom of the scale actually has been going down.
- "About two-fifths of all Americans live in families with incomes still too low to provide the minimum essentials of comfortable and decent living."

The AFL-CIO analysis also cites a study of wealth accumulation by Prof. Robert Lampman of the University of Wisconsin dealing with the percentage of the nation's personal wealth held by the richest 1 per cent of U.S. adults.

While the personal wealth of the top 1 per cent dropped from a high of 36.3 per cent in 1929 to a low of 20.8 per cent in 1949, the percentage has been moving up since then. In 1953, it was 24.2 percent; two years later it was 26 per cent, and in 1961 the richest 1 per cent owned 28 per cent of the nation's personal wealth.

This has been accompanied by a rise in the number of millionaires from 27,000 in 1953 to about 100,000 by 1961 and an increase in the "very rich," with wealth of $5 million or more, from 2,000 to 10,000 during the same period.

"The time has come," the AFL-CIO analysis declares, "to reverse this unwholesome trend" of a widening gap between the share of income and wealth held by those at the top and the large group at the bottom.

A step in this direction can be taken, the article notes, during 1963, when the Administration is scheduled to submit an overall reform of the federal tax system.

3-Year Mark Set In NLRB Elections

Dir. John Livingston of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization has reported to the federation's General Board that the percentage of representation elections won by affiliated unions for the year ending last June 30 was the highest in three years—54.5 percent.

Livingston cited reports by the National Labor Relations Board showing that AFL-CIO unions participated in 4,934 elections, the highest number in nine years, and won 2,692 contests involving 186,439 workers.

About the same number of workers, the organizing director pointed out, lost jobs in the 12-month period due largely to the impact of automated machinery and processes.

SAG Launches Drive For More Movie Jobs

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild announced at its annual membership meeting here that it will not ask for specific wage increases in coming negotiations but will concentrate on measures to provide "more motion picture production and more jobs for actors" in films produced in this country.

It was the first time since the Guild's formation in 1933 that such a recommendation has been made, SAG Pres. George Chandler told an audience of 1,200 movie and television actors. He added that the union will not ask for any changes in wages or working conditions if they would increase the cost of hiring actors in American films.

The union bargaining approach was based on the fact that, though wage minimums are $100 a day or $350 a week, so little work is available for movie actors in Hollywood that last year some two-thirds of all screen actors received less than $2,500 from films.

SAG members are aware also that current trends favor a return of production to Hollywood—foreign production costs are rising while the feeling grows that U.S. facilities and know-how are superior to those abroad.

The annual SAG award for outstanding achievement was presented to Eddie Cantor. Jack Benny represented Cantor at the ceremony, and Chandler later gave the award to Cantor, who was at home under doctor's orders.

The decision on wages was based, Chandler told the meeting, on the premise that "anything we can do to bring more production back to Hollywood, we must do, for what we need is more work." But the Guild will insist on the right to reopen its contracts when direct production for pay television becomes imminent, and also on health and welfare changes, he said.

In other actions, the meeting:

- Determined that clauses guaranteeing equal employment opportunity for Negroes and other minority group members must be asked for in all future negotiations.
- Re-elected Chandler and all other officers without opposition, and in a contested election chose 14 directors on an administration slate.
- Learned that a Hollywood union-management committee on runaway production has asked the State Dept. to work with other agencies to help eliminate subsidies by foreign nations to U.S. film companies producing abroad, and other restrictions against American films.
- Heard that $6.5 million was distributed by the SAG to members in residual fees on TV entertainment films and in contract violation claims.
- Received a report that the union health and welfare plan has paid $911,500 to actors and has received employer contributions of $3.8 million in its first 18 months of existence.

Rev. McGowan, Labor Expert, Dead at 70

Rev. Raymond A. McGowan, retired director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, who was widely known in labor circles, died in Kansas City at the age of 70.

In a telegram to his sister, Miss Bess McGowan, Pres. George Meany expressed the AFL-CIO's distress at the death of "one of our greatest and most beloved friends."

"As assistant director and director of the NCWC Social Action Dept. from the day of its founding by Father John A. Ryan," Meany said in extending sympathy, "and as one who was with us at almost every one of our conventions, he was, as he once said himself, one who belonged to us. We can never forget him, or his understanding contributions to the finest efforts of our movement."

Father McGowan was ordained in Washington in 1915 and served as an Army chaplain in World War I. When the Social Action Dept. was established in 1920 he was named assistant to Msgr. Ryan and succeeded him in 1945. He retired because of illness in 1954.

An economist, an authority on the papal social encyclicals and an expert in labor affairs, Father McGowan frequently addressed union conventions and upon his retirement became active in the NCWC's Latin American program, with headquarters in San Antonio, Tex.

In 1957 he won the annual award of the Catholic Association for Intl. Peace, and two years ago was honored by the National Religion & Labor Foundation.

Local Labor Official Elected to Congress

Newark, N. J.—Joseph G. Minish, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson Labor Council, has been elected a member of Congress for the 11th District seat formerly held by Hugh J. Addonizio, who resigned to become mayor of Newark. Minish is the first member of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to win a congressional seat.

Son of a coal miner in Scranton, Pa., Minish moved to New Jersey in 1922, worked in a radio shop, and became president of an IUE local union, then secretary of the city central body.

In First 9 Months of '62:

Pay Hikes Benefit 4 of 5 Workers

Major collective bargaining pacts covering some 3.1 million workers have been negotiated during the first nine months of 1962, bringing wage gains to four of every five workers, the Labor Dept. has announced.

In a series of reports on wage and salary increases, the Department also said that average building trades scales rose by eight-tenths of 1 percent or 3 cents an hour in the third quarter of 1962 and by 4 percent over October a year ago. In professional and administrative occupations, average salaries advanced about 2.7 percent over the year; for clerical occupations, the annual survey showed a gain of 2.9 percent.

Those covered by major agreements—pacts affecting 1,000 or more workers—received a median rise of 3.2 percent of estimated straight-time average hourly earnings. The median is a midpoint figure, with half the workers above it and half below it. Counting just those who received pay increases—not all pacts called for raises—the rise was 3.4 percent.

The Labor Dept. said about one-sixth of the 3.1 million workers covered by the major agreements were railroad non-operating employes. This group received wage hikes of slightly more than 10 cents or about 4.1 percent of straight-time average hourly earnings.

About the same proportion of workers were in basic steel, aluminum or related industries, where no wage change was provided in the first contract year, but where supplementary benefit expenditures were boosted by 10 to 11 cents an hour or about 2.5 percent of total labor costs, the department said. Such expenditures were not included in the report of increases nor in computing percentage changes, it was noted.

The report on the building trades dealt mainly with the third quarter of 1962 in a survey of 7 major building trades in 100 cities. Higher pay scales were reported for nearly a fifth of the workers.

Scale increases, the report said, raised the estimated average wage scale to $3.99 an hour. Painters scored the greatest gain—an average of 9.9 cents an hour. Plumbers and bricklayers followed with advances of 4.7 and 3.6 cents, respectively.

In reporting that the level of building trades scales was 4 percent higher than in October a year ago, the Labor Dept. said the average union hourly boost in the past year was 15.1 cents for all trades combined. The increases ranged from 9.9 cents for building laborers to 19.7 cents for painters.

The salary advances for professional, administrative and clerical occupations were reported in the third annual nationwide survey which covers 75 white-collar job categories. This wide grouping accounted for 950,000 employes in the various metropolitan industries surveyed: accounting, legal, office services, personnel management, engineering and chemistry, drafting and clerical. The salary increases were within a range of 2 to 4 percent in most of these fields, the report said.

Reuther, Aides Visiting Japan

Pres. Walter P. Reuther and three other members of a UAW delegation have left for a two-week visit in Japan as guests of the officers of four Japanese trade union federations representing 6 million workers.

During the visit Reuther, who is president of the automotive division of the Intl. Metal Workers' Federation, will also represent that 8-million-member organization. As vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the UAW head has been asked to aid in the ICFTU's objective of more effective cooperation with Japanese trade unions.

Accompanying Reuther are UAW Regional Directors Robert Johnston and Ray Ross, and Victor Reuther, administrative assistant to the president.

NEED FOR MORE CONTACTS between European and Latin American union movements was stressed by European trade unionists who, under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, paid a visit to the ICFTU's newest affiliate, the Venezuelan Confederation of Workers (CTV). Shown during the trip are, from left, Confederal Sec. Marcel Babeau of the French Force Ouvriere; Assistant Sec. Victor Feather of the British Trades Union Congress; CTV Gen. Sec. Agosto Malave Villalba; Sec. W. F. Van Tilburg of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (NVV); A. Forrest of the ICFTU secretariat, and Sec. Alfred Stroer of the Austrian Trade Union Federation (OeGB).

Soviet Union Blocks ILO Probe Of German Unionist's Kidnaping

Geneva—The Soviet Union was denounced in scorching terms at an Intl. Labor Organization session here for refusing to cooperate in an investigation of the "railroading" by East German Communists of a West German free trade unionist.

The Communists were bluntly accused in the ILO's Governing Body of kidnaping Heinz Brandt, an editor of a West German labor paper, and giving him no chance to defend himself in a mock trial that resulted in his being sentenced to 13 years' hard labor by an East German court.

Brandt's case was placed before the ILO by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The ICFTU demanded an investigation of Brandt's unexplained disappearance from West Berlin in 1961 while attending a trade union meeting.

Brandt's whereabouts were unknown until Russia's East German puppet regime announced that he was under arrest. He was subsequently sentenced on unspecified charges of espionage without even the semblance of a fair trial, the ICFTU charged.

As occupying power with jurisdiction in East Germany under international accords, the Soviet Union was asked by the ILO committee investigating the complaint for information on Brandt's arrest and trial.

Moscow Refuses Answer

Moscow, however, refused to answer. Instead, it claimed that the request should be addressed to the East German "Democratic Republic," which, it asserted, was an "independent government" not under Soviet jurisdiction.

Since the ILO does not recognize the East German regime, the committee reported, Moscow's refusal to cooperate blocked the investigation.

In a moving statement to the Governing Body, the veteran West German labor leader, Willy Richter, recalled that Brandt had spent 10 years in Nazi concentration camps.

Brandt was over 50, Richter said, which meant that the 13 years given him by the East German Reds was a "sentence of death." Full responsibility for what happened to Brandt in the Soviet occupation zone "is borne by the Soviet Union," he declared.

Jean Moeri, Swiss spokesman for the worker delegates, scored the Communists for having kidnaped Brandt out of West Berlin. Employer delegates echoed the workers' indignation by charging that Brandt was a victim of a "flagrant violation" of both trade union and human rights.

George L. P. Weaver, U.S. assistant secretary of labor, told the Governing Body that it was "inconceivable" the ILO investigation should be "frustrated" by Russia's denial of the authority she assumed in East Germany under international agreements.

Vasily Borisov, Soviet government delegate, sat grimly silent as his government was being attacked. He still said nothing when the Governing Body decided to refer the Brandt case to the United Nations.

In another development, Italy announced that she was ready to contribute $7.5 million over 10 years toward the financing of an Intl. Center for Advanced Training that would be established in Turin, the Italian industrial city, under ILO auspices.

Italy had previously offered buildings for the center that had been erected for a fair in Turin last year.

Faupl Urges Study of Needs

It was "absolutely essential," said Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate, that the precise needs of the underdeveloped countries be determined before attempting to set up training programs.

Kalmen Kaplansky of the Canadian Labor Congress warned that the proposed center "should not become a strain on the regular ILO budget and thereby prevent the organization from fulfilling its traditional tasks."

A working party of government, worker and employer delegates was appointed to study the Italian proposal.

In other action, the Governing Body placed on the agenda of the 1964 ILO conference the problems faced by women workers today and the employment of young persons in mines.

$173.50 Top Rate Won In Daily News Strike

New York—The Newspaper Guild of New York has won a new top minimum wage of $173.50 a week this year, rising to $178.50 next year, and other contract improvements after an eight-day strike against the Daily News, largest U.S. newspaper.

The 1,100 strikers ratified the new agreement and the paper resumed publication after a shutdown for a period which included Election Day. The Guild then resumed negotiations with six other daily newspapers here, with the Daily News agreement offered as a basis for settlement.

The Daily News was the only paper struck when contracts with the seven dailies expired Oct. 31. The settlement was reached Nov. 8 after round-the-clock mediation by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, acting at the request of Pres. Kennedy to avert a citywide newspaper shutdown, and U.S. mediators.

The new agreement contains these improvements:

- An average pay raise of $8 a week—$4.25 this year, $3.75 next year.
- Checkoff of union dues and assessments.
- A night work differential of $1.50 for a night shift, with a new "lobster" shift differential of $2. The old rate was $1 per shift.
- Severance pay on resignation after 25 years' service, or on retirement at age 62 in lieu of pension. Employes may retain a supplementary annuity plan.

Raises under the new agreement range from $2 to $5.50 a week, as of Nov. 1 and from $1.50 to $5 next Nov. 1. Other improvements include a clause to keep jobs now being done by Guild members from being moved out of Guild jurisdiction; triple time for overtime work on a holiday; company payment of all hospitalization and major medical premiums and a job security clause.

Nine craft unions at the paper had respected Guild picket lines during the strike. Their own contracts expire Dec. 7 and Mar. 7 next.

UAW Gives $25,000 To Development Group

Detroit — The Auto Workers have presented a check for $25,000 to the Metropolitan Industrial Development Corp. in keeping with a commitment made last March to contribute to a "seed money" fund to help set up such a group.

India Thanks AFL-CIO For Gift to Defense Fund

A gift of $1,000 from the AFL-CIO to India has been received with thanks and will be credited to the Indian National Defense Fund, Indian Ambassador B. K. Nehru has notified AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"It is only in times of stress and need that one discovers who one's true friends are," Nehru said in a letter. "The response of the American people and the American government to our request for assistance in this hour of travail has been truly warm and unstinting. Let me assure you that it will be long remembered with gratitude."

Nehru said he was heartened by the fact that Meany was one of the first to give personal sympathy and support to India. The gift followed India's call for help against an attack by Chinese Red Army units in the North.

Wage Probe Nets $80,000 Back Pay

Indianapolis — The Mechanics Laundry & Supply Co. has paid more than $80,000 in back minimum and overtime wages to 640 present and former employes as the result of an investigation by the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Div.

In addition, the firm is attempting to locate 79 former employes to whom approximately $2,400 is due. After it had given assurance of future compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act, a civil action pending in U.S. District Court here was dismissed at the request of Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

Investigators said the firm failed to pay many of its employes the legal minimum wage of at least $1.15 an hour; failed to pay time and one-half for overtime to some employes, and violated interstate shipment provisos of the act. It employs more than 500 workers.

The State Picture

THE 50 STATE legislatures will be a major battleground in 1963 in the struggle to win improved labor and welfare legislation, fair tax programs and equitable reapportionment.

The results of the 1962 elections disclose that the generally conservative control of state lawmaking bodies has been increased a bit despite the liberal gains in the 88th Congress.

The results in the balloting for members of state legislatures parallel to some degree the "hate-the-governors" trend apparent in the 1960 and 1962 elections. In both years an unusual number of state houses changed hands as governors sought to meet education, road, health and other varied needs through increases in taxes.

Conservative groups moved in sharply behind the unpopular tax increases and have profited politically. To a great extent, however, the conservative strength is still based on malapportioned districts that give rural areas a dominant and controlling voice in the legislatures. In the rural areas—as distinct from the cities and suburbs—the demand for schools, hospitals and general social welfare programs is either nonexistent or of minor importance.

The long overdue improvements in unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation have made little headway in the past two years and the nature of the new legislatures holds out little hope for new progress.

A new drive for so-called "right-to-work" laws can be anticipated as the result of increased conservative control and hope for repeal of these "open shop" laws dims in a number of states. There is a distinct possibility, also, of a stepped-up pace of general anti-labor legislation at the state level.

The reapportionment scheduled for many legislatures as a result of court orders, suits and other approaches may not make much headway in terms of giving the suburban areas and the cities fair representation unless the courts hand down specific formulas.

Many of the problems confronting the states are in effect no longer soluble at the state level because of limited resources and tax programs that are essentially regressive rather than based on ability to pay.

This places a new emphasis on the need for federal aid to education, new federal standards for unemployment compensation and national approaches to the myriad problems facing all Americans.

Eleanor Roosevelt

FEW AMERICANS of our time will be mourned as deeply as Eleanor Roosevelt who died last week at 78. Though born to wealth, she chose to devote her life to the poor, the down-trodden and the oppressed. Though she achieved greatness, she retained to her death the humility that once caused the late Dag Hammarskjold to thank her for "simply being herself."

As one of the nation's most active first ladies, as an untiring traveler, as a delegate to the United Nations and, in recent years, as a lecturer, writer and columnist, Mrs. Roosevelt was beloved by all the world.

Union members have always considered her one of their own. She believed strongly in trade unions. As soon as she became a columnist, she joined the American Newspaper Guild. When misnamed "right-to-work" laws threatened collective bargaining, she helped found the National Council for Industrial Peace to warn of the danger of the compulsory open shop. With labor, she fought cancer.

Eleanor Roosevelt is gone. But she remains an inspiration to all who treasure freedom.

'Sorry, We're Still Too Busy'

Meany Tells Negroes:

Labor in Forefront of Drive For a Fair Employment Law

The following is excerpted from an address by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the Negro American Labor Council in New York.

A GENERATION AGO, in some quarters—and in some unions—discrimination was not only accepted; it was respectable. Today, where discrimination still exists in the labor movement, it is a bootleg product, sneaked in by subterfuge. Even those who practice discrimination know in their hearts that its days are numbered.

Now let's talk about membership and jobs. As you are well aware, there are three factors involved. First, there is the policy of the employers. Second, there is the policy of government, both state and federal. Third, there is the policy of the trade unions.

The policy of the employers comes first because in the overwhelming majority of cases, the employer decides who gets hired. I am talking about new hiring.

It is this kind of hiring that largely determined the pattern of the labor force as it exists today. The pattern was established before there was any government policy toward private employment; it was established when the labor movement was small and weak.

What does this pattern show? The latest figures compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics are for May, 1962—21 years after Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's historic Executive Order on fair employment practices; 17 years after this state enacted the pioneer FEPC law since followed by some 20 others; and after long, vigorous and often successful battles by the labor movement to negotiate and enforce antidiscrimination clauses in collective agreements.

These figures show 5 percent of the Negroes in our work force in professional and technical jobs, against more than 12 percent of the whites. They show less than 9 percent of the Negroes in clerical and sales jobs, against 22.5 percent of the whites.

In the so-called blue collar occupations, just 6 percent of the Negroes are classified as skilled; more than 14 percent rated unskilled. For whites, the figures are about 14 percent skilled, less than 5 percent unskilled—just about the reverse.

By far the largest group of Negro workers—32 percent—is in the service trades.

That is the pattern, after 20 years of progress. I say it is a disgraceful pattern.

One major basis for this pattern is inadequate education. On one hand there is inadequate education of the employers—and white workers—on the principles of equal opportunity. On the other hand there is the inadequate education of Negroes, through no fault of their own. We in the labor movement can be proud of our fight for equal, unsegregated educational opportunities—in the schools, in the colleges, in vocational training and in apprenticeship programs. That fight is, of course, a long way from being won.

NEVERTHELESS the record is clear that little help can be expected from the employers, acting on their own. As in so many other matters, they need "persuasion." And I mean the kind of legal persuasion that can, if necessary, be backed up by legal sanctions. So we turn to the policies of government.

Why must we turn to government? Because the trade union movement is not strong enough, in itself, to bring about the necessary changes. The changes must be made in the unorganized areas as well as those under union contract. The changes must be made where the union is not strong enough to negotiate them at the bargaining table. And the changes must be made even when they are opposed by misguided elements within the union itself.

To go a step further, the great gap in government policy is the lack of a national fair employment practices law. The AFL-CIO is unalterably committed to the passage of such a law. And when it finally comes about, it will be as a result of the political power and legislative influence of the trade union movement. And mark you—it will come about.

I think it is worth noting that the strongest single force behind every civil rights proposal is the AFL-CIO. In education, in housing, in public accommodations, on voting rights—all the way down the line, on every front—we spearhead the fight for equal justice for all.

We do not expect any medals for this; we are only doing what we ought to do. But it is a part of the record, and it deserves to be mentioned.

Most of the time, what we get is not praise but blame. Often we are told that we are losing votes in Congress on other issues—on medical care, for example, or unemployment compensation, or minimum wages, vital issues to all workers, regardless of color—because southern congressmen resent our civil rights position. Tone it down, we are advised. Take it easy.

Well, I have said before, and I say again, we are not going to tone it down. We are not going to take it easy. If our pressure for civil rights costs us votes on other issues, so be it. This is a price we are ready to pay.

Morgan Says:

There Were Tears for Mrs. FDR, But What for Richard Nixon?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

TWO INTERNATIONALLY-KNOWN and controversial figures have just passed from public view, one removed by death, the other by political eclipse. What vastly different worlds these two people—Eleanor Roosevelt and Richard Nixon—inhabited. Both were endowed with driving, tireless energy. Both were politicians of varying skills and both ceaselessly circumnavigated the globe and poked into its odd corners.

Morgan

But where Mrs. Roosevelt seemed in quest of understanding, Nixon went forth in a kind of defiant combat, at war with some sinister though not always specified enemy and never, or hardly ever, at peace with himself.

Though Mrs. Roosevelt was often referred to as the first citizen of the world she was not universally liked. Some of her own countrymen heartily despised her—in part, perhaps, as a symbol of her husband and the bloodless revolution he engineered in America under the banner of the New Deal. Her homeliness and her shrill and soaring voice were often used as the excuses for cruel jokes. She never quite managed to subdue the high notes of her vocal register but her words were mellow with compassion or deep with anger at injustice and her endless good works were simply an embellishment of the shining beauty of this remarkable woman's character.

"She would rather light candles than curse the darkness," Adlai Stevenson said after her death, "and her glow has warmed the world."

She was, it is said, a frightful cook and she may not have mastered all the mysterious subtleties of motherhood but the planet itself was her fireside and she felt familial ties with hill tribesman and tenement dweller alike. When Franklin Delano Roosevelt died on that fateful April afternoon in 1945, men and women in far places burst into tears in the streets at the loss of a friend. There has been a modest reenactment of that grief over the death, in her 79th year, of his widow.

Mrs. Roosevelt espoused causes, she was a passionate though not always a practical believer in ideals, but most of all she believed in people. There was something almost palpable in her sincerity and concern and kindness which somehow rubbed off on intimate friend and anonymous stranger alike, like pollen fertilizing hope and confidence and nourishing that wild and wonderful plant we call the human spirit.

Richard Nixon has espoused causes and embraced beliefs, too, but in the manner, one is reluctantly bound to conclude, of the duffer buying a new set of golf clubs in the desperate hope that they will improve his game. He has been a calculating craftsman experimenting with a variety of tools, some delicate, some blunt instruments, as if he could not quite make up his mind what he was trying to build or what his real talents were for building it.

And by his stupifying swan song to politics in the press room of the Beverly-Hilton Hotel in Los Angeles, Nixon brought to the fore a question that had been lurking long in the minds of some people who knew him, or at least had tried to know him: how much confidence did he inspire in himself? Eleanor Roosevelt believed in people but how much did or does Richard Nixon believe in Richard Nixon?

Was this incoherent tirade a courageous indictment of a shabby press by a righteously outraged and deeply wounded man or was it the violent recoil of a man drained of inner strength, a recoil from the terrible discovery that he had nothing left inside but a personal hollowness?

THESE ARE BRUTAL questions but there was brutality in that performance from which Nixon spared almost nobody, including himself. The Washington Evening Star's Mary McGrory put it most pointedly. "His principal target was the press," she wrote from Los Angeles, "but he was like a kamikaze pilot who keeps apologizing for the attack."

Without doubt, unfair and intemperate things have been broadcast and headlined about Richard Nixon but he does not make easy the composition of detached accounts. He sometimes seems to be asking the press not for objectivity but for a forgiving charity toward a theory that Machiavelli popularized, that the ends justify the means.

The paucity of his indictment against the Fourth Estate was revealed in the irony of his attack on the Los Angeles Times for faithfully reporting a devastating "flub" he had made on television but ignoring one Gov. Brown had made the same day. The Los Angeles Times, more than any other paper, had supported him from the very beginning of his political career.

There is a bitter, biting sadness to the fact that while the world mourns the loss of Eleanor Roosevelt, it is not mourning the political demise of a man who tried so hard and got so far and so heartbreakingly faltered. But if Richard Nixon adds a seventh to the six crises he wrote about in his book, it perhaps should not be the loss of another election but a confrontation with himself.

Labor's 'Big Challenge':

Unorganized Areas Show Job Pickup

BASIC ALTERATIONS in the structure of the American labor force are far more sweeping than most of us realize.

These shifts and changes are taking place on a scale so vast and so deep that eventually it will hit a large percentage of the American people.

Recently, in a lecture at the New School of Social Research in New York City, Commissioner of Labor Statistics Ewan Clague of the U.S. Dept. of Labor provided an insight into this transformation.

He pointed out that since 1957 total employment in the U.S. has risen from 64.3 million to more than 67 million. Some occupations increased but others showed a marked decrease, he noted.

The cut that automation and technological change are making in our production workers was presented graphically by Clague. He showed that while production workers are declining, non-production workers are on the increase.

HERE'S THE PICTURE: manufacturing payrolls last spring included 12.3 million production workers, almost 1 million less than in 1957. The same payrolls include 335,000 more non-production workers—office workers, salesmen, officials and others—than in 1957.

Recently two unions in the aerospace industry—the Auto Workers and the Machinists—were involved in union shop votes. When the votes were counted a majority of workers approved the union shop but the number fell shy of the necessary two-thirds.

Union officials, examining the returns, came to the conclusion that including the non-production workers in the bargaining unit, a group which had no history of trade unionism, was a major factor in the outcome. For if the aerospace industry is comparable to the rest of manufacturing, for every 10 workers lost as a result of automation and technological change, three were added to the non-production labor force.

If this trend continues, as most observers believe, it poses the greatest possible challenge to the American labor movement.

CLAGUE MADE another observation of great import. He noted that the mining portion of the Federal Reserve Index of production is about unchanged since 1957. At the same time the manufacturing portion is up 19 percent. In other words 19 percent more is being produced by 3.6 percent fewer workers.

Walter Heller, chairman of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, recently reported that labor productivity in manufacturing has risen about 6 percent since the low point of the last recession in early 1961 while the annual rate of factory wage boosts, including the fringe benefits, has fallen steadily from 5.3 percent in 1956 to 2.4 percent during the first seven months of this year.

It would seem that many workers now are taking it on the chin twice—reduction in jobs and, if working, less financial gain.

The overall labor force is growing at a slower rate than it did two decades ago when actually it should grow more rapidly because of increased births.

Employes in manufacturing, mining, contract construction, transportation and public utilities are either not increasing or are declining. The pickup has been in the white collar trades and in government. The latter group, it should be noted, has doubled since 1940 largely due to expansion in state and local governments.

The organized industries are either on a plateau or declining. It is the unorganized areas where there is the greatest pickup in employment. (PAI)

Labor News Conference:

Start on Retraining of Jobless 'Significant,' Labor Aide Says

THE MORE THAN 13,000 unemployed men and women from distressed areas throughout the country authorized for training under the Area Redevelopment Act, some of whom are now finding jobs, represent a "significant" start on new skill development under the Act, an AFL-CIO spokesman observed on a network radio program over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Frank Fernbach, economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, agreed that the number authorized for training seems small in relation to the need, but attributed the slow start of the program to the many steps a community must take to qualify for federal aid under the program.

"In a certain sense," he added, "it isn't so important that the program begins slowly but it is most important that it begins well . . . I think the program will move much faster from now on."

Fernbach discussed the redevelopment act and the later Manpower Development & Training Act on Labor News Conference, public affairs program brought to radio audiences by the AFL-CIO. He was questioned by Frank Porter of the Washington Post and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

The AFL-CIO economist said it was "reasonable" to assume that of the 9,000 persons who had completed training by June 30 last, at least 6,000 are now employed.

"These were men and women—men, two to one, over women—who were either on relief or drawing unemployment compensation," he pointed out. "These people needed skills they didn't have; they got some degree of skill training. They are now not only workers, but they are taxpayers in the communities in which they live and to the federal government.

"The reports from the people trained are, generally speaking, highly laudatory of the program."

FERNBACH ALSO stressed the need for proper administration of programs under the two laws.

"For instance," he said, "the administrators have the responsibility to see that workers are not retrained and then paid unfair sweatshop wages. The retraining program should be denied to an employer who requests trainees but who operates a sweatshop and thereby can't keep his old work force.

"I think the administrators must make sure that there is an actual job need and not the flooding of the labor market with the depression of wage rates."

"By the way, Simpkins, were YOU operating this electronic brain when it checked your credit rating?"

How to Buy:

Questionable Land Promotions Defrauding Public of Millions

By Sidney Margolius

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAUS, the Federal Trade Commission and various state attorneys have joined an all-out effort to control questionable promotions of land in remote desert and submarginal areas, often sold sight unseen to unwary buyers.

The Association of Better Business Bureaus reports that hundreds of thousands of acres are being promoted at a cost to the public that may run into many millions of dollars. While advertising paints a beautiful picture of living in the sun, frequently the facts are not only omitted but actually misrepresented, warns Thomas C. Roberts, the ABBB's information director.

Many of the promotions are for land in warm-climate states. The St. Louis Better Business Bureau points out that desert lands in the Southwest, hilly lots in the South and swampy regions on the Southeast are advertised by mail, in newspapers and on TV for as little as $10 down and $10 a month.

The questionable plots in other areas are being offered at seemingly low prices for vacation and retirement homes. The Akron, O., Better Business Bureau got so many local inquiries about the "Shenango Lakes" real-estate development that it sent an investigator there. He found that lots previously advertised as $199 now were offered by mail for $499. The "lakes" turned out to be two ponds. Cottage sites bordering the ponds were "waterfront property" at $2,200.

The St. Louis Bureau found that at the O'Fallon Hills development in Missouri, the rutty road stopped even before it reached the lots which had been offered for a "total price of $395." The purchase agreement stated that the buyer would be responsible for extending streets, water and power.

ONE OF THE BIGGEST recent promotions has been for sites on a so-called ranch in Nevada. The original "Gamble Ranch" which was supposed to be the subdivision consisted of less than 80 acres with just one well, law-enforcement authorities reported. But the promoters (the Pacific Westates Land Development Corp.), also bought up over 200,000 additional acres of dry, sagebrush land surrounding the original Gamble Ranch and sold it as part of their promotion.

Other dubious promotions have been exposed recently in Utah and near Taos, N. M. These offered lots free as "prizes" but charged large amounts for conveying title.

Prices asked for land in the desert country seem cheap to moderate-income city dwellers, aware that a small lot in their areas sells for several thousand dollars. But arid, undeveloped or inaccessible land really is worth only a few dollars an acre. One Arizona subdivision offers land for as much as $1,200 an acre that 10 years ago sold for $25 an acre.

In some southwest subdivisions you have to look twice at any water you think you see because it may be a mirage, one land-owner there told this reporter. Many of these developments are called "sites." They certainly are. You can't see a tree for miles.

The high-pressure real estate promotions and speculations already have caused serious trouble in South Florida, where they first burgeoned. The Federal Housing Administration has had to take over ownership of some 1,300 small homes around Miami because families could not meet mortgage payments.

All experts advise against buying land without first visiting it, and without consulting your local Better Business Bureau or the attorney general of your state about the offer.

Health Service Defended:

British Doctors Rap AMA for 'Nonsense'

THE FINE ART OF MISREPRESENTATION practiced by the American Medical Association has precipitated a blowup in England. Exploding with righteous indignation is the staid, mild and well-mannered British Medical Society.

For years the British doctors' organization has tolerantly and patiently kept quiet while the AMA made hysterical charges about the British Health Service. Official AMA spokesmen, at the cost of vast sums, have been peddling the idea that the British program of "socialized medicine" is vicious compulsion, dragging the nation down to the point where frantic doctors are madly fleeing the country.

The British Medical Journal, official publication of the British doctors, has finally had enough. In an editorial it bluntly charged that the AMA's attack on the British health program was "vulgar, cheap and nonsense."

"We have watched with some dismay the mushroom growth of the AMA's public relations activities and the colossal sums spent by it to defeat what our American colleagues call 'socialized medicine'," the Journal said. "This dismay is at the probably inherent weakness of American medical services if such a vast effort has to be expended on misrepresentation of what is happening here in Britain."

The editor of the British journal acknowledged that there are certain weaknesses in the English medical program. But he is certain, he continued vigorously, that "a great many doctors in the USA deplore as we do the vulgarity and cheapness of its (the AMA's) past and present attacks on the National Health Service."

"The AMA," he said, "should understand that they have a lot to learn from Britain and Europe about methods of providing medical services—from our successes as well as our failures."

THE AMA HAS BECOME one of the most powerful pressure forces this country has ever witnessed. Its manipulations to defeat the Anderson-King bill—at the cost of millions of dollars—make this power self-evident.

The AMA House of Delegates, for example, has adopted this solemn doctrine: "All features of medical services in any method of medical practice should be under the control of the medical profession. No other body or individual is legally or educationally equipped to exercise control."

In his authoritative study, "The Doctor Business," Richard Carter tells what this doctrine means:

"Among several fantasies which seem real to organized medicine is one in which it envisions itself as guardian of the American public's freedom. Inspired by this recurrent hallucination, the AMA behaves as a kind of political chaperone, or great aunt, protecting wanton people from the seductions of the planned economy and the welfare state.

"To organized medicine, certain American freedoms are quintessential and must remain undefiled. We must remain free to select our physicians blindly from among those willing to serve us. We must remain free to pay individual, unregulated fees for individual, unsupervised services. We must put up with the resultant scientific and financial helter-skelter. The alternative, says organized medicine, is bondage.

"So interested is organized medicine in dictating the terms of our freedom that it tries to tie our hands and feet and actually stupefy our brains so that we won't be able to escape." (PAI)

From Soup to Nonsense:

Children's Sub-Culture Persists In Spite of Atoms, TV and Gesell

By Jane Goodsell

IN SOME WAYS things have changed a lot since you and I were kids. Today little boys run around wearing space helmets instead of cowboy hats and holsters. Little girls cut out Lennon Sisters paper dolls instead of reading stories about the Bobbsey Twins, and Mad Magazine has taken up where Capt. Billy's Whiz Bang left off.

But in other ways things haven't changed at all. Back in the days when you and I were kids, little boys used to tease little girls by yelling, "I see London, I see France, I see somebody's underpants!"

Little girls used to jump rope to the chant of "Teddy Bear, Teddy Bear, turn around, Teddy Bear, Teddy Bear, touch the ground!"

And you know what? They're still doing it.

Remember when we used to place our fingertips together and singsong, "Here's the church and here's the steeple, open the door and here are the people?" They're still doing that, too.

There is a sort of sub-culture of childhood that has remained unchanged since we were kids, since our parents were kids, maybe even since Mesozoic kids played tag in the swamps. I'll bet they, too, yelled, "Ollie, ollie, ollie, oxen free!"

The rituals, chants, jokes and taunts of childhood are passed on from child to child, and adults have little or nothing to do with it. Did any parent ever teach his child to sing, "Teacher, teacher, I declare! You forgot your underwear!"? And did any child ever grow up without learning it?

"Eenie, meenie, minie, mo" is still around, and always will be, although the words have been improved significantly since I was a child. It's the only way to decide whether to spend that penny on a jawbreaker or a licorice whip.

KIDS ARE STILL taunting each other to the tune of da-da-da-da-da-da. The lyrics vary to the limits of infinity. (Jim-my is a sis-sy! Margie is a do-ope! Bar-bie got a spank-ing!) But the melody is immortal.

Kids are still counting their buttons by chanting, "Rich man, poor man, beggarman, thief. . . ." and they're still jabbering, "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers. . . ." They're still singing, "We three kings of Orient are, tried to smoke a rubber cigar. . . ."

Then there's the Adam and Eve and Pinch-Me business. It never made much sense, but it's indestructible. My six-year-old pulled it on me the other day. Remember how it goes? "Adam and Eve and Pinch-Me went down to the river to swim. Adam and Eve got drowned. Who was left?"

So you say, "Pinch Me," and the kid pinches you, and howls with laughter. What kind of joke is that to linger on from generation to generation?

Kids are still walking down the street, mumbling, "Step on a crack and you'll break your mother's back." They're still tangling their tongues over "How much wood would a woodchuck chuck. . . ." They still think it's funny to say, "What's my name? Pudd'n Taine!"

Despite child psychology, the space age and television, kids are pretty much the same as they've always been. And I'll bet if we ever discover life on Mars, the Martian kids will greet us to the tune of da-da-da-da-da-da!

51.5 Million Go to Polls:

Voters Set Mid-Term Record; Recounts Likely in Six Contests

This year's election set a new record both for the number of votes cast in a mid-term election and in the percentage of persons of voting age who went to the polls.

It may also set a record of sorts in the number and duration of "cliff hangers"—contests so close that some were still undecided as this issue of the AFL-CIO News went to press.

While voting statistics are not yet complete, it is estimated that nearly 51.5 million persons went to the polls Nov. 6—representing 47 percent of the voting age population.

Although considerably below the pattern for presidential years, the turnout exceeded both the previous numerical off-year record of 45.6 million votes cast in 1958 and the percentage record of 44.5 percent in 1938.

Measured against the number of registered voters, the 1962 turnout came close to 62 percent, as compared with 59.5 percent in 1958.

More than a week after the election, voters in Rhode Island and Minnesota still did not know whom they had elected governor and it may be weeks before the outcome is certain. Democrat George McGovern's apparent 200-vote victory over GOP Sen. Joe Bottum in South Dakota—out of some 250,000 votes cast—remains to be confirmed in a recount.

Recounts were also likely in Maine, where Gov. John H. Reed's margin over Democrat Maynard C. Dolloff was only 621 votes—less than one vote per precinct; in Massachusetts, where Democrat Endicott Peabody apparently defeated Republican Gov. John A. Volpe by 3,187 votes out of more than 2.1 million cast, and in Vermont, where Democrat Philip H. Hoff edged Gov. F. Ray Keyser, Jr., by less than 1,300 votes.

In Minnesota, Karl Rolvaag, the Democratic lieutenant-governor, held a see-sawing 276-vote lead over GOP Gov. Elmer L. Andersen as the official canvass neared completion. A recount was regarded as certain.

Absentee ballots in Rhode Island will determine the outcome. An incomplete check of voting machines put Republican John H. Chafee 142 votes ahead of Democratic Gov. John A. Notte, Jr., but more than 6,000 absentee ballots remained to be counted—including servicemen's votes which are still coming in.

Two staff members of the Senate Elections subcommittee—a Democrat and a Republican—went to South Dakota to check on the ballot counting but returned to Washington before the tally was complete.

Voters in California's 1st District will choose their congressman Jan. 22 at a special election.

California law prevented the Democrats from substituting a candidate when Rep. Clem Miller was killed in an Oct. 7 air crash. By casting their votes for Miller rather than his Republican opponent, the district's voters made it possible for the Democrats to retain the congressional seat if their party's candidate wins the special election.

Poll Tax Amendment Ratified by Illinois

Springfield, Ill.—Illinois became the first state in the nation to ratify the anti-poll tax amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom said the ratification resolution was introduced at labor's request in a special session of the legislature called by Gov. Otto Kerner to provide emergency funds for public assistance programs.

The action on the amendment, he added, was a direct result of a letter from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urging state federations to press for quick ratification.

Plumber Gets State Board Post in Texas

Austin, Tex.—Texas organized labor has won its first representation on the Texas State Board of Plumbing Examiners since 1947.

Gov. Price Daniel, at the urging of the Texas State Pipe Trades Association and the State AFL-CIO, has named Arthur Goodman of Beaumont to a six-year term on the examining board.

Goodman's confirmation by the State Senate is expected to be routine.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Hank Brown, a former president of the State Pipe Trades Association, said the appointment of Goodman is "a not inconsiderable victory in a state where labor has had next to no representation on state boards and commissions—even on those where labor representation is required by statute."

Goodman, a veteran of 21 years in the labor movement, is a past president of the State Pipe Trades Association and currently is a member of Plumbers & Pipefitters Local 504. He is past president of the union's District Council 8, past chairman of the Sabine Area Labor-Management Committee, and serves now as president of the Gulf Coast Council of Plumbers & Pipefitters.

Rutgers Fund Boosted By Leather Workers

New Brunswick, N. J.—The New Jersey Joint Board of the Leather Goods, Plastic & Novelty Workers has contributed $2,000 to the building fund of the Labor Unit at the Rutgers Institute of Management & Labor Relations.

The gift is in addition to $1,250 previously donated and makes the union the 13th labor group to increase its contribution.

UAW Board Reserves Gosser Case Judgment

The Auto Workers executive board reserved judgment on the arrest of Richard T. Gosser, UAW vice president, on charges of conspiracy to defraud the U.S. Internal Revenue Service.

The board declared that the charges are of a "personal nature and do not relate to any of Mr. Gosser's activities as an official of the UAW." The board noted that Gosser "insists that he is not guilty" and that he is entitled to be judged innocent unless proven otherwise

Gosser was arraigned in Toledo with his administrative assistant, Donald Pincotti, and Ted Maison.

Democrats Win Votes, GOP Seats

Albany, N. Y.—Republicans ended up with a majority of New York's congressional seats—21 out of 41—but Democratic candidates got a majority of the votes cast.

While Republican statewide candidates were winning by margins ranging from 500,000 to nearly a million, Democratic congressional candidates were rolling up nearly 100,000 more votes than their GOP opponents. The Republican legislature, however, had redistricted the state in an effort to concentrate the largest possible number of Democratic votes in the fewest possible districts so as to elect more Republican congressmen.

Despite the gerrymander, Democratic candidates pulled several upsets and the GOP failed to gain any additional seats.

Conservatives Gain Strength in States

Votes Favored GOP In Fight for Control

1958 remains intact, however. The capture of both houses of the California legislature from the Republicans for the first time in a century was firmly consolidated.

Here is the lineup in states where the Nov. 6 election brought a significant change in the liberal-conservative ratio, as reported by state AFL-CIO councils:

ALASKA—Democrats increased their hold on the Senate, but House races were so close that 16 of 40 seats and control remain to be decided by absentee ballots.

COLORADO — The Senate switched from 19-16 Democrats to 20-15 Republican; the House went from 33-32 Democratic to 40-25 Republican. However a conservative coalition had effectively controlled the legislature during the past two years, blocking many labor-supported bills.

ILLINOIS—The GOP tightened its control of the Senate to 35-23, a pickup of four seats. It gained one seat in the House for a 90-87 margin. That gain is expected to allow the Republicans to take formal control. In the previous legislature, a maverick Republican had voted with the Democrats on organization of the House.

HAWAII—Democrats won 40-11 control of the House and captured the Senate, 15-10. It had previously been 14-11 Republican.

INDIANA—Republicans completed their comeback from 1958 by winning the Senate for complete control of the legislature.

MINNESOTA — Conservatives won control of House, 80-55, and strengthened their hold on the Senate. Previous House had been 73-58 liberal.

MICHIGAN—Republicans won a more comfortable 58-52 hold on the House, a pickup of two seats.

NEVADA—Democrats picked up one Senate seat and lost by only 24 votes a second which would have given them Senate control for first time since 1924.

NEW JERSEY—There were no regular elections for the legislature but a special election to fill a vacancy gave the Democrats an opportunity to win control of the Senate. The GOP held on to the seat, however.

OKLAHOMA — While Democrats retained easy numerical control, a Republican pickup of three seats in the Senate may give the conservative coalition an edge in some issues, including "right-to-work." The House remains liberal.

PENNSYLVANIA—The GOP picked up two Senate seats to break a previous 25-25 tie, and apparently won control of the House which the Democrats had held 110-100. Absentee ballots could tilt the picture, although it is considered unlikely.

OREGON — Democrats added one seat to firm grip on Senate, apparently held on to 31-29 margin in House although absentee votes could bring about a tie.

TEXAS—Switch in Democratic members makes conservative Senate more moderate-liberal, previously moderate-liberal House more conservative.

UTAH—Democratic tide ran out as Republicans captured House, 34-30, and Senate, 13-12.

WASHINGTON — Republicans made gains but Democrats still control with 32-17 margin in Senate and apparent 51-48 control of House. Conservative coalition in House will make it harder to pass controversial liberal legislation.

WYOMING — Republican gain of two House seats for 37-19 majority seen posing "right-to-work" threat. Democrats picked up one in Senate, but GOP controls 16-11.

BACK TO THE PLANT GATES in Milwaukee goes Wisconsin Gov.-elect John W. Reynolds on the day after election day to thank the workers who helped give him his narrow victory over Republican Philip Kuehn. Reynolds, in glasses, was accompanied by his wife and Sen. William Proxmire, appearing over worker's shoulder at right.

Extensive Range of Issues Decided In State Referendum Questions

Arkansas voters turned down a segregationist-sponsored amendment to their state constitution and Virginia did away with a discriminatory "blank sheet" voter registration device.

Voters in Washington state let their prejudices prevail and narrowly defeated an attempt to wipe out a vestige of the once-prevalent oriental exclusion policy—a ban on aliens owning land. In Idaho, however, voters erased a long-standing blot by doing away with the state's prohibition against naturalized citizens of oriental descent voting or serving on juries.

In nearly every state, voters found on their ballots — often in small print and obscure legal language — proposals to amend the state constitution or to adopt or repeal laws. While some of the proposals were relatively non-controversial, others stirred heated debate. For example:

Extremist Proposal Beaten

California citizens voted 3-2 against an extreme so-called anti-communist proposal which conservatives as well as liberals had denounced as susceptible to misuse. A mixed bag of reapportionment proposals met a mixed fate.

In Oregon, voters retained their "best in the nation" apportionment of the legislature on the basis of population, rejecting a Republican and Farm Bureau plan to give weight to area as well as population in one house. The measure lost by a 3-2 margin.

A labor-supported reapportionment plan was narrowly defeated in Washington, and California voters rejected a proposal to give growing Southern California more seats in the Senate.

Both Colorado and Nebraska adopted apportionment proposals aimed at benefiting conservative rural areas. Florida voters rejected a reapportionment plan which would have added representation to larger cities—but there the opposition was led by city dwellers who charged that the change did not go far enough in equalizing representation.

Tennessee voters approved a call for a constitutional convention, a move supported by rural groups chafing under the court-ordered legislative reapportionment.

Segregationists Beaten

Arkansas voters rebuffed by a 15,000-vote margin a segregationist amendment to the state constitution declaring that no child shall be denied his right to a free public education because of his refusal to attend schools with students of other races. The State AFL-CIO had called for defeat of the proposal.

Maryland voters rejected a congressional redistricting plan which added an extra seat to one area of heavy population, but provided no relief for other areas.

North Dakota adopted a so-called "secret primary" proposal which consolidates the primary election ballot so that voters will not have to designate which party ballot they want. Arizona voters approved a proposition requiring special primary and general elections when a vacancy occurs for U.S. senator or representative.

A number of states adopted proposals to waive or reduce normal residence requirements to permit newcomers to vote for President of the United States.

Among the liberalizations reported to the AFL-CIO News were an Arizona proposition which makes newcomers immediately eligible to vote for President, a Kansas measure requiring only 45 days residence in a precinct for a presidential vote, and a unique Wisconsin proposition which permits voters who move to another state to cast an absentee ballot for President for up to two years after their departure if they have not qualified to vote in their new state of residence.

2 Amendments Lose

Massachusetts voters rejected by an 8 - 1 margin a labor - endorsed amendment permitting a graduated income tax. Ohio turned down a labor-opposed measure permitting food sales on Sundays.

Virginia rejected a move to limit voting on bond issues to property-owning "freeholders" and giving the legislature the right to define a freeholder.

Alaskans voted not to relocate their state capital. Maryland and Utah voters refused to approve pay raises for their legislators, but Kansas voted to allow its legislators to set their own pay scales. South Dakota authorized annual legislative sessions.

Senior Citizens Claim Medicare Vote Victory

The National Council of Senior Citizens has termed the election outcome a "victory" for the principle of health care for the aged under social security. The council, which sought to help candidates in elections providing a clear choice on the health care issue, said older voters had turned out in record numbers to help register a "clear mandate for medicare."

A contrary view came from the American Medical Association's new political arm, which claimed its candidates had won in nearly two-thirds of the 50 contests it had singled out for support. But the AMA refused to say which races these were. AMA Pres.-Elect Edward R. Annis predicted the Administration-backed program would be killed again in Congress.

Aime J. Forand, the former Rhode Island congressman who now heads the senior citizens' council, declared:

"In every House race except one, where support of the President's medicare program was a main issue, the medicare candidate either won election or substantially increased his party's vote over previous races."

In the lone exception—the defeat of Democrat Wilkes T. Thrasher in the Chattanooga area by a Republican opponent of health care legislation—the council noted that a GOP appeal to segregationist bias had clouded the medical care issue. The senior citizens group noted, also, that Thrasher's primary victory over Rep. James B. Frazier, Jr., had eliminated a medicare opponent from the key House Ways & Means Committee, which considers the legislation.

Dr. Blue Carstenson, executive director of the senior citizen group, termed the AMA's political efforts "a multi-million dollar fiasco." He estimated that medical groups spent more than $10 million in a largely-unsuccessful political effort in which they lost "three of their greatest supporters"—Senators Homer E. Capehart (R-Ind.) and Alexander Wiley (R-Wis.), and Rep. Walter H. Judd (R-Minn.).

The senior citizens also pointed out that all Republican incumbents who had supported social security medical care had won re-election easily, including Sen. Jacob K. Javits in New York who led the statewide ticket and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, who won handily in California despite a Democratic sweep.

There appeared no doubt that the net gain of four liberal Democrats in the Senate assured passage of a health care bill by that body. It came within two votes of passage this year and one opponent said he would have supported it if it had not been offered as an amendment to an unrelated bill.

COPE Director Hails Labor's Election Role

Labor's political efforts brought "good results in the face of long odds," the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education declared in an election analysis.

COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, in a statement thanking COPE workers and volunteers for "a tremendous election effort," said:

"We had to get people registered in record numbers, and we did.

"We had to get out a record off-year vote, and we did.

"We had to beat tradition, and we did."

McDevitt noted that while the party not in control of the White House normally loses heavily in congressional mid-term elections, this year liberal Democrats had a net gain of four seats in the Senate and a pickup of at least five votes in the House, despite a "paper" gain of two seats by the Republicans.

"This could very well pave the way for congressional acceptance of essential liberal programs which were entombed by the 87th Congress," the COPE director said.

Urging COPE workers to "begin now" to prepare for the 1964 elections, McDevitt said that "perhaps the most important consequence of the 1962 elections is the promise it holds that in two years we will be able to elect a truly liberal Congress."

McDevitt said that among the "particularly satisfying" victories, representing replacement of conservative incumbents with liberal challengers, were those of Birch Bayh, Jr., over Sen. Homer Capehart (R-Ind.), Gaylord Nelson over Sen. Alexander Wiley (R-Wis.), and the apparent victory of George McGovern over Sen. Joseph Bottum (R-S.D.).

Major house gains included the California victories of Ronald Cameron and Everett Buckhalter over two incumbent members of the John Birch Society, and the victories of Donald Fraser over Rep. Walter Judd (R-Minn.), Robert Secrest over Rep. Tom Moorehead (R-O.), and Richard Fulton, a liberal Democrat, over Rep. J. Carlton Loser (D-Tenn.).

To Negro Labor Council:

Bias Remedy Lies in Reform, Not Destruction, Meany Asserts

New York—Where racial discrimination exists within trade unions, "the first place to seek a remedy is within the labor movement itself," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told delegates to the Negro American Labor Council's convention here.

"And the remedy," Meany declared, "is in the reform of a union, not its destruction."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, who heads the NALC, introduced Meany at the convention banquet as a "warm and close friend" and a "most powerful champion of human rights."

"We may differ at times," Randolph said, "but we have never differed on the belief that bias must and will be eliminated from the American trade union movement."

Meany, who was interrupted repeatedly by applause told the 200 delegates that the AFL-CIO's strengthened civil rights machinery, while not perfect, is nevertheless getting results.

"We are getting far more results," he said, "than you know about, or that I am free to tell you. . . .

'Results, Not Publicity'

"We take the position, shared by most state fair employment practices commissions, that results are what count, not publicity.

"When we move on a case of discrimination and when—through mediation, persuasion and pressure—we resolve it, we have achieved our objective. If we issued a press release we would be saying, in effect, 'We forced a group of misguided, prejudiced people to mend their ways.' This might be gratifying to you and me; but it certainly would not contribute to the permanent reformation of those who had just seen the light."

Observing that discrimination within trade unions had changed in a generation from a "respectable" practice to "a bootleg product, sneaked in by subterfuge," the AFL-CIO president reviewed labor's record in combating race bias and declared that "the strongest single force behind every civil rights proposal is the AFL-CIO."

"In education, in housing, in public accommodations, on voting rights—all the way down the line, on every front—we spearhead the fight for equal justice for all," Meany asserted.

Labor expects no "medals" for this record, he continued, "but when anyone tries to say that the trade unions are the chief barrier to the economic opportunities of Negroes in this country, I resent it and I reject it, for it is simply not true."

"Yet," he added, "the labor secretary of the NAACP [Herbert Hill] was the chief prosecution 'expert' last August in a political attack on the ILGWU—a union whose record shines like a beacon in the history of human progress."

Meany entered a vigorous defense of the Ladies' Garment Workers and the Steelworkers, whom Hill also had accused of discriminatory practices in its Atlanta local.

Referring to a charge by Hill that three ILGWU locals had "virtually no Negro and Puerto Rican members," the AFL-CIO president declared that the facts show that one of the locals has 250 Negro and Spanish-speaking members, including a number of Negro cutters on pensions after at least 20 years in the union; the second has 300, and the third is one of the few remaining Italian-language locals, which "even David Dubinsky couldn't join."

"What contribution is made to the cause of equal opportunity," Meany asked, "by spreading outright falsehoods, by attempting to smear a union whose civil rights record is unsurpassed?"

In the USWA case, he recalled that when the union first organized the Atlanta local, USWA Pres. David J. McDonald had consulted Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, and the two had agreed on a program to correct discriminatory plant practices. Part of that program, he said, was a special committee consisting of Hill for the NAACP and Frank Shane, the union's civil rights director, which was to meet every three months to evaluate the effort and discuss problems.

No Meeting Sought

"I am told by the Steelworkers that Herbie Hill has never sought nor attended a meeting with Frank Shane, from the time the committee was set up until the day the decertification action was brought against the union," Meany reported.

If the NAACP's decertification action were to succeed, he asked "would the plant immediately become a paradise of non-discrimination? You know what would happen; the employer would go back to doing what he always did before the place was organized."

The AFL-CIO is "open to suggestions" in its efforts to combat discrimination, Meany emphasized, adding that no one regards the federation's new civil rights mechanism as beyond improvement, "but it cannot work at all unless it is used," he added.

"Speaking for myself, and for every responsible AFL-CIO leader, we want this problem solved. There is no place for discrimination in a movement dedicated to human brotherhood. We are going to wipe it out, and it is not going to take another century to do it."

Reuther Stresses Gap

Auto Worker Pres. Walter P. Reuther also stressed the time gap between the "noble goals of democracy and its performance" and declared that "we do not have another hundred years to wait" for full Negro equality. The problem, he said, is one of "better communication, coordination and cooperation" between labor and civil rights organizations.

In official actions, the NALC voted strong support for the NAACP labor program, but specifically refrained from endorsing its plan to seek decertification of unions it regards as promoting discrimination. The resolution made no mention of Hill.

"I am glad we had the wisdom to reject the doctrine of decertification of unions," Randolph observed. "We were on the brink of disaster. I am unalterably committed to support of the NAACP, but we must carry on our fight within the house of labor."

Randolph, who is president of the Sleeping Car Porters, was unanimously re-elected president of the council. He named Sec.-Treas. Cleveland Robinson, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union Dist. 65, as his special assistant.

LABOR'S RECORD in the fight against racial discrimination is reviewed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in an address to the Negro American Labor Council in New York. At left is L. Fair Employment Drive Pledged by 120 Unions ments committing their unions to accept all eligible applicants for membership, to seek management agreement on non-discrimination polices in all personnel matters, to refuse to charter any local union on a segregated basis and end segregated locals that now exist, and to seek non-discrimination clauses on apprenticeship training.

The pledges generally follow the civil rights policy adopted at the 1961 AFL-CIO convention.

The agreements were worked out by a committee headed by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the federation's civil rights committee.

Pres. George Meany told the group that the fair practices program marks "the beginning of a new, practical, positive, concerted effort by these unions and your committee (the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity) to move forward at a firmer and faster pace toward our common goal of equal opportunity for all."

Organized labor, said Meany, "is deeply conscious of the urgency with which it must press the vital task to which it is committed, of stamping out all practices of discrimination and segregation based on race, creed, or color in employment in its own ranks, and in every field of American life."

Local Progress Reviewed

He reviewed progress made by AFL-CIO locals in merging previously segregated local unions, the new agreements to bar discrimination in apprenticeship training and the record on writing non-discrimination clauses into collective agreements. He stressed also labor's continuing effort to secure fair employment practices laws at the national and state levels.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, chairman of the presidential committee, declared he was proud "of the leadership" demonstrated by the labor movement in the fight against discrimination. He said he considered the agreements of "prime importance . . . because they give us something that we all need, agreed upon guidelines for action."

Johnson stressed that more than a mere ceremony is involved in signing the agreements "for you are shouldering a responsibility . . . you are committing yourselves and all of your membership to a positive policy of equal opportunity."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz praised the role of former Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg in initiating the committee's work and laying the groundwork for the signing ceremony. Goldberg is now a member of the U.S. Supreme Court. The unions, said Wirtz, can make come true the reality of equal work opportunity in this country.

The committee has entered into similar agreements with 85 of the country's largest government contractors, employing about 5 million workers. Johnson said an additional 25 companies will sign similar agreements next month.

High Level Idleness Unchanged By Seasonal Shifts in October

The job picture showed only seasonal changes between September and October, the Labor Dept. has reported, with no real dent in the problem of high-level unemployment.

An earlier job summary based on Census Bureau surveys showed unemployment had fallen by 218,000 to 3.3 million. The key seasonally adjusted rate of joblessness dropped to 5.5 percent from September's 5.8 percent. It has hung at about 5.5 percent most of the year.

The detailed job report, which is based on payroll data, revealed "a substantial amount of strength on the employment side," according to Labor Dept. manpower expert Seymour L. Wolfbein.

"What we are not getting," he added, "is a real movement on the unemployment side."

The only bright spot, Wolfbein told reporters, has been the downward movement in the past half-year in the total of long-term unemployed—those out of work 15 weeks or longer.

The long-term jobless totaled 1.5 million in March and April. The group was reduced to 865,000 in October.

Long-Term Idle Drop

However, long-term unemployment, which swells considerably in recession periods—it totaled 820,000 in October 1949, 800,000 in October 1954 and 1.4 million in October 1958—has been as low as 149,000 in October 1953. It totaled 523,000 in October 1957, before the last two recessions.

The detailed job report disclosed an all-time high of 56.3 million on non-farm payrolls, a rise of 58,000 over September. The expected seasonal changes showed state and local government jobs up by 134,000, wholesale and retail trade up by 78,000; contract construction down by 57,000 and food processing down by 63,000.

Factory employment declined seasonally by 78,000 to a total of 17.0 million. There were no significant job changes in the durable goods industries. In steel, however a decline of 11,000 jobs over the month was recorded; the primary metals sector totaled 1.1 million—down 53,000 jobs over the year.

In contrast to the steady decline in steel jobs, transportation equipment was up by 192,000 over the year to a total of 1.7 million; the auto industry makes up about half of this sector.

Workweek Shortens

The October report showed a drop of 18 minutes in the factory workweek, from 40.6 hours in September to 40.3 in October; it usually remains unchanged this time of year. Part of the drop was attributed to two holidays falling in the survey week, Yom Kippur and Columbus Day. Workweek declines were widespread in manufacturing, however, the report added.

While average hourly earnings of factory production workers held steady at a record $2.40 an hour, weekly earnings fell by 72 cents to $96.72 a week as a result of the decline in the average workweek, the report said.

The October report again noted the lag in labor force growth, the total remaining unchanged over the month at 74.9 million. The figure was about 800,000 above a year ago; it was expected to rise by about 1 to 1.2 million over the year.

In the earlier report, it was noted that the seasonally adjusted jobless rate for adult women had dropped sharply, from September's 6.1 percent to October's 5.6 percent.

Wolfbein said inquiry into whether these jobless adult women had left the labor force or had found employment disclosed that about 9 of every 10 had found jobs.

The similar adjusted jobless rate was 4.5 percent for adult men and 13.3 percent for teenagers, both remaining about the same as in September.

Zenro Backs UN For Role in Cuba

Tokyo—The executive committee of Zenro—the Federation of Japanese Trade Unions—has voted full support for proposals by the secretariat of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions that the United Nations act as intermediary in the Cuban problem.

Zenro also voted to insist that the Soviet Union remove offensive weapons from Cuba under UN supervision, according to a message sent to AFL-CIO headquarters. Zenro is the Japanese affiliate of the ICFTU.

Labor-Management Unit Backs $10 Billion Tax Cut

LABOR'S SUPPORT of equal employment opportunity is in "the finest traditions" of the trade union movement, Pres. Kennedy told officers of AFL-CIO unions assembled in the East Room of the White House after signing fair practice pledges based on the AFL-CIO's civil rights policy.

Fast Action Proposed On Slash

"A prompt and significant reduction in income tax rates" is the "main tool" for strengthening the economy, the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy declared, with a majority urging a cut of about $10 billion early in 1963.

In a brief but emphatic reply to Pres. Kennedy's request for advice on monetary and fiscal policy, the 21-member committee said that "thorough review and revision of the tax system should be undertaken promptly, but this should not be permitted to postpone action on the urgently needed reduction in tax rates."

The bulk of the tax cut, the committee said, should take the form of lowering individual income tax rates with the remainder used to reduce the corporate tax levy.

The committee statement came shortly after a conference on fiscal and monetary policy involving about 150 labor, management and public representatives, with the majority urging a substantial tax cut and an increase in government expenditures.

Goals Spelled Out

The consensus of the conference was that the economic problem is growing serious and that a tax cut plus higher federal expenditures is necessary to expand economic growth and to reduce unemployment.

The President's committee, composed of seven representatives each of labor, management and the public, including the secretaries of labor and commerce, declared the nation "can and must improve its recent record of economic progress."

U. S. Living Standards Up Sharply

By Eugene A. Kelly

Studies by the Labor Dept. of living standards in major U.S. cities have shown a rise of 15 to 44 percent in real income over a 10-year period—the amount of income remaining after taxes and after adjustment for price rises between 1950 and 1960.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the studies by the Bureau of Labor Statistics show an increase in purchasing power for residents of the seven cities sampled—New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Washington, Boston, Detroit and Atlanta.

The analysis showed not only rising living standards but a drop in the percentage of consumer spending for food, shelter and clothing and an increase—by a full third—in family home ownership.

These and other facts uncovered in the survey, Wirtz said, point to a "continuing and substantial increase" in national living standards but, he added, "they should also serve us as a pointed reminder of an unacceptable contrast" in that "areas of severe want" still exist in "our most abundant society."

Another conclusion was drawn from the data by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research — that most American families spend almost all they earn on living expenses. The department cited these findings:

- Families with earnings of $6,000 a year, or less, generally spent more than they earned in 1960-61, the period under study.
- Families earning from $6,000 to $15,000 a year, after taxes, had modest savings.
- Those with incomes above $15,000 saved substantial sums.

The reports show, according to Wirtz, that average income after taxes ranged from $5,412 in Atlanta to $6,869 in Boston, and that the families surveyed—100 to 200 in each city—spent around 86 to 95 percent of their income for current expenses.

At a Washington press conference, BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague said real income after taxes had risen by these amounts in the cities studied: San Francisco 15 percent, Chicago 17 percent, Atlanta, New York and Washington 20 percent, Detroit 23, Boston 44.

Wirtz said the reports for the seven cities will form the foundation for a new and comprehensive Labor Dept. program of study and reports on living conditions in the nation. As additional information becomes available from 59 other

Housing Bias Ban Hailed By AFL-CIO

Pres. Kennedy has issued an executive order barring discrimination in federally financed or assisted housing as "unjust" and "inconsistent with the public policy of the United States."

The long-awaited action, carrying out a campaign pledge to strike a blow at racial discrimination in housing through a "stroke of the pen," was hailed by labor and civil rights groups.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler praised the issuance of the order, noting that it was in line with a resolution of the federation's 1961 convention which called for "vigorous action by the federal

Meany Tells NAACP:

'Policy of Distortion' Harms Rights Fight

An "avowed policy of destroying unions" and a "campaign of systematic falsehood and distortion" cannot provide the basis for forging unity in the fight to advance civil rights, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Meany wrote Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, in accordance with instructions from the AFL-CIO Executive Council, that "we consider it of great importance to our movement and to the cause of civil rights that we re-establish unity" to further the common goal of "full equality for our Negro citizens in every phase of our national life."

But, Meany continued, "I am sure you will recognize that such unity is impossible in the present atmosphere."

He noted that there is a distinction between legitimate criticism of the labor movement and the kind of "sweeping attacks recently made in the name of the NAACP." These attacks are objectionable to the AFL-CIO, he said, because they are untrue, seek to create the impression that the AFL-CIO is blocking Negro progress, and aim to destroy some unions.

The publicity given differences of opinion between the NAACP and the AFL-CIO "has been a source of comfort to the White Citizens Councils in the South who oppose both of our organizations with equal fanaticism," Meany wrote Wilkins. He added:

"I do not believe that this friction . . . will in any way advance the interests of those who are the victims of discrimination in employment in the labor unions and in their daily lives as citizens of the community in which they live."

Meany assailed the attacks on the Ladies' Garment Workers, the Steelworkers and others and said "I resent and reject as untrue any charge that the AFL-CIO is a barrier to Negro progress."

Within the ranks of labor, "we

Contracts Up to 3 Years Ruled Bar to Representation Challenge

The National Labor Relations Board has unanimously ruled that labor-management contracts with terms up to three years are a bar to petitions for new representation elections for the duration of the agreements.

Affected by the new rule are all election petitions pending before the NLRB and its regional offices, along with future petitions which present contract-bar questions.

The board action had been urged by the AFL-CIO, which filed a brief upholding the request of two affiliates for extension of the contract-bar period from two years to three.

The federation and the two affiliates pointed out that under the old rule a union with a three-year contract could be "raided" by a rival at the end of two years.

All five board members voted for the change. They dismissed a petition from the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (UE) for an election at the Sanger, Calif., plant of the General Cable Corp., where Local 100 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers holds a contract in effect until next June 14.

The UE was expelled from the former CIO in 1949 on charges of Communist domination.

General Cable and Local 100 had asked the board to reconsider the rule, in effect since 1958, under which the UE petition for a new election had been granted. In two companion cases, reconsideration also had been asked by General Cable and Local 152 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and by Westinghouse Electric Corp., Verona, Va., and another IBEW local which has an unexpired three-year pact.

The NLRB said its new rule will allow three-year contracts to bar election petitions for the entire life of an agreement, under normal circumstances. In the case of a longer-term contract, the rule will prohibit election petitions only during the first three years of the agreement.

An exception to the rule will be

10,000 in Training Under Manpower Act

Approximately 10,000 unemployed and underemployed workers are now in training under the Manpower Development & Retraining Act, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reported.

Wirtz' approval of a training program for 32 arc welders in Ft. Dodge, Ia., brought total projects to 83 in 34 states since the first project was approved two months ago. An additional 130 programs to train 8,000 workers are being reviewed by the Labor Dept.

The act was signed by Pres. Kennedy on Mar. 15, but funds were not made available to the Labor Dept. until August.

A CUP OF HOT COFFEE aimed at his eyes failed to daunt Burton Berinsky, photographer for Justice, organ of the Ladies' Garment Workers, and he came up with this extraordinary shot. The scene was an ILGWU protest demonstration at the Richelieu Pearl Co., Holbrook, N. Y. The coffee was thrown by a representative of a so-called union styling itself Local 422, Metal, Plastics, Miscellaneous Sales & Novelty Production Workers, a unit of the Intl. Production, Service & Sales Employes Union. The outfit split from the Jewelry Workers when corrupt elements were excised under an AFL-CIO trusteeship.

Defense Dept. Assails Lockheed For Blocking Contract with IAM

The Lockheed Aircraft Co. "stands alone in refusing to follow the course that other members of the industry considered reasonable," the U.S. Dept. of Defense declared in a statement issued shortly before members of the Machinists employed by the company set Nov. 28 as the deadline for a walkout.

The union, after twice putting off a strike in the hope of reaching agreement on new contract terms covering 30,000 aerospace workers, notified Pres. Kennedy that Lockheed management has left it no alternative but to stop work.

Should a strike take place at Lockheed, the Dept. of Defense statement warned, "programs of critical urgency to the national defense would be affected" and it is "imperative in the national interest" to minimize any loss of production that might follow a work stoppage.

Therefore, it said, "responsible officials are considering whether alternate means of production can be utilized so that work on these vital programs can go forward." Lockheed holds government missile and space contracts which could be shifted to unstruck plants.

Reviewing the history of negotiations, the Pentagon said:

"Lockheed stands alone in refusing to follow the course that the other members of the industry considered reasonable.

"The President in his press conference on Sept. 13 pointed out, following acceptance of the Taylor board proposals by the unions involved, that the responsibility for any strike that might take place in this industry would be clear to the American people."

The urgency of negotiations was underscored, the Defense Dept. said, when Kennedy on July 21 appointed a special board headed by Dr. George W. Taylor to review disputes involving Lockheed and four other aerospace firms—North American Aviation, Inc.; Ryan Aeronautical Co.; General Dynamics Corp. (Convair), and Aerojet-General Corp.

"All these members of the industry—except Lockheed—have accepted the recommendations of the Taylor Board," the statement emphasized. "The two unions involved—the Auto Workers and the Machinists—also have accepted."

In Los Angeles, 8,000 members of the IAM on Nov. 18 voted 3-1 to authorize a walkout at Lockheed. Another 7,000 members at Sunnyvale, Calif., voted 4-1 for strike authorization, the IAM said. Votes also were taken at smaller Lockheed units.

The Taylor board recommended that Lockheed management permit workers to vote on the union shop, as other industry firms have done. Lockheed refused, however, saying "the only real issue" blocking an agreement is "compulsory" union membership.

The strike would affect the Lockheed Missiles Space Co., which makes the Polaris missiles and other space "hardware," and the Lockheed California Co., which produces Navy anti-submarine aircraft and fighter planes for U.S. allies. Lockheed has 11 plants and installations in California, Florida and Hawaii.

ILPA to See Telecast For Cultural Center

Cleveland—Delegates to the Intl. Labor Press Association convention here will attend the local showing of the Nov. 29 nationwide closed circuit telecast being held to raise funds for the National Cultural Center in Washington, D.C.

ILPA Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester said arrangements have been made to bring the expected 200 delegates to the Lakewood Civic Auditorium, where the program will be seen in the Cleveland area. He said the telecast was included in the convention program as a demonstration of labor press support for the cultural center drive.

In 2 Test Cases:

High Court to Rule On Agency Shops

The Supreme Court has agreed to review two lower court decisions that have the effect of outlawing the agency shop in both "right-to-work" states and all others.

The AFL-CIO in a brief filed in support of two affiliates, the Auto Workers and the Retail Clerks, pointed out that approximately "6 percent of all collective bargaining agreements, covering several hundred thousand workers," now contain agency shop clauses.

The brief urged that the agency shop had long been recognized as legal under both the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts. It asked the court to nail down the doctrine that the Taft-Hartley Act permits such union security clauses and specifically to rule that states are not authorized to forbid them.

The agency shop is a lesser form of union security than the full union shop, the federation told the court, and has offered a useful compromise when companies do not wish to agree that all employes must join a union. States can prohibit the union shop under Sec. 14-b of the Taft-Hartley Act, the AFL-CIO acknowledged, but were given no power to prohibit other forms of union security.

In one decision the Supreme Court agreed to review, the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals set aside a National Labor Relations Board ruling that General Motors had an obligation to bargain with the UAW on an agency shop clause.

The case arose from Indiana, a state with a "work" law. GM refused to bargain with the UAW on the agency shop despite a state supreme court ruling that the state law did not outlaw such clauses.

R-T-W Not An Issue

Both GM and the UAW agreed before the NLRB that the Indiana "work" law was not directly at issue in the labor board case. It was fought on the question of whether the Taft-Hartley Act outlaws the agency shop on a national level. The NLRB in its decision referred to the Indiana supreme court decision, however, and in a 4-to-1 decision held that such clauses were legal and directed GM to bargain. (This reversed an earlier 3-2 decision, never reviewed by the courts, upholding GM.)

It was this labor board ruling the appellate court set aside, rejecting the NLRB request for an enforcement order. The Justice Dept. filed a request for Supreme Court review.

Florida Case Appealed

The second decision accepted for review came from the Florida supreme court, which ruled that a demand by the Retail Clerks for an agency shop contract with a retail chain-store system violated the state's "right-to-work" law. The agency shop, said the Florida judges, is a "subterfuge" by which companies and unions seek to avoid the intent of the state's "work" law.

The AFL-CIO urged the Supreme Court to consider the two cases together, and the court granted the petition.

3-Year Pact Ruled Bar To Challenge

made in cases where both parties to a long-term contract have filed election requests with the board before the agreement has expired.

In making the change the board said it was motivated by these considerations:

- The need for a greater measure of labor-management stability as an aid to the national economy.
- Steps taken by AFL-CIO unions to eliminate interunion strife by way of "no raid" agreements and the federation's machinery for settling internal disputes.
- Landrum-Griffin Act provisions which give members remedies against undemocratic or corrupt practices.
- Supreme Court rulings on the labor law's "breach of contract" provisions, which the board said have "fortified the labor agreement and the arbitral process."
- A continuing trend toward contracts of more than two years.
- Appeals for a three-year rule made by an "overwhelming majority" of labor and management spokesmen who appeared.

Board members are aware, they said, that the new rule will delay some elections for a year but that other considerations, particularly stability, outweigh this factor.

Shorter Workweek Held Basic To Goading Sluggish Economy

A shorter workweek is not the only means of reducing unemployment and stimulating the nation's sluggish economy, but its opponents are on shaky ground when they argue that other measures could accomplish the same purpose, the AFL-CIO declared in the November issue of the American Federationist.

The fact is that alternative measures—such as tax reduction, reform of the tax structure and an eased monetary policy—"are not being put into effect," the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research pointed out in the fourth of a series of articles on the shorter workweek.

The real danger is inaction, the analysis found, concluding:

"If the economy does no better in creating new jobs in the 1960s than it did in the 1950s, the decade would close with an unemployment rate of nearly 10 percent—at least 7 to 8 million fully unemployed."

AFL-CIO economists pointed out also that advocacy of shorter hours "does not mean rejection of other measures to increase employment." Their analysis declared:

Added Incentive

"The choice need not and should not be an either/or proposition. Reduction of hours should be one of many steps applied to control unemployment, with the size of the reduction determined by the effectiveness of the overall program."

An added incentive for pressing for shorter hours, the article noted, is that the public generally understands the direct relation between a cut in hours and a reduction in unemployment, while there is not a similar understanding of the relationship of government fiscal and monetary policies. In addition, there is "wide recognition" that rapid technological strides will eventually result in shorter hours of work.

Steps Proposed

Measures the Federationist suggested the government could take to help bring about a cut in the workweek, in addition to changes in the Fair Labor Standards Act, include:

- Encouraging bargaining to reduce hours of work, with "a specific announcement" that the Administration would welcome this trend "as one of the variety of measures industries might use to bolster employment security."
- "Setting an example, in its role as an employer," by cutting the workweek of its own employes. At present, about one-third of all municipalities have workweeks shorter than 40 hours for their administrative and clerical employes.

Legislative approaches, in addition to a cut in the 40-hour standard now set by federal law, would include special industry committees adjusting workweeks on an industry-by-industry basis or a flexible workweek adjusted according to changes in the unemployment rate.

The AFL-CIO analysis also made the point that most of the measures now being used to ease the impact of joblessness are geared to helping the unemployed worker prepare for and hunt for a new job.

"A major objective of shorter hours, on the other hand," the article observed, "is to reduce the need for layoffs and thereby encourage retention of workers in the type of work and industry to which they are already attached and in which they have already acquired training."

Republican to Fill Chavez' Old Seat

The death of a veteran Democratic liberal, Sen. Dennis Chavez (N.M.), is expected to result in the addition of a conservative Republican to the Senate—appointed by a "lame duck" governor.

Chavez, 74, died after a long illness less than two weeks after New Mexico's Republican Gov. Edwin L. Mechem was defeated for reelection. Mechem, who does not leave office until Jan. 1, has the prerogative of filling the vacancy. Chavez' term has two years more to run.

Chavez had represented his state in the Senate since 1935 and previously served two terms in the House. He was chairman of the Senate Public Works Committee and a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, heading its important defense subcommittee.

Beirne Blasts 'Vengeful' Act:

CWA Sees Defeat Of Teamster Raid

An "overwhelming majority" of the 17,500 Western Electric telephone installers now represented by the Communications Workers will back up their CWA representation by voting down an attempted raid by the expelled Teamsters, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne has predicted.

The attempted raid by Teamsters Pres. James A. Hoffa on the CWA is "vengeful, spiteful and vicious," Bierne charged, and arises from "repudiation" by the AFL-CIO in ousting the Teamsters from the federation because of Hoffa's leadership.

The CWA wants to proceed promptly with a National Labor Relations Board representation election, Beirne added, "confident that the overwhelming majority" of the installers will vote in the knowledge that "they are not Teamsters" but are "communication equipment technicians belonging to the union of their own craft."

Because of this confidence, he declared, the CWA has not challenged the Teamsters' petition for an election, despite a conviction that the anti-CWA raid has not succeeded in getting the necessary 30 percent "show of interest" signatures required "to legitimately petition" the NLRB.

Beirne made his statements in an interview for Labor News Conference, a Mutual Broadcasting System network production, in which he was questioned by Norman Walker of the Associated Press and Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill Publications.

'Interference' Hit

[The NLRB held a hearing Nov. 19 and adjourned for a further hearing Nov. 27 when the Western Electric Co. itself challenged the integrity and adequacy of the Teamsters' "show of interest" signatures. Since then the labor board has lengthened from two to three years the period in which an existing labor-management contract will be considered a legal bar to petitions by other unions seeking to represent the workers. The effect would seem to postpone for one year a showdown on the Teamsters' raid on the CWA installers.]

Beirne lashed the company for interfering in the contest between CWA and the Teamsters.

"While not questioning the sincerity" of the management in "injecting itself," Beirne said, the issue is legally and morally a contest between two unions, with each employe given "free choice of the union he wishes to belong to."

The Communications Workers have represented "thousands" of Western Electric workers for many years," he pointed out, "and I must be honest in saying we have found it very difficult. There have been times of strife" because of such management difficulties.

"We do not welcome their intervention."

Beirne observed that Hoffa and other Teamsters' leaders had publicly expressed an intention of keeping him "so busy defending the CWA jurisdiction" that he wouldn't have time to continue efforts to eliminate Hoffa and those like him from the labor movement.

Hoffa has "no place to go," and when he has no place to go "he must keep lashing out, like a vengeful, disgraced man, without any rhyme or reason, in order to survive," the CWA president declared.

Pattern of Raids

He has attempted raids on other AFL-CIO unions—the Machinists, Auto Workers, Brewery Workers and others—Beirne continued. Hoffa will persist in such raids, he predicted, "because he must do that to survive. When he doesn't expand, he will be dead, and the Teamsters leadership will not reelect him."

There is "a pattern" in attempted raids, which involves "first trying to buy someone" in the union he seeks to attack. He is able to spend whatever it takes for propaganda in trying to reach people."

In the raid of CWA and Western Electric installers, Hoffa "can't win" because it would be a catastrophe, and a catastrophe will not occur," Beirne said flatly.

have made great progress in eliminating what was once widespread discrimination," Meany wrote. Discriminatory practices that now exist are on a "bootleg basis in local unions that are under constant pressure to reform."

Noting the NAACP's use of National Labor Relations Board procedures to attempt to decertify a USWA local in an Atlanta plant, Meany asked Wilkins what the NAACP hopes to achieve "by this effort to destroy a union." Whatever progress has been made toward equality for Negroes in this case has been made by the union, he asserted, and destroying the union will not hasten this process.

"We have no desire to dictate the policies of your organization or to interfere with your right to hire your own employes, or to stifle fair criticism," he said, "but we cannot disregard a campaign of systematic falsehood and distortion. Nor can we disregard the avowed policy of destroying unions or of causing dissension within the ranks of unions which do not meet arbitrary demands on them.

"We do not believe that either of these techniques advances the cause of Negro labor or the movement for civil rights in general; and that, after all, is the main thing.

"We hope that you will join us in finding an appropriate solution to this problem which we did not create and which we have no desire to perpetuate."

Kennedy Hails Randolph For Equal Rights Role

New York—Pres. Kennedy hailed this year's recipients of the National Urban League's Equal Opportunity Day awards—AFL-CIO Vice-Pres. A. Philip Randolph and Thomas J. Watson, Jr., board chairman of Intl. Business Machines—as "two outstanding leaders who have worked tirelessly to eliminate racial barriers in employment."

In a message to the Urban League dinner at which the awards were presented, Kennedy expressed his determination "to insure that America will become more and more an open society rather than [a] society closed by tacit agreement and unconstitutional laws against millions of Americans."

Vice-Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and principal speaker at the dinner, asserted that the Kennedy Administration had gone beyond "discussion and debate" towards achieving equal opportunity.

In the past year, Johnson noted:

- Employment of Negroes by the federal government has increased three times the normal rate, and more Negroes have been given middle level and top executive positions — "in each instance, four time or more greater than the statistical probabilities."
- The President's committee has signed 121 out of 131 unions to "fair practices programs" and has signed "plans for progress" agreements with 85 large corporations employing almost 5 million.
- Henceforth government contractors will accept job referrals from only those trade schools which operate on a non-discriminatory basis.
- Breakthroughs have been achieved in certain American industries — tobacco, petrochemicals, oil and food—where Negroes have in the past been denied work.
- Anti-discrimination clauses have been incorporated into local apprenticeship agreements where the federal government participates.

Johnson laid down as future Administration steps towards implementing its equal employment opportunity program:

1. Elimination of "the inherently unacceptable double standards of economic success based on race, religion or ancestry."
2. Assuring a maximum reservoir of "trained manpower adequate to the increasing demands of an increasingly complex and technical economy."
3. Reducing the dangers of "internal division and disunity resulting from economic discrimination against any segment of our people."

The vice president lauded "the leaders of many of our unions, especially here in New York City," for their roll in the fight against job discrimination.

In presenting the annual award to Randolph, who heads the Sleeping Car Porters, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes declared that "Phil Randolph didn't invent equal opportunity, but he has probably worked harder for it and done more to make it a reality than any other individual American."

The League is a nationwide professional community organization established in 1910 to secure equal opportunity for Negro citizens.

Strike Lost Time Low in September

The number of mandays lost because of strikes and lockouts in September reached the lowest level for that month since the end of World War II, the Labor Dept. has reported. The number of workers involved also reached a postwar low for the month, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Approximately 350 stoppages began and another 230, continuing from August, brought the total number of directly affected workers to 170,000 and resulted in 1.59 million mandays of idleness.

BLS said all measures of strike activity in the first nine months of this year increased over the low levels of 1961.

Executive Order Bars Housing Discrimination

government" to accomplish "the goal of equal housing opportunity."

At the same time, Schnitzler said, labor considers the executive order "only a modest beginning" in the task of stamping out all discrimination in housing.

The order was hailed by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, as carrying "the whole nation forward to the realization of the American dream."

Typical of the reaction from conservative southern political leaders was the blast by Sen. John Stennis (D-Miss.), who termed the executive order "an audacious usurpation of power by the executive branch."

The executive order applies to all new housing financed by mortgages guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration.

It also covers federally assisted public housing and housing built under urban renewal, college dormitory and other federal programs.

About one-third of all residential housing mortgages are now insured by the FHA or VA. Developers or builders could avoid the anti-bias order in future construction by switching to conventional bank financing unsupported by federal loan guarantees, but in most cases conventional loans carry a higher interest rate and require a larger down payment from the purchaser.

The executive order was prefaced with a declaration that discriminatory practices "based upon race, color, creed or national origin now operate to deny many Americans . . . an alternative to substandard, unsafe, unsanitary and overcrowded housing."

Federal agencies dealing in housing funds are directed to seek compliance with the non-discrimination policy first through "informal means" of persuasion before taking punitive action such as cancelling loan agreements and barring violators from further participation in government housing programs. . .

Kennedy announced the creation of a new President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing, to be headed by a member of the White House staff.

Among its functions will be to "encourage educational programs by civic, educational, religious, industry, labor and other nongovernmental groups to eliminate the basic causes of discrimination in housing and related facilities provided with federal assistance."

President's Committee Acts in 661 Bias Cases

Action to end discrimination by government contractors and by federal agencies has been taken in 661 cases during the first 19 months that the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has been in existence.

Hobart Taylor, Jr., executive vice chairman of the committee, presented this summary of the 2,989 complaints received to date:

- Of 1,263 complaints dealing with alleged discrimination by government contractors, 594 are still pending and 205 were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction or dropping of the charge by the complainant. Of the 464 cases carried through to completion, 297 complaints were substantiated and corrective action taken.
- The committee received 1,726 complaints from federal employes, of which 737 are pending. Of the remaining 989, 364 charges were upheld and corrective action taken.

The report was presented to the committee, headed by Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, at a meeting following the signing of fair practice pledges of 121 AFL-CIO unions.

The committee also heard a report that Negroes were named to more than 17 percent of the net increase of 62,633 federal jobs during the year ending last June and that the gain was principally in the higher-level clerical, administrative and professional posts.

Within that same period, the report noted, the number of Negroes in government jobs carrying annual salaries of $9,475 to $20,000 increased by 369 to a total of 1,406.

"This gain is a direct result of a concentrated effort to assure that our Negro population and our other minority groups are given an equal opportunity in government employment on the sole basis of merit and fitness," Johnson said.

The committee swore in three new members: David A. Schulte and Mrs. D. H. Watson of New York, and Dr. Joaquin Gonzalez of San Antonio, Tex.

A Jumping-Off Point

A LONG STEP TOWARD guaranteeing equal opportunity in employment for all Americans was taken at the White House last week when representatives of 121 AFL-CIO unions voluntarily agreed to fair practices pledges.

With more than 85 of the country's largest government contractors signing similar agreements with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the stage is now set for a coordinated drive for effective legislation and contract protection to take the anti-discrimination fight a step further.

The AFL-CIO has been in the forefront of the battle to secure national fair employment practices legislation and has led the fight to enact similar laws on the state level. In the bargaining area AFL-CIO unions have pressed for contracts including clauses forbidding discrimination in hire, tenure, terms and conditions of employment and other areas affecting work and jobs.

With cooperation from employers dedicated to wiping out the blot of discrimination, equal opportunity in employment can be stimulated and encouraged. The agreements with the President's committee are a natural jumping off point for further advances if management will shoulder its end of the burden.

That Single Vote

HOW IMPORTANT is a single vote? Ask the losers in 42 of the senatorial, congressional and gubernatorial races held Nov. 6. A shift of 1 percent of the vote would have spelled victory for most of these losers.

A switch of a few votes per precinct might have defeated Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), who won with 51.3 percent of the vote cast. An even smaller shift might have elected Rep. Gracie Pfost (D-Ida.), who lost with 49 percent of the vote.

Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala.) held onto his seat with a 50.8 percent victory margin. Sen. Homer Capehart (R-Ind.), lost out to Democrat Birch Bayh, Jr., by eight-tenths of 1 percent of the vote cast.

Three governors—Philip Hoff in Vermont, John Reynolds in Wisconsin and Endicott Peabody in Massachusetts—won governorships for the Democratic Party with 50.5 percent or less of the vote—two of them coming in with margins of 50.1 percent.

'Prompt and Significant'

THE WIDESPREAD and growing support for a "prompt and significant" tax cut to spur a stagnant economy raises new hopes that the nation is beginning to face up to the need to revise conventional thinking about fiscal policy.

To an increasing degree, the federal government's fiscal policies have been operating as a braking force on the economy's forward momentum. The combination of federal expenditures and revenues takes too much money out of the spending stream and acts as a drag on the rise of sales and production while unemployment is high and considerable amounts of plant and equipment are idle.

A more rational fiscal policy requires deliberate and planned deficits in the federal government's operations as long as the economy operates below maximum levels of production and employment. The amount of deficit and surplus in federal fiscal operations should vary with the needs of the economy—to add to production and employment when unemployment is high and to restrain demand when manpower and material resources are fully employed.

The best practical approach to this problem is a combination of tax reduction and increased government expenditures.

AFL-CIO Position Paper:

First-Bracket Tax Cut Urged As Immediate Spur to Spending

The following is excerpted from a background paper prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research for use by labor representatives participating in the Nov. 15 Conference on Fiscal & Monetary Policy held by the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

A TEMPORARY FIRST-BRACKET or lump-sum tax cut should be immediately proposed in order substantially and quickly to stimulate consumer spending. A tax cut of about $10 billion should be dispensed in a manner which the public can easily understand and which is simple to administrate. However, this tax cut should be automatically self-terminating.

The 88th Congress should begin its hearings on permanent across-the-board income tax revision and basic tax reform immediately. By this procedure, a temporary tax cut could commence while the necessarily time-consuming process of writing permanent legislation would be underway. Besides, as Congress gauges the revenue it will gain from tax reform, it can more realistically determine how much it can afford to yield in permanent tax reduction. Finally, it will take enactment of tax reform legislation for a permanent tax cut to take effect.

While the AFL-CIO endorses a permanent across-the-board rate cut for all income brackets, short-run counter-cyclical considerations and long-term economic expansion needs require tax cuts that will particularly raise the consumption of the 50 percent of all American families now living on incomes of under $6,000 per year.

With so much of our productive capacity idle and vast sums already available for expanded investment, tax reduction policy should clearly seek the growth of consumer demand rather than a further pile-up of corporate and individually held savings. Furthermore, a 10 percent tax cut for corporations already has been bestowed in 1962 as a consequence of the new depreciation guidelines and the newly-enacted investment tax credit.

The skyrocketing cash-flow to corporations, the mounting assets of pension funds, insurance companies and of other savings institutions and the high (although highly concentrated) level of personally-held savings already are capable of underwriting an investment rate far greater than presently prevails.

However, if these abundant savings are to move more rapidly into profitable investment, business needs the stimulus of a reasonable expectation of rising and sustainable sales. These, in turn, are dependent on a rise in the spendable income of millions of moderate- and low-income families.

While the makers of tax policy must properly weigh the impact of their proposals upon the economic growth needs of the nation, they must also give consideration to the concept of tax equity. Unfortunately, income and wealth distribution has become increasingly inequitable over recent years, in large measure because of successive changes in the Revenue Code which almost exclusively benefit the already well-off.

During these same years, however, the moderate- and low-income families of the United States have had no access to tax reduction via loopholes. Almost two decades after World War II has ended, they still pay a first-bracket rate of 20 percent (compared to 23 percent during the critical war years) while the $600 dependent's exemption of today buys far less food, clothing and shelter than the $500 exemption allowed during wartime.

WHILE THE WEALTHY cynically seek to justify tax avoidance through loopholes as a necessary offset to the impact of high tax rates, moderate- and low-income families simply pay their near-wartime tax rates without the possibility of avoidance.

Because of the loopholes now written into the federal tax code, we would view any reduction in top-bracket rates to be unconscionable unless these tax avoidance devices are concurrently eliminated. To cut these rates before tax reform is assured would further accentuate the already intolerable trend towards increasing inequality in income and wealth distribution.

In consideration of the foregoing, we urge:

1—An immediate temporary tax cut of about $10 billion to be applied to the first-bracket rate or as lump-sum tax forgiveness.

2—Immediate congressional action to achieve permanent across-the-board income tax reduction and concurrent tax reform. The permanent legislation should supplant the temporary tax cut when enacted. The amount of net revenue loss that should be incurred by permanent tax reduction should not be greater than the loss in revenue for the temporary tax cut. Additional costs resulting from permanent rate reduction should be offset by revenue gained through tax reform.

3—The temporary tax cut should be speeded by action at the opening session of Congress, and it should terminate automatically by Jan. 1, 1964, by which time we hope permanent legislation can become effective.

Morgan Says:

What Whitens Sheets and Shirts Is Ruining Our Drinking Water

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

PRY YOUR MIND, if you can, away from Communist-made crises for a moment and focus on a new villain. Name: Alky benzene sulfonate, A.B.S. for short. Supposed occupation: helping those bargain boxes of detergents you buy in the market keep your laundry snowy white. Crime: increased pollution of public and private water supplies and general insoluble nuisance.

Morgan

Some months ago I commented on the plight of residents of Long Island who had to haul in drinking water or process it by boiling because when they turned on the tap they got a foamy substance which wasn't beer. The culprit was A.B.S., an ingredient in detergents which lowers the surface tension of water to facilitate cleansing action.

But this stuff is what the scientists call biologically non-degradable, which means that it is not broken down and washed away with the waste. It is not eliminated by municipal treatment plants or household disposal systems. So sooner or later it enters the drinking water supply.

This is happening, it develops, not only in Long Island, Connecticut and New Jersey but in many other parts of the country, depending on geological formations and the concentrations of laundries, laundromats and other facilities which use A.B.S. in quantities. The stuff not only ruins the taste of drinking water, it kills fish and can produce enough foam in rivers and streams to present a hazard to boaters and swimmers; the foam can get so thick and rise to such a height that it obscures the view of the water or of anyone submerged in or below the foam.

This comparatively new and frothy blight to civilization has been found particularly obnoxious in Wisconsin, whose young, conservation-minded Gov. Gaylord Nelson has been fighting it with, so far, only limited success. Having just won the U.S. Senate seat of that aging Wisconsin Republican, Alexander Wiley, Nelson can be expected to press his fight for conservation, including legislative regulation of detergent use, on a national level.

Tests revealed the presence of detergents in ground waters of 62 of Wisconsin's 71 counties. Wells in almost every county have been affected. According to an article in the Wisconsin State Journal of Madison on Oct. 21, the day before Pres. Kennedy announced his decision to blockade Cuba, state officials were increasingly concerned over the use of synthetic detergents both as a public health hazard and as a nuisance.

IN A SPECIAL conference on resource development and conservation on Oct. 10, Nelson had called for a People's Lobby For Conservation. Committees were formed and legislation has been drafted, including one bill to prohibit the use of detergents in Wisconsin, another to require labeling of detergent packages to show whether they contained soft (easily soluble) or hard detergents.

The not exactly soft-soaping reaction of the industry's lobby, the Soap & Detergent Association, has been a protest that housewives demand detergents—making no mention of the fact, of course, that their "fluffy white vs. tattletale grey" advertising has created the demand. The association adds, however, that major manufacturers are trying to develop a detergent that "degrades" or decomposes easily.

Actually, a "soft" detergent was introduced experimentally in England as long ago as 1958 and tests have been encouraging. Some "soft" detergents are now on the American market but they aren't labeled so the marketing housewife doesn't know what she is getting, or even what to ask for. A firm in Pennsylvania has developed a process to combat the detergent menace in water supplies but—despite several specific sales and successes—has encountered some political opposition to its use where established industrial operations might be disturbed.

There is some weird kind of poetic justice to this process of purifying the bed linen only to pollute the water supply. It is akin to the insecticide menace that Rachel Carson has been writing so furiously about. Nature can have wry ways of correcting man-made imbalances. The detergent problem is only a small spoonful of the king-size package of problems we have created for ourselves in our shameful approach to conservation.

"The natural resources of this nation . . . ," Nelson told his special conference, "are disappearing at an alarming rate. We are polluting our fresh waters, draining our wetlands, destroying our scenic beauty, eroding our shorelines, corrupting our wilderness areas, and invading our open spaces at a more rapid rate than any civilization in the world has ever experienced."

Of course we're doing all this with a flourish, including foam on the water we make unfit to drink.

Financed by Mellett Bequest:

Study of Press Responsibility Planned by Newspaper Guild

A PIONEERING PROGRAM in the field of press responsibility will be initiated by the Newspaper Guild next year under a $38,622 bequest by the late Lowell Mellett, editor and columnist.

The Guild will employ a fulltime staff member to initiate the program, which will seek to attract additional funds through foundation grants and other sources to develop a long-range approach to the problem.

Mellett, a former editor of the Washington Daily News, left the bequest to the Guild in the form of 1,884 shares of stock in the Scripps-Howard Investment Co., a non-operating investment enterprise. He asked that the money be used to seek a solution to the problem of furthering press responsibility without impairing press freedom. He died in 1960, but the bequest did not become available to the Guild, pending final settlement of the estate, until now.

The ANG executive board will set up a special Mellett Fund by selling the stock to the ANG's international defense fund at its appraised value of $20.50 per share. The stock will be held in the defense fund as an investment. Accrued dividends estimated at $6,200 and a small portion of the capital fund will be used to employ—for one year—the staff member who will initiate the program.

ANG Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., said the staff member's function will be to undertake immediate short-range activities to implement the intent of the bequest, while seeking to obtain additional funds for a continuing long-range program in cooperation with other interested organizations.

Areas which will come under immediate study, Perlik said, will include the relationship of press performance to national security, including the public's "right to know;" fair trials, including courtroom photography; objective presentation of the news; monopoly in the newspaper industry and standards of journalism, including student instruction and school publications.

AMONG THE LONG-RANGE proposals under consideration, he stated, is a study of the feasibility of a national press council which would concern itself with the twin problems of press freedom and responsibility. Such a council was first proposed by the Hutchins Commission on Freedom of the Press 15 years ago.

Mellett, a member of the Washington Newspaper Guild at the time of his death, was the first editor of the Washington Daily News from 1921 to 1937. He served as an advisor to Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt from 1940 to 1944, later returning to the newspaper industry as a syndicated columnist.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ELECTION STALEMATE to which the incumbent Democrats fought the Republicans did not bring any glittering optimism to Pres. Kennedy about chances for his major domestic programs in the 88th Congress. His temperance in discussing the issue in his Nov. 20 news conference emphasizes the reality to be faced: Can pro-Administration forces in the House outvote the coalition of Republicans and conservative southern Democrats?

The Democrats won a victory in the stalemate, in the sense that in most mid-term elections the party holding the White House loses a substantial number of seats in the House. The Democrats lost only a net of two, and in the Senate they gained four.

The record of last session, however, showed a developing pattern in which the President steadily broadened support among southern Democrats but underwent a sharp decline in support from northern and eastern Republicans.

On the House Rules Committee fight that opened Congress in 1961, 64 southern Democrats voted against the Administration but 22 Republicans voted with it, and the rule increasing the size of the committee got a margin of five.

Twenty-two Republicans also voted with the Administration on the first House showdown on the minimum wage bill, and when a second chance came on a modified Senate bill, 33 Republicans joined in passing it. Fourteen southern Democrats also switched.

It is by no means unfamiliar for 25 to 35 northern and eastern Republicans to support liberal domestic programs—on housing, on labor, on social security, on welfare proposals generally.

The point is that after the minimum wage bill fight in May 1961, the GOP liberal bloc stopped being liberal. They began voting with the conservative coalition. That is what Mr. Kennedy meant when he said we'll have to wait for rollcall votes before a judgment can be made on prospects for domestic legislation.

IN THE EARLY MONTHS of the Kennedy Administration, southern Democrats voted heavily with Judge Howard W. Smith of Virginia, chairman of the Rules Committee, who with Republican Floor Leader Charles A. Halleck of Indiana runs the conservative coalition. The President lost 65 to 82 southern Democrats on rollcalls at this stage.

This gradually changed, until the number was reduced to 54 or so, then to 45, and on some measures it was 38 and 37.

But Halleck got practically all of the Republicans; the liberals changed colors. GOP supporters of Administration bills dropped as low as 9 and 6 and 4 and 1. There was only 1 Republican vote on the first farm bill, which the coalition beat. When a compromise version came back from the Senate and from conference committee, Republicans gave it 4 votes. As it happened, this was the exact margin by which it passed.

Halleck had persuaded the large majority of those known as Republican liberals to follow his strategy of fighting every controversial or half-controversial domestic proposal on a partisan basis.

MR. KENNEDY thus was accurate in pointing out that a loss of 40 or 50 Democrats amounts to something approaching "one-fifth" of the Democratic total of 259 in the new House. That would still leave a little above 200 Democrats voting for domestic reform bills but also a potential margin of 15 or 20 to the coalition.

If even 20 Republicans reverted to the habit of supporting bills they have indicated in the past they were likely to back in principle, the Administration would have a coalition of its own that constituted an effective working majority.

There is no reason to doubt that Republicans from northern urban and suburban districts were voting their convictions in the past. Their constituents in metropolitan areas face the same problems as the constituents of Democrats.

The conservative coalition makes sense when it involves House members from similar rural districts, either north or south. It doesn't when it includes Republicans of utterly different background.

COPE Election Analysis:

'Razor-Thin' Edge Decided 42 Races

The shift of a comparative handful of votes in key elections Nov. 6 could have radically changed the political complexion of the new Congress, according to an analysis by the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education.

COPE reports that 42 of the 509 major election contests were won by "a razor-thin margin" of less than 52 percent of the vote.

As it turned out, liberals and conservatives won about an equal share of the close contests.

Had a few less votes been cast for some victorious liberals, the next Congress could have been "the most backward in years," COPE noted. On the other hand, a few more liberal votes could have transformed the 88th Congress into "the most progressive" in recent years.

As examples of some of the close races between liberals and conservatives, COPE cited:

- The defeat of liberal Democratic Representatives Paul Findley (Ill.), Frank Burke (Ky.), Robert E. Cook (O.), and Blaine Peterson (Utah), by conservative Republican opponents who tallied 50.9, 50.7, 50.6, and 50.7 percent of the vote, respectively.
- The victories in House races by liberal Democrats Wilkes Thrasher (Tenn.) with 51.5 percent of the vote, Donald Fraser (Minn.) with 51.8 percent, Alec Olson (Minn.) with 50.1 percent, Robert Secrest (Ohio) with 51.1 percent, and George Rhodes (Pa.) with 51.3 percent.
- In several key Senate races Democrats won by less than one out of 100 votes. Lister Hill's margin in Alabama was only 50.8 percent, Birch Bayh, Jr., won in Indiana with 50.3 percent and George McGovern's victory in South Dakota, if it holds up on a recount, will be under 50.1 percent.

In addition to several gubernatorial races where recounts have been scheduled, two contests were still undecided—even on the first count—as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

In Minnesota, Democrat Karl Rolvaag and GOP Gov. Elmer L. Andersen were within a handful of votes of each other as the lead continued to see-saw. Rhode Island voters won't know the name of their next governor until servicemen's mail ballots are tabulated.

Summing up the election, COPE declared that the importance of a single vote "has never been underscored so emphatically."

metropolitan areas to be studied and nearly 14,000 more families, the department hopes to provide a "continuing and accurate reflection of the changing economic conditions" affecting all urban consumers, the labor secretary said.

Pointing out that in undertaking the new program the Labor Dept. is reassuming a function it had long carried out before World War II, Wirtz said the results should provide "a significant new indicator of our economic life and an important new tool in the formulation of economic policy."

Clague added that the surveys are conducted primarily to obtain data for use in revising the Consumer Price Index and that the data will be widely used in determining "economic and social policy" and in marketing and academic research programs.

The families surveyed in the report represent about half the total number to be surveyed in studies concluding in 1962.

Other conclusions from the study:

- The rise in the CPI from 1950 to 1960 was about 15 percent for the entire nation.
- Total spending for food, shelter and clothing dropped from about 62 percent of the 1950 consumer dollar to 55 percent in 1960.
- The portion of living expenses going to food ranged between 23 and 26 percent in 1960 — a "significant percentage decrease" from 1950. The clothing expenditures ranged from 11 to 14 percent in 1950 but were 9 to 11 percent 10 years later.
- Each of the cities surveyed showed increases in outlays for personal insurance, ranging from a rise of 56 percent in Chicago to 144 percent in Detroit.
- The proportion of after-tax income set aside for gifts and contributions increased in all cities. In four, the increases exceed rises in expendable income.
- Seven to eight of every 10 families reported coverage under some type of health insurance plan.

The surveys were by personal interview in every community, which covered the metropolitan areas of each city except New York. There the New Jersey portion of the area was not included.

Hiring Increases for Scientists, Engineers

Employment of scientists and engineers in American private industry rose by about 6 percent between January 1961 and January 1962 to the 900,000 mark, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has announced.

The rate of growth was about the same as for the preceding year. Wirtz said most of the growth was among engineers—some 45,000 or 6.6 percent. Employment rose only 3.4 percent for scientists, who increased by 8,000.

LATIN AMERICAN STUDENTS in the current class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development are welcomed to federation headquarters by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. At right is Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO inter-American representative and executive director of the institute.

Free Labor Class Greeted By Meany

Trade unionists in the United States know that when workers throughout the world are free, "our own freedom is more secure," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in welcoming the current class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development to the federation's headquarters.

Thirty-seven students from Latin American and Caribbean countries comprise the class, which is scheduled to graduate Dec. 13. Before returning home, they will spend a week of on-the-job training with various unions in this country.

Meany said the AFL-CIO's interest in the development of free democratic trade unions throughout the world grows out of the knowledge that workers everywhere share many common problems.

While the U.S. trade union movement does not advocate exact imitation of its system, he observed, it does offer lessons that the students can extract and apply to the social and political structures of their own nations.

The test of a free labor movement, he stressed, is whether its elected leadership faithfully serves the interests of its membership. One of the first acts of dictators, he noted, is the destruction of free trade unions and their conversion into "instruments of the state, serving not to advance the status of the workers, but to bolster the power of the regime."

Rolvaag and GOP Gov. Elmer Andersen are tossing the lead back and forth with the official count still incomplete.

Domestic Peace Corps Under Cabinet Study

Pres. Kennedy has named a Cabinet-level task force to draw up plans for a new National Service Corps—a domestic version of the Peace Corps.

A preliminary report by Atty.-Gen. Robert F. Kennedy—who will head the committee—envisioned a volunteer group of dedicated professionals and "skilled amateurs" which would provide teams of workers in such problem areas as slum schools and recreation centers, mental hospitals, Indian reservations and correctional institutions.

"There are 32 million persons in the United States living at a lower level than America is capable of providing for its citizens," the attorney general's report stated. "Many of these persons are handicapped by poor health, diets and housing, as well as inadequate education. The majority are unable to remedy these conditions by themselves."

The report called migratory workers "one of our most neglected national problems" and declared:

"Over 500,000 domestic migratory workers and their 1.5 million dependents have been excluded from nearly all benefits enjoyed by most Americans.

"The children are generally two to five years behind national learning standards. Established schools cannot cope with the migrant child's transient pattern. The adults are unaware of normal health and dietary standards. Their average annual wage is $911.

"Because of their rootless existence, no one has assumed the job of providing personnel to meet their problems."

The report suggested that the national service corps be open to all ages, from high school graduates to retired persons. Pay would cover living expenses with a modest separation allowance.

Committee members, in addition to the attorney general, include Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze, Interior Sec. Stewart L. Udall, Peace Corps Dir. R. Sargent Shriver, Budget Dir. David Bell, and Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver.

The committee is scheduled to report to the President by Jan. 1, and presumably legislation to set up the corps will be submitted early in the new Congress.

NLRB to Direct Union Hiring Hall

In the first order of its kind, the National Labor Relations Board has put a union hiring hall under supervision of an NLRB regional director for 12 months, and also put restraints on several employers.

By a 4-0 vote the board ordered Operating Engineers Local 138, of Long Island, N.Y., to set up a nondiscriminatory hiring and referral system, and to put it into contracts if employers agree; to keep hiring records for at least three years; to submit quarterly reports to the New York regional NLRB director on hiring practices, and on job referrals involving five members of a "rebel" union group who complained they were discriminated against.

Moran Given Steelworkers' Publicity Post

Pittsburgh—An administrative reorganization of the Steelworkers' Public Relations Dept. has been announced by Pres. David J. McDonald under which Maurice E. (Duke) Moran becomes director of public relations and Raymond W. Pasnick is named to the newly-created post of director of communications.

Moran, a veteran newspaperman with broad experience in this country and in Europe, has been a member of the USWA public relations staff since 1956. Pasnick, whose activity in the labor movement started in 1935 with organizational work for the old CIO Aluminum Workers, since merged with the USWA, has been the union's Midwest public relations director in Chicago.

The reorganization, McDonald said, was necessitated by the death during the summer of Public Relations Dir. Howard J. McCartney. Moran has been assigned responsibility for external public relations, including press, radio & TV coverage of union affairs. Pasnick will be concerned with internal union communications and will serve as editor of Steel Labor, the union's official monthly publication. He will continue to make his home in Chicago, where he is a member of the Board of Education.

O'Brien Again Named By Flight Engineers

New York—Continuance of the strike against Eastern Air Lines was voted by the Flight Engineers at their annual convention here.

Delegates also re-elected Vice Pres. Harry S. O'Brien, who has held that post since he succeeded Ron Brown upon the latter's election as president in 1960. O'Brien is a former Trans World Airlines flight engineer and is a past president of the union's TWA chapter.

Wirtz Tells Conference:

Fight on Joblessness Lacks Urgent Note

The greatest difficulty in meeting the nation's unemployment problem is "that we lack any real national comprehension of the degree of it," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told a national economic conference.

"The hardest part of doing anything about the 5 percent who are unemployed is the 95 percent who are employed," Wirtz declared.

If every American could see the depressed areas of West Virginia, he said, a realization would be aroused that "something had to be done about this situation" and done fast.

Economic thinking that poses the choice as the "evils" of unemployment or inflation "warrants an indignant intolerance," the labor secretary stressed.

"I deny that in an economy which is characterized by vast unmet needs and limitless resources in materials, men and ideas, a choice must be made between these evils," he asserted.

Wirtz told the Conference on Fiscal & Monetary Policy sponsored by the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy:

"You sometimes get the feeling, sitting where I do, that there is a shell game going on in the discussion of this particular problem and that the shells are marked 'inflation,' 'unbalanced budget' and 'unfavorable dollar balance.'

"For every suggestion which is made to advance the purpose of full employment is met by one or another of these arguments, and very often by all three. Furthermore, even some of the boldest thinking about a full employment policy is developed nowadays by working back from an assumption about the minimum degree of unemployment which can be achieved without a dangerous threat of inflation."

Wirtz warned also "that in some people's thinking today unemployment is accepted, without ever really saying it, as a welcome hedge against inflation, or in other areas even as an excuse to avoid any increase in costs."

Steelworkers Pledge Funds for Hospital

Ravenswood, W. Va.—Almost $1 million has been pledged by the Steelworkers, the government and the community to build this area's first hospital.

The project was started when the Kaiser Aluminum Co. began planning for plant expansion here next year, and decided one major need was a hospital. A community drive produced these pledges: $50,000 from management, $165,000 from USWA Local 5668 members, $317,000 in a public facility loan by the Area Redevelopment Administration, $445,315 in federal Hill-Burton funds. The rest of the needed money will be collected here and in Ripley, where the hospital may be constructed.

Kaiser Aluminum now has 3,000 employes here.

Quick Tax Cut Urged By Kennedy Advisers

"We must achieve and maintain fuller utilization of manpower, higher industrial operating rates and a more rapid rate of economic growth, while maintaining reasonable price stability," it said.

It noted that monetary policy cannot shoulder a much larger share of the responsibility for stimulating economic activity in the near future and that "the main tool for promoting our economic objectives in 1963 should be a prompt and significant reduction in income tax rates."

A majority of the committee favored a reduction of about $10 billion, but some members wanted any such reduction spaced over a two to three-year period. A few favored limiting tax reduction to between $4 and $5 billion next year.

The group recognized that the "significant tax reduction we recommend is likely to mean appreciable deficits in the federal administrative budget," but that over the long run the tax reduction action "may well generate increased tax revenues."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Edward Gudeman, undersecretary of commerce, gave their unqualified endorsement to the committee's proposals.

The President had asked for the committee's views last year shortly before he announced his decision not to seek a tax cut in 1962.

"Significant" Cut Urged

At the monetary and fiscal conference Wirtz had called for a "significant tax cut" and Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon had declared that the "major part" of tax reduction should apply to individual tax rates and aim at accelerating long-range economic growth as much as combatting recessions.

Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, told the conference that taxes should be cut by more than $5 billion next year, including a 10 percent reduction in the corporate tax rate.

The Heller-Dillon-Wirtz talks came in the context of an Administration drive for a tax reduction and tax reform program in the 88th Congress as the Bureau of the Budget released figures showing an anticipated $7.8 billion deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1963.

The deficit stemmed in large part from the economy's failure to reach original growth targets and from a drop in tax revenues of $7.1 billion. Federal expenditures also increased $1.2 billion.

If the economy were operating on a full employment basis, the Budget Bureau said, the budget for fiscal 1963 would show a surplus of $2 billion rather than the $7.8 billion deficit.

Court Orders Firm To Obey Wage Law

Periodical Publishers Service Bureau, Inc., has been ordered by a U.S. District Court judge at Monroe, La., to pay its telephone solicitors $1.15 an hour and to keep accurate records of employe hours and pay rates.

The Labor Dept. said the firm, which hired as many as 7,500 telephone salesmen in 1961 alone, ostensibly paid employes $1 an hour but actually paid $2 per sale and then "adjusted" the hours record to show compliance with the wage law.

Local FEP Enacted in St. Louis

St. Louis—An ordinance prohibiting racial or religious discrimination, with penalties for noncompliance, has been unanimously passed by the Board of Aldermen and is expected to be signed by Mayor Raymond P. Tucker.

The measure bars employers from refusing to hire job applicants because of race, creed, color, national origin, ancestry or religion. It also prohibits labor unions from denying membership for the same reasons, and puts similar restrictions on denials of admissions by vocational schools.

A fair employment practices division is set up under the now existing Council on Human Relations which will receive and investigate complaints and seek amicable adjustments. Where this is not possible and the complaint is upheld as valid, the division is authorized to direct an employer to end a discriminatory practice.

A firm that fails to comply with such an order would be barred from bidding on city contracts for a year and would be open to fine or jail sentences for officers upon conviction. Penalties of fines up to $300 and 10 days in jail are set for anyone who ignores a subpoena. Filing of false claims also may lead to fines.

Hoffa Foes Edged In Teamsters' Vote

Philadelphia—An anti-Hoffa faction in Teamsters Local 107 here came within 596 votes, out of 7,144 votes cast in a National Labor Relations Board election, of winning bargaining rights for 8,000 over-the-road and local cartage drivers.

The vote count was 3,870 to 3,274, with 19 drivers voting for no union. At issue was the right to bargain with an employers' group representing 300 trucking firms in this area.

A group of members calling themselves "The Voice of the Teamsters Democratic Organizing Committee" petitioned for the election on the ground that it was not possible to reform the local under present leaders, headed by IBT Trustee Ray Cohen, an associate of Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of being dominated by corrupt interests.

Morgan Essay Contest Keyed to Jobs in '60s

The Edward P. Morgan essay contest for 1963—an annual feature of the commentator's radio broadcasts sponsored by the AFL-CIO—will be tied to the Labor Dept.'s 50th anniversary observance, using the theme "Youth's Challenge in the Labor Market of the '60s."

The announcement was issued following a conference on the forthcoming competition held by Robert Pauley, president of the American Broadcasting Co., which broadcasts Morgan's commentary nightly over its radio network; Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Morgan and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Wirtz and Meany are co-chairmen of the committee planning the department's anniversary observance.

Pauley said the contest will be open, as usual, to all undergraduate college students and that prizes, contest rules and the names of judges will be announced shortly.

Wirtz said he was "delighted" that the contest topic is "so appropriate to the anniversary celebration" of the Labor Dept.

A major theme of the anniversary celebration year will be defining manpower development, with particular regard to youth as the key that unlocks the full potential for growth of the economy in the years ahead, Wirtz observed.

"Young people today are very conscious," he added, "of their responsibilities in a rapidly changing world. Efforts like the Edward P. Morgan essay contest encourage thoughtful consideration by American youth of their own contributions to our nation's goals.

"The department is celebrating an anniversary. The young people of America will, I am sure, be celebrating a brilliant future for themselves and their country if we are all wise enough to make it so. I heartily welcome the announcement of this essay contest and its effort to increase young peoples' awareness of their place in tomorrow's world."

NBC Broadcasts Tribute to Green

A dramatization of the life of William Green will be presented on the Eternal Light television program Sunday, Nov. 25, at 1:30 p.m. (EST) on the NBC network. Green, a coal miner at the age of 15, served as president of the former AFL from 1924 until his death in 1952.

The program, produced by the Jewish Theological Seminary, is sponsored by the George Meany Foundation, established by trade union friends of the AFL-CIO president.

Sen. Lehman Pays Tribute To Mrs. FDR

New York—Dedication to the principles of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt by those who mourn her death can "serve to create an enduring monument to a great lady," former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman declared in a message to his fellow members of the National Council for Industrial Peace.

Lehman and Mrs. Roosevelt served as co-chairmen of the citizens' group which has fought attempts to outlaw union shop agreements through so-called "right-to-work" laws.

Lehman told the council's members:

"Mrs. Roosevelt was undoubtedy the First Lady not only of her own land, but of the world. Her dedication to the concept of world peace was all-embracing. It could include working unstintingly within the United Nations in the world arena and, at the same time, encompass the difficult task of seeking to improve peaceful relationships in the labor-management field at home.

"Our loss—in the nation and world alike—can only be tempered by renewed dedication on our part to achieving the goals Mrs. Roosevelt laid down for us."

Lockheed Pickets Halt for T-H Ruling

IAM Heeds Kennedy Request

The holdout Lockheed Aircraft Corp., rejecting government mediation proposals that its workers be allowed to vote on a union shop clause, was shut down by a Machinists' strike Nov. 28, and Pres. Kennedy invoked the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Machinists called off the strike the following day at the request of Pres. Kennedy when it appeared certain that workers would be ordered back within four days under a Taft-Hartley injunction.

IAM Vice Pres. E. R. White said the return to work "in no way changes the temper of IAM members whose concerted strike action brought production to a standstill at all Lockheed plants involved."

As picket lines were removed and workers returned to their jobs, the union and company prepared to move into renewed negotiations. An IAM statement declared that the union is "determined to win an agreement which will assure the democratic rights of employes."

Company Holds Out

Every sign indicated strong disapproval by the Administration of Lockheed's refusal to accept a voluntary agreement on the union shop issue comparable to that concurred in by all other major companies in the aerospace industry and by the unions involved—the Machinists and Auto Workers.

The Defense Dept. in mid-November issued a formal statement that Lockheed "stands alone in refusing to follow the course that other members of the industry considered reasonable."

It also said "responsible officials" would consider alternate means of production of vital aerospace elements. New contracts for which Lockheed might be considered were to be awarded, it said, only with specific authorization of one of the

AEC Urged to Act:

Federal Role Seen Key to Atomic Age

If the Atomic Energy Commission "really wants a breakthrough" toward rapid development of a big nuclear power industry "it will have to do the job itself," an AFL-CIO spokesman has declared bluntly.

Speaking at the 1962 convention of the Atomic Industrial Forum in Washington, D.C., the federation's legislative director, Andrew J. Biemiller, praised a new AEC report on civilian nuclear power as setting forth "general objectives" that appear "sound."

Nevertheless, Biemiller warned, "we still see a lack of will, a lack of determination to follow through."

He pointed out that the report appeared to show "excessive optimism" that the familiar policy of AEC "partnership" with privately-owned utilities would produce "a self-sufficient and growing nuclear power industry" in which "an increasing share of the development costs" would be borne by the industry itself.

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, sees "no evidence" in recent experience that the "partnership" policy will produce swift progress toward achieving the goal of nuclear power at "competitive costs" by 1968.

Pointing to continued "opposition" by private utilities to "direct government programs" to develop the country's nuclear and other natural resources, the federation spokesman charged the utilities with a "dog-in-the-manger policy."

In the recent 87th Congress, he declared, the private power companies "fought development of any large civilian nuclear power facilities, just as they have for the past decade."

They specifically fought federal use of "waste steam from the AEC plutonium reactor" at Hanford, Wash., to generate electricity, he reminded his audience, and also tried to kill legislation authorizing a state power agency—the Washington Public Power Supply System—to build generators to use the steam.

The Washington agency, he said, announced in advance that it would sell the power on a non-discriminatory basis to both private and public distributing companies. The terms included construction of a $130

In Commerce Dept. Report:

Profit 'Lag' Laid to Non-Labor Factors

The "lag" or "squeeze" in corporation profits is smaller than it appears and is caused chiefly by higher local taxes, changes in depreciation allowances, and chronic industrial slack—not labor costs.

These are findings of an analysis by the U.S. Dept. of Commerce in the November issue of its publication, Survey of Current Business.

The analysis was prepared by two staff members of the department's Office of Business Economics, Robert E. Graham, Jr., and Jacqueline Bauman.

Between the second half of 1948 and the first half of 1962, the analysis shows, employe costs were unchanged as a percentage of corporation gross output. Employe compensation, including fringe benefits, was 64 percent of the total output in 1948 and 64 percent in 1962.

Tables accompanying the article show that the percentage figure, moreover, has been remarkably stable for a quarter of a century. Employe compensation was 64.2 percent of total corporate output in 1939 and 63.3 percent in 1929, before the Great Depression.

The Commerce Dept. analysis shows that between 1948 and 1962, stated corporate profits rose by only three-fifths while total output more than doubled. This resulted in a decline in the percentage share of profits from 21 percent of total output to 16 percent.

On the other hand, the corporate income profile seemed far less unfavorable when stated in terms of cash flow. In dollar terms, profits before taxes were reported at $31.5 billion in the last half of 1948 and at $50.6 billion in the first half of 1962, indicating a "squeeze" in terms of total output.

But in cash flow terms—profits after taxes plus depreciation allowances retained—the 1948 figure was $27.1 billion and the indicated 1962 figure jumps to $52.2 billion, nearly double the amount 14 years earlier and indicating a "squeeze" certainly less severe.

The analysis states "the major element" in the changed profit picture has been an increase in the allowances for "capital consumption," which has "almost doubled" the share allotted in 1948, from 5.5 percent of total corporate output to 9.5 percent in 1962.

Taxes on sales and property have jumped from 8.9 percent of gross corporate output to 10.5 percent, to give a partial explanation of the profit "lag," but the depreciation factor is clearly more significant.

Cash Flow Higher

In dollar volume, the total cash flow to corporations was bolstered by a jump in depreciation allowances from $6.6 billion in the second half of 1948 to $26.4 billion in the first half of 1962.

The Commerce Dept. analysis further notes that corporate depreciation allowances were "abnormally low" in 1948 and that corporate profits in that year were in an "unusually high . . . position."

It notes, further, that for sev-

Canaveral Pact Binds Open Shops

Uniform pay and fringe benefits for all workers—union and non-union alike—is the key provision of a pioneering agreement between building trades unions and a number of contractors' associations at the Cape Canaveral missile center.

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. described the pact, which had been in the making for more than a year, as a "forward step towards more harmonious and stabilized labor-management relations at Cape Canaveral."

Construction work by non-union firms at the base has ranged from 4 to 10 percent of the total and has been a source of irritation to union workers, leading to several disputes.

The building trades protested that the non-union companies enjoyed a competitive advantage over union firms flowing from their failure to meet union standards in fringe benefits and working conditions. Pay for all construction workers at the base is governed by the prevailing wage provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act.

The new "project stabilization" agreement is designed to remove that competitive advantage. It was undertaken at the urging of the President's Missile Sites Labor

Work Rule Stay Denied; Rail Unions Map Appeal

Chicago—Rail operating unions have lost a round in their court battle to prevent management from unilaterally abolishing long-standing work rules, but the dispute over job rights and safety is still some distance from the showdown stage.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals here turned down a request by five operating unions for an injunction prohibiting railroads from going ahead with announced plans to abolish existing work rules and slash train crews. The court, however, allowed a temporary injunction issued by a lower court to remain in effect another 15 days to permit a further appeal by the unions. The railroads had asked that the injunction be immediately dissolved.

If the railroads were permitted to put into effect their unilateral work rules changes, some 13,000 locomotive helpers (firemen) would be dismissed immediately and the toll of job losses in all crafts would eventually reach an estimated 40,000.

Chiefs of the operating unions—the Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and the Conductors & Brakemen—scheduled a meeting to decide on joint action.

The unions contended in court that the carriers had not followed the procedures of the Railway Labor Act and that the possibilities of negotiation had not been exhausted when management walked out of the bargaining sessions and announced it would put its demands into effect unilaterally.

A special commission, named by former Pres. Eisenhower, last February issued recommendations en-

Meany Asks Observance Of Human Rights Week

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged all American trade unionists "to join in the observance of Human Rights Week and rededicate themselves to the task of making freedom and equality truly meaningful in the daily lives of all."

The week opens with UN Human Rights Day, Dec. 10, and includes U.S. Bill of Rights Day, Dec. 15.

Human Rights Day will mark the fourteenth anniversary of the UN General Assembly's adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which Meany hailed as fully reflecting the American belief "that every human being is endowed with inalienable rights" and as "a new and world-wide affirmation of the basic tenet of our faith—that to grow and flourish people must be free."

'Lag' in Profits Held Not Due To Labor Cost

eral years "the nation's economy has been operating well below capacity. . . . This excess capacity, along with intensified competition, has undoubtedly been a prime factor in the profit lag."

Unused capacity, the analysis points out, "contributes in full measure to overhead costs but adds nothing to revenues." There are strong indications of "considerable slack in the rate at which industrial capacity has been utilized."

"An increase in this rate would most certainly increase corporate earnings through the joint action of a rise in profit margins and a greater volume of revenue."

'Squeeze' Overstated

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Research in an analysis in the American Federationist last June pointed out that the so-called profit "squeeze" was overstated because of heavily increased depreciation allowances.

"An increase in depreciation allowances under changed government regulations results in lower reported costs, reduced reported profits and lower taxes," the federation's economists stated.

"The cash flow . . . is the accurate measure of [a] company's returns, since it is the amount of money left over after payment of all costs and taxes."

The Commerce Dept. analysis points out that there was a change in permitted depreciation allowances in 1954 after fast write-offs on equipment in the Korean War, and that in 1962 new increases in depreciation allowances have been authorized.

The result of the 1962 changes, the article states, may eventually be to raise depreciation claims and to reduce stated profits by $2 billion to $3 billion for the full year —with tax savings "of about half as much."

Unions Asked to Tell Israeli Labor Story

New York—Delegates to the 39th annual conference of the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut were urged to make both Christians and Jews more aware of the role played by Israel's labor federation in the struggle for freedom throughout the world.

This appeal came from Golda Meir, Israeli foreign minister who addressed some 1,500 delegates attending the three-day meeting, and from many of the council's officers and other fraternal delegates.

Mrs. Meir praised this nation's unions for their continuing efforts in behalf of Israel's labor movement as she detailed some of the achievements made possible by American organized workers through Histadrut.

In his report to the conference, ATUC Executive Dir. Gregory J. Bardacke held that Histadrut's capacity for creativeness and pioneering explains the international labor movement's deep interest and friendship for the Israeli labor federation.

"With Histadrut's aid Israel has demonstrated that given a strong and democratic labor movement you can have a planned economy, give scope to individual initiative and yet preserve freedom," he stated. "It is in Labor Israel's vital interest to promote international peace and cooperation, to provide assistance for the developing countries, to help raise living standards, and to strengthen the ties of international labor solidarity."

New Members Added

Considerable success was recorded in the council's nationwide drive for new membership by local and international unions. To date, 23 AFL-CIO international unions and 106 local unions in 18 states and 37 cities in the United States and Canada have affiliated with the council.

The National Committee for Labor Israel, of which the ATUC is a part, raised a total of $3.3 million in its 1962 fund campaign. It has set a campaign target of $5 million for next year, hoping to expand its benefits in Israel to provide medical coverage for all new immigrants, new vocational training opportunities, construction of more cultural centers, extended care of the aged, a broader physical training and sports program for youth, and religious facilities for orthodox workers.

Moe Falikman, vice president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, was unanimously re-elected chairman of ATUC for another year. Isaiach Avrech, Histadrut representative in the U. S., announced that he is resigning to return to his own country.

The conference paid tribute to Sidney Hillman, late president of the Clothing Workers; Max Zaritsky, late president of the Hatters, and Isidore Nagler, late vice president of the ILGWU, in whose names their respective unions are building community and medical centers in Israel in cooperation with Histadrut. Ten resolutions were adopted by conference delegates, two of which expressed gratitude for AFL-CIO support of the Afro-Asian Institute, sponsored by Histadrut, and the labor federation's continued cooperation with ORIT.

At Chicago Conference:

Unions Press Drive In Civil Rights Field

Chicago—Five hundred delegates to the 8th Labor Conference on Civil Rights approved programs to wipe out anti-Semitism and to expose racial myths, and urged Illinois to strengthen its civil rights laws and to open apprenticeship and training to more members of minority groups.

The one-day session was sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee and was endorsed by the Chicago AFL-CIO. The recommendations and resolutions approved by the conference were made by four discussion groups.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Boris Shishkin called for an "alliance for progress" among groups fighting for civil rights and against segregation.

"Who gets the credit for integration is not important," he said at a panel session. "The important thing is a common effort to solve this national and international problem."

The AFL-CIO welcomes support in the fight from all groups, he said, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which recently accused the labor body of "dragging its feet" on integration. Federation Pres. George Meany bluntly told the NAACP in a letter a "campaign of systematic falsehood and distoration" makes re-establishment of unity in the fight for civil rights difficult.

Shishkin expressed the view that the door is open for consultation between the two groups. At a press conference he attributed the dispute to the NAACP labor secretary, Herbert Hill.

Charges Held Untrue

"He (Hill) made untrue charges against three of our unions, the Ladies' Garment Workers, the Steelworkers and the Seamen's Union of the Pacific," he said. "These are good people and we won't stand for attacks on them, although we think the NAACP is a great organization."

In Washington, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told a news conference that his "firm impression and complete conviction" is that there has been "extraordinary progress on the part of almost all of the trade unions" in eradicating racial discrimination. He said "public controversy" over this issue has "distorted the facts" as to the "tremendous progress made."

Delegates to the Chicago conference called for:

- Extension of coverage under the Illinois Fair Employment Practices Act.
- Authority for the Illinois Fair Employment Practices Commission to initiate investigations.
- A state fair housing law.
- Expansion of school guidance and counseling systems to cut the drop-out rate.
- Establishment of a statewide apprenticeship information center.
- Full support of a proposal that the federal government finance the first year of apprenticeship training through the Manpower & Retraining Act.
- Establishment of civil rights committees in all local unions.

Pres. Carl Megel of the Teachers, who presided at a luncheon, called the parley a demonstration of the continuing interest of men and women in improving their status.

William J. McSorley, Jr., assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., told the luncheon that no single group "has done as much in the struggle for equal rights as the trade union movement."

"This fact might not be recognized by some minority groups," he added. 'But those who would perpetuate segregation do recognize this fact. Names found on the letterheads of 'right-to-work' committees are the same as those found on the letterheads of White Citizens Councils."

Vice Pres. Morris Bialis of the ILGWU hailed the pledge of AFL-CIO unions to cooperate with the Union Program for Fair Practices and called on employers to sign similar pledges.

Brookings to Sponsor Labor Conferences

A series of conferences on public issues designed especially for elected officials of national and international unions has been launched by the Brookings Institution.

The program, said Brookings Pres. Robert D. Calkins, is "an experimental effort to help an important group of leaders to meet their responsibilities more effectively." The conference series is being planned by the institution with the aid of an advisory committee of officers from eight major unions.

The first conference is planned in March for one week at Colonial Williamsburg, Va., with some 20 union presidents, vice presidents and other elected officials participating. Each session will be devoted to an off-the-record discussion of general topics such as urbanization, economic growth, organizations and leadership in American society and the future of American democracy. Leading scholars and government officials will take part as discussion leaders.

The new program is being planned by Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., associate director of the Labor & Industrial Relations Center at Michigan State University, who is on leave for the current year serving as consultant to the Brookings Advanced Study Program.

The advisory committee includes I. W. Abel, secretary-treasurer, Steelworkers; Joseph A. Beirne, president, Communications Workers; John H. Lyons, Jr., president, Iron Workers; Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer, Auto Workers; James A. Suffridge, president, Retail Clerks; David Sullivan, president, Building Service Employees; Hunter P. Wharton, president, Operating Engineers.

Canadian Scholarship Honors CWA Leader

Regina, Sask.—The John Lax Memorial Scholarship, sponsored by Saskatchewan locals of the Communications Workers in memory of the union's late Canadian director, has been awarded to Linda Noreen Medland of Regina.

Miss Medland is a graduate of Central Collegiate and is enrolled at the University of Saskatchewan.

Labor-Library Group Meets at Rutgers

New Brunswick, N. J. — Fifty library and union representatives attended a three-day workshop here on labor and library relations under sponsorship of the Rutgers Institute of Management & Labor Relations and the Rutgers Graduate School of Library Service.

Participants discussed materials and services for union and community needs including better use of films and reading materials. Discussion leaders included Otto Pragan, AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Tom Cosgrove of the State, County & Municipal Employes; and Al Loewenthal of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers District 4.

New Guide to Safety Published for Unions

The first comprehensive book on accident prevention for labor organization personnel has been published by the National Safety Council. The result of six years of work, the book is titled Safety Guide for Unions.

In its 240 pages, union officers, committeemen and members will find material for use in promoting both on-the-job and off-the-job safety. Developed and approved by union safety and occupational health specialists and written in nontechnical style, the book is intended to appeal to all levels of union personnel.

Among the 18 chapter headings are "Labor's Stake in Safety," "Occupational Accidents," "Conducting a Safety Program," "Prevention of Off-the-Job Accidents," and "Home Accident Prevention."

In a foreword to the book, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany says:

"From its earliest days, the trade union movement has been actively promoting safety both on and off the job. In recent years the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Safety and Occupational Health has been spearheading the development of aggressive and realistic programs in safety by organized labor.

"This committee, as well as myself, welcomes this new working tool—Safety Guide for Unions—and recommends its widespread use."

Single copies of the illustrated, hard-bound book sell for $7. In quantity orders, prices are: 2-9 copies, $5.60 each; 10-99 copies, $5 each; and 100 or more copies, $4.80 each. To order or to obtain more information, write to National Safety Council, 425 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 11, Ill.

Dean Keppel Appointed To U.S. Education Post

Francis Keppel, dean of the Harvard Graduate School of Education, has been named U.S. Commissioner of Education by Pres. Kenendy.

Keppel succeeds Sterling M. McMurrin, who resigned in September to return to the University of Utah. Keppel has been dean of the Harvard school since 1948.

In 1960 he served on Pres. Kennedy's task force on education which recommended an annual appropriation of $2.3 billion for federal aid to education.

In Manpower Development Program:

90 Percent of First Trainees Placed in Jobs, Wirtz Reports

In the first group of workers retrained under the new Manpower Development Act, 90 percent have been placed in actual jobs, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced in a "progress report."

The group was small, Wirtz pointed out, covering only 283 trainees in Connecticut and California, of whom 253 promptly got jobs for which they had been specifically trained.

"We recognize this is too preliminary a return" to allow conclusions about the future operations of the program, the secretary told a news conference. Nevertheless "it is obviously a matter of encouragement" and it is the Administration's hope that the future pattern "will develop in similar terms."

Wirtz announced that 279 training projects have now been approved under terms of the new statute and that 10,601 workers are enrolled or have completed training. The project, spread across 36 states, involve a government commitment of nearly $13 million of the $70 million Congress appropriated for the first year of the program.

Pointing out that the program was launched only about two and a half months ago, when funds became available, the secretary indicated that a $30 million supplemental appropriation might be asked when the 88th Congress meets in January.

He said also that a breakdown of present trainees by age groups strongly suggests that the Manpower Development Act by itself does not give a "sufficient basis" for meeting the problem of heavy unemployment among young people, many of who are "drop-outs" from school.

Youth Training Needed

The Administration, he continued, will be "pressing strongly" for passage of a special youth training program approved in both House and Senate committees in the last Congress but blocked in the House Rules Committee. This program, as advanced by the Administration, includes creation of a Youth Conservation Corps comparable to the Civilian Conservation Corps of early New Deal years.

The Labor Dept. report on the first group completing training in new skills shows that 45 percent were trained as machine operators and others as pipefitters, sheet metal workers, welders, electronic unit assemblers and hospital orderlies.

A large proportion—43.7 percent—were between the ages of 22 and 34, an additional 17 percent were between 19 and 21, and another 22 percent between 35 and 44.

Wirtz said that selection of trainees under the program takes "full account of both the qualifications of the individual and the availability of jobs for which he can be trained."

The 253 workers placed from the first group completing training went in each case to jobs for which they had specifically prepared, he added.

The factor of "trainability for a job which is open" has to be taken into account, Wirtz told his news conference, but "we are proceeding on the assumption that every person can be retrained, and we are not taking any shorter view than that."

CORRECTION

The Tennessee congressional race between liberal Democrat Wilkes Thrasher and conservative Republican William E. Brock III was listed in the Nov. 24 issue of the AFL-CIO News as an example of an election decided by a "razor-thin margin," in this case 51.1 percent of the vote.

It was, but the winner was not Thrasher, as incorrectly reported. It was Brock.

SYMBOLIC "WHITE COLLARS" are worn at work by these two members of Auto Workers' Local 55 in Buffalo, N. Y., to note signing of a unique UAW contract putting production workers on annual salaries and giving them many other "white collar" privileges. Dick Mueller (left) and Fred Kunz are employes of Sabo Machine & Tool Works, which signed the agreement.

UAW Production Unit Wins Salaried Status

Buffalo—Auto Workers Local 55 and a Buffalo machine and tool firm have made collective bargaining history by signing an agreement that takes production and maintenance workers off hourly pay status and puts them on an annual salary.

Harold C. Troidl, UAW subregional director here, said he has been informed by Detroit headquarters of the union that the agreement is the first of its type for the UAW which has about 1,000 contracts across the continent.

Troidl said the pact will raise the status of the production and maintenance workers by putting them on salary and granting them certain other contract benefits usually reserved for white collar workers.

Marcel C. Skotarczak, business representative for the local, said skilled employes will receive a salary of $6,240 annually, employes with limited skills $5,760 and unskilled employes $5,510.

The three-year contract covers about 25 production and maintenance workers of Sabo Machine & Tool Works Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Kinetic Dispersion Corp., makers of chemical plant equipment and other machinery.

Included in the new salary is an average 46-cent-an-hour increase, Skotarczak said. The contract calls also for a salary increase of $180 in 1963 and another $180 in 1964.

The contract cuts the workweek from 40 to 37.5 hours, calls for vacations ranging from one week for 90 days of service to four weeks for 20 years of service and provides for a seventh paid holiday.

Also, employes who are laid off will have their pay continued on the basis of one month's salary for each year of service. Workers who quit or are discharged will receive one week's salary for each year.

Salaries also will be paid up to three months for time off as the result of illness or accident, whether the accident occurs inside or outside the plant. Salaries will be paid after the three-month period when a physician certifies the employe still is unable to work.

The unique contract also contains standard clauses on arbitration of grievances, seniority, union shop, dues checkoff, cost-of-living, seven paid holidays and jury duty pay, among others.

A demand for "salary status" for production workers and the elimination of the "archaic system of hourly wages" was first made about 18 months ago by the UAW.

Labor's Anti-Bias Fight Draws Strong Defense

A national civil rights conference in Washington heard a strong defense of labor's efforts to eradicate race discrimination and a blast at "irresponsible" attacks on the AFL-CIO and its leaders.

Hyman Bookbinder, special assistant to the secretary of commerce and an alumnus of the labor movement, said unions are "the most natural and most important ally" of the Negro worker in his fight for justice.

Bookbinder cited as an example of "irresponsible" attacks a speech by Jackie Robinson sharply critical of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Robinson, former major league ballplayer and now a New York business executive, accused Meany and the AFL-CIO of trying to "virtually blackmail" the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Meany in fact recently called on the NAACP to disavow "a campaign of systematic falsehood and distortion" against unions and join in efforts to "reestablish unity" in the common goal of "full equality for our Negro citizens in every phase of our national life."

Robinson's blast, ironically, was made at an Equal Opportunity Day luncheon in Washington at which the 1962 Equal Opportunity Award was presented to J. C. Turner, president of the AFL-CIO Central Labor Council.

Labor's Role Stressed

Turner accepted the award as recognition of the central body's active civil rights program "with emphasis on open occupancy housing, integrated schools and equality of job opportunity."

In his message to the luncheon, read by his wife when he was unable to attend, Turner emphasized that "nationally and locally, the AFL-CIO is accelerating the pace of its efforts to insure equality of job opportunity to all Americans."

Addressing a discussion group during the four-day conference of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, Bookbinder said he found especially disturbing the fact that "detailed, documented evidence" refuting attacks against unions are ignored and the original charges are repeated "just as if no answer had been made."

Bookbinder told the group that when he had served as an AFL-CIO legislative representative before entering government service, 90 percent of his time had been spent working for civil rights legislation. Other members of the federation's legislative team, he noted, worked for minimum wage legislation and other laws which have been of special importance to Negro workers.

Stressing the need for continued unity between Negro and trade union groups, Bookbinder declared:

"I submit that hurting the labor movement at this time would be the worst thing that could happen in the interests of the Negro worker."

Rail Ops Map New Appeal On Work Rules

dorsing many of the work rules changes demanded by management, coupled with job and pay protection for present employes with long service. The recommendations were accepted by the railroads but rejected by the unions.

Union attorneys indicated they would ask for a rehearing by the appellate court and carry an appeal to the Supreme Court if this were denied.

While the unions have warned that abolition of work rules would force a strike, spokesmen for both sides have expressed the belief that Pres. Kennedy would appoint an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act to avert a nationwide shutdown. Such a move would bar unilateral action by the railroads for at least 60 days of fact-finding and negotiations.

AEC Urged to Push Power Breakthrough

million plant at its own expense and payment to the federal government of an estimated $125 million over 24 years for the otherwise-wasted steam.

Yet the "private power lobby and the coal interests" still tried to kill the bill—unsuccessfully, as it turned out.

"I find it hard to understand why the private power companies, which often profess concern for the American taxpayer, were so bitterly opposed" to this "real bargain" to the government, Biemiller commented—a bargain involving use of by-product steam "which would otherwise just be emptied into the Columbia River."

Furthermore, he continued, "we most strongly oppose" AEC proposals that the federal government be allowed to "give up ownership of special nuclear materials—the fuel of atomic power plants" and turn over ownership "to big, monopolistic private business firms."

This implies no "hard, doctrinaire position" by the AFL-CIO on issues involving public power and private power," Biemiller said. "On the contrary," the existence of the "controversy" over public and private power is an "irrelevancy" that often "blocks essential resource development programs."

All Have Place

"We believe that federal, state and local governments and private power companies all have a proper place in developing this country's energy resources," he told the convention.

But the federal government "has a special responsibility" under the Federal Power Act and the Public Utilities Holding Company Act to "enforce anti-monopoly protections of our natural resources." It is the only agency that can prepare "guidelines" and "stimulate public and private action," he emphasized.

The AFL-CIO has two goals in the atomic energy field, Biemiller said:

- "We want the vast potential blessings . . . used for the betterment of mankind . . .
- "We want thoroughly adequate health, safety and compensation protections for workers in atomic industries."

He called for establishment in the AEC of a Division of Peaceful Nuclear Development "to speed use of atomic energy for electric power and to expand the use of radioisotopes in industry, medicine, agriculture and basic research."

This would "focus responsibility," he said, and make possible "unified coordination."

More than 200,000 workers in atomic energy industries are now left inadequately protected from dangerous radiation, he warned the forum.

Congressional action is needed to establish uniform safety standards, he said, to enforce them with all agencies and contractors, and to require the states to adopt them as minimum standards.

In the meantime, the AEC itself should raise safety standards by administrative action, he declared.

State Help Needed

In addition, the safety program must be backed up by effective workmen's compensation to help workers who suffer injury or sickness, he pointed out. An advisory committee to the Council of State Governments has been working on improved state laws, he told the forum, but it has not yet considered some serious problems.

"So far we see nothing which would cause us to reconsider our determination to get federal legislation" for protection of workers injured either temporarily or permanently by "dangerous exposure," he declared.

Unchallengeable Evidence

IN THE PAST DECADE organized labor has come under increasingly critical attack by conservative economists, editorial writers and pundits in general for its unceasing battle for higher wages and improved fringe benefits. Wage increases and other improvements, the attackers chorus, mean higher prices and inflation. The resulting wage hikes are worthless, they claim.

The unions have maintained that the key to America's living standard—a truly wondrous achievement of the modern world—is increased purchasing power for the overwhelming majority of Americans who work for wages and salaries. Only if they have the income to buy the vast array of products turned out by the nation's industrial complex can living standards be maintained and advanced.

Labor's argument has been lost in the shrill outcry of economic wisdom by the country's mass media, nearly all riding the inflation-threat story so that every nickel wage increase bargained by a union is transformed into a direct threat to the nation's economic stability.

Now the U.S. Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics has come up with the cold, unchallengeable evidence that in the past decade—the 1950s, when the outcry against wage increases was the loudest—real income increased from 15 to 44 percent in seven major American cities.

As important as the increase in real income—the basis of an economically strong nation and of economic growth—is the way the average American family in these cities, and presumably in the nation at large, is spending its higher income. Total spending for food, shelter and clothing dropped from 62 percent of the 1950 consumer dollar to 55 percent in 1960. Family home ownership increased by a third during the period and expenditures for health insurance, personal insurance, gifts and contributions of all kinds increased.

The BLS survey effectively refutes those who seek a low wage, low standard economy. But it also points up, as Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has noted, "that there still exists in our most abundant society, areas of severe want." Until that contrast is eliminated, he observed, "our satisfaction . . . must be limited."

Labor and Safety

IN THE MAZE of men and machinery that make up American industry, on-the-job safety has become an essential ingredient in helping create a more efficient and productive economy.

In 1912 an estimated 21,000 lives were lost on the job. Fifty years later the fatality rate has dropped 63 percent. The work force has nearly doubled over the period and the gross national product has more than quadrupled.

A great deal of credit for this record goes to the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council. The Conference has now accentuated its never-ending campaign for a safe workplace with the publication of a pioneering book "Safety Guide for Unions" stressing the principle and practices of accident prevention and occupational health.

The volume is the first authoritative reference source dealing extensively and exclusively with the role of organized labor in both occupational and off-the-job safety. Coupled with the increasing scope of union activities in the safety field there is no reason why the fatality rate both in and outside the workplace cannot be reduced at an ever-increasing pace.

America at Crossroads:

Jobs Lost, Competition Declines As Merger Trend Continues

THE LATEST STUDY on "Mergers and Superconcentration," made by the staff of the House Small Business Committee, reports that since 1950 the top 500 industrial firms have absorbed 3,404 other companies and the 50 largest merchandising firms have taken over 332 competitors.

In a foreword to the report, Chairman Wright Patman (D-Tex.) said:

"America is at the crossroads. It must face up to the alternative paths lying ahead. Will it follow the road to monopoly and ever-increasing concentration of economic power? Or will it take the other alternative—the hard and rocky road to a restoration of competitive free enterprise, with the preservation of the American ideals of opportunities for small, locally-oriented companies to enter business and thrive and grow?"

Patman suggested that the United States is now "moving into a new phase of industrial and financial domination and control of industry."

"Merger movements have fed this cancerous growth," he declared. "The United States is rapidly becoming a nation of clerks and hired hands. Opportunities for independent small businesses are eroding."

Industries in which the merger movement has struck most heavily include dairy products, paper and allied products, industrial chemicals, petroleum, aerospace, electrical equipment, motor vehicles, textiles and merchandising firms, especially the giant food chains. We are now in the midst of railroad merger drives.

The committee report is primarily concerned with the impact of mergers on competition and the vitality of small business, but there is another area of equal importance—jobs.

How many jobs are lost each time a huge corporation swallows another corporation of perhaps almost equal size or a dozen small corporations that once represented sizable payrolls?

The report makes no mention of this aspect of the monopoly problem, which is of supreme importance to the labor movement. But all the evidence obtainable indicates that the job impact is heavy.

Mergers, says the report, basically stem from the desire for profits. They may be for the removal of a competitor. They may be for an increase in profits through a larger share of the market. They may be to improve technological processes. And they may be for a cut in costs, notably labor costs.

THIS LAST FACTOR is playing an unusually large role in proposed railroad mergers, where management is seeking drastic cuts in the number of workers.

There was a time when American railroads employed more than 2 million men. Today railroad employment has plunged to less than 700,000 despite the fact that tonnage is higher than ever. And tomorrow, if current merger proposals are approved, railroad jobs may drop another 200,000 at the sacrifice of service and safety.

But what of the anti-trust laws designed to check the growth of business monopoly? Patman cites the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and the Celler-Kefauver Act.

"Yet despite all these noble efforts designed to preserve opportunity for small, local enterprise, big business has grown apace," he charged. "Loop-holes have appeared in our anti-trust laws, and big business has fashioned new techniques of controlling markets and enhancing its power."

At the moment when the committee's report was being made public, Pres. Ladd Plumley of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce was in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., telling the Associated Builders & Contractors that the Chamber wanted laws to "forbid industrywide bargaining power" and other practices which he claimed were giving labor "monopoly" power. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Kennedy's New Housing Order A Step Towards Equal Justice

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S long delayed executive order against discrimination in public housing will do almost nothing immediately to change the ugly pattern of segregated communities in the North or South. But it is a strong new thread pulled into the broad design the Administration is trying to weave into the legal and moral code of the country to extend the protection of the Constitution to everybody.

Morgan

This is the heart of the matter in the controversy over civil rights, and the housing problem is just one part of it. There is supposed to be equal justice under law, but there is not. Constitutional guarantees are supposed to apply to all, but they do not. Society under a democratic system of government is not supposed to hold any member inferior because of race, religion, color, national origin or previous condition of servitude but our society does so hold while piously proclaiming to the world, in a vicious kind of hypocrisy, that it does not. We simply cannot have it both ways. If our society is going to flourish and acquire the added strength needed to maintain our position of world leadership, we have got to put more meaning in practice to principles which we hold so dear in theory.

The President's decree doesn't touch the main field of home construction built with private financing. All it does is to ban racial and religious discrimination in the sale of new housing that is government-financed or financed by federally-insured mortgages. This will make it a little less difficult for a Negro to get a new house or apartment built with federal aid. But this is an important something when added to the pressure the Administration is quietly applying in other areas —the withholding or the threat to withhold federal funds from segregated hospitals, school districts and the like.

The fat sums of money in federal grants-in-aid programs have become highly important to many communities and Washington has a powerful weapon here to force compliance with constitutional safeguards of civil rights, but the application of the weapon is politically complicated.

Political complications notwithstanding, the presidential order should have been issued long ago because, as the President himself said, it was the right thing to do. But far better late than never. Properly approached and vigorously applied—but accompanied by something more than fleeting community understanding of what the objectives are—this executive measure can help to stabilize the nation's neighborhoods. There has been alarmist talk that it would further disturb them, that it would ruin "desirable" residential districts by opening them up to Negroes or other barred minority groups.

In fact, the problems of slums, delinquency, bad schools and other urban diseases are traceable in part to the ghettos into which prejudice and social snobbery have flung the minds as well as the bodies of segregated citizens. Such neighborhoods need to be broken down, or rather broken up. The idea is not to give the panhandler or the pickpocket a Park Avenue apartment any more than it is to expect a society matron to live in a tenement. The idea is to assure the right of equal opportunity to anybody to live in any neighborhood he chooses, if he is a law-abiding citizen and can pay the rent—and not deny him that right because of the color of his skin, the address of his church, or the sound of his name.

NINETEEN STATES and 49 cities already have bans against housing discrimination and some of these—notably in New Jersey, New York and Connecticut—are tougher than the President's order. Nevertheless, some critics cried "disaster" would follow Mr. Kennedy's action. Financial blows to the home building industry were feared.

Who has troubled to think about the disastrous blows that the ignominiousness of second-class citizenship for generations has rained on Negro American citizens who now number 20 million.

In a searing examination of his experiences with segregation, James Baldwin, the novelist, wrote as follows in a recent New Yorker magazine: "Yes, it does mean something—something unspeakable —to be born, in a white country, an Anglo-Teutonic, antisexual country, black. You very soon, without knowing it, give up all hope of communion. Black people, mainly, look down or look up but do not look at each other, not at you, and white people, mainly, look away. And the universe is simply a sounding drum; there is no way, no way whatever, (so it seemed) . . . to get through a life, to love your wife and children, or your friends, or your mother and father, or to be loved.

"The universe, which is not merely the stars and the moon and the planets, flowers, grass and trees, but other people, has evolved no terms for your existence, has made no room for you, and if love will not swing wide the gates, no other power will or can."

But just laws and maturing national conscience will help.

Labor News Conference:

Labor Papers Lauded for Role In Stimulating Voter Turnout

LABOR PAPERS throughout the nation did "an excellent job" in helping to get union members and their families registered and to the polls, the president of the Intl. Labor Press Association declared in a radio interview.

ILPA Pres. Bernard R. Mullady said both community labor papers and publications of international unions played an important role by stimulating interest in the elections and bringing to union families "information that they don't generally get in the daily commercial press."

Mullady was interviewed on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public affairs program carried by Mutual Broadcasting System stations.

In addition to informing union members on trade union and legislative issues affecting their interests, most labor papers also make a special effort to serve union members in their role as consumers, Mullady said.

Trade unionism, he declared, includes both "getting more money for workers and getting workers more for their money."

He noted that the ILPA's convention in Cleveland, which was to open Nov. 29, had as its principal theme evaluation of "the service we are giving to our readers in their role as consumers."

Union papers, through their own reporting and special columnists like Sidney Margolius, have covered such topics as "the usefulness of credit unions as opposed to loan sharks" and have helped housewives evaluate "the giant special price package" they find on supermarket shelves.

TOTAL CIRCULATION of ILPA-affiliated publications, Mullady said, now stands at nearly 18 million, with actual readership several times that figure.

ILPA papers, he emphasized, have "a strictly enforced code of ethics" and the organization has played a leading role in exposing and bringing legal action against "phony labor publications" which use "boiler room" telephone techniques to solicit advertising from gullible businessmen.

The ILPA seal, Mullady said, "has become the hallmark of a decent labor paper" since it is withdrawn from any publication which does not live up to the association's high standards.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SEN. CLIFFORD CASE, a Republican liberal from New Jersey, thinks that both houses of Congress should drastically revise their rules, which he calls "archaic." So they are, and the history of attempted rules changes is evidence that Congress is highly resistant to reform.

The bipartisan group that Case represents is seeking once again to revise the cloture rule in the Senate, so as to allow a filibuster to be shut off after reasonable debate by simple majority vote. A two-thirds vote is now required, and it is so restrictive that only once in 35 years has it been successfully invoked.

This was in the last session, and it involved not a civil rights issue—the one most liberals have in mind when they speak of rules reform—but debate on the bill authorizing a corporation to run a communications satellite system.

Case also wants committee jurisdiction revised to eliminate overlapping control. He wants uniform rules of procedure for committees and a reduction in the sometimes authoritarian powers of committee chairmen. He wants the Senate to invoke a rule of germaneness, so that when a senator gets up to speak he must deal with the issue pending on the floor.

In a different area, Case renews the suggestion that members of Congress file annually a report on income received outside their government salaries. He points out, quite properly, that failure to require this leaves Congress under a standard more lax than it applies to Cabinet members, who are forced to divest themselves of investments that might create a theoretical conflict of interest.

On the House side, the principal reform urged by liberals is a rules change that would reduce the veto power exercised by the Rules Committee itself over legislation going to the floor.

FROM A PRACTICAL STANDPOINT, the latter is overwhelmingly important. Despite the "archaic" nature of Senate rules, the responsible policy committee of the majority party can usually force a vote on major issues that the Senate wants to vote on. Even a minority can force a vote by attaching amendments to legislation cleared by the committees.

The system is by no means perfect. Committee chairmen can refuse or delay hearings on issues—and then argue on the floor that the Senate should not act until a committee has acted.

In the House, however, the veto power of the Rules Committee is almost total. The majority leadership cannot control the legislation on which the House is allowed to vote; the Rules Committee controls it. This was true in the last years of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn and it is true under Speaker McCormack.

IN THE HOUSE legislative committees, furthermore, the arbitrary power of the chairmen is even more extensive than that wielded by Senate committee chairmen. A tough old veteran, raised by seniority to control of a committee, can run things with the ruthlessness and arrogance of a feudal baron.

It is perfectly clear that the effectiveness of the Administration in the upcoming Congress may depend substantially on whether the leaders can get the House to renew the enlargement of the Rules Committee voted for just the 87th Congress in January of 1961. The vote may be very close; the resolution of enlargement was approved by only a five-vote margin two years ago.

Even this was an exceedingly minor reform. A number of bills died in the recent session because the Rules Committee refused to allow the House to vote on compromise measures agreed on by Senate and House conferees, or refused to let the House name conferees to discuss compromise adjustments.

The two houses are under increasing pressure from external sources to revamp their procedures, and these pressures will increase if nothing is done.

Strong leadership in Congress itself will be needed to force through substantial and effective reforms. That leadership is not visible at present.

MINT COPIES of the new four-cent postal stamp struck in tribute to the National Apprenticeship Program were presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, above, and R. J. Thomas, right, an assistant to Meany, by Dir. Edward E. Goshen, of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training. With the stamp went a certificate honoring the achievements of American craftsmen and apprentices. The certificates were contributed by members of Banknote Engravers Guild Local 32, and Plate Printers Local 2 of the Intl. Plate Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers.

Scenes From TV Biography of Green

THE YOUTHFUL William Green faces Kendall, a miner, at an organizational meeting of the miners' union in a dramatic scene from Morton Wishengrad's television biography of Green, late president of the former AFL. The play, "Never Ask What Country," was telecast on many NBC stations Nov. 25 and will be shown on other stations in December. Sponsored by the George Meany Foundation of the Herbert H. Lehman Institute of Ethics, the telecast is part of the Eternal Light series presented by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America and the National Broadcasting Co. Local papers will carry the time of broadcast for Sundays on which the program is scheduled. (Story, Page 7.)

JEFFREY LYNN as Green in later life and Robin Howard as Mrs. Green in a scene from the television biography of the late labor leader.

YOUNG WILLIAM GREEN as portrayed by Billy Quinn, right, learns about life in the mines from Elwood Smith playing Kendall, the miner, in the dramatization of Green's life story.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, David Dubinsky and William Green, left to right are portrayed by actors Barnard Hughes, Sam Gray and Lynn in another dramatic scene from "Never Ask What Country."

SAMUEL GOMPERS, left, is depicted by Sorrell Booke in the TV play as he asked Green to assume a national office in the newly formed American Federation of Labor. Gompers was first president of the federation.

ANOTHER SCENE from the early days of Green's career shows him learning about the problems faced by a miner's widow, played by Sada Thompson, in the screenplay based on the life of the former AFL president. The play will be shown on designated TV stations in December.

Western Electric Vote Set:

Meany Asks Rebuff To Teamster Raid

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged 17,000 employes of Western Electric's installation division to vote for the Communications Workers and beat back a nationwide raid effort by the Teamsters.

In a letter to CWA Pres. Beirne, Meany said CWA "clearly deserves" to win the Labor Board vote.

"A vote for CWA . . . should make sense to each and every Western Electric employe, as a union member and as an American." It is "unreasonable" to expect the Teamster raid will bring "real trade union benefits," Meany said.

The Teamsters filed for the NLRB poll some time ago. At a hearing in New York, management consented to the election at this time, and CWA similarly waived the provisions of a new Labor Board ruling that three-year contracts are a bar to elections for their duration.

CWA's contract with Western Electric has another year to run. After the CWA convention last June, Ken Silvers, a CWA official, defected to the Teamsters who were expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests. Subsequently the Hoffa-led union announced a nationwide raid on the installers' unit and hinted that success in the election might be followed by other raids on CWA and on other AFL-CIO affiliates.

The installers work in various parts of the country. Most of their work relates to the installation of big or intricate communications equipment for business and government agencies.

Mail Ballot Set

Ballots were to be mailed to the members' homes no later than Dec. 7. They must be returned by Dec. 28 and will be counted Jan. 4.

Beirne has predicted a strong victory for CWA against the Teamster raid effort.

Meany noted that CWA has accomplished much for its Western Electric members, even though there may still be "much to be done, inequities to be corrected, bad conditions to be changed."

Fortunately, the AFL-CIO president said, "in CWA, Western Electric employes have a union that clearly belongs to them . . . a union they can always adjust to fit their needs.

"What is the alternative? It is the Teamsters, with a record that is shameful and with officers who have clearly betrayed their trust."

Long Lines Workers Vote On New Pact

New York—Pay raises averaging $2.50 to $5 a week, and other improvements have been won for 23,297 members of the Communications Workers in the long lines department of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The increases will be effective Nov. 9 if the long lines workers vote approval in a referendum now under way. They range from $2 to $3 a week for long distance operators to $4-$5 for plant craftsmen.

A committee headed by Elaine Gleason, head of CWA's long lines division, negotiated a one-year wage reopening agreement for workers in 43 states and the District of Columbia. Other benefits include wage reclassifications for 56 towns, improvements in differentials for service assistants and service observers, and a Sunday rate differential for janitors in Philadelphia and White Plains, N. Y.

Contract Gains Won By Insurance Union

Galveston, Tex.—New benefits for 3,500 agents of the American National Insurance Co. have been agreed to in contract negotiations here between the company and the Insurance Workers.

IWIU Pres. George L. Russ said a new three-year agreement averaging $12 a week for each agent was the "best balanced" contract ever negotiated in the 20 years of the union's relationship with the company.

Improved terms will, he said, give all agents the opportunity to earn more than the average and reduce the present turnover rate among agents.

Russ praised negotiators on both sides for having a thorough understanding of mutual problems and for recognizing these problems in reaching agreement. The company, with more than $6 billion of insurance in force in the United States, agreed with the union on these improvements:

- A raise in the collection commission from $42 a week to $45—to benefit about 60 percent of all agents.
- An increase from $10 to $15 on the amount of premium collected on each life policy.
- The renewal commission of 5 percent was revised to pay 8 percent from the second through fifth years, then 2 percent.
- Increased sales commissions on certain whole life policies for large amounts.

Management also agreed, the union said, to continue the payment of sales commissions on accident and health insurance after an agent retires; to pay a career bonus of $1 to $10 weekly based on length of service and production; to assume the full cost of group insurance for each employe; and to give new agents a training allowance of $20 a week.

More TV Stations List Green Program

The televised dramatization of William Green's life, seen Nov. 25 on many stations of the NBC network, will be shown on other stations in major cities during the next few weeks.

On Sunday Dec. 9 the program will be broadcast by WBZ-TV, Boston; WGR-TV, Buffalo; WWJ-TV, Detroit; WLWI, Indianapolis; WIIC, Pittsburgh; WSTP-TV, Minneapolis; and WSYR-TV, Syracuse.

On Sunday Dec. 16 it can be seen in Cincinnati on WLW-TV, in Kansas City on WDAF-TV and in San Francisco on KRON. Houston will carry the program Dec. 30.

Sponsored by the George Meany Foundation, the telecast is part of the Eternal Light series. Local listings should be checked under that name for the time of broadcast.

Flight Crew Pact Ends Long Dispute at TWA

An agreement ending a 4-year old dispute over flight deck assignments and qualifications on jet planes has been reached by the Flight Engineers, the Pilots and Trans World Airlines.

It includes a 13 percent pay hike for the company's flight engineers, part of which is retroactive to Jan. 1, 1961, coupled with a severance pay plan which gives up to $39,400 to engineers who are unable to meet new jet cockpit qualifications or who choose to leave voluntarily.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told a news conference that the pact is an "important milestone" which he expected would quickly bring similar agreements on two other major airlines.

The negotiators who worked out the pattern-setting agreement also received the personal congratulations of Pres. Kennedy at the White House. The President said he hoped their success would encourage other industries facing problems of adjusting to technological change.

In agreeing on cockpit qualifications and jurisdiction, the negotiators followed the tentative pact worked out last June in an all-night session at the Labor Dept. which averted a scheduled strike by the Flight Engineers.

It reduces the present four-man cockpit crew on jets to three by combining the duties of flight engineers and the third or standby pilot.

Preference Provided

Present flight engineers will be given first preference for the combined job, provided they qualify after pilot training to be given at company expense. If there are not enough qualified flight engineers to fill all jet openings, pilots who take flight engineering training would be eligible to fill vacancies. They would not be required to hold a mechanic's certificate so long as they qualify for a flight engineer's license.

Flight engineers at TWA voted to accept the crew complement agreement, although the international union was divided on the issue and members at Eastern Airlines have been on strike over the issue since June. Eastern, after a brief shutdown, resumed operations and there has been no break in the deadlock there. Wirtz told a news conference that he expects an early settlement along the TWA pattern at Pan American and American Airlines, but "unfortunately" he saw no prospect of an agreement at Eastern.

The separate pay agreement between TWA and the Flight Engineers, patterned after a presidential emergency board recommendation, calls for a 5 percent raise retroactive to Jan. 1, 1961, an additional 5 percent dating from Jan. 1, 1962, and 3 percent effective Jan. 1, 1963. It also provides a reduction in hours.

Jurisdictional disputes between the Pilots and Flight Engineers arose in the late 1950s as airlines prepared to move into the jet age. The faster, although mechanically simpler, jets presented new problems of crew qualifications, and the Pilots insisted on a "fail-safe" crew which would include three officers with pilot training. Early efforts to bring about a merger of the two cockpit unions—a move endorsed by an AFL-CIO Executive Council committee in 1958—were unsuccessful. Several major airlines, when faced with the conflicting positions of the two unions, agreed to four-man flight crews of three pilots and an engineer, while others continued with three-men crews.

Special Panel Named

When the Pilots requested and were granted a National Mediation Board election in an effort to obtain bargaining rights for all flight crew members on United Airlines as a single unit, members of the Flight Engineers on seven other airlines went out on strike early in 1961. The walkout was ended by appointment of a special presidential commission headed by Prof. Nathan Feinsinger. The commission's report paved the way for the TWA agreement.

service secretaries—Army, Navy or Air Force.

At a Sept. 13 news conference Pres. Kennedy also emphasized that if Lockheed held out against a generally-acceptable settlement of the union-shop issue, "the responsibility for any strike . . . would be clear to the American people."

A three-member Taft-Hartley fact-finding board was named by the President Nov. 28 to report back by Dec. 3.

The company expressed satisfaction at Kennedy's action, pointing out that as a final Taft-Hartley step all employes in the bargaining unit would be free to vote on the company's "final offer" before the injunction expires.

This would include thousands of workers in the bargaining unit who share the benefits of contracts but refuse to join the Machinists and share the expense of bargaining.

It is a situation the company has steadily sought to force the union to accept. The union took the position that it was willing to have all employes in the bargaining unit vote on a union shop clause, with the union required to win by a two-thirds vote to secure such a clause.

This is the compromise proposed by a special presidential panel for the aerospace industry and accepted by four other aerospace firms—North American Aviation, Ryan Aeronautical Co., General Dynamics Corp. and Aerojet-General. Previously Douglas Aircraft had voluntarily negotiated an agency shop contract with the Auto Workers, and Boeing Aircraft workers were set to vote on the union shop issue beginning Dec. 4.

New Pay Floor Set In Electrical Equipment

The Labor Dept. has made a tentative finding that the prevailing minimum wage in the electrical equipment industry is currently $1.52 an hour, 37 cents above the existing Walsh-Healey Act wage floor for the industry.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz gave interested parties 21 days to file exceptions to the findings before the new wage order becomes final.

Government contractors are required by the Walsh-Healey Act to pay not less than the prevailing minimum wage in the industry as determined by Labor Dept. wage surveys and hearings.

Forced Labor Charge Filed by ICFTU in UN

United Nations, N. Y.—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has charged the Union of South Africa with imposing "a system of forced labor, bordering on slavery" in a territory which it holds under a mandate of the former League of Nations.

Irving Brown, ICFTU representative to the United Nations, made the charge in a memorandum to the UN asking an investigation by the General Assembly's trusteeship committee.

The territory in question—Southwest Africa—has been under control of the Union of South Africa since the end of World War I. An area of 317,000 square miles, with some 600,000 people, it borders the Atlantic Ocean between Portuguese-held Angola and the Union of South Africa.

The ICFTU document charged that the overwhelming African majority in the mandate is confined to "native reservations" and recruited for work on farms and mines "in a manner reminiscent of practices instituted by slaveholders in the 19th century."

Trade unions are banned, the ICFTU said, and the contract labor system is "characteristic of totalitarian regimes."

Calling for UN action, Brown declared:

"We believe that the time has come to end the mandate whose existence mocks human rights and human dignity, and is so clearly violative of the principle of self-determination."

The UN General Assembly has on several occasions called on South Africa to report on its activities under the mandate and to accept UN supervision. The government has rejected these demands and the Intl. Court of Justice is currently considering questions relating to UN powers over a mandate granted by the League of Nations.

Gap Set at 10-12 Percent:

Labor Can Do Better At Polls, Meany Says

A 10 to 12 percent increase in the number of union members who go to the polls on Election Day would enable liberal candidates to win in every "marginal" congressional district in the nation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a national conference of the Building Service Employes.

Meany emphasized that he was "not disappointed" in the election results and the indicated gain of "five votes in the House and four votes in the Senate." This gain, in a mid-term election, defied political tradition, Meany noted. But he emphasized that labor still can "do better" than it has in getting members to the polls in order to preserve legislative gains and make new progress.

The AFL-CIO president cited political action as one of three major areas in which the labor movement is concentrating its efforts. The others, he said, are in the field of organizing, typified by the joint campaign in the Los Angeles area, and in the international field, where nearly one-fourth of the AFL-CIO's resources are employed.

Trade union schools in Africa, special training for young Latin-American union leaders and similar projects largely financed by the AFL-CIO are not the stuff of which headlines are made, Meany noted. But he emphasized that they are important, continuing contributions to world freedom.

BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan, in a keynote address to delegates from joint councils representing more than 275,000 of the union's 300,000 membership, also emphasized the role of trade unionism as "a bulwark of democracy and the arch-enemy of all dictatorship."

More Effort Urged

Calling for "redoubling" labor's international efforts, Sullivan declared:

"We must not selfishly be content to accept the benefits of free trade unionism here at home without making a much greater effort to foster its spread abroad."

Meany cited the topics covered during the two-day BSEIU conference—including civil rights, scholarships, community activities, political action and education—as a reflection of the changes that have taken place in the American trade union movement in recent years. But the basic philosophy of the labor movement has remained the same, the AFL-CIO president emphasized.

The BSEIU's civil rights program, one of the topics of the conference, also was praised by Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights. He noted that Sullivan is a member of the federation's Civil Rights Committee and the union has pioneered in the field in a number of communities.

Sullivan, telling the delegates why he had summoned the first conference of joint council representatives in the union's history, said he looked to these groups to "do more to aid and strengthen and stimulate the affiliated local unions that they serve."

He urged local level leaders to become "increasingly aware of the needs of the national and international scene" and to "assert leadership and help develop leadership so that we can all move ahead at a faster pace."

Living Cost Index Shows Slight Dip

The cost-of-living dipped one-tenth of 1 percent in October after a sharp rise the previous month, the Labor Dept. reported. The index for October stood at 106 percent of the 1957-59 average, a rise of 1.3 percent over a year ago.

Despite the slight drop for the month, the wages of 985,000 whose union contracts contain cost-of-living escalator clauses will go up 1 cent an hour on the basis of quarterly changes. The great majority are in the auto and farm equipment industries.

Average factory take-home pay for a worker with three dependents was $85.66 for the month, 60 cents below the September figure but $1.65 above October 1961.

TWUA Georgia Victory Hailed as Breakthrough

Calhoun, Ga.—Workers danced in the streets and organized an auto parade when the Textile Workers Union of America won an election at the Dixie Belle Mills here to score the first union breakthrough in Georgia's tufted rug and chenille industry.

The National Labor Relations Board gave the vote result as TWUA 376, no union 188. With 625 workers voting out of 637 eligible, 7 ballots were void and management challenged 54 without affecting the union victory.

TWUA said the victory was notable because of long management resistance and a vicious Chamber of Commerce campaign to smear the labor movement. The tufted rug and chenille industry employs some 25,000 workers under sweatshop conditions in this and other states of the South, it pointed out.

M. Michael Botelho, TWUA regional director, and Scott Hoyman, TWUA representative, were in charge of the organizing drive. Assisting them were union staff members Garland Brook, John Bunch, Josephine Clark and Mildred McElrath, with James Touchstone of the AFL-CIO staff, and TWUA members at the Celanese Co. plant in Rome, Ga., who served as volunteers.

Others who helped included 190 members of the Machinists who live here but work elsewhere. They helped maintain Dixie Belle workers' morale, Botelho said, in the face of a massive management "brainwashing" campaign.

The union victory was held off for nine months by the company's refusal to agree to a single-plant election. Management claimed the bargaining unit should include the 1,100 employes at the Bell Industries, Inc., plant in Dalton, Ga. The claim was upheld by a regional director's ruling last Feb. 15 but the NLRB reversed it and directed an election at the Calhoun plant and warehouse.

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT FOUNDATION will be created to perpetuate the memory of Mrs. Roosevelt and carry on her good works, it was announced at a White House meeting of a citizens' committee appointed by Pres. Kennedy. Shown, left to right, are Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), son of the former First Lady; Adlai Stevenson, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, chairman of the special committee; Myer Feldman, deputy special counsel to the President; Kennedy; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Mrs. Paul Hoffman, the former Anna Rosenberg; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Dubinsky, and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Beirne, Bellamy To Aid Red Cross

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers and Pres. Ralph Bellamy of Actors' Equity have been named national vice chairmen of the 1963 American Red Cross campaign.

With three others chosen for outstanding activity in their own field, they will serve in the campaign next March for Red Cross members and funds.

Beirne is an AFL-CIO vice president who heads the federation's Community Services Committee. Bellamy is a stage, screen and television star. Beirne was named Red Cross volunteer vice president for labor, Bellamy for entertainment.

NILE Slates Southern Area Union Course

A four-week training course for full-time union staff members working in the South will be held next Mar. 7-Apr. 4 at the University of North Carolina under the sponsorship of the National Institute of Labor Education.

The program, centering on regional economic, social and legislative issues, is being prepared in detail by AFL-CIO staff members and representatives of the university and of NILE. A grant to NILE from the New World Foundation will pay the cost of administration and tuition and half the cost of room and board for students.

Unions sending students for the institute will have the responsibility for the other half of room-and-board expenses and for travel, loss of income and incidental costs of students.

Co-directors of the intensive course will be George T. Guernsey, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, and Prof. Ron Donovan of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University.

Attendance at the institute will be limited to 25 students, and those accepted for the course are urged to plan for "in-residence" study.

Sponsorship by a union is required for admission to the institute. Application forms may be secured by writing to Joe Mire, executive director of the National Institute of Labor Education, 1730 K St. N. W., Suite 310, Washington 6, D. C.

Foundation to Further Mrs. Roosevelt's Work

The new Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, created by friends of the former First Lady to continue her work, is inviting Christmas donations as the beginning of a major fund-raising campaign.

Adlai E. Stevenson, chairman of a committee named by Pres. Kennedy, said after the White House meeting which organized the foundation that Christmas donations would be an appropriate gesture from those who wished to honor Mrs. Roosevelt.

He said the gifts should be sent to either Ambassador Stevenson at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations in New York or to Myer Feldman, deputy special counsel to Pres. Kennedy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and David Dubinsky represented organized labor on the 22-member committee which met at the White House to set up the foundation.

Stevenson said the foundation's general objectives will center on four general fields in which Mrs. Roosevelt was especially active: the United Nations, human rights, social development and health.

Emphasis on Youth

"The emphasis will be on youth," Stevenson added, "to which Mrs. Roosevelt dedicated so much of her energy."

He said Pres. Kennedy met briefly with the organizing group and reminded them of the importance "not only to the United States but to the world of perpetuating Mrs. Roosevelt's memory and her work."

Stevenson said Congress will be asked early in the next session to charter the foundation. He added that the organizing group would meet Dec. 21 in New York to receive reports from two subcommittees—one named to study and make recommendations for a major fund drive, the other to propose specific projects for foundation action.

Stevenson stressed that, while no financial goal has yet been determined, it was hoped that a large enough fund could be raised soon so that the continuing work of the foundation could be financed without annual campaigns.

Meeting with the organizing group as advisers were Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., sons of Mrs. Roosevelt and the late President.

Teaamster, Employer Accused in House Deal

Newark, N. J. — Anthony Provenzano, president of Teamster Local 560 here, and Pres. Louis Kletter of Eastern Freight Ways, Inc., have been indicted on charges of violating the Taft-Hartley law. The indictment alleges that Kletter made an $8,000 down payment on a $26,000 house now occupied by Provenzano and then continued to make monthly mortgage payments.

Provenzano also is president of the New Jersey State Teamsters' Council. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of corrupt domination.

Pay, Benefits Standardized At Canaveral

Commission, and the government will insert a clause in future contracts requiring contractors to abide by its terms.

In return, the building trades unions have agreed to standardize certain working conditions, such as overtime premiums and travel pay, which have varied from union to union.

Savings Sighted

The government expects these provisions to save money by enabling contractors to calculate their costs more accurately and refrain from "padding" their bids to meet contingencies.

Non-union contractors will be allowed to match the cost of certain union fringe benefits, such as health insurance and pensions, by payment of equivalent amounts in supplementary wages.

The agreement also spells out hiring and grievance procedures and calls for settlement of all jurisdictional disputes without interruption of work through the national joint board created for that purpose by the unions and the contractors.

Jobless Rate Climbs Again, Matches '62 High at 5.8%

THE PEOPLE OF PHOENIX came by the thousands to the mass flu immunization program sponsored by the local central labor council. Phoenix osteopaths gave nearly 40,000 inoculations after the local medical society declared its opposition to the low-cost program. The vaccinations cost $1 each as compared with the $5 to $7 fee charged by private physicians in the area. (See story Page 4)

U. S. Report Shows Youth Hardest Hit

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's unemployment situation worsened in November, with the jobless rate returning to the year's high of 5.8 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

The summary job report for November tied the jump in the jobless rate from October's 5.5 percent to a sharp upswing in the number of male teenagers without work experience who are seeking and cannot find their first jobs.

The number of the jobless teenagers swelled to 750,000 from October's total of 600,000—a rise of 150,000. Their rate of unemployment, adjusted for seasonal influences, rose to 15.2 percent from October's 13.3 percent.

The Labor Dept. said it expected to know more in about a week on the reasons for this unexpected rise in teenage unemployment, "overwhelmingly" male and with no job experience.

The summary job report said all other October to November changes in the job picture were as expected.

500,000 More Jobless

Unemployment, which normally increases by about 350,000 this time of year as agricultural and other outdoor activities are curtailed, swung upward by 500,000 to a total of 3.8 million. The teenage factor accounted for the remainder of the rise.

The November rate of 5.8 percent unemployed means 58 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were actively seeking work and could not find it. The 1962 high of 5.8 percent was registered in January, August and September as well.

Dr. Seymour Wolfbein, Labor Dept. manpower expert, acknowledged that the nation was beginning

Meany Sees Hours Cut Imperative

The rise in the nation's unemployment rate to 5.8 percent in November makes the AFL-CIO's drive for a 35-hour workweek "even more imperative," Federation Pres. George Meany declared.

"It is because of America's continued failure to solve its unemployment problems that the AFL-CIO is pushing for a 35-hour week," Meany said in commenting on the November job figures.

The increase in the joblessness rate, he said, "is symptomatic of the very real and continuing disease which affects our economy," and which "America cannot afford to wink at."

The AFL-CIO president said the sudden rise in unemployment among teenagers was "completely predictable." He said the nation must find jobs not only for those presently unemployed, but also for the 1,350,000 new workers entering the labor force each year.

Panel Asks Expansion In Training

A public advisory panel has recommended to Pres. Kennedy a major expansion of federal-state vocational education programs to meet the needs of 26 million young workers who will enter the labor market during the 1960's and to improve the skills of millions now employed or unemployed.

Declaring that present vocational education programs "are not preparing people for enough kinds of jobs," the panel recommended that the federal government step up its expenditures for both in-school and out-of-school training programs.

CWA 'Confident' of Defeating Teamsters

The Communications Workers "feel confident" that the 17,000 skilled craftsmen who install major pieces of communication equipment will "vote to stay in their union" in the election now being conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said.

The election involves a choice between CWA and the Teamsters, who were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of control by corrupt elements. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Beirne have branded the Teamsters' challenge to CWA a "raid." Ballots were to be sent out no later than Dec. 7, to be returned by Dec. 28, to be counted Jan. 4.

6 Unions Petition CAB:

Airlines' Strike Pact Invalidation Sought

By David L. Perlman

Six AFL-CIO affiliates have asked the Civil Aeronautics Board to invalidate the mutual strike assistance pact entered into four years ago by the nation's major airlines. The agreement provides for payments to struck airlines to reimburse them for losses, and the unions contend that it has resulted in an increase "in number and severity" of labor disputes.

The joint union brief, winding up hearings ordered more than two years ago, was one of the three submitted to CAB Examiner S. Thomas Simon. Other briefs were presented by:

- Eight airlines which asked that the pact, including major changes made early this year, be approved for an indefinite period.
- The CAB's own Bureau of Economic Regulation, which recommended disapproval of a key amendment to the agreement but proposed approval of the original pact for an additional three-year period.

Approved in May 1959

The basic 1958 agreement, which the CAB approved for a one-year trial in May 1959, provides that companies profiting from extra business resulting from a strike against a competing airline turn back their "windfall" profits to the struck company.

The airlines—American, Braniff, Continental, Eastern, Northwest, Pan American, Trans World and United—have since modified their pact by eliminating a provision that benefits will only be paid when an airline is struck by a union which rejects the recommendation of a presidential emergency board.

They also added a new provision —that when "windfall" payments fail to equal 25 percent of a struck airline's normal operating costs, the remaining airlines will assess them-

U.S. Courts Order Reapportionment Of Florida, Virginia Legislatures

Florida's legislature, deadlocked over reapportionment throughout a 20-day special session, has passed the buck back to the federal courts.

In another action of significance, a three-judge federal court found the apportionment of both houses of the Virginia legislature unconstitutional and gave the state until next Jan. 31 to "enact appropriate apportionment statutes."

U.S. District Judge David W. Dyer, who had served notice that he would impose a Florida reapportionment plan himself if the legislature failed to come up with an acceptable formula, promptly called a special hearing to consider a formula for ending the lopsided rural domination of the legislature. Some 13 percent of the voters now elect a majority of both the House and Senate.

Although a number of legislatures have redistricted under court orders, there has been only one state where a federal court actually stepped in to do the job itself. That was in Alabama, where a three-judge court found the reapportionment formula adopted by the legislature unacceptable and imposed its own plan under which the new legislature was elected Nov. 6.

Florida's legislature earlier this year had approved a compromise reapportionment as a constitutional amendment, but it was rejected by the voters in the November election. Most residents of heavily populated, under-represented areas opposed the measure as inadequate.

The 2-1 decision in the Virginia case departed from reapportionment rulings made in several other states by requiring that both houses of the legislature be apportioned on the basis of population.

The U.S. Supreme Court's Mar. 26 decision in a Tennessee case, which set off an avalanche of suits to force states to redistrict, gave few guidelines to lower courts and conflicting interpretations have resulted.

Several of the cases are scheduled for Supreme Court review this year. One of the chief issues to be resolved is whether a state may elect only one house of its legislature on the basis of population and the other on the basis of geography.

ACWA Fetes Firm On 75th Anniversary

Chicago—Fifty-two strikeless years of labor-management cooperation were climaxed here at a banquet given by the Clothing Workers in honor of Hart Schaffner & Marx, famous maker of men's clothing, on its 75th birthday anniversary.

Three thousand workers at the main plant here and several thousand more at other plants in Chicago, Joliet, Ill., and Rochester, Ind., heard the ceremonies by loud speaker hook-up. Company Pres. John D. Gray presided over a cake-cutting, and program speakers included union Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and others who paid broadest tributes to company and union.

At a Drake Hotel banquet, more than 500 diners heard Wirtz announce that a Hall of Honor will be established in the paneled third floor corridor of the Labor Dept. building in Washington and that the first citation will go to the Clothing Workers and Hart Schaffner & Marx for their notable record of peace.

Wirtz paid tribute to the "early architects" in company and union of the program, which has proved by half a century of labor peace the "validity of the ideal of common responsibility" to each other and the community.

"The future is their debtor," Wirtz said in a quotation from the illuminated scroll which will be placed in the Hall of Honor.

Potofsky lauded the "spirit of mutual respect and understanding" that led to grievance and arbitration agreements which over the years have been "emulated in virtually every other industry."

The challenges the union faced 50 years ago, Potofsky said, were "relatively clear and understandable"—low wages, insecurity, the oppression of foremen. Today, he went on, "we are the richest nation in the world, enjoying the highest standard of living, but more than 5 percent" of those who want jobs are without them and billions of dollars of potential production are wasted every year.

"The waste of our assets, human and physical, is the number one problem of our democratic society," he said.

Wirtz, Potofsky and Gray joined an auto caravan which drove to the three anniversary events—open house at a new center for the 3,500 retired ACWA members in this area; the birthday party at the main company plant on W. Jackson Blvd., and the dinner given by the union in tribute to the company. The center is at ACWA headquarters on S. Ashland Ave.

Other honored guests included Gov. Otto Kerner, Mayor Richard J. Daley, ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, and Murray Finley, Chicago Joint Board manager.

Peaceful relations between labor and management have existed since the close of a four-months' strike in 1910 which led to establishment of a permanent arbitration board, and the founding of the union. A leader in the strike was the late Sidney Hillman, clothing cutter who was ACWA president for many years.

Wirtz in his banquet address read a message from Pres. Kennedy, who said that by helping to achieve labor stability in what used to be a chaotic industry, both parties had shown the advantages of "working together for the benefit of both in an atmosphere of mutual respect."

Ruttenberg Leaves Staff; Named Adviser to Wirtz

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has accepted with "deep personal regret" the resignation of Stanley Ruttenberg as director of the Dept. of Research.

On Jan. 1, Ruttenberg will become special assistant to Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, acting as his economic adviser.

Meany said Ruttenberg, who had been the AFL-CIO's chief economic adviser since merger "had served the merged labor movement in a vital and sensitive post."

"His advice has been sound and valuable, his understanding of the problems of workers and of our economy has been outstanding and his dedication to the trade union movement complete," Meany said.

"I am sorry that he is leaving the staff of the AFL-CIO, but I am delighted that Sec. Wirtz has chosen such an able adviser. I am certain the Dept. of Labor, the trade union movement and the American people will benefit."

STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG

In his letter of resignation Ruttenberg, who has had 25 years of service in the trade union movement, told Meany it had been both "his privilege and good fortune" to have worked closely with Meany on economic matters.

"Never once have I lacked for a sense of cooperation, support and understanding," he said.

Ruttenberg said he "would always cherish the many years spent in the labor movement." He told Meany "being able to maintain the same relationship with you in the future as I have maintained in the past, will make much easier the assumption of my new responsibilities."

Ruttenberg, who is 45, served in various capacities with the former CIO from 1937 to the time of merger. He has been a member and official of numerous committees and organizations and was a delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization's 35th congress in Geneva.

He was a member of the executive committee of the national commission for UNESCO from 1948 to 1953 and vice chairman of that group's national commission from 1952 to 1953. He served as public adviser to the General Agreement on Tariffs & Trade negotiations in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1956. In 1950 he was a public member of the Foreign Service Selection Board of the State Dept.

His other activities include membership on the board of directors of Resources for the Future, Inc., the labor committee of the National Planning Association and the Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee.

Ruttenberg is associated with the American Economic Association, the American Statistical Association, the Industrial Relations Research Association, and the Joint Council on Economic Education.

He is married, the father of three children and lives in Bethesda, Md.

B&C Ex-Officer Enters Guilty Plea

James Landriscina, former vice president of a union expelled from the AFL-CIO, pleaded guilty to a federal charge of obstructing justice and was released in $500 bond pending sentence.

Landriscina, of Fort Lee, N. J., was ousted last Jan. 25 as a vice president of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, a union expelled by the federation in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests. On Nov. 1 he was indicted, along with James G. Cross, former B&C president, on charges of giving $35,000 to an attorney to influence a jury trying Cross in 1959 on perjury charges.

Cross, also indicted with four former B&C officers for conspiring to embezzle union funds, pleaded not guilty.

After expulsion of the B&C, the federation chartered the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, which now represents a majority of bakery unionists.

NLRB Orders 83 Weeks Of Back Pay

The Chicago Defender has been found guilty of four unfair labor practices by the National Labor Relations Board and was ordered to reinstate 58 strikers and give them 83 weeks of lost pay.

A three-member board panel ordered the publisher, the Robert S. Abbott Co., headed by Pres. John Sengstacke, to bargain collectively with the Chicago Newspaper Guild, to make no changes in wages and working conditions without prior consultation with the union, and to supply data substantiating its plea of financial inability to grant a wage increase.

The board listed the names of employes who struck April 16, 1961, and directed the publisher to give them "immediate and full reinstatement" to their positions, firing if necessary strikebreakers hired to take their places, and to make the strikers whole for lost earnings.

Employes of the Defender, a daily published for Chicago's Negro community, have been strongly supported in their battle with the paper by the Chicago Guild and the American Newspaper Guild.

In its decision the board upheld the findings of Trial Examiner John H. Eadie that the company was guilty of three law violations in forcing an unfair labor practice strike, contracting out the work of the mechanical department while the strike was in progress, and refusing to reinstate the strikers on their offer to return to work on April 24, 1961.

Contrary to the trial examiner, the NLRB found the company also committed an unfair practice by permanently contracting out its mechanical work.

The examiner reported that the Guild's contract with the daily newspaper expired Nov. 1, 1960; that management first offered wage increases for some workers totaling $100 a week, but later withdrew the offers and refused to back up its claim of inability to pay.

Teachers' Strike Recorded on Film

A documentary film of the historic April strike of New York public school teachers has been added to the AFL-CIO film library. The 27-minute report may be rented at $3 from the film division of the federation's Dept. of Education, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Second Non-Compliance Finding Names NMU

The National Maritime Union has again been found to be in non-compliance with the decisions of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO internal disputes procedures, Federation Pres. George Meany has notified all affiliates.

Meany said that a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, consisting of himself and Vice Presidents A. J. Hayes and Joseph D. Keenan, reached its non-compliance finding following the NMU's refusal "to withdraw from its efforts to supplant the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association as the collective bargaining representative of licensed engineers aboard certain vessels of the Isbrandtsen Steamship Company Division of American Export Lines, Inc."

Impartial Umpire David L. Cole had found the NMU's action to be a violation of the no-raiding provisions of Art. XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution. An appeal from Cole's ruling was denied by the Executive Council subcommittee.

Earlier, the NMU was found to be in non-compliance with a decision by Cole for refusing to withdraw from efforts to supplant the Seafarers Intl. Union as bargaining representative for unlicensed seamen aboard certain vessels of the Robin Line Division of Moore-McCormack Lines.

Thus, Meany noted in his letter to affiliates, the NMU already is subject to the following provisions of Sec. 15 of Art. XXI of the Constitution:

"1—The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Sec. 16;

"2—The federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

"3—The federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution;

"4—No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article."

The Journeymen Stonecutters Association is the only other union remaining in non-compliance with an impartial umpire's decision.

Perlis Endorses Home 'Peace Corps'

New York — The United States needs a home front peace corps and "our people need the challenge of volunteer service," Dir. Leo Perlis of the AFL-CIO Community Service Activities advised Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy in response to a questionnaire.

Perlis himself proposed a domestic peace corps in a speech in Dayton, O., in March 1961. Kennedy distributed the questionnaire in his role as chairman of a cabinet-level committee.

Lockheed Issues Unsettled:

Employes Restive Under Strike Ban

A U.S. District Court judge in Los Angeles has issued a temporary order, effective until Dec. 13, restraining the Machinists from resuming a strike against Lockheed Aircraft Corp. and set Dec. 10 for further arguments on whether to grant the Kennedy Administration's petition for an 80-day Taft-Hartley Act injunction.

After a 36-hour strike at Lockheed, 31,000 IAM members voluntarily returned to work at the President's request.

IAM Vice Pres. E. R. White issued this warning:

"We are reminding the government and Lockheed that the dispute is still very much unresolved. Unrest will continue to plague work areas until a fair equitable agreement is reached."

Kennedy invoked T-H after Lockheed had rejected government mediators' proposals that its workers be permitted to vote on whether they want a union shop and Administration assertions that Lockheed had triggered the strike.

In Los Angeles, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz blamed Lockheed for the deadlock and accused it of "complete intransigence."

Kennedy used the "cooling off" processes of T-H after a special board headed by Arthur M. Ross of the University of California recommended the action "to remove a peril to the national safety and to secure a resumption of trade, commerce and transportation."

Lockheed employes' return to work was "precarious" and there can be "no assurance of continued operations until Lockheed and the Machinists are able to agree on new contracts," the board stated.

IAM members tried for seven months to get agreement on a new contract, and walked out briefly after twice postponing previous strike deadlines at the request of the Administration and of the Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The chief obstacle to settlement has been management's repeated refusal to permit a union shop election among employes in IAM bargaining units. Other aerospace firms previously had agreed to let employes vote on the issue, in line with recommendations of another special presidential panel.

Panel recommendations on the issue were that the union shop be part of aerospace contracts provided employes agreed by a two-thirds favoring vote. Such votes have been conducted in this year's aerospace bargaining with a majority of workers favoring it, but by less than the required two-thirds.

In another aerospace dispute, 14,000 IAM members authorized a strike call but stayed at work in shops of the McDonnell Aircraft Corp. in St. Louis while awaiting strike sanction.

CAB Asked to Cancel Airline Strike Aid Pact

selves to make up the difference.

It was this latter position which the CAB's Bureau of Economic Regulation—which presents what it considers the "public" position at board hearings—strongly protested.

Bureau attorneys warned that this provision, under which airlines may "tap" the resources of others so as to withstand strike losses, "creates the real possibility of countermeasures by the union which might result in prolonged or industrywide strikes."

The bureau, however, said Eastern Airlines, which received $16 million under the "25 percent floor" provision this year, should not be required to refund the payments because of special circumstances.

Purpose of Act Defeated

The Machinists, Pilots, Flight Engineers, Railway Clerks, Transport Workers and Air Line Dispatchers argued that the entire concept of the pact defeats the purpose of the Railway Labor Act, to avoid strikes.

Instead of planning ways to raise a war chest against unions, they said, the airlines should cooperate in improving labor-management relations through such means as joint discussions during the period between negotiations.

The unions rejected the airlines' argument that the pact is necessary to offset strike benefits unions pay their members. Pact payments during the period of the agreement of nearly $32 million have been about five times the amount of union strike benefits, the brief pointed out.

Regardless of the examiner's decision, the ruling is expected to be appealed by the losing party to the CAB. Of the five members of the board who participated in the 1959 decision, only two are still serving—and one of them, G. Joseph Minetti, entered the lone dissent to the original approval.

NLRB Cuts Backlog, New Cases Rise

The National Labor Relations Board cut its backlog of unfair practice and representation cases slightly, despite an increased flow of new cases, in the first quarter of the fiscal year—July through September—the board has reported.

During the same quarter unions won 57 percent of the 1,727 elections in which almost 120,000 employes voted for bargaining representatives, as against 58 percent in the April-June 1962 quarter and the July-September quarter of 1961.

The board, for the period ending last Sept. 30:

- Issued 21 percent more decisions in contested unfair labor practice cases than in the comparable 1961 period. Rulings were made in 143 such cases, plus 74 uncontested cases.
- New cases in all categories totaled 6,152, up 149 over the same quarter a year ago.

Complaints Up

- The NLRB general counsel issued 389 unfair practice complaints, 16 percent more than in July-September of 1961. Accused were employers in 293 cases, unions in 76, both in 20 cases.
- The backlog of unfair practice cases and representation cases was cut from 488 to 426.

The report showed that AFL-CIO unions participated in 1,162 elections, won majorities in 628 and lost in 534.

Unaffiliated unions won 349 and lost 324 elections, the NLRB reported. At the quarter's end 6,729 cases of all types were pending.

'Lame Duck' Governor To Fill Chavez Term

Republicans will have one more senator in the 88th Congress than original election returns indicated as New Mexico's "lame duck" Gov. Edwin L. Mechem had himself named to fill the unexpired term of the late Dennis Chavez, a liberal Democrat.

Mechem, a GOP conservative, was defeated for re-election and would have gone out of office at the end of the year. After the death of Chavez, Mechem resigned and was promptly appointed to the Senate by his then lieutenant governor, Tom Bolack.

The effect will be to reduce the Democratic Senate gain to a net of three seats, giving the party a 67-33 majority in the new Congress.

In other election aftermaths:

- Republicans picked up an additional governorship—in Rhode Island—as an absentee ballot count gave John H. Chafee a 398-vote victory over incumbent Democratic Gov. John A. Notte, Jr. The State AFL-CIO had made no endorsement in the race and the Democrats won all other statewide offices.
- A recount in South Dakota confirmed the victory of George McGovern, who resigned as Food for Peace director to make the Senate race. McGovern, a liberal, labor-backed Democrat increased his margin over Republican Sen. Joseph Bottum to 516 votes and Bottum conceded.
- Still undecided was the Minnesota governorship, the closest major contest in the nation. After the canvassing board could not agree on a winner, the State Supreme Court in a split decision held that incumbent Republican Gov. Elmer L. Andersen had defeated Lt. Gov. Karl F. Rolvaag, the Democratic candidate, by 142 votes out of nearly 1.24 million cast.

Rolvaag immediately moved for a recount and state Democratic leaders expressed optimism that the result would be reversed.

In New Mexico, Mechem's action in having himself appointed to the remaining two years of the Chavez Senate term stirred more than the usual flurry of protest.

Although it is not unusual for a governor to arrange for his own appointment to a Senate vacancy, Mechem had twice vetoed bills which would have required a special election to fill a vacancy if a senator died in office.

He is also reported to have angrily denied during his 1960 election campaign for governor that he might have himself appointed to the Senate if a vacancy developed.

The new GOP senator had made one elective bid for the office—in 1954 when he was soundly defeated by Democrat Clinton P. Anderson. Mechem ran for governor six times since 1950, winning on four occasions. He lost his bid for a fifth term this year to Democrat Jack M. Campbell by nearly 14,000 votes, considered a wide margin in New Mexico.

J. P. Lewis Named Economic Adviser

Pres. Kennedy has named John Prior Lewis, an Indiana economist, to succeed Kermit Gordon on his three-member Council of Economic Advisers after Gordon takes over as director of the budget.

Lewis, 41, is chairman of the University of Indiana's Dept. of Business Economics and Public Policy and director of its Intl. Development Research Center. From 1950 to 1953, before joining the university faculty, he was an economist and assistant to the chairman of the council.

Other members of the council are Chairman Walter W. Heller and James Tobin.

Top Officers In South Attend School

Bradenton, Fla.—AFL-CIO staff representatives, university faculty members and a government spokesman led discussions at the Southern Labor School's advanced school here which drew top officers from eight state central bodies and three large city bodies in the South.

Federation representatives on the staff of the one-week school included Nat Goldfinger, assistant director of research; George T. Guernsey, assistant director of education; Dir. Daniel A. Powell of COPE Area 5, and Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair.

Others were J. Earl Williams of the University of Tennessee, John Griffin of Florida State University, and John Cosgrove, assistant director of the government's Office of Emergency Planning.

At a meeting of the board of control, Treas. Charles Houk of the Tennessee State AFL-CIO was re-elected president of the Southern Labor School, and Pres. Barney Weeks of the Alabama State AFL-CIO, was elected secretary-treasurer.

Distillers Renew Plea For 4-Brand Boycott

The Distillery Workers have renewed an appeal to union members throughout the nation to help win a settlement of a 15-month strike by boycotting the four brands of bourbon whiskey made by the Stitzel-Weller Co.

Brands produced by the union-busting firm are: Old Fitzgerald, Cabin Still, Old Elk, and W. L. Weller.

The union said its 130 members who have been on the picket line since Sept. 8, 1961, are hopeful that an intensification of labor's boycott during the holiday season—the big sales period in the industry—can bring management back to the bargaining table.

Last April the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted full support of the boycott. Similar action has been taken by the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept., the Maritime Trades Dept., and many international unions and state and local central bodies.

Forced to Strike

Pres. Mort Brandenburg of the Distillery Workers said the strike was forced on the union when the company refused to agree to contract provisions negotiated in contracts with major distillers which historically have set the pattern for the industry.

The union said its proposals were "rejected by a management intent upon turning the clock back" with an "arrogance" which left the workers no alternative to a strike.

Despite a "vicious employer offensive," including use of strikebreakers, injunctions and lawsuits, the union said members of its Local 36 at Shively, Ky., have "maintained their picket line in fair weather and foul." Strike benefits were raised 25 percent at the union convention last May, Brandenburg noted.

SIU Affiliate Wins Plastic Plant Rights

Shenandoah, Pa.—Employes of the Yankee Plastics Co. here voted 55 to 3 to name the United Industrial Workers, an affiliate of the Seafarers, as their collective bargaining representative in an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The balloting also involved Dist. 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers. Frank Drozak, SIU representative in Philadelphia, said the nearly unanimous results of the vote should lead to prompt opening of contract talks.

Parleys Open On Contracts With MSTS

New York—The National Maritime Union has begun negotiations with the Navy's Military Sea Transportation Service for a contract covering 3,000 crew members on 39 ships in the Atlantic Area Command.

The union recently won exclusive bargaining rights for the non-officer seamen in the MSTS Atlantic and Gulf fleets and Pres. Joseph Curran said the contract talks are the first negotiations ever entered into by the MSTS with a union.

Union recognition for civilian employes of the government was made possible under an executive order issued by Pres. Kennedy early this year.

Curran said the bargaining goal is to bring MSTS standards up to those provided by union contract on commercial vessels.

Unionists Urged to Buy Refugee Gift Wrappings

The AFL-CIO has again urged American trade unionists to aid the relief work of the U.S. Committee for Refugees by cooperating in its annual Christmas holiday gift wrap campaign.

In a letter to all federation affiliates, Harry Goldberg, AFL-CIO representative to the committee, noted that the campaign was first introduced in 1960 and that the holiday gift wrappings have since been used "by many thousands who welcomed the thought that when they wrapped their packages they were also helping refugees."

Funds derived from the sale of the wrappings go directly for refugee relief work sponsored by the committee, on whose board of directors AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany serves.

The wrappings come in three color combinations and may be ordered through Goldberg at AFL-CIO headquarters or more directly from the U.S. Committee for Refugees, P.O. Box 1000, Grand Central Post Office, New York 17, N. Y.

Suggested minimum contribution is $2 per set of 10 sheets.

"In these days of tension and struggle and suffering," Goldberg observed in his letter, "the conscience of the Free World cannot help but turn to the relief of the refugees created chiefly by Communist dictatorial regimes, whether in China, East Germany, Cuba, the Eastern Satellite countries, etc."

Labor Demands Curb On D.C. Housing Bias

The AFL-CIO has asked the District of Columbia Board of Commissioners to outlaw housing discrimination in the nation's capital.

Boris Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, said racial restrictions on the sale and rental of housing is a direct threat to the health of families crowded into "segregated ghetto life."

Shishkin spoke for both the federation and the Greater Washington Central Labor Council in voicing "organized labor's strong support" for an anti-discrimination ordinance.

The presidentially appointed commissioners who govern Washington had been advised by the district's counsel that they have authority to issue an anti-discrimination ordinance if they find it a necessary step to protect the property or the "lives, limbs, health, confort and quiet" of residents of the capital city. The two-day hearing was to guide them in determining if discriminatory housing practices constitute a threat to these.

There is "ample evidence" that discriminatory housing menaces the public health, Shishkin declared.

Lack of open occupancy housing, he said, crowds minority group families "into substandard housing, often lacking basic utilities, adequate heat and essential sanitary facilities."

Because of "exorbitant rent charges," Shiskin declared, the Negro family "must of necessity sacrifice by skimping on other necessities, such as adequate food and clothing."

Malnutrition, too, is a by-product of housing segregation, he said, adding:

"The crucial point is that discriminatory segregation in housing . . . inevitably creates a ghetto, with all the evils and dangers to health, life, liberty, property and the pursuit of happiness that segregated ghetto life of necessity breeds."

Noting that repeated studies of segregation in Washington have pointed to the byproducts of disease, crime and fires, Shishkin said "the time has come for action." The "overwhelming majority" of the people of the District of Columbia—and of union members—"insist on such action," he declared.

Also testifying for an anti-discrimination housing ordinance was Ben Segal, education director of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. He appeared on behalf of both the IUE and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Potters Win Settlements For 8,000

East Liverpool, O. — Improved pension and health and welfare benefits highlight two key settlements by the Operative Potters with employer associations.

A new three-year agreement covering nearly 6,000 employes of firms aligned in the U. S. Potters Association calls for employer contributions of 7 cents an hour to establish a pension fund, full company payment of health and welfare costs formerly shared by the workers, and an additional paid holiday in 1964.

Similar terms were reached with six plants employing nearly 2,000 workers in the hotel and restaurant chinaware field, except that the 7 cents for pensions is an addition to pension contributions already being made by the firms.

Both agreements are reopenable after the second year for wage negotiations.

Cruikshank Sets Forth Case:

Health Costs for Aged Seen Best Met by Social Security

New York—Labor advocates health care for the aged under social security because it believes that "destitution should not just be alleviated; it should be prevented," AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank told a conference of church pension administrators here.

He took sharp issue with the American Medical Association's contention that only the "needy" aged should be assisted.

"This approach," he said, "leaves out the important fact that a very large proportion of the 'needy' who can't afford to pay for medical care were forced into that unhappy position by the medical bills they have already paid."

Pres. Kennedy has indicated he will press strongly for action on social security health care legislation in the new 88th Congress.

The election returns point to a victory in the Senate, where the Anderson-Javits bill was narrowly defeated earlier this year. The new Senate will have a net gain of three liberal Democratic votes.

The chief battle is expected in the House, where the Ways & Means Committee kept the Anderson-King bill bottled up in the 87th Congress. The picture could change with the approach of a presidential election year and the retirement or defeat in November of several committee members who had opposed the measure.

Welfare Approach Falls Short

Cruikshank told the inter-denominational Church Pensions Conference that the Kerr-Mills Act program, which relies on the "public assistance approach," has fallen far short of the claims of its supporters. Nevertheless, he added:

"We believe there will always be a need for a program like Kerr-Mills to meet the residual needs even after the adoption of a social insurance program.

"Our objection is to making the assistance, or relief approach, the only approach. In a social welfare program, public assistance is like a spare tire. It is vitally necessary, but it is the essence of poor planning to start on a trip with nothing but a spare tire."

Cruikshank cited these factors which "lead logically to the conclusion that social insurance is the best mechanism for providing the means to pay for medical care for the aged:"

- Older people make up an increasingly larger portion of our population. Today there are 16.5 million people 65 and over; 40 years from now there will be at least 30 million.
- Older people are generally a low-income group, with more than half having less than $1,000 a year income.
- They are a "high risk group" with respect to their need for hospital and medical care. Hospitalization is more frequent and lasts longer. Of aged couples reporting hospitalization in a 1957 survey, 50 percent had total medical bills of over $700—and medical care prices have risen 16.5 percent and hospital room rates have gone up 28 percent since the survey.
- While hospital insurance coverage has expanded, the proportion of the aged with hospitalization and surgical insurance is much lower than the general average. Much of the insurance covers only a small portion of hospital expenses and is frequently cancelled after the first illness.
- Nongovernmental insurance programs, whether nonprofit or commercial, are nearly all based on the "experience rating system," which means higher rates for older groups. This leaves many older people with the choice between a low-cost policy which is "so inadequate in coverage that it is practically meaningless" or a comprehensive policy "at rates that are out of reach on a retirement income."

'Only Practical Mechanism'

While private insurance has "built-in characteristics which make it impossible for it to meet the problem of providing protection for the majority of older people, social insurance has built-in characteristics which make it the only practical mechanism to do the job," Cruikshank declared.

"Only under social insurance," he said, "can one bring in all of the people—the healthy, the strong and the young, as well as the older and the ill."

Labor realizes, Cruikshank told the conference, that the legislation it supports "will not solve the whole problem of medical care for the aged."

It should be adopted, he emphasized, "because it is the most practical program to help most older people with one of the most serious problems of their later years."

Phoenix Unions Give Mass Flu Vaccinations

Phoenix—Nearly 50,000 Arizonans have been immunized against flu at a series of labor-sponsored mass vaccination clinics held successfully despite sharp opposition from local medical societies.

In Phoenix alone, 40,000 inoculations have been given at three open-to-the-public clinics, according to Pres. Richard B. Walsh of the Phoenix & Maricopa County Federation of Labor. Similar clinics have been held under central body sponsorship at Tucson, Mesa and Flagstaff, and plans are under way for programs at several other cities.

Milton V. Lee, AFL-CIO community services representative, credited strong support from U. S. Surgeon Gen. Luther L. Terry with nullifying the opposition of the county public health director, who echoed the medical society's position that inoculations should be given only in physician's offices. Local doctors have been charging $5 to $7 for office inoculations, while the nonprofit clinics charge $1.

Although doctors who were AMA members supervised the Phoenix labor federation's flu vaccine program during its three previous years of operation—the first two of which were limited to union members—this year the medical society took a strong stand against any cooperation.

Lee said the local osteopathic society stepped into the gap and provided personnel to administer the two-series injections.

Doubts raised by County Health Dir. S. F. Farnsworth in statements to the press questioning the efficacy of the vaccine and the value of the mass program were quickly rebutted by the surgeon general.

"Personally, and on the part of the U. S. Public Health Service, I congratulate Maricopa County's Federation of Labor," Dr. Terry wired.

He stressed the importance of vaccinations for "all persons suffering from chronic debilitating diseases, pregnant women, persons over 45 and particularly persons 65 years of age and over."

Pay Raises End Threat Of Cafeteria Walkouts

New York—A last-minute contract settlement with Affiliated Restauranteurs, Inc., averted a strike by some 2,200 cafeteria workers against 80 establishments in Manhattan and the Bronx.

Membership of Cafeteria Employes Union Local 302 of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers unanimously ratified the agreement, worked out with the aid of State Mediator Benjamin Wolf.

Local Pres. Joseph Fox said he expected the settlement to establish a pattern for renewal agreements with about 125 independent establishments.

The agreement calls for weekly pay increases of $5 for skilled workers and $4 for miscellaneous classifications in two steps across the three-year term of the contract, which is retroactive to Oct. 1.

Other improvements include an eighth paid holiday plus a half-day's pay when an establishment is closed for either of two Jewish holidays, an increase of one-half of 1 percent in employer contributions to the welfare fund, an increase of $1.75 per month per employe in contributions to the industry pension plan, maternity leave without loss of seniority or vacation benefits, and creation of a joint commission to set up an apprenticeship training program.

The Injured Regain Their Usefulness

WASHINGTON STATE'S Dept. of Labor & Industries opened this modern rehabilitation center for injured workers at Seattle in 1959 and named it for Dr. H. T. Buckner, its medical director. Added in 1960 was a patients' residence hall with 96 beds.

The Buckner Rehabilitation Center for Injured Workers, about to begin its fourth year in campus-like facilities in Seattle, Wash., is a unique service provided by the State Dept. of Labor & Industries to restore seriously injured workers to health and employability.

Treating more than 1,000 persons a year, the center proves, its director says, that "we Americans take seriously our obligation to be our brother's keeper—the idea is fundamental to our concept of democracy."

Visitors to the Seattle World's Fair this year, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, toured the center and found it performing a function done nowhere else so impressively.

The center's supervisor, Elmer H. Kennedy, who was state AFL-CIO legislative representative for more than four years, put it this way:

"This center, especially designed and equipped to help the injured workman regain his usefulness and dignity, is the finest expression of our American creed. We are proud that this program, including accident prevention, financial aid to the injured and physical restoration, ranks second to none in the nation."

The center was established in 1948 as a logical extension of definitive medical care and any injured worker covered by workmen's compensation is eligible for treatment on referral by his physician. Operations started in 1948 in a remodeled warehouse with seven patients, and were moved into the $1 million center in 1959.

THERAPISTS treat patients with a wide variety of modern techniques, using heat, light, water, electricity, massage and exercise. The treatment program is prescribed by each worker's physician.

REMEDIAL GYMNASTICS in the center's gymnasium are part of the physical therapy program to help restore patients to health. Most injured workers spend 30 hours a week in various center programs.

WORK PROJECTS help restore the patient's interest, skill and strength. He is instructed in advanced projects in wood or metal requiring his best physical skills and effort.

LEARNING TO USE artificial limbs is an important part of training for some workers. Here an instructor and a patient demonstrate a learning situation in one of the tasks of every-day living.

PATIENTS TAKE comfort from each other's presence in the hydrotherapy section of the center. Here warm, swirling water produces a beneficial effect in some types of injury. The center houses an average 130 patients for six to seven weeks of treatment. More than 1,000 are helped each year.

A Time for Strength

A YEAR AGO, on the eve of the AFL-CIO's fourth convention, as the federation marked its sixth birthday, the prophets of a splintered and divided labor movement stalked the land. The convention, they said, would witness the unhinging of the merger of 1955 because the AFL-CIO could not cope with its internal problems.

That was a year ago. Today, on its seventh birthday, the AFL-CIO is:

- Putting the finishing touches on a pilot organizing program of major importance.
- Lining up its legislative forces for a new congressional session after a successful election campaign.
- Creating a vital record in the peaceful settlement of internal disputes under the plan adopted at the convention that was supposed to witness the merger's demise.

So much for the prophets!

Pres. Kennedy recently told a group of more than 100 union leaders assembled in the White House to sign fair practices pledges with the government, as part of the fight to wipe out discrimination, that the work of the labor movement is never done, it goes on and on.

This is precisely why the AFL-CIO has reached its seventh birthday strong and united despite the relentless attacks and the acknowledged internal problems that came with merger.

The strength of a united labor movement is more essential today than at any time in the past seven years. The labor force is growing in new directions, and white collar and technicians' jobs are taking on a new importance.

The strength of a united labor movement is fundamental to the task of organizing these new unorganized, of continuing the struggle politically and legislatively to eliminate the chronic unemployment that plagues the nation and advance the social welfare and civil rights program that are part of its tradition.

Labor's work is never done. But only a strong, united, free labor movement is capable of taking on the job.

Judicial Irrelevance

THE FEDERAL JUDGE in Chicago who gave the railroads a green light on unilateral imposition of work rules changes strongly intimated in his decision that the unions have a limited right to strike.

The U.S. Supreme Court will eventually determine if the decision of Circuit Court Judge Elmer J. Schnackenberg in the work rules case will stand. But his highly unusual comments on the right to strike cannot be allowed to go unchallenged.

His observations in this area are not pertinent to the case. They constitute a gratuitous commentary on national labor policy and constitute in effect a warning to the unions that if they strike to support legitimate demands they may suffer legislative reprisals.

Judge Schnackenberg wrote:

"We would like to believe that this unnecessary threat of a strike of such magnitude as to amount to a national transportation paralysis was ill-advised . . .

"Through their representatives in Congress, the people may resort to such governmental power as is necessary to assert their superiority to any private interest, whether corporate or otherwise . . . ."

The right of the rail unions to strike is not at issue in the case and a judicial intervention in this area sets out dictums which are irrelevant almost to the point of abuse of function.

'Happy Birthday':

Machinists Salute AFL-CIO On the Anniversary of Merger

The following editorial "Happy Birthday" appeared in the Dec. 6, 1962, issue of THE MACHINIST, weekly publication of the Machinists.

ONCE AGAIN, we wish the AFL-CIO a happy birthday. The merger of the AFL and CIO is now seven years old.

Remember when the newspapers were reporting that the AFL and CIO would never merge? Remember when they said the merger wouldn't last a year? They're still saying it.

The merger has lasted and the reasons why are much clearer to the average union member than they are to most of the so-called experts.

To almost all union members, the merger has been a blessing. In most communities, it has added to labor's bargaining strength; it has brought greater recognition to the movement, and it has helped to build labor's voting strength.

The merged federation has a strong headquarters staff providing all unions with expert assistance in legislation, research, public relations, education and community services.

WE DON'T HAVE TO PRETEND everything is perfect within the AFL-CIO. It isn't. But many of the problems are being solved, including the knottiest of all—the disputes between unions.

Last year, the experts predicted that the AFL-CIO would never be able to adopt a workable plan for settling its internal disputes. Again, the experts were wrong. The plan adopted at Miami Beach last year has succeeded beyond the expectations of its principal authors.

At the recent Executive Council meeting, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany reported that in the first 10 months of its operation 142 complaints were filed under the internal disputes plan. More than half of those have been settled by mediation. Only 31 have required formal rulings by the impartial umpire. Just two unions—the National Maritime Union and the Stone Cutters—have rebelled.

A coordinated organizing effort has been more difficult to get started. But a program has been worked out for the Los Angeles area. It will start next month.

If it succeeds—and its chances look good—the merger will have benefited thousands more outside union ranks who never before have known the advantages of union membership.

To the AFL-CIO and its capable staff—a happy birthday and may there be many, many more.

ILPA Judges Hail Labor Press

The following is excerpted from the report of the judges of the ILPA journalistic awards Contest. The judges are Nieman Fellows selected for a year's study at Harvard University on the basis of outstanding achievements as newspapermen.

WE WERE TREMENDOUSLY impressed by the general quality of the newspapers and magazines we examined. The publications were competently edited, imaginative, extremely vigorous in many cases. We suspect that, on the whole, they would show up a similar cross-section of small-town and big-city commercial newspapers.

Of course, the cream of the labor press was considerably superior to the others. It was clear that some labor publications have undertaken to employ professionally competent newspapermen, while others seem to be getting by with semi-professional or amateur journalists.

We also were impressed by the enterprising spirit evidenced in some publications. There were stories dealing with extremely important and interesting issues which have not been properly dealt with by the popular press. In this, ordinary newspapers would do well, I think, to follow what the labor press is doing.

Certainly we do not mean to suggest that all is perfect and that there is no room for improvement. Some, especially in features, tend to be stereotyped. They don't show enough initiative in their columns, and often they don't try to relate their union activities to the broader community interest.

SOME OF THE JUDGES indicated a dislike for the overt self-serving expressions of union officials in too many of the columns. Their backpatting is as bad in some instances as those engaged in by non-labor press publishers.

We also had mixed feelings about many of the editorials. The good ones were excellent. But some of the poorer ones hardly measured up to a level of general competency. Many of them were poorly written.

We were impressed with the generally good typography of the papers and magazines. The best newspapers were typographically as attractive as anything on the newsstands.

Morgan Says:

After Centuries of Frustration, Negro Tide of Bitterness Rises

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

WITH ALL DELIBERATE SPEED, the country must now come squarely to grips with an ugly element of the racial question which it has almost totally ignored above a whisper before. The element is hatred. The danger of it, as exemplified in a shocking event and a stunningly remarkable essay both emerging within a week, has been there simmering under the surface all the time.

Morgan

By now, it must be recognized in all its potent dimensions, critically, understandingly examined, delicately and swiftly dealt with before it boils over and scalds all the progress we Americans have made on the problem of race relations in the last decade.

Everybody, presumably has a certain capacity for hatred, in varying degrees. Nobody, surely, likes to be hated, in whatever degree. Indeed as a nation we have made a kind of cult out of a craving to be "liked" and we are puzzled and hurt when we find that we are not.

A Negro makes this punishing discovery soon after birth; experience quickly teaches him that he is the despised minority in a white man's world. Should the white man, then, be so staggeringly surprised to discover a Negro's capacity to return the hate?

The difficulty for many of us whites, I expect, stems from a smug indifference to the Negro's real problems. We remark and marvel at his patience, his courage, the dignity of his self-discipline, forgetting that there is a limit to all of these because he, too, is human.

So the more the white nod approval of "gradualism" and "tokenism" in the Negro's struggle for first-class citizenship the more the black citizens, after not just one but several centuries of oppression, may loathe those terms. And from the loathing could come terrible, violent action as one vast reaction to ages of frustration and insult.

On Thanksgiving Day in Washington's spanking new multimillion-dollar stadium a non-segregated but predominantly white Catholic team, St. John's, won the District high school football championship by a score of 20-7 over Eastern High, whose players were all Negro. A fight on the field snapped tension in the stands and a ghastly melee ensued which could not be brushed off simply as team rivalry. In a moving letter published in the Washington Post, Simeon Booker, the Washington bureau chief of Ebony, Tan and Jet, Negro magazines, described his own anguish in witnessing "an explosion of hate [which] stemmed mostly from my own people."

"I saw the stadium," Booker wrote, "filled to a great extent by Negroes, suddenly terrified by roving herds of hoodlums who set upon whites, men, women and children, with the most profane language and physical mistreatment . . .

Booker criticized school authorities and police for failing to anticipate the ingredients of explosion but he put heavier responsibility on Washington's Negro leadership to tackle rowdyism and delinquency, not with excuses or statements, but planned corrective programs.

THE GAME'S VIOLENCE was the event I mentioned; in a sense the essay was more violent still—"A Letter From a Region in My Mind" by Negro Author James Baldwin in the New Yorker Magazine of Nov. 17.

But for citizens of open mind, hope and good will this is must reading. It is a true Philippic, plunging its blades of anger again and again into the hollow heart of hypocrisy, into the sallow liver of injustice of our so-called Christian society.

Baldwin's letter, drenched in bitterness, comes very near to being, nevertheless, a communique from the human soul. It may mark the nearest anyone has ever come to leading a white man intellectually into the furnace of torment that has been, and still is, a black man's fate.

The letter may first shock and enrage even the most thoughtful minds who then, however, are likely to wilt in shame and humility before the major truths that Baldwin insists on assembling. The largest truth of all is that time is running out on the opportunity for the amicable acceptance of the Negro as a full-fledged member of the human race. The black American is finally dislodging himself from "his place"—the ignominious pit of inferiority where the white American put him. He simply will not be put back.

The nation as a whole must accept his stubbornness as a blood transfusion to the ailing bodies of democracy and freedom and it must come to accept it quickly, while there is still time.

Labor News Conference:

Bias in Hospitals Called Factor In Inferior Negro Health Level

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION by hospitals against Negro patients and doctors is among the reasons Negroes have a health level "vastly inferior" to that of whites, an AFL-CIO representative asserted in a network radio interview.

Lisbeth Bamberger, assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Social Security, noted that "nearly three times as many Negroes as whites die of tuberculosis" and "a Negro infant is twice as likely to die before reaching his first birthday as a white infant."

"This is not something that we can continue to tolerate," she declared on Labor News Conference, weekly public service program of the AFL-CIO over the Mutual Broadcasting System. She was interviewed by Edward Peeks of the Afro-American Newspapers and Michael O'Neill of the New York Daily News.

As an example of discrimination that has contributed to the "appalling" health level of Negroes, Miss Bamberger cited limitations imposed by a number of Chicago hospitals on admissions of Negro patients and on staff appointments of Negro physicians.

At its last meeting, the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted $5,000 to aid nine Negro doctors in Chicago in their anti-trust suit to force the hospitals to abolish these restrictions.

These practices are by no means confined to Chicago, but constitute a nationwide problem, Miss Bamberger observed, explaining that the AFL-CIO is concerned lest they "erode, if not destroy" the value of negotiated health insurance protection for Negro union members and their families. The federation's concern arises, too, she noted, from its interest in improving the "quality" of medical care available to all.

Miss Bamberger said she knew of no action by the American Medical Association to combat such discrimination since the early 1950's when it asked its local affiliates to admit Negro physicians.

BUT IN THE LIGHT of its frequent expressions of concern over the quality of medical care and for free choice of physicians, she added, the AMA "can't help but get into this field and take action to wipe out discrimination," as the American Public Health Association and the Federal Hospital Council have done.

As for the role of the federal government, she noted that the Hill-Burton Act, which provides federal aid for hospital construction, permits hospitals to receive such aid if they give assurance that there is no discrimination or that they have provided separate but equal facilities.

The latter provision she described as "a real anachronism since the Supreme Court decision in 1954 on education" and predicted that the Administration would press for its elimination in the forthcoming Congress.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

GOV. ROCKEFELLER'S speech to the National Association of Manufacturers, charging that the Kennedy Administration has failed to stimulate the economy sufficiently, was easily identified as the opening gun of his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination.

The speech, declaring the Administration's goals of economic growth were sound but that the achievement was lacking, coincided with the Labor Dept.'s monthly report on employment and unemployment, revealing that joblessness jumped to a 5.8 percent rate in November.

It also came as the Conservative Party in New York State—an outfit devoted primarily to arguing that Rockefeller is "too liberal" and is just a "me, too" Republican—reported that it collected $167,000 in contributions for fielding its own state ticket in the recent elections and spent $199,000.

The Conservative Party's candidate for governor against Rockefeller, one David H. Jaquith, polled 118,000 votes. Calculated one way, this means it spent nearly $1.75 per head. But viewed another way, its total vote was more than sufficient to give the party a guaranteed place on the ticket in the 1964 elections. This is a factor that politicians will take into account in wondering whether New York's governor, if nominated, could carry his own state against Pres. Kennedy.

THE GOP NATIONAL CHAIRMAN, William E. Miller, issued statements after the election, asserting that the popular vote indicated a resurgence of Republican strength. But the party seems clearly headed for a donnybrook of undetermined proportions in a renewed battle between its two wings—eastern and Pacific Coast on the one hand, midwestern and southern conservatives on the other.

A band of conservatives met in Chicago a few days before the NAM parleys, and the common ground seemed to be hostility to Rockefeller. The participants were self-proclaimed bearers of the Republican true faith—anti-federal government, anti-civil rights, anti-labor.

The group was heavily weighted with southern Republican spokesmen. It included many who felt that Gen. Eisenhower was too liberal when he was in the White House. It included a few Birchers, some angry conservatives whose honest first choice for the GOP presidential nomination in 1964 is Sen. Goldwater, others who are disturbed even about Goldwater because the Arizona senator is now saying that Rockefeller is a lot more conservative, really, than people understand.

The GOP, in short, is heading into a period of turmoil as it seeks to ready itself and its party machinery for the 1964 test.

The national committee was scheduled to meet in Washington over the weekend, with critics from the right shooting angrily at Miller, the national chairman who is also a member of the House—and must be considered, because of his New York background, a Rockefeller man. The opposition took the form of assertions that the part-time chairman should be replaced by a full-time leader.

Also on the agenda, from the standpoint of conservative GOP leaders, was what they could do—if anything—about the Republican citizens' group set up last summer under influential financial auspices and announced with fanfare from Eisenhower's Gettysburg farm. The conservatives don't trust it; they suspect, darkly and perhaps correctly, that it is designed to block total conservative control of the Republican nominating convention two years hence.

Looking backward, it may have been a pity that the late Sen. Taft of Ohio did not have quite the strength to win the Republican nomination in 1952. He is the patron saint of the conservatives; his candidacy would have given the country a clear-cut test of the theory—the myth, the legend—that Democrats normally win elections only because the Republicans nominate "me, too" candidates.

Besides, Taft's record in the Senate showed that if elected he probably would not have moved so far to the conservative side as Eisenhower himself did in eight years in the White House on health care, school aid, labor issues and other matters of domestic policy.

How to Buy:

Year-End Tax Planning Offers Chance of Savings to Workers

By Sidney Margolius

BIG TAXPAYERS, and many of the more-energetic medium-size ones, now are busily doing their "year-end tax planning." Even though income taxes are not due for three months, these knowing ones are aware that what they do between now and the end of December will affect how much they must pay Uncle Sam on Apr. 15.

Wage-earners can do this too, but all too often are fatalistic about taxes. The tax money is taken from them before they even see the color of it. Moderate-income families are becoming more sophisticated. This is shown by the increased proportion of itemized returns filed in 1960. However, the majority still take the standard 10 percent deduction rather than itemizing deductions, indicating that most people do use the seductively easy short-returns.

What is year-end tax planning? Tax planning means arranging deductions before the end of the year to secure maximum potential tax saving. In the case of wage-earners, it chiefly means arranging to pay deductible obligations before the end of the year, or deciding to postpone these payments until the beginning of the new year, to assure maximum deductions.

How does tax planning work? Before the end of the year, figure out whether your potential deductions amount to more than 10 percent and so are worth itemizing, or if they are definitely less than 10 percent. If more, it will then be profitable to pay before the end of the year any obligations due around this time. But if your potential deductions do not add up to 10 percent, then it will pay to postpone payment of deductible obligations until after the beginning of the new year, so you can include them in next year's deductions. Thus, you would take the standard 10 percent allowance one year and itemize deductions the next year.

For instance, you can pay before the end of the year, or postpone until the beginning of the new year, such deductible expenses as church and charity contributions; debt payments on which interest is deductible; work expenses such as purchases or repairs of tools, technical periodicals, uniforms, insignia, and others. As one example, your property taxes may be due near the end of the year. Whether you pay on Dec. 31 or Jan. 1 determines if you can take the deduction this year or next.

The key to such planning is the fact that deductible expenditures are deductible on your tax return only in the calendar year they are paid, not necessarily the year they are incurred.

Even if you usually itemize deductions, pay special attention to your medical deduction. You can deduct only that portion of medical expense over 3 percent of your income. Thus, if your medical bills this year are approaching that figure, it will save taxes to pay any outstanding bills before year's end, so you can include them in this year's medical deduction. It even would pay to have needed work done before the end of the year, such as dental or optical attention you may be anticipating. But if your medical expense for 1962 does not approach 3 percent of your income, then the technique, and it is perfectly legal, is to postpone whatever payments or expenditures can be postponed until the beginning of the new year.

DOESN'T THIS require spare cash? Yes, and this, of course, is where the higher income taxpayers have the advantage. But it is worth doing even if you have to take out a short-term loan to tide you over.

For example, one family last year had relatively large medical bills. In December it still owed the doctor over $150. We suggested taking out a short-term cash loan from a credit union or commercial bank to help pay the remaining medical bills before the end of the year. For a few dollars of interest, this family saved almost $40 in taxes, considering both the state and federal taxes.

Cleveland—The Intl. Labor Press Association gave its special award for outstanding service to the labor press to Sidney Margolius for the excellence of his "How to Buy" column.

Margolius' "restraint and good judgment, his painstaking research and wide knowledge of marketing practices" were hailed in the award resolution. He has been a "major factor" in increasing the readership of labor publications and enhancing their value to the readers, the ILPA declared.

SEC. OF LABOR W. Willard Wirtz, left, was honored at a luncheon of the Federal Bar Association's Labor Law Committee held at the National Lawyers Club in Washington. Shown with Wirtz are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, a guest, and Bob Rosenthal, committee chairman.

'Revolution' Petered Out:

Income Groupings Unchanged Since '44

HERMAN P. MILLER, a special assistant in the Bureau of the Census, in a recent analysis of what has been happening on the income front during the past 30 years comes up with some startling facts.

There was a time, during the years of the New Deal, when the income gap was narrowed for all groups of Americans. The share of the highest fifth went down appreciably until 1944. The shares of the other four-fifths went up appreciably until that same year. Yet since then the shares have leveled out.

"The statistics," says Miller, "show no appreciable change in income share for nearly 20 years."

Even with high taxes for the upper income brackets, the 5 percent of wealthiest persons in the United States received 20 percent of the national income and managed to hang on to 18 percent after taxes despite their wails of "confiscatory taxes."

Miller further shows that the wage gap between Negroes and whites, while improved since the 1930s, has remained virtually stable during the past 10 years. The same is true of the gap between skilled and unskilled workers, with laborers and service workers actually making the smallest relative gain since 1950.

WHAT ALL THIS boils down to is that the "revolution" inaugurated by Pres. Roosevelt has pretty well petered out despite conservative business cries that the United States is on the road to ruin and socialism.

"The facts show that our 'social revolution' ended nearly 20 years ago," says Miller.

He believes that the "stability" of income, particularly during the past 10 years, can be related to the attitude of the Eisenhower Administration which was "committed to stability rather than change."

What seems the most crucial need of all is that the American people themselves no longer forget about the nation's one-fifth that is far from sharing in our much-vaunted standard of living, that the American people resolve once again "to share in the responsibility for something more" than their personal affairs. (PAI)

From Soup to Nonsense:

Life Is Indeed Hard for Ladies Not Case-Hardened to Retailing

By Jane Goodsell

THERE ARE CERTAIN THINGS I cannot buy because I'm too self-conscious to walk into a store and ask for them. And I'm not talking about "Sex and the Single Girl," although the fact that it's on all the best-seller lists must prove that most people aren't as easily embarrassed as I am. I mean, they must have worked up enough nerve to tell a sales clerk they wanted that book—which is more than I could do.

But that's beside the point. What bothers me now are more ordinary articles of merchandise—like hair rinse, for instance.

I can't bring myself to ask a drugstore clerk for a bottle of "Loving Care" because—well, because I'd feel silly.

As a matter of fact, I tried to do it just the other day. I loitered outside the store for several minutes, telling myself sternly that I was being ridiculous. The mere fact that I wanted a product that happened to be called "Loving Care" didn't necessarily prove that I was infatuated with my hair, and that my main concern in life was its tender, loving care.

But it was no use. We were smack in the middle of the Cuban crisis, and I couldn't bear the thought of sounding as though I was obsessed with my hair in the middle of a grave national emergency.

But "Loving Care" isn't the only thing that bothers me. I can't ask for makeup products that have coy, cunning names like "Cutie Pie" and "Angel Face" and "Patty Cake."

Call me stuffy if you will, but I'm a grown woman and I'd feel idiotic talking like Baby Snooks.

AND ANOTHER THING. I'm too much of an introvert to go along with the gay, mad, whimsical spirit that pervades lingerie departments these days. I can't stammer out a request for anything called "Naughty Nymph" or "Bunny Hug."

As for perfume counters, heavens to Betsy! The names of the products have such a smirking, leering, sexy air that I feel as though I've wandered by mistake into a key club. I simply don't have the poise to ask for "Nuit d'Amour" or "Moment of Passion." Is it humanly possible to ask for "My Sin" without giving the clerk a sly wink?

I guess I'm just a fuddy-duddy but I want merchandise with sensible, down-to-earth names that you can say out loud without blushing.

Income Differences Persistent in Canada

THE THEORY THAT DIFFERENCES between income groups are being wiped out by "affluence" in Canada doesn't hold up in the light of the statistics, according to a study by Russell Irvine, assistant research director for the New Democratic Party.

Detailed breakdowns of income for 1959, the last year for which they are available, demonstrate the fallacy of the belief of some people that "income is now very equitably distributed," he said.

In that year, Canada had a labor force of 6.2 million men and women. The figures, Irvine said, show that:

- More than 30 percent of the labor force—1.9 million people—did not have enough income to require the payment of taxes.
- The top 5 percent of taxpayers received 17 percent of Canada's total income before taxes.
- The lowest 5 percent of taxpayers received 1.5 percent of total income before taxes.
- The top 5 percent of taxpayers received 15 percent of total income after taxes.
- The lowest 5 percent received only little more than 1.5 percent of total income after taxes.
- The top 25 percent of taxpayers earned more than 43 percent of the total income after taxes.
- Less than $2,000 was earned by 15.5 percent of the taxpayers; less than $3,000 was earned by 36.5 percent.
- Only slightly more than 1 percent of taxpayers earned $15,000 or more, but they received more than 6 percent of the total after-tax income.

Voted by Convention:

ILPA to Undertake Consumer Aid Drive

Cleveland—A consumer information campaign will be a top priority for the expanding services program of the Intl. Labor Press Association for the next 12 months, the organization's annual convention decided here.

The consumer emphasis highlighted the ILPA sessions, which acted also to strengthen the code of ethics, expanded membership provisions to include radio and television programs sponsored by labor, and approved as a pilot project a seminar for national and international union editors.

The convention in addition authorized the ILPA executive council to initiate a long-range program of research into the effectiveness of the labor press at both the national and local levels.

The consumer information program was set out in a report by the convention's Program & Services Committee, adopted unanimously by the delegates, which said:

Increased Service Urged

"Recognizing the importance of the labor press in disseminating consumer information, the committee recommends that this service be increased on a year-round basis by all elements of the labor press. However, to dramatize this continuing campaign, the committee recommends a one-month concentration by the national labor press in distributing comprehensive information, to be coordinated, if possible, by the ILPA office."

The role labor papers can play in bringing consumer news to millions of men and women who read the labor press was emphasized in a series of workshops which discussed ways and means of presenting consumer news.

Participating were consumer experts such as Sidney Margolius, author of the widely syndicated column "How to Buy"; Mrs. Erma Angevine of the Cooperative News Service; Mrs. Mildred Brady of Consumers Union and Jon Lindley of the Senate Banking Committee.

Undersec. of Labor John F. Hennings, a former California labor editor, paid tribute to the crucial role played by organized labor in California in the re-election of Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, declaring the victory was largely the result of "labor's political efficiency during the campaign."

He said the labor press has a vital part to play in informing and educating union members to the importance of much social legislation that will form an important part of the Administration's program in the next two years.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller gave the convention a detailed analysis of the make-up of the 88th Congress, indicating a slight improvement over the 87th Congress.

If committee roadblocks can be solved, he said, there is a good chance to pass labor-supported legislation.

Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., of the Newspaper Guild made a strong plea to the convention for financial support of union papers and called for improvements in pay and working conditions of labor editors and their staffs.

The strengthening of the ILPA Code of Ethics came with adoption of a new provision reading: "Member publications shall not accept advertising which has no demonstrable value to the advertiser in his relation with the union members who read the paper."

Purpose of the strengthened code is to make a sharp distinction between legitimate advertising and the kind of "blind" and "complimentary" advertising that is characteristic of racket publications which pass themselves off as "labor" newspapers.

Constitution Amended

The ILPA constitution was amended to allow into membership persons writing and editing radio and television programs for unions or state and local bodies. The convention also approved ILPA sponsorship of a survey and analysis of the extent to which television and radio are being used as media in labor journalism.

ILPA Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester reported a growth in membership since the last convention to 355 member publications and outlined plans for a continuing drive to expand membership and services.

THE ILPA CONVENTION mapped a continuing program of service to the labor press at its Cleveland convention with emphasis in the coming year on consumer information. Committee reports setting out new policies on the code of ethics, a seminar project and new membership proposals received close attention and debate.

20 Union Publications Winners Of Awards in ILPA Competition

Cleveland—Top awards in the annual journalistic achievement competition of the Intl. Labor Press Association went to 20 union publications, three of which won first honors in more than one category.

Plaques were presented to the winning publications at the annual awards banquet held in connection with the ILPA convention here. Judges for the competition were newspapermen studying at Harvard under 1961-62 Nieman fellowships. Chairman of the group was John O. Emmerich of the McComb (Miss.) Enterprise-Journal.

In the category of editorial excellence, most coveted because of its overall scope, five publications were named for first place awards.

Those with newspaper formats included: The Advance, published by the Clothing Workers, adjudged best among international union papers; Service Union Reporter, Los Angeles, published by the California State Council of Building Service Employes, in the central body publications field; and 32 Events of Building Service Employes Local 32E, New York, among local union papers.

First award in editorial excellence for a magazine published by an international union went to the Electrical Workers' Journal of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Equity Magazine, published by Actors' Equity Association, won the top award among local union magazines.

Other Categories

First place awards in other categories went to these international publications:

UAW Solidarity, official organ of the Auto Workers, for best newspaper front page and best feature article; Canadian Labor, published by the Canadian Labor Congress, for the best magazine front page; Labor newspaper, weekly issued by 18 standard railway labor organizations, for best editorial; IUE News, published by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, for best original cartoon, and the IBEW's Electrical Workers Journal, which in addition to its editorial excellence award took first honors for the best regular special column, prepared by the union's Dept. of Research & Education.

Other winners among central body publications were the Michigan AFL-CIO News, for best newspaper front page; Valley Labor Citizen of Fresno, Calif., for best single editorial; the Canadian Packinghouse Worker, for best feature article; the Toledo Union Journal, for best regular special column, "This Week in City Council," by Managing Editor Bernard Stern; and the New Jersey Labor Herald, for best community project, an extended editorial campaign promoting the establishment of the new labor education center at Rutgers University.

In the classification for local union publications, Equity added the best cartoon award to its plaque for editorial excellence. Other winners included: Voice of 770, published by Retail Clerks Local 770 in Hollywood, Calif., for best newspaper front page; the Building Service Employes' 32B in New York, for best magazine front page; UAW Local 45's Eye Opener in Cleveland, for best single editorial; UAW Local 669's Cyclone in Paterson, N. J., for best feature article; The Record of Steelworkers Local 1011 in East Chicago, Ind., for the best regular special column, "The President's Report"; and Amplifier, published by IBEW Local 1048 in Indianapolis, for the best community project, a clothe-a-child campaign which has aided nearly 7,000 children in 14 years.

Rail Unions to Appeal 'Right-to-Fire' Decision

Five rail operating unions will ask the Supreme Court to reverse an appellate court decision that the nation's railroads possess a unilateral right to abolish long-established work rules and to dismiss thousands of employes.

Heads of the unions decided at a meeting in Washington, D. C., to seek immediate Supreme Court review of the case, bypassing the intermediate step of asking the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals to reconsider its decision.

Union attorneys will, however, ask the appellate court to continue a temporary order restraining the railroads from putting the changes into effect while the issue is still in the process of review.

The unions are fighting the case on the ground that the railroads did not exhaust collective bargaining procedures of the Railway Labor Act before acting unilaterally. They include the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen.

Spokesmen for the operating unions have emphasized that their goal in the court proceedings is to get management back to the bargaining table and continue efforts to negotiate an agreement. Earlier talks were broken off by the railroads after the unions refused to accept recommendations made by a presidential panel.

A front page editorial in Labor, weekly newspaper of the rail unions, charged that press accounts of the work rules dispute have repeated the "featherbedding" charges of the railroads against their employes.

On the same day that the appellate court in Chicago ruled against the unions, Labor pointed out, U.S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics Ewan Clague spoke to a rail management group, also in Chicago.

Clague quoted a new federal study showing that "output per man-hour" of railroad employes had increased 78 percent between 1947 and 1961, while the corresponding increase for the entire private economy was only a little over 50 percent.

Churchmen Urge Action On Job Lag, Poverty

Pittsburgh—Four hundred prominent Protestant churchmen—both lay and clergy—have issued a report voicing deep concern at "the frustrations, indignities and discouragements of involuntary unemployment" and calling for "boldness" in meeting social and economic problems.

Delegates to a conference called by the National Council of Churches declared that Christians must concern themselves with "the problems of how to expand employment opportunities" and with the need to distribute purchasing power "so that people will be able to buy the goods that the new machines produce."

At a National Study Conference on the Church and Economic Life, attended by 385 voting delegates, advised by some 100 consultants and observers from business, labor and government, speakers emphasized the need for churches to bring ethical principles to bear on contemporary problems.

The general report, adopted with only two dissenting votes, declared:

"The influence of the churches must therefore be especially exerted toward expansion of employment opportunities in the areas of our life which are alike most neglected and most important from the Christian viewpoint.

School Needs Cited

"Among these areas are: enough good school buildings and enough well-trained and well-paid teachers to fill our educational need; redevelopment of distressed rural areas; redevelopment into effective usefulness of slum areas, worn-out industrial areas, and dilapidated business blocks . . . more and better homes and environments where neighborhoods can flourish for people of all races with freedom of residence in city or suburb; expanded health services and facilities. . . ."

The Rev. Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations, said some 27 officers or staff members of AFL-CIO affiliates and the Religion & Labor Council participated.

Unions Asked to Give Creative Arts Support

New York—A museum official has called on trade unions to give a "fuller measure" of support to creative art and art education among their members and through support of exisiting community facilities.

Edward A. Bryant, associate curator of the Whitney Museum of American Art here, made the appeal in a "Labor Press Conference" interview sponsored on radio station WNYC by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Council of the Greater New York and Long Island area.

Bryant served as one of the judges at an art exhibition held by Local 1-S of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union. He observed that some unions have just begun to participate in the cultural life of their communities and lag far behind business organizations in helping to support creative artists through prizes, awards and art shows.

"As public service organizations, labor unions might well guide and stimulate the interest in art among working people, as well as those professionally involved," he declared.

First prize winners in the exhibition were Leonard Feuertado, oil painting; Henrietta Carter, water color; and Vincenza Pignanelli, graphics. Winner of the grand award with a landscape in oil was Elsie Elka Bolton.

4-H Told Labor's Goal Is 'Better Life' for All

Chicago—The American labor movement is a "people's lobby" working for "a better life with dignity and freedom for all Americans," an AFL-CIO spokesman told 1,500 delegates to the 41st National 4-H Congress here.

"In the preamble of the AFL-CIO Constitution," Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller observed, "we make it absolutely clear that the values we hold, the values we support, are the values of a democratic society, a society in which citizens are free to join together to work for the common good."

This, he said, is what leads many union members to take an active part in politics and community affairs, to fight for the oppressed, to teach the principles of democratic leadership and free trade unionism to workers in other countries.

Labor seeks its goals, Biemiller concluded, "not just for union members, but for all American citizens. If we practice what we preach, we can prove to people all over the world that democracy really works."

The congress brought together representatives of some 2.5 million young people, chiefly from rural areas, many of whom will one day be operating the nation's farms and providing leadership in the agricultural field.

The objectives of the clubs—expressed through the four Hs of their title, head, heart, hands and health—are emphasized in a wide variety of farming, homemaking and community service projects designed to foster character development and good citizenship.

"Just as 4-H programs contribute to good citizenship, so also the activities of labor union members strengthen our democratic society," Biemiller declared.

He cautioned the young 4-H members not to permit the stress on labor's economic functions to obscure "the essential characteristic of the labor movement—the dedication to human welfare and human dignity."

Equating these goals with the basic aims of the American political system as set forth in the U.S. Constitution, he declared that through collective action at the bargaining table, in the community and in the nation, "we are working for social justice, for a more fair and equitable distribution of the wealth created by our fantastically productive economic system."

"The American labor movement wants all people to benefit from economic growth and rising standards of living," Biemiller continued.

"We know that man does not live by bread alone, but we know also that without bread—without a basic minimum standard of living—hunger, poverty and disease can make the downtrodden, the exploited, fall easy prey to the false lures of that secular religion the modern world calls communism."

He stressed the labor movement's support for a strong national defense "to secure the blessings of liberty," but stressed, too, its conviction that "we must not adopt totalitarian methods in our fight against totalitarianism."

"We must protect and expand the personal freedom of every individual citizen," he declared. "That is why the labor movement fights for human dignity and full civil rights for all Americans. That is why we oppose any kind of discrimination or bigotry."

UAW Officers Fill Gosser Functions

Detroit—Duties normally assigned to Auto Workers Vice Pres. Richard T. Gosser have been assumed by other officers pending disposition of a federal indictment against him.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther will assume the directorship of the union's Skilled Trade Dept. and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey will have responsibility for other assignments, including the Die Casting Dept. and various manufacturing companies.

The UAW said these arrangements were made at the suggestion of Gosser and were mutually agreed upon at a meeting of the three officers. The union statement noted that in accordance with established due process, the UAW was obliged to consider Gosser innocent until and unless proved guilty.

Gosser was indicted in Toledo on charges of tampering with Internal Revenue Service records. He has denied them. The issues in dispute involve personal and not union matters.

Boy Scout Magazine Available in Braille

New Brunswick, N. J.—Boys' Life, the official publication of the Boy Scouts of America, is now available for blind boys in Braille.

The Braille edition was made possible through the cooperation of the Div. of the Blind at the Library of Congress and the Clovernook Press. A 12-month subscription may be ordered from the Clovernook Press at 6990 Hamilton Avenue, Cincinnati 31, O., at a cost of $5.

Bookbinders Give Nun Life Card

Chicago—Sister Mary Oswaldine, who supervises a non-profit bindery at the Felician College here, has been made an honorary life member of the Bookbinders.

A nun for 40 years, Sister Oswaldine worked at the trade before joining the Sisters of St. Felix and opened up her present shop in 1954. Using equipment donated by several firms, she binds and re-binds books and periodicals for the Felician College, Good Counsel High School and Mother of Good Counsel Convent.

Word of her operations reached Sec.-Treas. Wesley A. Taylor at international headquarters in Washington, and he asked Intl. Rep. Frank King of Chicago to investigate.

King and Pres. William Stasiak of Local 8 here, after the investigation, presented Sister Oswaldine with a life membership certificate and a membership card. Stasiak said she will be given a paid-up card in Local 8 on behalf of the international union every January.

Stasiak also presented Sister Oswaldine with a new Bible, which she said "I've been praying for." Sister Mary Innocenta, dean of the college, gave the local union president a crucifix which had been blessed by Pope John XXIII. In a note of thanks for "your kind thoughtfulness," she added:

"This wonderful gesture on your part in making Sister Oswaldine an honorary life-time member of the Intl. Brotherhood of Bookbinders has made her feel highly honored. In return, we hope and pray that the good Lord will bless you and your work most abundantly."

Sister Oswaldine's equipment is all operated by hand or foot. She mentioned that she was having trouble with one of her machines and King sent a member of Local 8 to fix it—a task that involved a search for a hard-to-find gear.

Special Insurance Extension Proposed

New York — Mayor Robert F. Wagner has asked Pres. Kennedy to include engineering and architectural services in the categories eligible for special insurance extended to exporters against losses resulting from political changes or upheavals in other nations.

Wagner said the omission of these groups from the programs of the Export-Import Bank and the Foreign Credit Insurance Association had been called to his attention by the AFL-CIO - affiliated Technical Engineers

Henderson Aftermath:

College Goal Won By Son of Strikers

Henderson, N. C.—A boy's dream of college, which never quite faded even during one of the South's longest and most bitter textile strikes, has come true for Ernest Barham, now a freshman at the University of North Carolina.

A scholarship and a loan—earned by high grades made despite the necessity of working afternoons, evenings and summers—made college possible for Ernest, a youngster who had to grow up fast after a union-busting employer forced workers to strike to preserve their union.

Both of Ernest's parents—Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Barham—were among the members of the Textile Workers Union of America who walked out in November of 1958, just two months after their son entered high school. Between them, they had a total of 43 years service at the Harriet-Henderson Mill.

Ernest's father, in poor health, was one of dozens of strikers jailed in a sweeping crackdown on picket line activities. He spent most of his term in the prison hospital—and has been bedridden much of the time since then. His mother, too, has had long periods of illness.

Understandably the youngster's grades—normally in the B plus to A range—took a sharp dip. But an understanding history teacher—Harold House, himself the son of a Harriet-Henderson striker—provided the encouragement which helped Ernest shake the slump and get back on the academic track.

In his senior year, Ernest won a trip to the United Nations for a speech entitled "Democracy Versus Communism as a Way of Life" and took a prize in a Veterans of Foreign Wars essay contest on "What Freedom Means to Me."

TWUA strike relief plus his own part-time earnings enabled Ernest to continue in high school. College still seemed out of the question until he was chosen for a scholarship—a $700 a year grant plus a $300 loan—named after the founder of a Henderson department store.

ERNEST BARHAM
Realizes College Goal

Additional help has come from what Ernest terms the "many wonderful union people" who have rejoiced in the youngster's success.

The son of parents who sacrificed heavily for the freedom to organize wrote in his prize-winning high school essay:

"Freedom to me is very dear . . . is not something which can be weighed or measured . . . consists of the small everyday happenings which most of us pay no attention to, but actually cherish very much . . . we open our arms and hearts to all who wish to share our freedom."

IUD Seminar Studies Labor's Role in World

The first of a series of three-week seminars emphasizing the total relationship between union objectives and broad world problems, sponsored by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., has opened at George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

The first class is composed of 16 staff representatives from nine AFL-CIO affiliates. Their instructors include AFL-CIO and IUD staff members; Robert Heilbroner, economics professor at the New School of Social Research; Prof. S. M. Miller, Syracuse University sociologist; and Paul Fisher, American University professor who is a consultant to the Agency for Intl. Development.

The participants spend six hours daily in seminar sessions, with two evening sessions each week, and receive special reading assignments in advance of the introduction of each new major topic. The subjects include the values and philosophy of the labor movement; national economic policy; economic and social change; social welfare; collective bargaining trends and directions; and political structure, issues and programs.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the program was intended to supplement the training international unions give staff representatives and to provide the "rounded and systematic view of labor's total economic, political and social program that is so necessary today."

The IUD said the program is geared "to discuss and reinforce the values and philosophy of the labor movement in American society; to present and discuss the important characteristics of the environment in which the labor movement functions; to give union staff a view of the most significant economic, social and political problems the labor movement faces; and to discuss the rationale for the labor movement's program for dealing with some of these problems."

Leather Goods Union Aide Dies

Miami Beach, Fla.—Vice Pres. Charles Edward Friss of the Leather Goods, Plastics & Novelty Workers died here of a cerebral hemorrhage on the eve of a meeting of the union's executive board. He was 51.

Funeral services were held in Hudson, N. Y., where, in 1937, he had led the strike against Kadin Bros., a leading handbag manufacturing concern, that had triggered the formation of the union's joint boards of New York, New England, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Friss, who had served as manager of the 15,000-member joint boards for the past 15 years, had just successfully wound up a campaign, marked by stormy bargaining sessions and strikes, to achieve a reduced workweek in the leather goods' industry.

Survivors include his wife, Columbia, an active co-workers in the historic Kadin Bros. strike, and a son, Charles, Jr.

Labor Again Asks U.S. Action on Jobs

Lag in Growth Rate Found in New Study

The AFL-CIO again has called for "vigorous" government action to create jobs, citing a new report which singles out the lag in economic growth as a main reason for persistent high-level unemployment.

Those who oppose government action to stimulate the economy, the AFL-CIO charged, have been promoting the idea that America's unemployment statistics are inflated and therefore the problem isn't as bad as it appears.

This argument was answered, the AFL-CIO noted, by a presidential study group which found the true U.S. jobless rates to be twice as great today as in the early 1950s and far higher than those in western Europe.

The problem of high-level U.S. unemployment was discussed in an analysis entitled "U.S. Unemployment Compared to Other Nations," prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and appearing in the December issue of the American Federationist.

"Even after the necessary adjustments were made [for different methods of counting]," the AFL-CIO economists pointed out, "the unemployment rate in the U.S. for 1960 was still five times as great as in Japan and West Germany; four times as great as in Sweden; three times as great as in France; over twice as great as in Britain."

The AFL-CIO said these comparisons grew out of research carried out by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics at the request of Pres. Kennedy's Committee to Appraise Employment and Unemployment Statistics. The study group was named in the wake of attacks on U.S. jobless statistics to evaluate the entire system of gathering labor force data. It found the figures "quite reliable," the AFL-CIO said.

"The results of that [BLS] research . . .," the Federationist article observed, "are that the higher rates of unemployment in the U.S. have been due not to differences in the method of counting the unemployed but to a lack of vigor in this nation's economy.

U.S. Economy "Sputtering"

"The economies of western Europe and Japan have been booming while the U.S. economy has been sputtering."

"Since the end of 1957—some 60 months—the rate of unemployment in the U.S. reported by BLS has fallen below 5 percent of the labor force in only one month," the Dept. of Research analysis pointed out. "During this five-year period, it has averaged twice as high as in the early 1950s when the unemployment rate was around 3 percent."

The AFL-CIO said that those who attacked these figures as inflated were, in so doing, avoiding the problem.

"Such continued high levels of unemployment, when all other economic indicators show improvement," it declared, "point strongly to the need for vigorous governmental action — for policies and programs which will stimulate the economy and create additional job opportunities."

The analysis said the study group's report dealt with criticism which tried to explain away the high U.S. jobless rate in various ways: that the U.S. counts youths and married women while most European countries do not, thus adding to this nation's jobless totals; that the U.S. has had an unusually large labor force growth, thus fattening jobless totals.

Comparison of Data

The study group compared the U.S. data with seven industrialized nations: Canada, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Sweden and West Germany.

Tracing the study group's comparisons of national rates of labor force growth, economic growth and increased productivity, the AFL-CIO said the U.S. was left with higher unemployment because "the U.S. economy has not been growing fast enough" to absorb new jobseekers and those displaced by automation.

"There has not been enough purchasing power where it would do the most good — that is, in the hands of the low income groups—to boost sales which, in turn, would create the need for still more production and therefore more jobs," the AFL-CIO article concluded.

New Nations Urged to Hasten Development of Printing Trades

Geneva—Fledgling nations of the world were urged to give special attention to the development of printing and allied trades for their importance in combatting illiteracy and in promoting "economic development in general."

An 18-nation technical meeting of labor, management and government experts in the field, sponsored by the Intl. Labor Organization, also urged the ILO's Governing Body to convene a meeting of specialists in vocational training and to survey the needs of developing countries in the printing industry.

In a series of resolutions, the tripartite group called for "an adequate share of capital investment" in the printing industries of the new countries. It suggested, too, that each country give careful consideration in the light of its economic and social conditions to the alternative of less expensive printing equipment, requiring more manual workers, as opposed to more modern equipment with fewer job opportunities.

"It is most important," the conference warned, "that the machines be chosen with a view to the availability of labor and the type of skilled labor being trained in the country."

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen and Pres. William J. Hall of the Photo Engravers were the U.S. worker representatives at the meeting.

DeAndrade a Vice Chairman

DeAndrade, who served as a vice chairman of the two-week conference, said its unanimously-adopted conclusions and recommendations "will be particularly beneficial to the developing countries."

Hall served on the committee dealing with health and safety hazards, a major item on the agenda.

The delegates called on the ILO to consider drafting an international agreement to ban the use of undiluted benzine as a solvent or cleaning fluid and to require specific labeling of containers of dangerous substances. All appropriate measures should be used to eliminate or reduce the risk involved in the use of strong acids or other harmful chemicals, the conference declared.

The group also stressed the need for adequate safety devices on all machinery and for fitting jobs to the physical and mental requirements and capabilities of workers. Accidents due to fatigue, it stated, could be reduced by avoiding "excessively long" hours of work.

U.S. government representatives were Horace Hart, director of the Commerce Dept.'s Printing & Publishing Industries Committee, and Edward Goshen, director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship Training.

Employer representatives were Walter McArdle, president of McArdle Printing Co., Washington, D. C., and J. Paul Whitehead, vice president of Hemingway Corp., Waterbury, Conn.

Welfare Plan Bonding Rules Effective Jan. 1

The Labor Dept. has announced that bonding regulations for administrators, officers and employes of welfare and pension benefit plans, published in the Federal Register for Nov. 30, will take effect Jan. 1, 1963.

Assistant Labor Sec. James J. Reynolds said the regulations were arrived at after study of comments received from labor sources, and others, on proposed plans published in the Federal Register last Sept. 1 and after consultation with the Secretary of Labor's Advisory Council on Employe Welfare & Pension Benefit Plans.

Copies of the regulations, adopted under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Office Force At Test Site Picks OEIU

Las Vegas—The Office Employes have won the first representation election resulting from a nationwide organizing drive among clerical employes at government missile sites.

At the Nevada test site and nuclear rocket development station, white collar employes of the Reynolds Electrical & Engineering Co., Inc., chose the OEIU as their bargaining agent, 350-45, in an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The union started organizing in mid-September among 556 employes scattered over a 15-county area of Nevada, Sec.-Treas. J. Howard Hicks said. Ballots were mailed to the NLRB's San Francisco regional office and counted there.

The OEIU has chartered Local 400 here. Its membership will grow substantially, Hicks said.

When the results were announced OEIU launched a second drive among another unit of 350 Reynolds clerical and technical workers. Similar drives are under way at Cape Canaveral, Fla.; New Orleans, La.; Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., and White Sands, N.M.

Green Life Dramatization 'TV Rarity'

The televised dramatization of the life of the late William Green was praised as "a TV rarity" in Variety, weekly newspaper of the entertainment field.

The reviewer liked the "uniqueness" of the script by Morton Wishengrad, "who used the adult Green to relate events from his childhood on screen while those events were enacted behind him." The review added:

"It was an all-the-way praiser, sketching in broad strokes the career of Green from his beginning as the coal-mining son of illiterate parents through his battle as a state senator to his years as a national labor leader.

As Green, Jeffrey Lynn brought to the character a convincing integrity and empathy, and Billy Quinn, as young Green who turned from hopes of a career as preacher to make the working man's cause his pulpit, was excellent, the review said, adding:

"Also excellent in brief sketches of notables were Sorrell Booke as AFL-founder Samuel Gompers; Sam Gray as David Dubinsky, and Barnard Hughes as FDR."

The biography of the long-time president of the former AFL, sponsored by the George Meany Foundation as one of the Eternal Light series presented by the Jewish Theological Seminary, was shown over most NBC stations Nov. 25. It was scheduled to be shown Dec. 9 in seven cities and on Dec. 16 can be seen in Cincinnati on WLW-TV, in Kansas City on WDAF-TV, and in San Francisco on KRON. Houston will carry the program Dec. 30.

ICFTU Assails Aden-Arab Union

Brussels — The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has expressed "dismay" at the British Parliament's approval for merger of the Aden colony with the South Arabian Federation despite the widespread opposition of the people of Aden.

ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu pointed out that there had been no response by the British government to demands, in which the ICFTU had joined, for a plebiscite in which the people could express their views.

He also recalled that Gen. Sec. Abdullah Alasnag of the Aden Trades Union Congress has been arrested for his opposition, and that other union members who have worked against merger have been jailed and flogged.

5.8% in November:

Jobless Rate Rises To Match '62 High

the sixth straight year of 5 percent or higher unemployment. The sole exception occurred in February 1960, when the jobless rate dipped to 4.8 percent.

For postwar Novembers, the lowest rate reached was 2.8 percent in November 1952; the November 1962 rate of 5.8 percent more than doubles this.

Wolfbein, looking back from the November report, commented: "What this shows is that while employment is remaining relatively high, you are not witnessing any impact on the unemployment side."

He said that "by and large the economy has held its ground very well" but there has been no thrust which would dent the unemployment problem.

On the employment side, the November report said seasonal cutbacks in outdoor activities were mainly responsible for total jobholders dropping by 900,000 to 68 million, still a high for the month.

Growth Slowed

The nation's labor force showed a continued failure to grow according to expectations. It totaled 74.5 million in November or about 600,000 above a year earlier. It is normally expected to grow about 1 or 1.2 million each year as the population increases and new job-seekers come of age.

The November report also listed 900,000 persons in the category of long-term unemployed—those out of work for 15 weeks or more. This was unchanged from October and, the report noted, "was about 300,000 below a year ago." Of the total, some 400,000 have been jobless for six months or longer.

The Labor Dept. said the number of long-term jobless had been declining steadily since July 1961 and "was at its lowest level since the summer of 1961."

The November 1962 total of 900,000 long-term jobless, however, is double the total of 437,000 long-term unemployed for November 1956—two recessions ago.

This November's total also is more than five times as large as the low of 162,000 long-term jobless for November 1952.

Job Losses Mount Among Experienced

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, commenting on continued high-level unemployment, said an "upward drift" in insured unemployment figures since May indicated "a slight deterioration" in the position of experienced workers. In almost all states, a worker must have been on a payroll to qualify for jobless benefits.

The AFL-CIO observed that the total of those drawing unemployment compensation rose from 1.6 million in May to about 1.9 million in November. It was noted that insured unemployment is currently running about 70,000 below a year ago, whereas in May it was some 700,000 under a year earlier.

CHICAGO JANITORS' UNION will erect this $1.5 million health center building in West Side medical district and name it in tribute to the late Olivia "Peg" Bautsch, secretary-treasurer of Janitors' Local 25 when she died 10 years ago and pioneer champion of union-operated health centers. Financing will be from union health and welfare fund, and the center will house medical care facilities for 12,500 members of three Building Service Employes unions. It will have an outpatient clinic, foot care clinic, physical therapy unit, union eye care center, non-profit pharmacy and pediatrics section.

Chicago Janitors Local To Build Health Center

Chicago—Janitors Local 25 of the Building Service Employes has announced plans for a $1.5 million health center where 12,500 members of three BSEIU unions can go for comprehensive medical care.

The center, BSEIU said, will provide prepaid, comprehensive care on a group practice basis. When it opens next September, it will have an outpatient clinic with 33,000 square feet of space, replacing the 5,500 square feet of space that has been rented in downtown Chicago since 1955.

Local 25 Pres. Thomas J. Burke announced that the new building will be named in memory of the late Olivia "Peg" Bautsch, former secretary-treasurer of the janitors' union and a pioneer supporter of union-operated health centers in Illinois. She died in 1952.

Trustees of the Local 25 health and welfare fund have approved plans for the center prepared by Burgess, Stevens & Associates. The new building will be owned by the fund and will be leased to Union Health Service, Inc., a non-profit operating corporation. The center is financed by employer contributions to funds administered by employer-union trustees. Hospitalization is provided with part of the contributions.

The first floor will house departments of internal medicine, X-ray, laboratories, general surgery, a foot care clinic, and administrative offices. A complete physical therapy unit will be assigned to the second floor, along with the Union Eye Care Center.

The new center will have a non-profit pharmacy, a pediatrics section for treatment of children, a playroom and a social service department.

The center operates under a state law enacted in 1951. Local 25 joined with employers to organize Union Health Service as a non-profit corporation and received the first charter under the law Dec. 1, 1952. It received its first patient in 1955.

All health services are under supervision of a medical director and a professional advisory committee. The corporation directors include labor, management, and medical personnel. At present 29 doctors representing all the major specialties see patients in downtown quarters.

Lockout by Newspapers Ruled Legal

Publishers of 10 New York metropolitan area newspapers were within their rights in 1961 when they agreed to suspend operation on all dailies when one was threatened by an unauthorized work stoppage, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

Voting 5-0 to reverse a decision Apr. 19 by Trial Examiner Charles W. Schneider, the board dismissed a complaint based on charges against the Publishers' Association of New York City brought by Mailers Union No. 6 of the Typographical Union, and later by the unaffiliated Newspaper & Mail Deliverers' Union.

The two unions had accused the publishers' association of unlawfully locking out workers twice in 1961 and of threatening lockouts on various dates from January to May 1961.

The NLRB said the pact was a "defensive measure" by the publishers, designed to prevent union workers from "committing repeated contract violations." The five members agreed that the stoppages were not the ordinary "wildcat" kind and that, under the specific circumstances in New York at the time, the lockout agreement was not a law violation because it was limited to contract violations and was "selectively and carefully applied."

The board said the agreement was in essence "not an offensive weapon . . . to punish or lessen the legitimate effectiveness of the unions, but rather a defensive measure utilized to combat unauthorized work stoppages."

Its success showed, the board held, that "an ounce of prevention" proved its worth as "a pound of cure."

Vocational Training Expansion Proposed

The current federal spending level of $79 million should be raised to at least $400 million for the 1964 fiscal year, the panelists said. They also recommended a rise in the $500 million a year currently being spent by local and state governments for vocational training programs and facilities.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the Standing Committee on Education and president of the Plumbers & Pipefitters, served on the panel, which was headed by Chicago School Superintendent Benjamin C. Willis. Another panelist was Charles E. Odell, director of the Retired & Older Workers Dept. of the Auto Workers.

In its report, the advisory panel described vocational education as a "sound investment" and commented:

"Ample data indicate that graduates of high school vocational education programs are far less likely to be unemployed than other high school graduates, that vocational education graduates do in fact work in the occupations for which they were prepared and that vocational education increases their subsequent earnings."

At the same time, the panel found that vocational education "is not available in enough high schools" and the choice of training available is extremely limited.

In addition to increased vocational education, the panel said "apprentice and journeymen training opportunities should be expanded by mutual action of employers and unions."

Declaring the federal government must continue to work with states and local communities to develop and improve skills, the panel urged that additional federal and state support be provided for vocational education of:

- High school youth who are preparing to enter the labor market.
- Youth with special needs who have academic, socio-economic, or other handicaps that prevent them from succeeding in regular vocational education programs.
- Youth and adults who have completed or left high school and are full-time students preparing to enter the labor market.

APPOINTMENT of Pres. Charles M. Crooks of the Masters, Mates & Pilots to the academic advisory board of the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, N. Y., has been announced by Sec. of Commerce Luther Hodges. Crooks is the first sea labor representative ever named to the committee.

Millard to Head Drive for College

Toronto, Ont.—Charles H. Millard, former Canadian national director of the Steelworkers, has been named head of a committee which will seek $50,000 as Ontario's share of the $180,000 needed to launch the planned Labor College of Canada.

The college is fostered by the Canadian Labor Congress, McGill University and the University of Montreal, and is scheduled to admit its first students, for seven-week courses, next summer.

Millard, who also is a former organization director for the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, said the first gift of $50, came from the Canadian Council of the Newspaper Guild.

Oklahoma 'Work' Foes Uncover New Frauds

Oklahoma City—Additional evidence of "fraudulent signatures on petitions to put a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment on the ballot in Oklahoma has been presented at a hearing here.

Attorneys for a citizens' group contesting the "right-to-work" petitions reported to Sec. of State William N. Christian that they found 8,285 invalid signatures in the latest group of 15,000 names.

To date, more than one-third of the 145,000 signatures checked by "right-to-work" foes have been challenged. In order to keep the issue off the ballot, nearly 80,000 of the 213,000 signatures filed must be invalidated.

Christian set Dec. 17 for a further hearing. If additional time is necessary to complete the signature checks, the issue will be before a new Republican administration which takes office Jan. 2. Gov.-Elect Henry Bellmon said during his campaign that he will promptly call a special election if the petitions are certified to him as "proper."

The National Council for Industrial Peace reported that the checks thus far completed show that "thousands" of persons who signed the petitions are not registered voters, many names were duplicated and "in one instance, handwriting experts testified that one entire petition sheet containing 35 names had been signed by a single person."

The petition drive was launched after the last session of the legislature killed all "right-to-work" proposals. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Committee for Voluntary Unionism, set up to seek enactment of additional state laws forbidding the union shop, met in Oklahoma City last winter to help launch the signature drive.

Boeing Aircraft Workers Vote 74% for Union Shop

Overtime Up, No Dent In Jobless

By Robert B. Cooney

The Labor Dept.'s detailed job report for November has revealed a continuing pattern of full workweeks and overtime pay for most employed workers, especially in the auto industry, while the ranks of the jobless remain undented.

A near-record factory workweek and high-level overtime indicate employers are continuing to boost production by increasing hours rather than hiring new workers, the Labor Dept. said. As a result, average hourly pay hit a November record high of $2.41 an hour.

The report showed the factory production workweek rose by 18 minutes to 40.4 hours instead of showing an expected drop of 12 minutes. This was the highest for the month since 1955 except for November 1961, it was noted.

The factory production worker averaged 2.9 hours of overtime, up by 6 minutes from October. Overtime in the auto industry was "especially heavy," it was noted, averaging nearly 5 hours per week.

On the other side of the picture, unemployment—as a summary report showed a week ago—rose more than seasonally by 500,000 to a total of 3.8 million. This caused the key seasonally adjusted rate to swing upward to 5.8 percent from October's 5.5 percent.

Influx of Teen-Agers

The Labor Dept. then attributed the extra-seasonal jobless rise to the entrance into the job market of about 150,000 teen-agers, most of them male and without work experience. Investigation showed, the department now reports, that 55 percent of the November rise in teen-age joblessness was accounted for by full-time students actively seeking work.

The detailed report for November disclosed these additional developments on the unemployment side of the picture:

- The number of non-farm workers on part-time for economic reasons rose seasonally by 200,000 to 2.4 million; this total was about the same as a year ago.
- Initial claims for unemployment compensation totaled 343,400 for the week ended Dec. 1, up 11 percent over the preceding week and 1.1 percent below a year earlier; the Labor Dept. said this rise reflected layoffs in apparel and steel and curtailed outdoor work.
- The long-term unemployed—

CHILDREN OF STRIKING refinery workers in Trenton, Mich., outside Detroit, rally around a union-planted Christmas tree in front of Mobil refinery operating with supervisors and strikebreakers and rehearse songs for Yule season they may have to spend on the picket line.

Christmas Story 1962 Told On Oil Refinery Picket Lines

By Eugene A. Kelly

Christmas lights twinkle softly, and the sound of carols drifts across a snow-covered landscape to three men on an oil refinery picket line, painfully pondering the questions that always confront a family man on strike for his economic life:

What will you tell the kids when they ask, "Daddy, will Santa bring me anything this Christmas?" And how shall you answer your wife when she says: "Are you going to take the company's offer and go back to work?"

The three strikers, and 7,000 others like them, have been waging their life-and-death struggle with two of the biggest of the oil giants—Shell Oil and Mobil Oil—in the Detroit area and St. Louis, in Hammond, Ind., in Houston, Tex., and New Orleans, La., in Wood River and Alton, Ill. It involves members of more than a dozen AFL-CIO unions.

The walkouts started on different dates, from June 27 to Aug. 19, at the scattered locations, but all have the same cause. It is management insistence on stripping union contracts of protection against arbitrary action by the employer, a management drive to write in clauses giving the employer more leeway in exercising what the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has called "management rights."

The first storms of the winter had just scoured the picket lines with snow and a punishing wind when this reporter made the rounds in three midwest locations.

Strikers Courageous as Ever

The story was the same everywhere—union men and women are as courageous as ever, and as determined to preserve their rights against united and powerful managements, but they need help—and they need it fast—to keep their spirits up for Christmas and the days ahead.

At Trenton, Mich., outside Detroit, I marveled at the spunk of strikers' wives, marching with two dozen children in front of a Christmas tree decorated with oil cans and carrying signs saying, "My daddy wants his vacation pay for Christmas."

Inside the Mobil Oil refinery, guards and supervisors went about their business of keeping production going, though in reduced volume, with some help from strikebreakers. Housed in Pullman cars on a siding inside the plant, the management men have stayed inside, working 12 to 15 hours a day,

IAM, UAW Victorious In Balloting

By David L. Perlman

Seattle—Boeing Aircraft workers have voted overwhelmingly in a secret ballot election to ask a presidential panel to recommend a union shop in new contracts with the Machinists and the Auto Workers.

The advisory vote, conducted by the National Labor Relations Board at Boeing plants in all states which do not have so-called "right-to-work" laws, piled up a margin of nearly 3-1 for the union shop proposal.

At installations represented by the Machinists, including the giant home plant in Seattle, the vote for a union shop was 21,879 to 7,752.

Pennsylvania and Delaware employes of the company's Vertol Division, represented by the UAW, voted 2,506 to 769 for a union shop.

Vote Open to All

Both elections were open to all employes in the bargaining unit—including non-members of the two unions. The results are not binding on the company, but are expected to result in a recommendation from the panel that Boeing agree to a union shop clause.

IAM Vice Pres. Harold J. Gibson, himself a former Boeing worker, hailed the result as "a decisive victory for unionism." He said:

"The presidential board asked for an expression of opinion by Boeing employes, and the employes clearly stated their faith in their union organization. We are looking forward to the panel report and to sitting down with the company and negotiating a strong contract that would give employes the union wages, job security and improved working

Meany Asks UN to Act On Hungarian Freedom

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called on the United Nations General Assembly to "forcefully reaffirm its objectives on Hungary" as an action "most vital to the . . . very survival of the UN as a world organization for protecting the weak against the strong and promoting international harmony and human freedom."

Meany, twice a U.S. delegate to the United Nations, directed his appeal "especially to the delegations of the nations which have won their independence in recent years."

"Surely they realize that all peoples—in Europe as well as in Africa and Asia—are entitled to the right of self-determination," he said. "The heroism of the liberty-loving Hungarian people should be rewarded as was the courage of the Algerian people."

Meany, whose statement was in the form of a letter to the New York Times dated Dec. 7, said "full scale debate and action on the Hungarian problems by the General Assembly does not mean raking up dead issues or bringing the cold war into the United Nations . . . These issues can never be outdated, since they are at the very core of the most important aspirations and aims of the United Nations."

For six years, Meany noted, the UN has sought three objectives in Hungary—"withdrawal of Soviet forces from Hungary; free elections in Hungary under UN auspices; observance by the Hungarian authorities of fundamental human rights and freedoms."

"Chairman Khrushchev would be well-advised to support these moderate measures in order to demonstrate Soviet readiness to comply finally with UN decisions and to show its willingness to live in genuine peaceful coexistence with its neighbors," Meany concluded.

Damage Suits Upheld For Unfair Practices

By John Barry

Damage suits based on contract violations which are also unfair labor practices may be properly brought in state courts, the Supreme Court has ruled in an 8-1 decision rejecting the argument that the National Labor Relations Board has exclusive jurisdiction in such cases.

The ruling, regarded as a major addition to the growing body of judicial interpretations of the nation's labor laws, reversed the Michigan Supreme Court and ordered trial of a suit against the Detroit News seeking back pay for a group of Newspaper Guild members.

The suit was filed by Doyle Smith, on behalf of himself and 39 fellow maintenance department employes, who charged that the paper had discriminatorily denied them pay during a strike by another union. The group had the support of the Guild and was represented by AFL-CIO Associate Counsel Thomas E. Harris in proceedings before the Supreme Court.

The case grew out of a Stereotypers' strike against the Detroit newspapers in December 1955 and January 1956. The complaint charged that although the News suspended publication, it permitted

ILGWU Booklet Details 'Melting Pot' Experience

"As a melting pot of peoples of some 22 different nations the ILGWU has gathered a body of experience in the art of creating unity out of diversity that may be instructive for others in our society who are trying to create friendship out of friction."

That's the theme of a new 72-page booklet published by the Educational Dept. of the Ladies' Garment Workers entitled "Equal Opportunity, Union Made."

The effectively-illustrated publication traces the ILGWU's battles for human rights in the garment union, in the labor movement, in the community and the nation. It presents the programs and the policies worked out by the ILGWU as it faced up to the problems of a "melting pot" union.

The booklet is available from the ILGWU at 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Single copies are free. Write the Educational Dept. for bulk prices.

UAW to Press 'Big 3' For Profit Sharing Plan

Chicago—Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther has served notice on the industry's Big Three that 1964 negotiations will bring UAW proposals for profit sharing similar to the plan in effect at American Motors Corp., or its equivalent in "hard money."

Addressing some 700 delegates at a conference of the UAW Skilled Trades Dept., Reuther said that while it was too early to discuss 1964 proposals in detail, the union had never gone to the bargaining table "without letting the auto companies know our feelings."

"I want to say this particularly for the benefit of General Motors and Ford," he continued. "I'm telling them now that the idea of profit-sharing is not revolutionary.

"Every time we get a wage increase or improve our fringe benefits, we are sharing the profits. Every dollar we get is one dollar less in profits for them.

"These people [the auto companies] have to understand that there is now a new dimension to collective bargaining in the auto industry . . . represented by the 18 cents an hour produced by profit-sharing at American Motors."

Hourly Breakdown

The 18-cent figure is an hourly breakdown per worker of the $9.8 million in benefits received by the UAW's 27,000 members at American Motors in the first year of the "progress sharing" plan negotiated in 1961.

Two-thirds of the workers' share of AMC profits goes into pension and insurance benefits. The balance will provide an average of $120.45 in AMC stock for each worker in the bargaining unit. In addition to the "progress sharing" benefits, AMC workers received an average of 7 cents an hour in straight wage increases.

Had such a plan been in effect at General Motors Corp. last year, Reuther told the conference, the UAW's 320,000 members employed by the firm would have averaged $900 in profit sharing benefits — the equivalent of 45 cents an hour.

For the 120,000 production workers at Ford, he said, a similar plan would have meant an average of $733 in benefits, equal to 37 cents an hour.

The UAW president recalled that in 1961 the Big Three firms refused to go along with the profit sharing principle established earlier in the American Motors settlement, insisting instead that wage and fringe benefit improvements be spelled out specifically regardless of profits.

"Whether they give us the 'iffy' money of profit sharing in 1964 is their decision," Reuther declared. "But if they are not going to give us the 'iffy' money, then they are going to have to give us the 'hard' money, for that's the road we're going to travel."

He also told the conference that the UAW would demand "modernized" overtime payments and would work in the legislative halls as well as at the bargaining table to achieve them.

With many of the auto companies working their employes overtime during peak production periods to avoid hiring new workers, the premium rate for overtime should be changed from time and one-half to double time, Reuther asserted.

UAW Names 2 To Review Board

Detroit—George N. Leighton of Chicago, an attorney, and the Rev. Henry Hitt Crane, minister emeritus of the Central Methodist Church here, have accepted appointment to the Auto Workers' public review board, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther has announced.

They succeed Michigan Circuit Court Judge George Bowles, who resigned because of the press of other duties, and Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, who resigned on the advice of his physician.

Appointments are made by the UAW executive board from a list of nominees proposed by the review board itself, which was set up in 1957 to review union ethics and act on appeals of members.

Goldfinger To Direct Research Dept.

Nathaniel Goldfinger has been appointed director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research by Federation Pres. George Meany. Goldfinger succeeds Stanley Ruttenberg, who resigned effective Jan. 1 to become economic adviser to the secretary of labor.

Goldfinger has been assistant director of the department since 1958 and was formerly an AFL-CIO economist. He was assistant director of the former CIO Research Dept. at the time of merger and had earlier been research and education director for the United Paperworkers.

He is a graduate of the College of the City of New York and is a member of the American Economic Association and the Industrial Relations Research Association.

November Overtime Rises, No Dent Is Made in Jobless

those jobless 15 weeks or longer—totaled 866,000 or almost unchanged over the month; this was below the 1.1 million of November 1961 but double the total of 437,000 long-term jobless of November 1956 before the past two recessions.

• State insured unemployment totaled 1.7 million for the week ended Nov. 24, up 10 percent from the preceding week; the rate of 4.2 percent insured unemployed compared to 4.3 percent and 1.7 million for the same weeks a year ago.

• The number of jobless pay claimants who exhausted unemployment benefits rose by 1,900 during the week ended Dec. 1 to 14,300; these figures are confined to eight large states which report weekly

More Jobs in Major Areas

The Labor Dept. also reported, in a separate document on area labor market trends, that unemployment declined this autumn in most of the nation's 150 major job areas.

The total of major job areas with substantial unemployment—that is, 6 percent or more jobless—declined from 41 in October to 40 in November. This group totaled 60 a year ago and 32 in November 1959. Toledo, O., was the area reclassified, as it had benefitted from job gains in the auto industry.

The number of smaller areas with substantial unemployment rose by four to a total of 170 in November. This group totaled 201 a year ago and was down to 112 in November 1959.

Added to the list were La Grange, Ga., New Iberia, La. and Ontario and Salem, Ore.

Non-farm jobs totaled 56.2 million, down 100,00 from October as expected, the report said. The payroll changes "reflected seasonal curtailments of outdoor work and food processing as well as the holiday buildup in trade activity,"

A Labor Dept. spokesman said the job figures in manufacturing showed "continued strength in autos" and "continued weakness" in steel. In steel, it was pointed out, output has risen 400,000 tons a week since July, while employment has dropped by 21,000.

The primary metals sector—which includes steel—had a total of 1.1 million jobs in November, down 65,000 from a year earlier.

Average hourly earnings, the report continued, increased by a penny over the month to a record $2.41 in November. This rise, combined with longer hours, boosted weekly earnings to $97.36 a week.

Damage Suits Upheld Over Unfair Practices

employes in the editorial, advertising and business departments — who were not covered by union contract—to report for work and receive full pay. The paper refused to permit the unionized maintenance workers to report for duty, however, and denied them pay for the period of suspension, according to the complaint.

This, Smith and his fellow workers charged, was a violation of the Guild contract clause that "there shall be no discrimination against any employe because of his membership or activity in the Guild."

The Wayne County Circuit Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the allegation, if true, would amount to an unfair labor practice and was thus within the exclusive jurisdiction of the NLRB. The State Supreme Court later affirmed the ruling.

Opinion by White

The U. S. Supreme Court, however, in a majority opinion written by Justice Byron R. White, said the suit for breach of contract was properly brought even though the conduct alleged would also constitute an unfair labor practice.

The opinion cited several cases in which the Supreme Court had sustained the jurisdiction of the courts over suits for breach of contract in which it was strongly argued that the conduct involved was protected or barred by Taft-Hartley.

Role of Courts Cited

The NLRB's authority over unfair labor practices is not exclusive and does not destroy the jurisdiction of the courts in breach of contract suits, White's opinion said. Furthermore, the high court noted, the NLRB had filed a brief agreeing on that point.

"If, as respondent strongly urges, there are situations in which serious problems will arise from both the courts and the board having jurisdiction over acts which amount to an unfair labor practice, we shall face those cases when they arise," the court said. "This is not one of them, in our view . . ."

The court rejected the argument that it should apply its so-called Westinghouse rule that a union may not sue under Sec. 301 of the Taft-Hartley Act to enforce "uniquely personal" rights of employes.

The Westinghouse precedent had lost its "underpinnings" in subsequent decisions, the opinion observed, adding that the concept that all suits to vindicate individual rights under a contract should be excluded from the scope of Sec. 301 "has thus not survived."

"The rights of individual employes concerning rates of pay and conditions of employment are a major focus of the negotiation and administration of collective bargaining contracts," it went on.

"Individual claims lie at the heart of the grievance and arbitration machinery, are to a large degree inevitably intertwined with union interests and many times precipitate grave questions concerning the interpretation and enforceability of the collective bargaining contract on which they are based."

Would Stultify Congress

Not to permit suits under Sec. 301 to enforce such claims would "stultify the congressional policy of having the administration of collective bargaining contracts accomplished under a uniform body of federal substantive law."

Justice Hugo L. Black in his dissent said the decision "opens up a way to defeat the congressional plan . . . to expedite industrial peace."

"Instead," he said, "by permitting suits like this one to be filed, it is now not only possible but highly probable that unfair labor practice disputes will hang on like festering sores that grow worse and worse with the years."

The decision left unanswered a question whether Smith or his union was the proper party to bring the suit. Harris foresaw no difficulty on this point, however. He said attorneys followed Michigan practice in bringing suit in the name of the employe.

Meany to Help Review Foreign Aid Program

Pres. Kennedy has named AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to a nine-man bipartisan committee to undertake an immediate review of the foreign aid program.

The group, headed by Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Pres. Kennedy's representative in Berlin earlier this year and chairman of the Continental Can Co., will be called the Committee to Strengthen the Security of the Free World.

The White House announced that "at the President's request the committee will undertake an immediate review of our military and economic assistance to determine whether the level and distribution of these programs is contributing materially to the security of the United States and is directed to specific and attainable stability in the free world."

In addition to Clay and Meany, the committee included Robert A. Lovett, former secretary of defense; Prof. Edward S. Mason of Harvard University; Eugene R. Black, retiring president of the World Bank; Robert B. Anderson, former secretary of the treasury; L. F. McCollum, president of the Continental Oil Co.; Herman Phleger, former State Dept. legal adviser; Clifford Harden, chancellor of the University of Nebraska.

Fall River ABC Gets 23-Cent Pay Raise

Fall River, Mass.—A 23-cent wage increase, plus vacation and welfare improvements, has been negotiated by Local 20 of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers in a three-year contract with the Ann Dale Products Co. here. The agreement was ratified by the 140 union members at the plant.

Mrs. FDR 'Symbol of Best In U.S. Life'

Milwaukee — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was great because she was the symbol of the best in American life, Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security told a memorial meeting here.

"To her, there was no distinction of class," he said in a tribute to the widow of Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

To the wealthy and well-born, Cruikshank asserted, Mrs. Roosevelt "will ever be a reminder that there is no aristocracy except that of the inquiring, unprejudiced mind and the generous heart." He continued:

"She will ever remind us in labor that our strength and our greatness lie not in amassing greater treasuries or in the magnificence of the new temples of labor that now adorn our cities, but in that measure to which we can hold to the principles of our movement, to take up the battle for the underprivileged, to forward the cause of forgotten people, and to represent at the work-place and in the community and in the legislative halls the rightful cause of those who have no other voice."

Quebec Court Acts:

Employer Gets Jail For Firing Unionists

Montreal—Clement Alepin, a leading official of the Montreal lingerie manufacturing firm of J. Alepin Freres, was sentenced by Judge Roger Ouimet of the Quebec Court of Appeals to 32 days in jail for illegal firing of a shop union chairman and four other workers because they had joined the Ladies' Garment Workers.

The jail sentence was imposed after Ouimet upheld an earlier Sessions Court conviction of the firm in which the sentence involved only certain fines. The appellate court judge added the jail sentence for Alepin personally.

Alepin was released in $1,000 bail after a brief period in prison pending a new notice of appeal from Ouimet's decision.

The case is believed to be the first in Canada in which a prison sentence was imposed on an employer on conviction of violating Quebec's provincial labor law by firing employes for joining a lawful trade union.

The case went to Sessions Court 18 months ago when the ILGWU filed charges of intimidation of workers and illegal discharges for union membership.

Sessions Judge T. A. Fontaine found the company and Alepin guilty, imposing the usual fines, and the defendants took their appeal to Ouimet.

On the basis of the 494-page Sessions Court record, the appellate court concluded that the evidence established "the only reason for the dismissals" of Mrs. Therese Latour, shop chairman for the ILGWU, and four other union members "was the fact that Clement Alepin, personally and in his official capacity, was violently opposed to this union."

Mrs. Latour First Victim

The complaint grew from a series of incidents inside and outside the Alepin factory during an organizing campaign beginning in October 1960. About 20 workers who had joined the union were eventually dismissed, Mrs. Latour being the first target.

In upholding the lower court's finding Ouimet held that Alepin "unjustly and without lawful authority dismissed Mrs. Latour for the sole reason that she was a member of a lawful union, formed to advance the legitimate interests of its group and to protect them in the regulation of wages and working conditions, after having sought by intimidation and by threats of loss of her job to force her to abstain from joining the union."

Five prosecutions were made under the Summary Conviction Act and the maximum prison sentence is six months. It was the avowed object of the statute to make it an offense to "unlawfully refuse to employ a person, or to dismiss a person, for the sole reason that such person is a member of a lawful trade union . . . or to seek, by intimidation or threat, to compel an employe to abstain from belonging to such a trade union. . . ."

In finding there had been no error by the trial judge, the appellate court said it had to be considered that the criminal code section "was inserted to protect employes who are members of a lawful union and not for the protection of the employer."

Ouimet added:

"The law has the purpose of giving freedom to the workers to belong to a legitimate union without being subject to reprisals on the part of the employer who bears hostile sentiments towards the labor organization in question."

4 N.Y. Papers Struck, Owners Shut Down 5

New York—Publishers of New York City's nine major dailies imposed a city-wide newspaper blackout when the Typographical Union struck four of the papers and members of other craft unions and the Newspaper Guild refused to cross the ITU's picket lines.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, after conferring with both sides, said the dispute, which has idled some 20,000 workers, was "exceedingly serious" and that the parties were "very far apart." Wirtz left for a speaking engagement in Atlanta, saying that federal mediation efforts would continue, but that he had no plans to return himself.

(Meanwhile, Cleveland's two daily newspapers, the Plain Dealer and the Press & News, remained shut as Guild members refused to agree to a moratorium under which striking members of the ousted Teamsters had returned to work. The Teamsters were the first to walk out at the papers.

(The Guild, with its contract up for negotiations, observed the Teamsters' picket lines, then voted to strike, too. Craft union members, unlike the Teamsters, have continued their refusal to cross the Guild's lines.)

The ITU's "Big Six" local in New York struck the Daily News, Times, World-Telegram & Sun and the Journal-American seeking wage increases totalling $18.45 over two years, a 35-hour workweek plus other improvements.

The five other dailies promptly suspended publication voluntarily. They are the Herald Tribune, Mirror, Post, Long Island Star-Journal and the Long Island Press, which stopped its New York city edition only.

The ITU, like other craft unions, has a citywide contract with the papers as members of the Publishers Association. The employers have taken the position that a strike against one is a strike against all.

Their best offer to the printers prior to the walkout was an $8 average weekly increase over two years, similar to the recent settlements between the papers and the Guild after a brief strike.

All craft union contracts with the papers expired Nov. 31 and are now open for renegotiation. The Guild reached new agreements following expiration of the old ones a month earlier. The unions have formed an Officers Committee for Newspaper Unity to maintain liaison and close contact during the bargaining and strike period.

Wirtz Wins Dispute Over Local's Books

The U.S. District Court for New Jersey, enforcing a Labor Dept. subpoena, has given the department the right to take physical possession of the books and records of Hod Carriers Local 502 of Orange, N. J., while they are being examined, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has announced.

The local said it had no objection to examination of the books by the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, but wanted a representative present at all times, Wirtz reported.

Textile Wages In Japan Rise Sharply

A Japanese union spokesman has reported that wages of textile workers—before World War II among the lowest in the nation—are now "comparable to the average wages of other industries."

Kazuhiro Hama, research director of Japan's textile workers union, said textile wages are nearly 18 times the 1940 level, while living costs are less than four times as high. This, he said, has meant "a better living standard" for the workers.

Hama was one of three visiting Japanese labor leaders interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, As We See It, carried by the American Broadcasting Co. network. The others were Michikazu Karatani, secretary-general of the textile union and a representative of the Japanese trade union federation, and Chucei Shamada, president of a local union in the chemical branch of the industry.

The three noted that Japan's economy has been growing at a rapid rate as a result of technological developments and large investment in modernization.

"We as labor unionists have to strive to demand wage increases constantly as Japanese economic growth increases," Hama declared.

Union and management teams have been visiting the United States and Europe to study the different wage structures and wage levels, the visitors said. They reported that a team which visited Italy found workers there paid at about the same level as Japanese workers.

Abe Klein Dead; Editor for UIU

Philadelphia—Abe Klein, associate editor of the UIU Journal, official publication of the Upholsterers Intl. Union, died here after a long illness. He was 59.

Klein had held the editorial post since 1951 when a throat ailment forced him to leave the UIU field staff of which he had been a member since 1946. He had previously served as an organizer or field representative for the Ladies' Garment Workers, Textile Workers Union of America and Furniture Workers.

He is survived by his widow Mrs. Belle Klein, and two sons, William and Robert.

Machinists, UAW Win Boeing Union Shop Vote

conditions that they deserve and that are long overdue."

The 74 percent vote for the union shop—considerably above the majorities recorded in other union shop elections in the aerospace industry—was attributed in part to the fact that other provisions of the union's contracts with Boeing were still open at the time of the vote.

Thus workers who have been "free riders" in the past—enjoying union-won benefits without paying dues — were in the position of choosing between a vote which would strengthen the union bargaining position in negotiations, or weaken it.

President of Firm Protests

Union newspapers and handbills called for a "Yes" vote for the union shop as a vote for "higher wages and a stronger contract." After the result was announced, Boeing Pres. Lowell P. Mickelwait claimed that the vote should be disregarded because the unions "interjected the issues of wages, pensions and other benefits."

In earlier elections at other companies held after contracts had otherwise been completed, both the UAW and the IAM won majorities for a union shop, but less than the two-thirds required under the special agreements to put it into effect.

In the other major aerospace dispute still pending, IAM members at Lockheed Aircraft were barred by a Taft-Hartley Act injunction from striking to enforce their demand that they be permitted to vote on whether they want a union shop.

The company has refused to abide by a presidential panel recommendation for a union shop vote requiring two-thirds approval, and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz blamed Lockheed for the deadlock and accused management of "complete intransigence" on the issue.

The 31,000 IAM members at Lockheed struck for 36 hours and returned to work at Pres. Kennedy's request after he set in motion Taft-Hartley procedures to restore production in the defense industry.

Presidential panel recommendations in the Boeing dispute are due Jan. 5. The existing contract, scheduled to expire last Sept. 15, has been extended to Jan. 15.

ACWA Negotiates Raise for 16,000

New York—A new three-year contract benefiting 16,000 laundry workers has been negotiated by the Laundry Workers Joint Board representing 12 locals affiliated with the Clothing Workers.

The settlement came on the eve of contract expiration and a "no contract, no work" declaration by the joint board, whose secretary hailed the agreement as "a major step forward for laundry workers." The pact was reached with the aid of the New York State Mediation Board.

The proposed settlement, subject to approval in a membership referendum provides wage hikes of 17.5 to 20 cents an hour over a three-year period for production workers; $6 to $8 a week more for most drivers; a $9 increase for office workers with minimums going up $15 a week; a boost of 25 cents an hour for engineers, mechanics and maintenance men.

Labor Journalism Offered by Mail

Indianapolis—A correspondence course in labor journalism, intended for editors, prospective editors and staff members of labor papers, is being offered by the Indiana University Bureau of Industrial & Labor Services.

The course will open with a workshop Jan. 4 and 5 at the University Medical Center here, and will end with a June 8 session, also at the Medical Center.

The 10 correspondence course lessons will be prepared by each student at the rate of one every other week. Each will be returned promptly by the instructor with appropriate comment, corrections and suggestions.

Topics to be covered include in-plant and union news coverage; handling of labor news from outside the plant; the editor's staff and the business problems of a union paper; principles of effective news writing; news story leads; copyreading and headlines; principles of layout; editorials and features, and news releases.

In the Midst of Plenty . . .

THE GOVERNMENT'S latest unemployment report points up the paradox in the American economy at the end of 1962—joblessness in the midst of plenty; frustrated, fear-ridden men and women grimly hunting work while holiday sales zoom to new record highs.

In November six out of every 100 workers were looking for work and many more were trying to stretch two or three days a week of employment into a full paycheck.

In the same month, according to the Labor Dept., the factory workweek rose as did overtime earnings, guaranteeing a more prosperous Christmas to those fortunate enough to be employed while the jobless would have to make do with unemployment compensation or welfare checks.

The most important fact about unemployment this year is its pernicious and chronic nature. There has been only slight movement from the average 5.6 percent of the labor force unemployed through the first 11 months of the year, and December will not produce any important change from this picture.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has come up with a number of explanations for month-to-month dips or gains in the unemployment rate, ranging from movements of women and teen-agers in and out of the labor force to the effect of holidays. But from all the explanations one stark fact emerges—there has been no improvement.

Nearly all economists agree that the Administration's target of a 5 percent unemployment rate by the end of 1962 and a 4 percent rate by mid-1963 cannot be realized at the present rate of economic activity and growth.

The evidence is complete that government policies to stimulate the economy—a tax cut for lower and middle income brackets, increased government appropriations for vitally needed public programs, a fiscal policy that will encourage growth—can cut the unemployment rate. If these are combined with the drive for a shorter workweek and other measures advocated by the trade union movement, the paradox of joblessness in the midst of plenty can be wiped out and the nation's long-term growth and prosperity assured.

Benevolent Boss

THE WHITE COLLAR WORKER has traditionally clung to an identification with management, trusting implicitly that a beneficent employer would look after his welfare. Well, that one has joined a number of other rosy hopes in the file labeled "mythology."

The New York Times reported the other day that the Walworth Co., a valve manufacturing concern, has moved its headquarters from New York City to Oakland, Calif. None of the 220 employes was brought West and half the jobs were taken over by a computer.

More pertinent, perhaps, were the comments of W. Frederick Spence, chairman of the board, who said the move to Oakland was decided upon a year ago but nothing was said "because you have to have people around an office and if they'd known we were going to move, they'd have gone out and found other jobs."

And then there were the employes themselves. Said Spence: "They used to have trouble with the trains. Then they had to have a coffee break of about 30 minutes and by 11:30 they were making plans for lunch, and most of them were back by 2 p.m. Then they had to leave to catch trains by 4:30."

So much for the enlightened employer and the benevolent boss!

'I'd Rather Have a Job'

Stride Toward Cherished Ideal:

Equal Opportunity for Jobs Standard Practice of Plumbers

The following is excerpted from the report of Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the United Association of Plumbers & Pipefitters appearing in the December issue of the union's publication and entitled "Equal Employment Opportunity and United Association Tradition."

By Peter T. Schoemann

THERE IS HARDLY any secret about the fact that the United Association, along with certain other craft unions, particularly in the construction and railroad industries, has been a special target of criticism on the score of racial discrimination. It is not my purpose here to discuss whether or not this criticism may be justified by the attitudes and policies prevailing in certain of our affiliated local unions.

My more than 48 years of membership in this organization, most of it as a local union or international union officer, have convinced me that the overwhelming majority of United Association members are free of any intention to treat their fellow man unfairly, in either his employment opportunity or his rights as a union member, for reasons of race, creed, color or national origin. I am also convinced that our approximately 250,000 members, taken as a group, will come out far better on this score than the American population as a whole.

Just to keep the record straight, there is no question concerning race or color on our standard application either for membership or apprentice training. There is no way we can tell from our records in the General Office the race or color of a single member. We do have Negro members. We have had them for a long time. The local unions where they hold their membership have been remarkably free of unpleasant racial incidents. Our organization is nearly 75 years old, and the color bar, if it ever existed at all, was broken long ago so far as our international union is concerned.

Your general officers therefore felt that a refusal to join other labor organizations in pledging support of the President's Committee would somehow imply that discrimination was currently practiced against those United Association members who are not of the white race, which is most decidedly not the case.

Our most pressing motive, however, was simply an earnest desire that the United Association make greater strides toward a fuller realization of its own long-standing traditions and its own most cherished ideals.

We are concerned about being skilled craftsmen and about training more skilled craftsmen. We are not concerned about the race, creed, color or national origin of any skilled craftsman.

We are interested in protecting our craft jurisdiction against any and every group which is not properly qualified to perform the work of our trade. We are not interested in protecting anything against any racial or religious group.

We want to secure, for ourselves and our children, "a position in society to which, as wealth producers and citizens, we are justly entitled." We are not in business to achieve any position in society as white men, or as members of any particular religious, racial or ethnic group. The only title we assert to any position in society is that we are "wealth producers and citizens."

WE DID NOT SIGN UP for a flagwaving campaign about civil rights. It is the view of your general officers that we should set about the implementation of the new program quietly, without fuss and fury, and without a search for publicity.

We did not make any pledge to take in unqualified persons of color for the sake of proving a point. Racism in reverse is racism indeed, and discrimination indeed.

An important point must be made here. We require certain qualifications in applicants for apprenticeship; and we mean to go right on requiring them. Some of these qualifications are good moral character, aptitudes which promise success in a skilled trade, a certain manual dexterity, and schooling, for which our standard is a high school diploma.

To presume that a boy lacks any one of these qualifications by reason of his race or religion is discrimination, and we have said we will not discriminate. It is not our job, however, to insure that every boy who wants to be a plumber or pipefitter shall come to us with the qualifications we require.

Our concern is this only: that there should be no discrimination and no injustice practiced against any applicant for apprenticeship training or for membership in the United Association, or against any fellow member, in his capacity as member or as employe, by reason of his race, creed, color or national origin. True liberty, true equality, true justice in the union hall and on the job—this is what we signed up for.

Morgan Says:

Quality of Sophistication Seen Spurring Renascence of Movies

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

HOLLYWOOD, as everyone knows who has been there recently, ain't what she used to be. The film capital is a subdued place and although a recent dispatch in the Wall Street Journal indicated a hopeful if modest reversal of the trend to make American movies abroad, that fixture of American life, the movie palace, has been shaken to its foundations and Hollywood clearly shows marks of the disturbance. Her once fabulously profitable theatrical makeup betrays serious economic cracks.

Morgan

Television did this but it takes some key figures to make the full weight of the story sink in. By midsummer of 1947 only eight cities in the United States had television stations and the number of sets nationwide totaled not much more than a measly 50,000 and a large proportion of these were in bars. But by 1960, only 13 years later, 45 million American homes had television and by 1962, 90 percent were equipped with the maddening magic of video.

But now let's look at what has happened to the movies. In 1947, movie attendance was about 75 million a week; it dropped to a low of 46 million in 1955. There were roughly 18,000 movie houses at the end of World War II, down to some 12,000 today, although you have to add the drive-in theatres, of which there are a little less than 5,000. There were 332 pictures made by American companies in 1952, of which only 10 percent were shot wholly or in part outside Hollywood; last year American companies produced only 200 films, approximately one-fourth of them made abroad.

The encouraging thing, however, is that quality is coming back to the movies. This is by no means solely due to the competition with TV. Partly, one would like to think, it is due to a broader, deeper sophistication, an appreciation of the motion picture more as an art form, not just as a device for the sale of popcorn. This sophistication could not have come about if the U.S. Supreme Court in the '50s had not reversed a decision of 1915 which held that the movies were nothing more than a form of commercial entertainment and not entitled to guarantees of free speech and free press under the 1st and 14th Amendments.

THAT 1915 DECISION encouraged the busybody activities of censorship boards, but in the celebrated case of The Miracle in 1952 the Supreme Court unanimously held that the cinema is a means of communication, entitled to constitutional guarantees. That same year, the court in another case decided that a film could not be banned simply because it might offend the prejudices of a community.

But as films become more "realistic" and deal with more controversial subjects, some outraged individuals and groups insist we need more, not less, censorship. The problem has recently been put in admirably balanced perspective by Bosley Crowther, for more than 20 years the film critic of the New York Times, in a handy little pamphlet entitled Movies and Censorship, put out by the Public Affairs Committee, a nonprofit organization devoted to public enlightenment on touchy issues.

Crowther's main conclusion is that selection of films must be left not to groups but to adult individuals. He recognizes the right of such organizations as the Roman Catholic Legion of Decency to function as a guide and critic for a particular group but he implies, rightly, that this can easily impinge the public's right and privilege of choice.

"What will best guard the youth of this country from those occasional perverse and seamy films that present a distorted, inartistic, and often untrue picture of life," Crowther writes, "is intelligent guidance by parents and teachers who draw upon a wide range of information for their own guidance and not on some arbitrary tag. . . .

"Now, with the motion picture medium advancing into broader and deeper explorations of the complexities and meanings of life, it should behoove the public to greet its advancement gratefully, to encourage its explorations with excitement and eagerness, to be well informed about it, and to give it its full cultural due—not to be squeamish and suspicious about what it may do to youth.

"The significance of this potent medium is that it is available to and embraces everyone. Only by personal investigation and discovery will the individual learn to appreciate and appraise it, to sense what he and his children should take and what he and they should leave alone."

A good rule, I submit, in other controversial fields. For who, after all, censors the censors?

Labor News Conference:

Jobless Benefit System Seen Dying from Under-Financing

THE NATION'S unemployment insurance system is "dying of starvation" and may not survive another recession, an AFL-CIO spokesman warned in a network radio interview.

Raymond Munts, assistant director of the Dept. of Social Security, charged that "unsound financing" and deterioration of benefits has undermined the federal-state jobless insurance program. Congress must act "soon," he declared, if the system is to be saved from collapse.

Munts, interviewed on the Mutual network's Labor News Conference, declared it "urgent" that Congress adopt Administration proposals to shore up the program "in time for the next serious recession." Essential reforms, he said, include:

- Federal standards requiring states to pay benefits equal to half of lost wages, up to a maximum of two-thirds of the average weekly wage in the state.
- A supplemental federal program for the long-term unemployed.
- An increase in the taxable wage base to provide more funds for the program. The present base of $3,000 was set in 1939.

Warning that the present program is not carrying out its social insurance function, Munts said that of more than 3.5 million jobless, only 1.6 million are receiving any unemployment insurance benefits—and these benefits compensate for only one-third of total lost wages.

Employer pressures to keep payroll taxes low and state competition to attract industries through low tax rates have resulted in under-financing of the unemployment compensation program, Munts said. He added:

"The under-financing that has gone on for 10 or 15 years now has depleted reserves, resulted in a moratorium on improvement in the benefit amounts, and put the program in a position generally where it cannot weather a recession of the sort that we experienced in 1958 or 1961."

IRONICALLY, Munts noted, when the program was first set up in the 1930s it was anticipated that it could be financed at a cost of about 4.5 cents per employe hour worked. Actual cost of existing benefits, the AFL-CIO spokesman said, is less than 3 cents an hour.

"We can have a good unemployment insurance program," he declared, "if we go back to our original goal that employers ought to pay about 4 or 4.5 cents an hour for the program."

Declaring that permanent reform of the program is "overdue," Munts said he was hopeful that Congress will take action next year.

"I think even among conservative members of Congress, there is some disposition not to let this kind of problem pyramid," he added.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THERE IS SOMETHING fascinating about the complaint filed by the president of Boeing Aircraft Co., Lowell P. Mickelwait, that when Boeing workers voted on whether or not they favored a union-shop contract clause, the unions involved played some kind of dirty pool in campaigning.

The vote was taken during a recess in negotiations. It was taken while the Machinists, who have represented the workers on the West Coast, and the Auto Workers representing several thousand on the East Coast had not yet been able to get Boeing to agree to mutually acceptable contracts. A presidential panel suggested that the workers be polled on the union shop alone, so that any question of employe willingness to endorse the position of union negotiators would be eliminated.

Naturally in appealing to the workers to support their bargaining representatives, the unions pointed out a vote endorsing the negotiators was a vote for "higher wages and a stronger contract." It is a generally accepted fact of life that a solidly-supported negotiating team is likely to get better terms from any management than one lacking evidence of rank-and-file support.

But to Mickelwait of Boeing, the unions were guilty of trickery because they "interjected the issues of wages, pensions and other benefits." What in heaven's name does he think the primary purpose of unions is except to work toward improved benefits?

THE MACHINISTS AND AUTO WORKERS lost union-shop votes in three other aerospace plants a few weeks ago. They won majority support for a union-shop clause in each case, but fell short of the two-thirds endorsement that was required under the peculiar circumstances recommended by the presidential panel involved—a different panel from that operating in the Boeing dispute.

It may be pointed out that the burden on the unions in each case was unusually onerous. It was more awkward than the burden imposed by law, indeed, in the famous union-shop clause written into the original Taft-Hartley Act by the late Sen. Taft of Ohio.

Taft did not require what was required of the Machinists and Auto Workers this year at North American, Aviation, General Dynamics-Convair and Ryan Aeronautical. He did not write his law so as to force union negotiators to reach final agreement on wage-hour, pension and other benefits—and then submit to the members the single question of whether, in addition to getting assured benefits, at least two-thirds of them would express themselves in favor of paying dues.

Under Taft-Hartley, a vote on the union-shop issue was taken in advance of negotiations. The bargaining committee could not even raise the issue legally until it was given specific authorization by all employes in the bargaining unit—not just the union members.

IN SHORT, the Taft-Hartley requirement was in this area exactly what Boeing required this year—advance authorization, in which the negotiators were given a chance for a union-shop demand by referendum while other new contract terms were pending.

There was just one major difference between the terms of the Boeing vote and the union-shop requirements of the original Taft-Hartley Act. The Boeing terms were harsher toward the unions. Taft thought a union should prove its support by getting specific union-shop endorsement—but he believed a simple majority of the bargaining unit was adequate. His law did not require a two-thirds vote. Under Taft's law the aerospace unions would have won all four votes.

The aerospace unions took onerous terms, which an enlightened management would not have imposed, and took their losses with their gains. Boeing's Mickelwait yells, "We wuz robbed!"

THIS IS HOW IT'S DONE: Operations in the Maidenform brassiere factory in Bayonne, N. J., are explained to Stephen McGonagle (center), a district secretary of the Irish Transport & General Workers Union, by Martin Shulman (left), chief management engineer, and Joseph Rosenfeld, of the Ladies' Garment Workers engineering staff. McGonagle is here as a State Dept. guest.

STATE AND CITY central labor body officers, gathered in Washington for conferences with AFL-CIO headquarters staff members, hear federation Pres. George Meany emphasize the importance of grass-roots activity in seeking to advance labor's programs for America.

Work at Grass-Roots Held Key to Legislation

The success of the AFL-CIO's legislative program in the 88th Congress will hinge on the effectiveness of grass-roots work on the state and local level, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a national conference of central body officers.

Addressing over 200 officials of state and local central bodies during a five-day meeting in Washington, Meany declared that co-operation between the grass-roots and the national AFL-CIO is the key to whether the trade union movement will be able to fight off new attacks as well as go forward with the many programs still on the unfinished list.

"No one can do the job" of persuading congressmen and senators of the merits of a legislative program better than labor representatives at the state and local level. Legislators in Washington pay much more attention to the persons and groups in their districts and states where they are elected, he said.

"You can play a tremendous role," Meany told the central body officers, "in seeing to it that our legislative program is successful."

The state and city central bodies, he commented, have a direct "line of communication" with the general public and represent the trade union movement at the most important level.

The importance of the central bodies in political education, legislative, community service and other activities "cannot be over-emphasized," he said.

The federation president traced the long history of trade unions to win freedom to organize in the face of harsh opposition from employers. The right to organize and bargain was won in the Wagner Act, he said, in part because of the exposure of employer activities against unions by the LaFollette Committee. But now employers have opened a new legislative campaign against the labor movement designed to render it impotent, he added.

He warned that a serious effort will be made in the 88th Congress to impose anti-trust laws against unions to render them weak and helpless, and that labor must be alert to the challenge that would turn back the clock to the conspiracy doctrine imposed on unions a century ago.

The state and city central body officers tackled a wide range of problems at the five-day session including legislation, political education, area redevelopment, manpower training, taxes, workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, community services, publications and public relations.

Pensioners to Get Free Hearing Aids

Free hearing aids will be supplied retired members of the National Maritime Union under the NMU Pension & Welfare Plan, Pres. Joseph Curran has announced.

Curran said the plan was moved to act because "many of our old-timers need some kind of hearing aid and the prices run high," adding that "there are a lot of quacks working in this field."

The new plan is retroactive to Sept. 1 and covers all 2,460 seamen on the retired rolls. It provides for examination, a hearing aid and instruction in its use up to a maximum of $325 every four years.

AFL-CIO Aide Assigned to Rights Group

Roy Wilkins, chairman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, has expressed the organization's appreciation to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for making available a federation staff member to help organize the drive for civil rights legislation in the 88th Congress.

Meany has delegated Tilford E. Dudley of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations to serve with the Leadership Conference as executive director. He acted at the request of Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Arnold Aronson, conference secretary and a member of the National Community Relations Advisory Council.

The federation president told Wilkins and Aronson that Dudley will be working closely with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation for liberalization of the rules of both houses of Congress.

Rules changes, said Meany, are vital to the passage of progressive legislation including, among many other measures to which the AFL-CIO is fully dedicated, passage of civil rights legislation.

Wilkins and Aronson said the Leadership Conference will organize on a national basis a campaign for rules changes to curb Senate filibusters and prevent the House Rules Committee from blocking liberal legislation.

Wirtz Sets New Rules On Braceros

The Labor Dept. has directed that farm employers, before they can apply for imported Mexican workers, must offer to American farm workers substantially the same job conditions required by treaty for Mexican workers.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced that before a grower's "undue hardship" request for Mexicans will be considered, the grower must offer to domestic workers:

- Within certain limits, free transportation and subsistence while enroute to the job and also on return if the job is completed.
- Free daily transportation from living quarters to and from the job, where appropriate.
- Free housing and occupational insurance.
- Meals at cost, but not to exceed $1.75 per day, where there are central food service facilities.
- Guaranteed employment for at least three-fourths of the workdays of the total period for which the worker is hired.

Price-Fixing Ban Asked In Brass Tube Industry

The Dept. of Justice has filed a civil anti-trust suit against 11 brass tube and pipe manufacturers indicted earlier this year on criminal price-fixing and bid-rigging charges.

Attorney Gen. Robert F. Kennedy asked a federal district court in Hartford, Conn., to enjoin the following firms from future violations of anti-trust laws:

Anaconda American Brass Co., Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp., Chase Brass & Copper Co., Revere Copper & Brass, Cerro Corp., National Distillers & Chemical Corp., Scovil Mfg. Co., Calumet & Hecla, Mueller Brass Co., Triangle Conduit & Cable Co., and Progress Mfg. Co.

The suit asked the court to enjoin the companies from entering into any agreement to fix prices, submit rigged bids or exchange price information.

According to the complaint, the companies have fixed prices "at artificial levels" since 1956. Sales of brass mill products by the 11 firms are estimated at $840 million a year.

At Wood River, Ill.:

Midwest Unionists Assist Oil Strikers

Wood River, Ill.—A truck containing $1,300 worth of canned food pulls up to a store front on the main street here, and volunteers from the 13-union strike assistance committee line up to shuttle the goods inside.

Dave Grieve, hustling president of Operating Engineers Local 525, ticks off the name "Owens-Illinois Glass Works, Alton" on a pad and notes that members of three unions have donated the food.

Grieve got the loan of a store near the Local 525 office, and has fired off more than 1,000 letters to a Midwest mailing list with an appeal for help. Heading the Shell Assistance Committee with Grieve are Merrill Harmon and D. J. Hambleton, with headquarters at 31A East Ferguson Ave., Wood River.

They said in their letter that the Shell Oil Co. is trying, with the help of strikebreakers, to set labor back 30 years or more. "We have been able," the three men wrote, "to hold out so far with minor assistance but now our people, because of the weather and the length of the strike, are in dire need of real assistance."

Assistance has come from other unions, including Steelworkers' Local 643, in Alton, and the Wood River Ministerial Alliance, composed of 13 churches, has offered to take up a collection for the 2,100 strikers and their families. But the pinch is tight.

The strike here began Aug. 18, and other unions walked out on the same date—2,240 Oil Workers at Pasadena, Tex., and 1,000 members of an unaffiliated union at Norco, La.—the Independent Oil & Chemical Workers Union of Louisiana.

"Don't Buy Shell" for the duration of the strike, pickets say when you ask what help they need. And union members on the other picket lines say "Don't Buy Mobil" either.

All the strikes resulted from management determination to weaken the contracts, and continue without change in the companies' "hard nose" front, according to Grieve, who says: "After a display of egotism and domineering instinct by these managements, it had to come to this—to the picket line."

Union Women Help

In the Wood River-Alton neighborhood, union women have arranged a Christmas party for the children of the strikers, and other community groups are helping.

Engaged jointly in the struggle against Shell at Wood River, Norco and Pasadena, Tex., are members of these unions:

Railway Carmen, Operating Enginers, Oil Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Asbestos Workers, Painters, Sheet Metal Workers, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Boilermakers, Carpenters, Laborers, Bricklayers, Machinists and the Teamsters and Louisiana oil-chemical workers, unaffiliated.

Telegraphers Accept 5 Years' Severance

A new job security agreement between the Railroad Telegraphers and the New York Central will strengthen the employment rights of 1,850 union members and provide up to five years of severance pay for those whose jobs are abolished.

The agreement, announced at a joint union-company press conference, was described by ORT Pres. G. E. Leighty as "a fair and equitable settlement."

Leighty expressed satisfaction that the agreement was reached through the negotiation and mediation procedures of the Railway Labor Act. He noted that a similar settlement earlier this year with the Chicago & North Western Railway came only after a month-long strike and White House intervention.

Key provisions include:

- An agreement by the railroad to give at least 90 days notice before abolishing a job.
- A guarantee that telegraphers employed in other railroad jobs after their positions are abolished will be assured pay and benefits at least equal to that of their former jobs for a five-year period. They will also receive moving expenses to any new assignment, plus a guarantee against loss from sale of a home below its fair value.
- Telegraphers whose jobs are abolished and who are not given other employment will receive a "furlough allowance" equal to 60 percent of their pay for six to 60 months, depending on length of service.

This allowance will be reduced if a former employe's outside earnings plus the allowance exceeds his normal railroad pay. However, those eligible for furlough allowances may take instead a lump sum separation allowance, up to 360 days of pay for senior employes.

The New York Central settlement is the third in the area of layoff and job security negotiated by the Telegraphers this year. The first was with the Southern Pacific. Leighty said the union expects to move into negotiations on this issue with other railroads in the near future. He emphasized that problems and conditions differ on each railroad and agreements may be expected to reflect these differences.

Unions Back Recount in Minnesota

St. Paul, Minn.—The Minnesota State AFL-CIO has called on local unions in the state to help finance costs of a recount of the nation's closest election—the gubernatorial race between incumbent Republican Gov. Elmer L. Anderson and the Democratic challenger, Lt. Gov. Karl F. Rolvaag.

The burden of financing the recount fell on Rolvaag after the State Supreme Court ordered the state canvassing board to certify Anderson as the victor by 142 votes out of nearly 1.24 million cast. The board had divided over whether to accept amended returns from 10 counties after the original count gave Rolvaag a 58-vote victory.

A meeting of the State AFL-CIO executive council authorized the appeal for funds, most of which will be refunded if the recount gives the victory to Rolvaag.

Oil Pickets Tell 1962 Christmas Story

7,000 Maintain Lines Despite Fierce Cold

for most of the months since the strike started June 27.

This struggle differs from the others only in that here, members of Oil Workers' Local 7-456 worked a year after their contract expired, and recently summoned a union meeting to vote on a company "settlement" offer. No such offer has been made at any of the other locations visited.

At Wood River, across the Mississippi from St. Louis, picket shanties dot the perimeter of the biggest refinery in the Shell Oil Co.'s U.S. network. There were more than a dozen, manned by pickets of three principal striking groups—the Operating Engineers, Machinists, and the Oil Workers Union Council, representing 11 building and metal trades units.

The cooperating 13 have set up an assistance committee and distribute canned goods, clothing, and money for gas bills and other necessities from a donated storeroom on East Ferguson Avenue, the main street of Wood River.

Trailers Used for Warmth

Thirty miles away in East St. Louis, pickets try to keep warm in two small trailers—one at the main gate of the Mobil refinery, the other alongside the Illinois Central tracks into the struck plant.

From the trackside station, pickets can see Pullmans for strikebreakers and supervisors inside the plant. The strike here dates back to Aug. 7, when 348 members of the Oil Workers struck the Mobil refinery and the bulk plant in nearby St. Louis to preserve their contract from emasculation.

More than 4,000 other workers are picketing Shell and Mobil refineries in Pasadena, Tex., near Houston; Norco, La., near New Orleans; East Chicago, Ind., and Casper, Wyo.

Numerous unions sent in donations to the strike funds after the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted support in a resolution Nov. 12. But the need is still great, and probably will remain so as long as workers walk the picket line and their children ask "Daddy, will Santa bring me anything this Christmas?"

The strike at Mobil already has broken the previous record for duration—four months set in 1957. At Shell no previous strike lasted more than a few days, according to Wood River pickets.

In its statement of support the AFL-CIO Executive Council saw in the demands of management "a strong pattern" following the recommendations of the Chamber of Commerce in bargaining to obtain "managements rights" clauses at a time when workers are "faced with the serious danger of loss of employment because of the rapid acceleration of company programs on automation."

Where to Send Help

The Oil Workers have recommended that donations for OCAW strikers be sent to the local unions or to OCAW Sec.-Treas. A. F. Grospiron, Box 2812, Denver 1, Colo.

The Shell Assistance Committee at Wood River is at 31A East Ferguson Avenue, Wood River, Ill., c/o D. J. Grieve, Merrill D. Harmon and D. J. Hambleton.

PICKET SHANTIES like this one, and pickets like H. N. Naylor of Operating Engineers Local 525, shown above, have been a feature of the landscape at Wood River, Ill., where 2,100 union refinery workers have been on strike against Shell Oil Co. since Aug. 18. Winter weather zeroed in after the picture was taken by the Alton, Ill., Evening Telegraph. The home-made picket stations are equipped with stoves, windows and doors but not much else. Members of the Machinists and of 11 other unions have their own picket shanties at Wood River, site of the largest U. S. Shell refinery.

Just Before Christmas ... An Inadequate Offer

Trenton, Mich.—"What do you think of a management that will use Santa Claus to run interference for it against its workers?"

A striker, pulling up his collar against wind and snow that lashed the picket lines, asked a visitor that question outside the Mobil Oil refinery here downriver from Detroit.

Other members of striking OCAW Local 7-456 explained why they were bitter at a management which after 12 months of delayed negotiations and more than five months of a strike, makes an inadequate offer and demands the union take it back to its members, just before Christmas.

"I hope they turn it down," said a union officer. "But if they don't, you'll know why—we hate to see our kids deprived of a happy Christmas."

Started June 27, the walkout was the first of a series that has kept more than 7,000 Shell and Mobil workers walking the line in front of refineries and bulk stations in six states. All have set a new record for duration, and the end is not in sight.

At the refinery here, union members worked a full year without a contract, then walked out when management held to its attempt to strip workers of protections they have had for 20 years or more, and to insert new "management rights" clauses modeled after those recommended in a U.S. Chamber of Commerce booklet.

"I've been here 23 years," says Floyd Rue, local union secretary-treasurer, "and things never have been like this. We had friendly relations for 21 years." Two years ago "a new manager came in and then there was chaos," another leader commented.

Management 'Rights'

The issue that brought the strike is, basically, "management prerogative" clauses. They are, for example, management's right to eliminate a job after giving the union a 14-day notice, discussing the proposal, then taking action; management's right to hire contractors to do work the bargaining unit has done for years; at the grease cannery, the right to let the work out on bids.

Says Rue: "We are asking only for the retention of what we have had for 18 years." He is an operator on a TCC unit—a thermal catalytic cracker.

Another OCAW local, the Detroit drivers, voted earlier this month to settle and went back to work, but that set no pattern for the refinery workers.

"Let everybody know our strike is still on," said a picket, "and tell them not to buy Mobil or Shell until all of us get a decent settlement."

Local 7-456 has 245 members on strike here.

Mobil Pickets Keep Vigil in Zero Weather

East St. Louis, Ill.—Deep snow and zero temperatures have made life on the picket line unusually rugged for 300 strikers at Mobil's refinery here and 48 at the bulk plant across the Mississippi. But that's not the biggest contrast with the 17-week strike of the oil workers in 1957.

"The last time, they paid our insurance and hospital plan premiums," said a picket reporting to the union-rented trailer for a six-hour shift. "This time they're making us pay.

"The company is trying to make it as tough as possible for the men. Five years ago they kept all the watchmen—the security department—working the whole time. Now they've laid off all 30 of them. Nobody's working but the bosses and some strikebreakers at the refinery.

"The only thing union people can do is to quit buying Mobil gas and oil. And to send in something for the strike fund."

What caused the dispute? A striker says:

"They're trying to raid the contract—they call it flexibility; taking operators during a turnaround—a slack period—and putting them with laborers and the like.

"The company wants seniority for supervisors in the contract, and a lot of other things. When we have a grievance, they say: 'Take it to arbitration.'

"What good is a contract if everything you get in negotiations is taken away by an arbitrator?"

The strike here has been going on since Aug. 7.

Motors, Generators Minimum Rates Set

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has determined that under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act prevailing minimum wages in the motors and generators industry are $1.48 an hour for workers who make fractional horsepower motors and generators, and $1.73 an hour for those who make all other products in the industry.

PICKETS WALK to keep warm at main gate of Mobil Oil refinery near East St. Louis, Ill., where Oil Workers Local 7-644 is in the fifth month of a strike to protect its contract against company demands for "managements rights" clauses. Strikebreakers have been sleeping inside the refinery in Pullman cars and trying to keep production flowing with automated equipment. Thermometer dropped to zero just after this picture was taken.

California AFL-CIO Seeks State Medicare

Hollywood—A dramatically bold legislative program, including a stand-by plan for medical care for the aged, has been adopted by the 36-member executive council of the California State AFL-CIO at a three-day meeting here.

State Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts termed the program "a comprehensive, forward-looking blueprint" to improve living and working conditions in the state.

In the medical care field, the council proposed both a statewide prepaid health care plan to provide comprehensive coverage for all age groups and a stand-by program for the aged which would go into effect only if Congress failed to pass a social security medicare program.

The California program for the aged would be financed by a 1 percent tax on employer payrolls and would be suspended if a federal program were enacted. Other legislative proposals include:

- A $1.50 state minimum wage, including provisions for industry boards to reduce the standard workweek from 40 hours to 35 hours when conditions warrant.
- A seven-hour day and a 35-hour week for state employes.
- A state labor relations act providing machinery to determine collective bargaining rights for employes not covered by federal law.
- A ban on the use of professional strikebreakers and stringent limitations on injunctions in labor disputes.
- "Major improvements" in unemployment and workmen's compensation programs.
- A civil rights program including stronger machinery for enforcement of existing legislation.
- State housing programs, supplementing federal programs, "to alleviate the pressing housing needs of California families in the low and middle income brackets."

Government, Labor Hit:

NAM Still Unhappy With Administration

New York—Two thousand out of the 17,000 members of the National Association of Manufacturers engaged in the NAM's annual series of gloomy pronouncements about government, found grave fault with the National Labor Relations Board under Pres. Kennedy and accused unions of failing to be concerned with individual members.

No public mention of attempts to put unions under federal anti-trust laws was made as the NAM held its 67th annual "Congress of American Industry" at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel here.

Despite complaints about government, an NAM cross-section survey in which 136 took part showed that 92 responsible company executives (68 percent) expected sales to go up in 1963 over this year; 9 percent thought sales would drop, and the rest saw no change. And 98 percent favored a 1963 tax cut in personal and business incomes rates to extend over several years. Only 2 percent were for a cut principally in lower brackets to raise purchasing power.

Walter Hallstein, president of the Commission on the European Economic Community (Common Market), emphasized that "demand can only exist where there is purchasing power."

He said that pledged acceleration of the standard of living—through wage increases and other means—by countries of the Common Market is expected to raise consumer demand by 66 percent from the 1960 total of $109 billion to $184 billion by 1970. The Common Market countries have a population total of 170 million—roughly comparable to ours.

If the NAM members were impressed by Hallstein's suggestion that higher wages and increased purchasing power should be deliberately encouraged for a healthy economy, they gave no public indication of it.

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York told the manufacturers he applauded the Kennedy Administration's economic aims, but said the methods used to achieve them were lacking. He cited the high unemployment rate and the failure to stimulate greater private investment. He also found fault with labor's advocacy of the 35-hour workweek.

Shorter Workweek Attacked

"Shorter hours without a comparable increase in productivity which requires accelerated capital investment could only place us at a further competitive disadvantage costwise in world markets," he maintained.

Rockefeller found neither "a lag in consumer purchasing power nor a lag in government spending" as the fundamental economic problem, but rather a lag in the rate of business investment for modernization and plant expansion. He made no reference to the $1 billion business investment tax credit provided this year and said "under-investment" stemmed from "a fall-off in profits since 1955," with the net down from 5 percent to 3 percent of the sales dollar. An NAM executive later said it was 3.2 percent. Rockefeller did not mention the heavy rise in total "cash flow" to corporations — profits plus depreciation reserves.

He was applauded when he rejected the view of "theorists" who hold that the logical cure [for current recovery weakness] is to increase government spending, and he called for "elimination of waste in government."

Concerning a federal income tax cut planned by the Kennedy Administration for presentation to Congress in 1963, he said it was his view that its basic purpose should be to raise incentives for investment in research, development, modern plant and expansion which he said would hike employment, take-home pay and social benefits.

Former Pres. Dwight D. Eisenhower told the NAM the "greatest threat to our American system" was overdependence on the federal government by farmers, colleges, local and state government and by business.

He asked how many in the audience with federal prime and subcontracts "could go to Washington today and confidently say that you can get by nicely without continuation of federal spending, thank you?"

Yet, he said, the trend towards overdependence would be halted only when "great numbers of us are ready to sacrifice something to insure a healthier, stronger, free economy." Eisenhower said the Kennedy Administration had embraced and carried further the "centralizing policies" of the '30s and that "one branch, the executive, seems intent on drawing to itself the constitutional duties of the Congress."

'Good Old Days' Mourned

NAM Board Chairman Donald J. Hardenbrock looked with longing at the pre-FDR days. Federal aid to education, medicare, safety restraints on drug distribution, farm production controls and price supports, farm cooperatives, the use of waste steam at Hanford to produce electric power, and national unemployment insurance standards were seen by him as items in a plan for total centralized government control.

"The concept of national solutions superimposed from the top is fallacious, dangerous and wasteful," he said, asserting that national goals could be achieved by non-federal means.

Charles A. Kothe, vice president of the NAM's industrial relations division, told a standing-room-only panel meeting on the NLRB that the Norris-La Guardia Act, ending federal court strike injunction abuses, was out of step with the times and should be amended. At another panel session, he said labor unions had shifted emphasis from concern for the individual member to preserving the union structure and cited the Lockheed union shop vote controversy as an illustration.

THE UNIVERSAL DECLARATION of Human Rights: Man's centuries-old struggle for freedom was highlighted on Dec. 10, 1948, when the General Assembly of the United Nations proclaimed this historic declaration—30 articles stating the personal, political, economic and social rights basic to human liberty and dignity.

Race Prejudices 'Stumbling Block' To Youth Corps, Biemiller Says

Race prejudice is the "major stumbling block" to legislation setting up a Youth Conservation Corps, an AFL-CIO spokesman has charged.

Legislative Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller warned delegates to a National Wildlife Federation Conference that "it's going to take a lot of hard work on Capitol Hill to overcome this opposition" from some southern congressmen who "just plain don't want to see an integrated Youth Conservation Corps."

A Youth Conservation Corps, patterned after the CCC of the New Deal, nevertheless, would be "a tremendous contribution" to protection of natural resources, he said, and "an important tool" in providing jobs and training for out-of-school, out-of-work youngsters.

He emphasized that labor will "fight hard" for the program in the new Congress "without any kind of racial discrimination." He added:

"We must face the fact that we are now doing too little to help many young people get the skills and the work experience which will make them valuable, productive citizens. We must face the fact that a labor market already suffering severe unemployment does not offer enough job opportunities for the young people who enter the labor force each year."

Biemiller criticized the Administration position that the Youth Conservation Corps should begin as a small "pilot" program.

He noted that the secretary of the interior has estimated that 45,000 young workers could be used for projects in federal parks, public lands and wildlife refuges, while the Agriculture Dept. said there is a need for 41,000 corpsmen to work in national forests.

"Besides," Biemiller said, "we have already had a very successful pilot program in effect from 1933 to 1942—the Civilian Conservation Corps. With an average enrollment of 300,000 members a year, the CCC performed a tremendous amount of land and timber conservation work, plant disease control, insect control and fighting of forest fires."

In addition to the youth job program, the AFL-CIO also will continue its efforts to pass "a good, effective wilderness preservation law," Biemiller said.

Fanning Given Second Term On NLRB

John H. Fanning has been appointed to a second five-year term as a member of the National Labor Relations Board—the first NLRB member to be named to successive terms by Presidents of different political parties.

Fanning, a Democrat, was appointed in 1957 by then Pres. Eisenhower. In a number of significant decisions, he found himself in a dissenting minority during the Eisenhower Administration—but his views were upheld by the Supreme Court in a series of major reversals of the then-majority.

During the past two years, he has often been part of the majority including new board members named by Pres. Kennedy.

Before his appointment to the NLRB, Fanning was a top-ranking career government employe with 15 years of service in the Defense Dept. and the Labor Dept. He is 46.

Albany, N. Y. — Employers caught paying less than the $1.15 state minimum wage have been forced to pay a record $997,000 in back pay to workers during the first nine months of 1962.

Steel Union, Kaiser Agree on 'Sharing'

Pay Floor, Job Rights Guaranteed

Fontana, Calif.—A trail-blazing new agreement between the Steelworkers and the Kaiser Steel Corp., designed to protect workers against loss of jobs to automation and give them a specific share of the fruits of productivity and other gains, will be voted on by union members at Kaiser's Fontana plant early in January.

The plan represents "a significant breakthrough in the field of labor-management relations," said the nine-member special committee which worked it out in three years of negotiations.

A key element, a union spokesman said, is a formula which, it is hoped, will remove the amounts of money allotted to wages and other economic benefits from the area of collective bargaining dispute.

Kaiser's 7,000 employes will be guaranteed at least the level of pay and fringe benefits negotiated by the union with Big Steel firms. In addition, however, they will also receive nearly one-third of any cost savings in labor

Results Thrown Out:

'Work' Group Film Upsets NLRB Vote

An employer who showed the anti-union film "And Women Must Weep," to his employes the day before a National Labor Relations Board election was guilty of misrepresentation "exceeding the bounds" of "permissible" propaganda, the NLRB has ruled.

Board members viewed the film—a hopped-up so-called "documentary" made by the National Right-to-Work Committee—and voted 3-2 to set aside results of the election held Sept. 6, 1961, at the Chicago plant of Plochman & Harrison-Cherry Lane Foods, Inc. A new election was ordered. Results of the discarded election were 20 for Local 738 of the unaffiliated Teamsters, 23 against, 1 challenged.

The board majority, reviewing the "work" committee's version of a Machinists' strike in 1957 at the Princeton, Ind., plant of the Potter-Brumfield Co., held "there is no evidence that the excessive acts of reprehensible and unlawful conduct attributed to the [Machinists] union in Princeton, Ind., and by association to all unions, occurred as portrayed by the actors in the picture."

The decision, signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown, recited this record, reported by the NLRB's regional director:

- Four days before the Plochman election, the employer mailed to employes a pamphlet with copies of letters allegedly written by a clergyman's wife to her mother during a 1957 labor dispute at the Potter-Brumfield plant.
- The letters tell the purported story of an "extraordinary strike, allegedly caused by nothing more than the refusal of the union president to sign" a sick leave form. According to the letter writer, union adherents were responsible for "extreme acts of violence and sabotage, including the shooting of an infant child."
- The day before the election, the Chicago employer assembled his workers in the company's executive offices and showed them the 22-minute film "And Women Must Weep." This movie was ostensibly a true account of the Potter-Brumfield strike, but actually, the board held, was a "vividly dramatized" movie made by professional actors and directors and involving "poetic license" to tell the alleged tale.

The competence of the cast and the excellence of the production, the NLRB majority found, resulted in a story of "callous union leaders, a helpless employer, unfortunate victims including, as a climax, the [shooting] . . . incident involving the infant; violence, fear and hatred in an unnecessary strike for no justifiable reason." The employer

Intensified Drive Urged:

Shorter Week Seen Basic in Job Crisis

New York—The chairman of the AFL-CIO's task force in the 35-hour workweek campaign declared here that unions must expand and intensify their drive to cut working hours if labor is to cope with increasing automation and greater job displacement "which will strike every industry."

Addressing the final session in a series of conferences jointly sponsored by the New York City Central Labor Council and Cornell University, Lane Kirkland noted that the AFL-CIO launched its workweek campaign only after government efforts to stimulate the economy fell short and high-level joblessness persisted.

"We have never argued that the shorter workweek is the only cure, or that it is the one we wanted above all," said Kirkland, who is executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. "But given the choice of a shorter workweek or unemployment there is no doubt that the answer is the shorter workweek."

He said the AFL-CIO's special Executive Council committee and its task force will press for legislation at the next session of Congress to reduce the statutory ceiling on the straight-time workweek and will assist all unions in bargaining efforts to cut working time.

Kirkland noted that state and local central bodies have been called upon to conduct extensive shorter workweek campaigns and lauded the New York City council for its foresight in establishing a shorter workweek and automation committee as far back as four years ago.

It was that committee which set up the four-session conference in cooperation with Cornell that brought together 100 top union officials to discuss union problems flowing from the growth of automation.

The conference was the first step in a long-range program to involve all unions in the city in a study of the effect of technological change on industries and employment. A consultant assigned by Cornell will work with a research group to collect information and statistics in the service industries, building trades, manufacturing, office work,

ILA Vote Rejects Employers' Offer

Longshoremen in 14 Gulf and East Coast ports have voted overwhelmingly against accepting their employer's last offer in contract negotiations. The vote, tallied by the National Labor Relations Board, was 1,264 in favor, 25,566 opposed to the offer, or 95.3 percent of those voting.

Voting on the last employer offer is a step mandated by Taft-Hartley procedures. The T-H injunction, secured by the Kennedy Administration to halt an ILA strike shortly after it started, expires Dec. 23 when dock workers are free to strike again.

Meanwhile Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz called both sides into negotiations in a last-ditch attempt to get a contract settlement on the basis of a proposed compromise.

U.S. Economy Needs Tax Cut, OECD Says

Paris—Increased government expenditures, a tax reduction or a combination of the two are needed to stimulate America's lagging economic growth rate, the 20-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development declared here.

The analysis of the U.S. economy and recommendations to help meet the OECD's 50 percent growth target for the 1960s were approved unanimously by the organization's Economic and Development Review Committee. The report on the U.S. is one of a continuing series by the OECD on each of its member countries.

The present rate of economic growth in the U.S., said the OECD study, "falls well short of what can reasonably be expected, given the increase in population and the scope for higher productivity."

The major problem has been "the persistent weakness of demand" and it seems unlikely that "demand from the private sector will, by itself, prove sufficiently buoyant to put the economy back on a more appropriate long-term growth trend," it warned.

Under these circumstances, the analysis continued, "a greater stimulus from the federal budget would seem necessary to offset the weakness of private demand, a stimulus that could be provided by tax reductions, by higher federal expenditure or by a combination of the two."

The OECD added its hope that "fiscal changes to be proposed to Congress in 1963, when added to those recently adopted, will be adequate in scope and timing to permit the early absorption of the present slack in the economy."

The analysis noted that while an increase in government expenditures may bring on temporary deficit financing, the quicker the economy regains the full employment level the shorter will be the period during which deficits are incurred.

The immediate problem for the U.S., it added, "is neither to prevent inflation nor to increase savings for investment; it is rather a more satisfactory level of activity than it has experienced in the last five years."

The OECD includes all members of the Common Market and the European Free Trade Association plus Turkey, Ireland, Spain, Canada, the U.S., Greece and Iceland.

Share in Cost Gains Offered at Kaiser

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY receives an award from the Assembly of Captive European Nations for "steadfast support of the right to freedom" of those nations and labor's championship of free world policies promoting "peace with freedom and justice." Dr. George M. Dimitrov, Assembly chairman, is shown presenting the award as other delegates participate in the ceremony at AFL-CIO headquarters.

Captive Nations Group Honors Meany for Aid

Representatives of the Assembly of Captive European Nations have presented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany with an award for "tireless and gallant" work on behalf of the liberation of all captive peoples and toward the creation of "real and lasting peace."

Representatives of the Assembly met in Meany's office on Human Rights Day, Dec. 10, to make the presentation. Dr. George M. Dimitrov, ACEN chairman, said the award was offered "in gratitude for the wonderful work you are performing, tirelessly and gallantly, in the interest of all freedom-loving people" and most particularly in support of the East-Central European nations "and their fight to shake off Communist tyranny, Soviet imperialist-colonialist domination and exploitation."

Meany accepted the award on behalf of the American union movement and as recognition of the fact that organized labor has been "the conscience of the United States in this field."

Among those present at the ceremony were Dimitrov, who led underground resistance to the Nazis and later the Reds in Bulgaria; Stefan Korbonski, leader of the underground during the Nazi occupation of Poland; Joseph Kajeckas of the Lithuanian legation in Washington; and other ACEN representatives.

Dimitrov, praising Pres. Kennedy's actions in the Cuban crisis as strengthening the fight for freedom, said the ACEN group visited AFL-CIO headquarters to give thanks for contributions repeatedly given to the cause of the enslaved nations.

'Staunchest Supporter'

He credited Meany with being the "staunchest supporter of the view we share with you, that Berlin and the German and East European question are aspects of the same problem," and declared that this doctrine should become "an inseparable part of the foreign policy of the free world."

The citation reads: "To George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, with gratitude for his steadfast support of the right to freedom of the East-Central European nations and for his championing of Free World policies best suited to promote peace with freedom and justice."

Meany replied that the overriding problems of the world's future are tied rigidly to the question of freedom.

The forces of the free world "can't write off the captive nations—we can't write off any people," he continued.

Meany recalled that in 1933, only 60 days after Hitler took over in Germany, American unions formed the Anti-Nazi Nonsectarian League to provide help to the victims of Hitlerism.

It is in the best traditions of American labor, he said, that "it is not sufficient that just we be free, but that all men be free."

If the United Nations were ever to lose sight of the need for freeing captive peoples, then the UN could no longer stand, Meany said, adding that the only way the UN could be a success is to make sure its principles are not flouted by any member.

New Jersey Labor Forms Rights Body

Newark, N. J.—Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the State AFL-CIO has announced the appointment of a civil rights committee under the chairmanship of William F. Purcell, vice president of the state body and an official of the Essex County District Council of Carpenters.

State Executive Vice Pres. Joel R. Jacobson will serve as coordinator of the committee, which will help county central bodies and other AFL-CIO affiliates to set up civil rights committees and will cooperate with programs of the National AFL-CIO, New Jersey Division on Civil Rights and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Other members of the state committee are Louis Vehling, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Mrs. Sadie Reisch, Ladies' Garment Workers; Mrs. Mary Hanscom, Communications Workers; Charles Mims, Hod Carriers; Benjamin Butler, Packinghouse Workers, and Florence Williams, Bookbinders.

Plan Protects Jobs Against Automation

or materials calculated against a 1961 base. If that sharing still leaves them below par for the industry, Kaiser will make up the difference.

Hailing the agreement as "a great step forward toward industrial peace," USWA Pres. David J. McDonald predicted full membership approval of the "long-range sharing plan."

He and Edgar Kaiser, head of the steel firm, predicted that the net result would be higher wages but lower unit production costs. They said the basic aim of the committee—to develop ways of eliminating "incessant rounds of drawn-out negotiations and the threat of strike deadlines over matters of wages and benefits"—has been achieved if the plan is approved.

'Don't Believe It Will Fail'

Kaiser added that while the firm's workers will be guaranteed at least the industry pay level, if the plan doesn't produce a lot more for them "then it will have failed, and we don't believe it will fail."

The proposed agreement differs from profit-sharing plans in that benefits will accrue to the workers from lower unit production costs no matter what the level of company profits.

A Steelworkers' spokesman described negotiations as "a landmark development in collective bargaining," both in the method used and in the substance of the agreement.

The nine-member committee, known as the Long-Range Committee, included three members representing the public in the actual negotiations.

They were Dr. George W. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania, who served as chairman; Dr. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University; and David Cole, arbitrator.

USWA representatives were McDonald, an assistant, Marvin J. Miller, and Charles J. Smith, regional director for USWA Dist. 38.

Representing the company were Kaiser, Vice Pres. Eugene Trefethen, Jr., and Executive Vice Pres. C. Fred Borden.

The Long-Range Committee was formed in 1959 as part of a contract reached after a 104-day strike, which ended when Kaiser broke with the rest of the industry.

Outlined to Employes

The plan was outlined by the committee to Kaiser employes at two meetings in Fontana. Taylor told the workers that the full text would be made available to them and all questions answered before the proposal is put to a secret vote.

Basically, the plan will work like this:

1. No employe will be discharged because of technological advances.

Layoffs may be made because of poor business conditions, but if a worker is no longer needed on a job because of automation or new technology, he will go into an "employment pool" and continue at full wages.

While in the pool, he may be given retraining courses for new jobs or be given a job vacated as the result of attrition.

Since the attrition rate is about 4.5 percent a year, workers are not expected to remain in the pool for extended periods.

2. The cost of producing a ton of finished steel in 1961 will be calculated. All savings made on the base year cost will go into a special fund, and Kaiser workers will get 32.5 percent of the money, which will be distributed on a monthly basis.

The savings will come both from individual worker productivity increases and from material and supply cost cuts. The company will get the rest of the savings, but these will be subject to corporation income taxes.

This means the sharing takes place whether the lower unit cost comes about by direct effort of the employes, by the use of better equipment, newer processes, better materials, or through improved yields.

3. The plan guarantees that Kaiser workers will not receive less, as a minimum, than the wages and fringe benefits negotiated by the union with the rest of the industry. And layoffs due to poor business conditions are already partly guarded against by the supplemental unemployment benefit plan and other provisions in the present contract.

4. The plan does away with contract deadlines on economic issues and on technological change—two critical issues in all bargaining—but normal collective bargaining procedure will be used on other issues.

The amount of money available for wages and fringe benefits will be determined by the new formula, plus any changes negotiated with the rest of the industry, so these will not be subject to dispute.

5. The plan will be effective for a four-year period, subject to annual review and revision by the company and the union.

6. Workers now on incentive plans can transfer to the long-range sharing plan by a majority vote in their unit and, if the company so offers, receive a lump sum payment equal to about 2.5 years of their anticipated earnings under the old incentive plan. About 40 percent of the 7,000 Kaiser workers are on incentive plans now.

7. The present Rule 2-B in the steel industry contract will be retained. This provides that the union must be consulted first before workers can be laid off because of changes in working crew sizes and other work practices.

Not a Pay Cut:

Social Security Tax Rises with New Year

Higher social security contributions effective Jan. 1 will mean that most pay checks for the new year will carry a slightly lower total than in 1962, but AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank cautioned workers not to believe employer suggestions that this represents a loss of income.

For the typical worker whose wages are at the average for all manufacturing employment—about $97 a week—the change will increase his weekly payroll deduction for social security from $3.03 this year to $3.52, a rise of 49 cents a week. The employer matches this contribution and the deductions continue until employer and worker have each paid in $174, the most any worker will have to pay over the year.

The new rate of contributions is three and five-eighths percent of all covered earnings up to a maximum of $4,800 a year.

Payroll deductions for social security are listed as "taxes" because the taxing machinery of the government is used to collect them, Cruikshank noted, "but they are not taxes in the usual sense."

Nevertheless, he warned, the worker's slightly smaller pay check may be accompanied by a leaflet from the employer attacking the whole idea of social security. A typical leaflet last year, he recalled, started with the statement, "You will notice that your pay today is somewhat less than you may have figured."

Not a Pay Cut

"To start with, this statement is not true," Cruikshank declared. "Your pay is not reduced by social security. Some of it is set aside to help provide funds for benefit payments after you retire or become disabled, or for your family in case of your death. But it is not reduced.

"The difference between these deductions and ordinary taxes is that you stand a good chance of getting your money back—even getting substantially more than you paid in."

He noted that a worker whose wages match the average for manufacturing and who continues to earn as much until he is 65 will be eligible for a monthly retirement benefit of $127. When his wife also reaches 65, she will receive half that amount in addition for a total of $190.50 a month. Both are eligible to retire as early as age 62 with reduced benefits.

If the wage earner should die while there are young children in the family, his wife and children would receive up to $254 per month until the children are grown. If he becomes totally and permanently disabled before retirement age, he and his dependents could draw like amounts.

Cruikshank pointed out that the Jan. 1 increase in the contribution rate is part of a tax schedule carefully calculated by Congress to put the social security system in balance. While the disability fund is holding its own, he noted, the Old-Age & Survivor's Fund is down about $1.4 billion from last year and had, at last report, $19.5 billion in reserve.

Decline Anticipated

"That is one reason for the tax increase in January," he said. "The decline was anticipated and increased revenue was planned to meet it."

Social security reserves are held in U.S. bonds—"still the safest investment there is"—and the interest they draw is about twice the total cost of administering the system, Cruikshank explained.

Currently, about 18 million persons, or nearly 10 percent of the population, are drawing monthly benefits from the system. Of these about 14 million are retired, 1.25 million are the disabled and their dependents, and the rest are survivors of workers who have died.

"American workers have willingly over the years pledged to do their share to keep the system financially sound," Cruikshank concluded. "The new social security tax for 1963 is in fulfillment of that pledge."

Social Credit Printer Struck

Vancouver, B.C.—The Bookbinders have joined the unaffiliated Lithographers in a strike for a new contract at the Mitchell Press, Ltd., which is owned by Vice Pres. Howard T. Mitchell of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and is the publishing source of much management and right-wing Social Credit Party propaganda.

The ALA walked out when Mitchell bolted an employers' association after it had reached agreement with the union. He held out for substandard wages and conditions, and has been on the luncheon club circuit with speeches denouncing labor's demands.

No Slacks, No Contract, Lady Strikers Tell Boss

Hastings, Minn.—Workers at the Smead Mfg. Co. marched into the plant in a united group when a settlement ended a 16-week strike, then turned around and marched right out again when the plant manager told the 400 feminine returnees, "You can't work here in those slacks."

Assembling in the parking lot where the original march started, members of the new Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 6-717 voted for this ultimatum: "Either take us as we are or lock us out together." Management then agreed that all workers should resume their jobs pending a decision on whether slacks are proper "ladylike" garb.

The workers struck for a first contract Aug. 27 and returned Dec. 18. Oil Workers District Dir. A. Dave Herring had high praise for support by unions in the Minnesota AFL-CIO.

He said the new contract calls for general wage increases of 7 cents an hour Jan. 1, another 6 cents a year later for the 550 workers; seven paid holidays; checkoff of dues and maintenance of union membership; and good seniority, grievance procedure, and leave of absence clauses. The firm manufactures office file folders, envelopes and plastic brief cases.

PRESENTATION of technical reference books was made by Pres. Walter L. Holt (right), of Technical Engineers Local 241 to Donald C. Springle (center), principal of the Camden County Vocational & Technical High School in Merchantville, N. J., with Albert Winn, the union's director of research and education, participating.

Right to Follow Jobs Denied in UAW Case

The Supreme Court has refused to review a lower court ruling denying any vested right of five auto workers to follow their jobs from Detroit to Lebanon, Tenn., after the Ross Gear & Tool Co., Inc., moved its Gemmer Mfg. division to the latter city.

The high court let stand a ruling by the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that the language of a contract between the company and the UAW did not provide for seniority or other rights at a location outside the Detroit city limits.

Earlier Decision Cited

The five former Ross Gear workers had cited an earlier decision by the 2d Circuit Court in a case involving Glidden-Durkee Famous Foods, where the court ruled that Durkee employes had vested rights that continued even after the plant was moved from Elmhurst, N. Y., to Bethlehem, Pa.

U.S. District Judge Fred W. Kaess, Detroit, relied on the 2d Circuit in finding, originally, in favor of the former Ross Gear employes. The 6th Circuit overturned him in concluding:

"Whether it would be advisable or reasonable under the existing circumstances to have the agreement apply to the plant in Tennessee is not for the court to decide. We must construe the contract as it is written, rather than make a new contract for the parties."

Judges of the 6th Circuit noted in their opinion that the union had failed to get management to drop the contract language limiting its terms to employes at plants in the geographical area of Detroit. They said it was significant that the contract did not cover another company plant just outside Detroit.

The dispute started when Ross Gear, making auto steering gear mechanisms, notified its Detroit workers they would not be offered jobs at the new Tennessee plant because the company had promised to do its hiring there.

The union nevertheless sought to get transfer rights for senior employes but the company was adamant. When the Glidden-Durkee decision was handed down, the UAW was advised that it established a possible precedent.

Ross Gear management urged the Supreme Court to uphold the 6th Circuit's ruling, arguing that the Glidden case was not parallel because of different contract language.

NLRB Election Won By Office Employes

New Orleans—The Office Employes have won a National Labor Relations Board election among plant electrical workers employed by the Mason Rust Co., a housekeeping contractor here for the National Aeronautics & Space Council. The vote was 63 for the union, 32 opposed.

Trade Books Given School By Engineers

Merchantville, N. J.—A gift of nearly 100 technical reference volumes has been presented by Technical Engineers Local 241 to the newly-expanded electronics library of the Camden County Vocational & Technical High School here.

The union has a continuing campaign to help and encourage high-calibre technical training for young students in the area.

Walter L. Holt, president of the local, made the presentation. In accepting the gift, Principal Donald C. Springle reviewed the school's progress as it moved from a purely vocational institution to a full-fledged technical high school.

"The training we provide," he said, "is as modern as tomorrow."

Local 241 is made up of employes of the Radio Corp. of America in the Camden-Moorestown area. For the past 12 years it has given an award to the school's outstanding electronic technician graduate. It now consists of a $100 defense bond, a design handbook and a letter of introduction to RCA personnel directors which, according to Union Research & Education Dir. Albert Winn, "based on past experience virtually insures an offer of employment."

The books were selected by Bernard Peltz, director of the evening school electronics program and an instructor of electronics theory for the daytime sessions. Winn designed a special bookplate which was prepared by the school's printing students on recently-purchased printing equipment.

Runaway Blouse Firm Pays for Pact Breach

New York—Payment of $25,301 has been received from Judy Bond, Inc., runaway blouse maker found by an arbiter to have breached its contract with the Ladies' Garment Workers, the union has announced.

The firm sent a check for that amount, representing a portion of the damages awarded by Arbitrator George J. Mintzer last summer when he sustained charges brought by the ILGWU against the firm for closing its plant here and moving all production to a new plant in Brewton, Ala.

The $25,301 represents money due because shipping clerks were required to work a 40-hour week instead of the 35-hour week called for in the 1961 contract between the union and the blouse industry.

The company has filed court appeals on motions by union attorneys for orders compelling payment of two other damage findings by Mintzer—$61,000 for work channeled to non-union production in violation of the contract, and obligations of $22,460 owed the industry health and welfare fund because of this non-union production.

The arbiter's finding that Judy Bond must make its fourth quarter 1961 records available to the union also was appealed. Recently the Supreme Court of New York County refused the company's motion for a stay.

Judy Bond broke away from the manufacturers' association a year ago, while labor and management were preparing to complete negotiations on a contract renewal. Later the firm resumed production in Alabama. The union is conducting a national "Don't Buy Judy Bond" campaign.

Leather Strike Wins Contract

Toronto, Ont.—A. R. Clarke, Ltd., Canada's largest leather tannery, has agreed to a new contract with the Meat Cutters after a five-month strike and a worldwide boycott of its products undertaken with the help of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

A memorandum of settlement worked out with the aid of government conciliators sets a schedule for the return of 450 strikers and specifies that all other issues be left to bargaining, with arbitration in case of failure to agree.

The union was certified as bargaining agent in May 1960, but in two years of intermittent negotiations it was unable to reach a settlement with the company, which had a 25-year record of successfully resisting union organization. The union walked out after the firm had rejected a conciliation board recommendation of a small wage increase and payment of overtime after 40 hours instead of 48 hours.

Immigration Rule Easing Proposed

New York—The United Italian-American Labor Council at its 21st annual conference here called on Congress to enact permanent legislation permitting citizens of countries with low immigration quotas to be reunited here with close relatives who have become citizens of the United States.

The resolution pointed out that thousands of citizens of low-quota countries, such as Italy, have completed formalities but must wait for years before they can be admitted to the U.S. because visas are either insufficient or unavailable. Legislation passed this year and in 1961, the resolution said, provided only "a very partial solution of this problem."

1963 COPE CALENDAR and political almanac lists all state primary and general elections and provides other information for voters. Priced at 75 cents per copy, the 14-by-20-inch display size calendar may be ordered from COPE, 815 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Reprints bearing the name of the individual union are available in quantities of 200 or more.

NLRB Withdraws Protection:

Segregationist Pact Open to Challenge

A union that segregates its members into separate Negro and white units for bargaining purposes cannot claim the protection of an established contract when its representation rights are challenged by another union, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

By unanimous vote, the NLRB served notice on employers and unions that it will not permit its contract bar rules to be used as a shield against appropriate challenges where segregationist practices are followed.

Accepting a petition by AFL-CIO Transport Workers Local 260, Houston, Tex., the board directed that an election be held Jan. 4, when some 90 bus operators and shop employes of the Pioneer Bus Co., Inc., will choose between TWU and the segregated Bus Drivers, Dispatchers & Shop Employes Independent Union.

The TWU Houston local, which has a contract with the Houston Transit Co. containing the highest wage rates in the South for transit workers, has been concerned about the competing firm for some years and petitioned for the election when Pioneer employes expressed an interest in raising their present low wage rates.

Management and the unaffiliated union told the board that five-year contracts entered into Feb. 15, 1961, bar a new election under board regulations. The TWU argued that the contracts cannot bar an election because they "artificially divide the employes into two separate bargaining units based solely on considerations of race."

The board, citing "clear court decisions in other contexts which condemn governmental sanctioning of racially separate groupings as inherently discriminatory," came to this conclusion:

"We therefore hold that, where the bargaining representative of employes in an appropriate unit executes separate contracts, or even a single contract, discriminating between Negro and white employes on racial lines, the board will not deem such contracts as a bar to an election."

Joining in the decision were Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Philip Ray Rodgers, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

They remarked that the execution of racially divisive contracts would normally warrant revocation of the independent union's certificate, but "we deem it unnecessary to take such action at this time" in view of the pending election.

The unaffiliated union was certified as bargaining agent in 1950. The NLRB said in its decision that the union and management together created a two-unit bargaining relationship in 1956. Since then the employer has met separately with a unit called Pioneer Bus Lines, exclusively for whites, and with a unit styled the Trinity Gardens Bus Lines, exclusively for Negro employes. It executed separate contracts with similar conditions but maintained separate seniority lists, the board said.

The board's general contract bar rule is that a contract acts as a bar to another union for its duration up to a maximum of three years.

Press Freedom Award Offered For Americas

Buenos Aires—The Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations has issued a call to affiliates for entries in the competition for its Free Newspaperman of America Award.

The federation will give a prize of $250 U.S. and a bronze plaque for outstanding newspaper, television or radio reporting in defense of freedom of the press.

A candidate for the award must be a member of one of the 22 federation affiliates in the Western Hemisphere. He may submit the entry himself, or it may be submitted on his behalf by someone else. Five copies of the entry should be submitted in scrapbook form with an accompanying letter describing the circumstances under which the work was done.

Entries should be submitted before Jan. 20, 1963, to the chairman of the awards committee, Miguel Perez Turner, Federacion Argentina de Periodistas, Sermiento 938, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

The Newspaper Guild is the U.S. affiliate of the federation.

End Silence on 'Work', GOP Chairman Urged

The National Council for Industrial Peace has called on Republican National Chairman William Miller to end his silence on the issue of so-called "right-to-work" laws lest his party be saddled with "an anti-labor image that compromises its chances of victory in the 1964 presidential election."

Council Dir. John M. Redding urged Miller to "clear the air" by issuing a policy statement on state "work" laws, which prohibit management and unions from agreeing on the union shop as part of their collective bargaining agreements.

Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York, the front-runner for the 1964 Republican presidential nomination, has come out flatly in favor of majority rule in collective bargaining and against so-called "right-to-work" laws, Redding noted, and two former GOP national chairmen—Meade Alcorn and Sen. Thruston Morton—have taken similar positions.

He cited Alcorn's statement following the 1958 election that "scores" of GOP candidates for national, state and local offices had lost because of the "work" law issue.

He recalled, too, that when Morton succeeded Alcorn to the chairmanship, the Kentucky senator had expressed the view that the question of the union shop "should be determined by collective bargaining," and not through "right-to-work" laws.

Yet the Republican Party's position on the issue "has been one of ambivalence," Redding declared. Despite the views of Rockefeller and other party chiefs, he noted, "the reactionary wing of the GOP continues to cast the party image in an anti-labor, anti-collective bargaining role."

"There seems to be some magic in the money-raising abilities of the [National] Right-to-Work Committee and its backers, the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which mesmerizes the Republican policy makers," Redding observed.

"Even where responsible party leadership does appear, as in New York, Maine and elsewhere, the lower echelons of the party seem to prefer their policy of political self-immolation.

"It would clear the air, now that plans for the crucial 1964 election are being made, for the Republican Party to listen to its more enlightened leaders and take this explosive issue out of the election and let responsible leaders of both sides of labor and management settle their problems at the negotiating table."

Air Merger Rules Sought For Railroads

The head of the Railway Labor Executives Association has called for early action by the next Congress to apply to railroad mergers the same anti-monopoly prohibitions that now govern airline mergers.

G. E. Leighty, president of the Railroad Telegraphers and chairman of the RLEA, said the proposed legislation has the support of the Justice Dept. and "should be enacted speedily."

"This essential protection for the public must be passed without delay if we are to stop the headlong rush of the U.S. railroads to self-liquidation," he declared.

In another radio message, as part of the RLEA's weekly series of five-minute broadcasts titled "Working on the Railroads," economist Leon Keyserling linked the railroad merger trend to the low level of economic activity and resulting high unemployment.

"Railroad business is based upon national economic business," Keyserling said, "and the railroad mergers, for the most part, represent a reaction to a low level of national economic business."

This, he added is leading the railroads to want to contract their services, to contract their plant and to contract their ability to do business.

Railroads are doing less business because all transportation is suffering, he said.

5% Bargaining Goal Set by Oil Workers

Denver—The policy committee of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers has voted to approve a bargaining program keyed to a 5 percent increase in wages or fringe benefits or both.

The policy, if accepted as a pattern by the petroleum industry, will affect some 600 contracts and about 100,000 workers, the union said.

Last summer the committee called on locals to set their sights on increases of 6.5 percent or more. The new policy will apply to contracts negotiated this year and next, the union said.

The 10-member committee approved signing of contracts containing the 5 percent increase. Most were negotiated by West Coast locals. All were on an individual company basis except one statewide contract with Standard of California.

In setting its wage goals the committee said its bargaining objective could not be considered inflationary and would not justify price increases. The last previous wage increases were negotiated in 1960 and 1958. Said Oil Workers Pres. O. A. Knight:

"Even with wage increases, labor costs in the oil industry have been declining in recent years due to increased productivity. Fewer men are turning out more products at a lower and lower labor cost."

UAW Strikers Sign United Fund Pledges

New Castle, Pa.—Members of Auto Workers Local 69, on strike at the Johnson Bronze Co. here, have pledged a total of $7,100 to the United Fund Campaign even though they aren't getting any paychecks.

'Work' Film Upsets NLRB Election

Board Calls Movie 'Misrepresentation'

was quoted as saying this incident presented "in capsule form a nationwide condition that is eating out the heart of American liberty."

The board, reporting that in the 1957 strike both union and company were found in contempt of court for violating injunctions, observed there was "no evidence" of other unlawful acts and that the employer filed no unfair labor practice charges against the union.

Historically, the majority pointed out, the NLRB has "been reluctant to police or censor" material used by either side in an election campaign. "Exaggerations, name calling and to some extent falsehoods" have been permitted as "normal" tactics.

The board has set aside elections, however, because of misrepresentations and "trickery" which involve "substantial departure from the truth" at a time when an "effective reply" is prevented.

Argument Dissected

By showing the "Work" committee's propaganda film the day before the election, the majority held, the Plochman firm "used the creative efforts of a motion picture company," employed "the art of the playwright and the acting profession," to "give substance" to an argument that "a vote for union representation is a vote for strikes, violence and perhaps even murder."

The opportunity for the union to answer was "foreclosed" because the events "so vividly dramatized" had taken place five years earlier in another state and involved a different employer and union, the board held.

The employer "effectively tarred the union" involved with his workers, and the impact of the film therefore was "misrepresentation which exceeded the bounds of permissible campaign propaganda" and was an "interference" with the election the next day, it ruled.

Board Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom, dissenting, said they could see nothing in the "Work" committee's picture that could be called misrepresentation within the meaning of existing NLRB precedent or that "the movie itself, or the timing thereof, interfered with" employe freedom of choice.

They added a footnote: "Unlike our colleagues, we do not undertake to write a review of the picture" and "do not presume" to say whether the film is "worthy of three stars, four bells, or any other designation."

Earlier, IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes said the film was "cleverly salted with fictitious events that never really happened." Al Zack, AFL-CIO director of public relations, called it a "false, deliberately malicious, lying film" and propaganda of the Nazi type" at its worst.

IUD Board Backs Cut in Income Taxes

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has urged the forthcoming 88th Congress to enact a substantial income tax cut as its "first major order of business" and to follow through by closing loopholes and reforming the structure of the basic tax system.

The IUD executive board, meeting in Washington, declared in a resolution that a temporary tax reduction of $10 billion, the bulk of it concentrated in the lowest income tax brackets, "can do more than any other single step" to stimulate consumer demand, boost the entire economy and "get America moving again."

In a statement on civil rights, the board noted that all 59 IUD affiliates had signed fair practices pledges with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. The board also expressed full support of the AFL-CIO civil rights program and urged renewed efforts to cement relations between the Negro community and the federation.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther announced at a news conference that the board adopted an organizational program applying to other areas the concept of the AFL-CIO's Los Angeles pilot project.

Reuther said that similar drives by the IUD in other areas should complement and assist the Los Angeles project.

State Bodies Support CWA Against Raiders

State AFL-CIO federations in 18 states with large numbers of Western Electric Co. installers have voted full support of the Communications Workers against the attempted raid on the CWA by the Teamsters.

Support also has been voted by the Washington, D. C., Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who also is CWA president, has announced. Federation regional offices and local central bodies likewise have offered "fullest support" during the campaign, he said.

The National Labor Relations Board early this month mailed ballots to 17,000 employes of Western Electric's installation division, with a Dec. 28 deadline for return. Votes are to be counted Jan. 4.

These state councils were listed by CWA as having released statements in support of CWA: New Jersey, Michigan, California, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, New York, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, Wisconsin, Washington and West Virginia.

In one of the statements backing CWA, Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO charged that the attempted "power grab" by Teamsters' Pres. James R. Hoffa "threatens the security and welfare of all telephone workers."

The Michigan State AFL-CIO executive board condemned the raid and called on members of affiliates to lend aid and support.

The Idaho State executive board, calling CWA a "clean and democratic union in the family of the AFL-CIO," added:

"CWA and Pres. Beirne were in the forefront" of the battle to expel "all unions from the AFL-CIO which were corrupt."

The Idaho statement related that "the corrupt and gangster-controlled Teamsters have a planned campaign" to take over the installers first, then other CWA bargaining units.

IAM Film Tells the Facts Behind 'Work' Group's Propaganda Movie

The propaganda film "And Women Must Weep," whose showing by a Chicago employer resulted in the voiding of an election narrowly lost by a union, has been denounced by Pres. Al J. Hayes of the Machinists as "cleverly salted with fictitious events that never really happened."

AFL-CIO Dir. of Publications Al Zack called it a "false, deliberately malicious, lying film— propaganda of the Nazi type at its very worst" but effective in spreading the anti-union message.

The film was produced for the National Right-to-Work Committee in two versions, one designed to defeat union plant organizing drives, the other to persuade state legislators they should vote for "right-to-work" laws hampering union organization.

"And Women Must Weep" purports to tell the story of a 1957 strike by the Machinists against an Indiana company. The IAM interviewed the persons involved in that strike and made its own film, "Anatomy of a Lie," which may be rented for $3 from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

The IAM film refutes the "Work" committee's drama point by point:

- The anti-labor film portrays the union president as a bully who pushed the workers out on strike. The actual president of IAM Local 1459 was a warm, grandmotherly type who pleaded with members not to strike on her account, but only if company provocations made strike action necessary.
- The anti-labor film showed a small group of 11 workers deciding to strike after a harangue by the president. The fact: only nine voted against a strike at a meeting of 400 workers at the armory in Princeton, Ind.
- "Outsiders" ran the strike in the "Work" committee's version. Strikers reported that the company actually hired strikebreakers to come into Princeton.
- The impression is given that union "goons" shot a baby. "Anatomy of a Lie" interviews the sheriff and the baby's father, who say there was no evidence whatever tieing the shooting to the strike.

Striking Printers See Threat of 'Suicide' by New York Papers

New York—If any of New York City's nine major newspapers goes out of business because of the current city-wide shutdown "it will be suicide, not murder," the head of the striking Typographical Union declared here.

Replying to predictions by some publishers that a long walkout could mean the end of one or more of the dailies, Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Local 6 said "we hope not; we can't afford to lose a single job."

"That's why we have offered to go back to work at a moment's notice at the Mirror, Post, Trib and [Long Island] Star-Journal," Powers continued.

"These are the marginal newspapers that are supposed to be in trouble, but they chose to shut down. We didn't go on strike against them. They chose to line up with the others . . . It's a matter of suicide, not murder."

Federal mediators were continuing to schedule joint bargaining talks, but neither side saw any prospect of a quick settlement. The New York City Publishers Association admitted that a number of the shut papers have strike insurance "covering part of the losses," and union spokesmen say this could run for at least 13 weeks.

Picket Lines Respected

The ITU local struck the Daily News, Times, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun Dec. 8. The other papers promptly suspended publication voluntarily, idling a total of 20,000 workers. In addition, the Long Island Press suspended its Queens edition, but continued to distribute in Nassau and Suffolk Counties.

Members of other craft unions and the Newspaper Guild have refused to cross the ITU picket lines at the struck papers. Leaders of the unions emerged from the latest meeting of their Officers Committee for Newspaper Unity with a declaration that they were "solidly behind" the ITU local's efforts to win adequate pay gains for its members.

ELECTED vice president of the Rhode Island AFL-CIO was George S. Lima, New England regional director of the State, County & Municipal Employes. He is also president of the Providence branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Powers described the printers' proposals for an $18.45 wage increase over two years, a 35-hour week and other fringe benefits as "negotiable" in contrast to what the publishers have called their "final offer," an $8 pay hike over two years plus some fringe benefit improvement. This was coupled with demands for union concessions in the use of new printing processes which the union says would drastically cut the number of jobs.

"We could wrap up a contract within three hours if the publishers were willing to engage in serious negotiations," Powers said.

In Cleveland, where the Plain Dealer and the Press & News have been closed by a Guild strike since Nov. 30, new talks were scheduled over the critical issue of union security. A Guild source said, however, that managements of the two papers had modified their original position against a union shop "only slightly."

The Guild and craft unity committee rejected a bid by the ousted Teamsters to discuss the situation. The Teamsters were the first union to strike the dailies, and other unions refused to cross their lines. The Teamsters have since returned to work across the Guild picket lines.

'A Little More Hope'

ON THIS CHRISTMAS 1962 there is a new spirit on the land, a quiet faith that the free world can create the conditions for a lasting peace if it has the determination and the resourcefulness.

The spirit was born in the crisis of late October when Pres. Kennedy moved firmly to turn back Soviet aggression in Cuba and carefully maneuvered the withdrawal of nuclear missiles and jet bombers from the island.

The tone of the continuing post-World War II crisis has changed remarkably since the Cuban affair. The free world, despairing of the recurrent crises of the cold war, has discovered that a firm resolve to block naked aggression will be respected by the Communists; that nuclear blackmail has the same inherent flaws and weaknesses as the lowest form of petty blackmail.

The Cuban crisis points up the reminder that this Christmas is the seventeenth since the end of World War II and the peace of the world is still to be won and with it the good will to men that is a condition of peace.

It is just as evident this year as it has been every Christmas since 1945 that there is no alternative to peace. In this age of H-bombs, intercontinental missiles and space satellites, peace is a condition of survival.

The conditions for a lasting peace can be created if the free democratic world has a lasting faith in its own institutions. The terror of nuclear bombs can only intimidate the weak and those of feeble faith. The subversion of the Communist conspiracy can only take in those who put a low price on freedom, liberty and human dignity.

The free world, with America at the helm, has the resources, the manpower, the talent and the desire to rid the world of hunger and disease, to provide the basis of social justice in which all men can taste of bread and freedom.

The Kennedy Administration in the past two years has fashioned the beginnings of programs to meet the needs of a world where too many people go to bed hungry every night. The Peace Corps, the Food for Peace program, the Alliance for Progress all are designed to aid the hungry and impoverished.

The millions in Asia, Africa and Latin America are beginning to see, hear and feel the material evidence that the free world is interested in their welfare and their fate. The foundations for extending freedom are being built and as social justice in a framework of freedom expands, the areas for Communist subversion and dictatorship contract and a stronger basis for a lasting peace is created.

To achieve a lasting peace the free world must also see to its own foundations, to make sure that its own peoples are not among the exploited and the oppressed, to build strong and viable economic structures that will withstand the impact of change.

With the patience and fortitude to meet the tactical pressures of the Communists, to withstand the stupidities of the reactionary right which neither understands nor is capable of working toward a program of peace based on freedom and liberty, a lasting peace can be won. That is the hope of Christmas 1962.

Jobs for Unskilled Vanish:

High Unemployment Rate Laid To Technological Development

The following is excerpted from an address on unemployment by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to the Midwest Governors Conference in Chicago:

FIRST, IT IS CLEAR that the situation is sufficiently serious to warrant closest attention and most vigorous action. Part of the difficulty is that the unemployment which exists is scattered, and is concentrated in pockets of economic distress. People in general are doing so well economically that there is not the sense of indignation and outrage there ought to be about unemployment which most Americans don't see—even though it is sapping our strength as a whole.

Second, it is important that we recognize this unemployment as essentially a problem not of economic weakness, but of economic growing pains. It results in large part from the fact of growth in our population and from the phenomenal increase in technological competence. We must lead, in meeting this challenge, not from weakness but from strength.

Third, it is clear now that this situation is not self-correcting. The preconceived notion that improving technology automatically creates as many jobs as it destroys, so that there is no problem of employment here, leaves out some key facts.

Those preconceptions were true to the extent that they suggested that each new technological development increases the national economic potential, including its potential for full employment. What they left out is the fact, clear now from experience, that the effect of such technological development is uneven throughout the economy, in terms of geographical areas, different skill levels, and so forth. It creates adjustment problems which have to be met.

In 1946, there was perhaps reason for thinking that the problem of full employment was simply one of keeping the general rate of economic activity at a high level, and that this could be done by appropriate fiscal and monetary measures.

We have now begun to see that if the persistent unemployment of the present era is to respond to the large movements of the economy, additional steps must be taken. Quite different and special measures must be developed if we are to find jobs for the millions of marginal workers who are chronically out of work. High school dropouts are a good example. A third of the workers entering the labor market in this decade will be in this category.

Fourth, and as a crucially significant correlary of the preceding point: There is not one unemployment problem in this country today, but rather several very different unemployment problems—and particularly two specific problems. One of these is the increasingly acute problem of unemployed younger workers. The other is the increasingly acute problem of unemployed members of minority racial groups.

ONE DIFFICULTY HERE is that these two problems are directly traceable to a factor in this situation which has not been the subject of enough plain talk. "Technological development" is an attractive, fascinating idea. It is also essential to the growth of the economy. "Technological development" is also the reason that the unemployment rate in the U.S. as a whole is approximately twice as high for younger workers than for the work force as a whole, and twice as high for minority group members as for the entire group.

The connection is clear. Rapidly advancing technology is increasing the demand for skilled and semi-skilled workers, and is reducing the demand for unskilled workers. It is among the younger workers, especially those who have dropped out of school prematurely, and among the members of minority groups that there is the highest percentage of unskilled workers.

It could very properly be said that what we call the problem of unemployment is in large measure a reflection of the more basic problems of inadequate education and racial disadvantage.

This is not an argument against automation. It is an argument for a degree of social engineering which will keep up with our progress in scientific engineering. It is an argument for the adjustment of our educational system to the new demands of the work force, and for the elimination of racial disadvantage.

It is an argument, indeed, that these needs must be met if the way is to be cleared for that degree of technological development which is essential to a sufficiently rapid rate of growth in the economy.

Morgan Says:

Puerto Rico Doing Big Business As a Showcase for Democracy

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

THE ISLAND COMMONWEALTH of Puerto Rico, where this correspondent spent the last week, is still doing a brisk business as a special showcase for democracy. Here representatives of foreign countries, especially those of the struggling new nations of Asia and Africa, come regularly to observe in microcosm the industrialization of a tropical acreage a little more than a third the size of the state of Vermont, an island itself exploited and grossly underprivileged a generation ago.

Morgan

Puerto Rico's progress has been staggering. Per capita net income in 1940 was $121. Today it is pushing $700. Adjusting to inflation and the weakened purchasing power of the dollar, personal income has still more than tripled. No wonder the commonwealth is the economic envy of the underdeveloped areas and a challenging measure of what peaceful revolution can do in the rest of Latin America.

The now celebrated Operation Bootstrap has increased the gross national product by more than 50 percent in less than 10 years, figured at the 1954 value of the dollar—from $1 billion in 1952 to nearly $1.6 billion in 1961. But progress has brought with it new problems.

One of the worst and most easily recognizable of these is that marvel of our mechanized civilization, the traffic jam. With it has come its grisly and inevitable by-product, the highway accident. Indeed except for the record cold wave on the mainland—on which taunting headlines reflected the satisfaction of Puerto Rico's $63 million tourist business—the problem that seemed to preoccupy San Juan newspapers the most was the fact that traffic fatalities had matched their 1960 record. Puerto Ricans are now killing themselves at the rate of one a day in car crashes.

In a macabre way this reflects prosperity. In 1940 there were less than 27,000 registered motor vehicles in the entire commonwealth, now there are more than 202,000, an increase of almost 10 times in 20 years. Engineers who thought they were building the Puerto Rican equivalent of superhighways a dozen years ago were caught flat-footed and narrow-laned and are now having to build all over again.

The population burst has hit Puerto Rico, too, though not so gravely as it might have if the regime of Gov. Luis Munoz Marin had not resolutely withstood strenuous pressure from the island's Roman Catholic hierarchy to reinstate legislation repealed 25 years ago outlawing birth control. Puerto Rico has a high density of more than 700 persons per square mile and the population has grown from a little less than 1.9 million in 1940 to more than 2.4 million now. Another proof that opportunity now knocks effectively at home, migration—mostly to New York—was down last year to a net of less than 14,000.

PUERTO RICO IS BESET with another problem—rising political restlessness. Much energy is being wasted on an argument over whether the island should become a state or continue its rather unique commonwealth status. Under it Puerto Ricans, who have American citizenship, govern themselves but do not have a vote in U.S. presidential elections. But neither do they pay federal income taxes. The big, nervous human dynamo who has been the guiding genius of Operation Bootstrap, Munoz Marin, insists that Puerto Rico does not need and could not afford statehood—at least not now. He argues that it would interrupt the island's progress because it would saddle Puerto Ricans and their industries with an annual federal tax bill of more than $200 million.

He sees the staggering task ahead of Pres. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress in trying to bring meaningful reforms to the hemisphere because he himself is buffeted by colliding forces. On the one hand he is pushed by the impatience of Puerto Ricans learning the responsibilities of self-government. On the other, he is being held back by the incredibly anachronistic outlook of a few Latin reactionaries who are living sentimentally in the days of the Spanish Conquest.

Last week, for example, one San Juan newspaper bitterly objected to a remark by Teodoro Moscoso, the brilliant ex-lieutenant of the governor who now heads the Alliance for Progress, as somehow reflecting on Puerto Rico's "proud" Spanish heritage. What Moscoso said, in effect, was that the Marshall Plan revived a Europe ravaged by war and the alliance was aimed to aid a Latin America ravaged by history.

Nobody has grasped this truth more firmly than Munoz Marin, and one of the biggest obstacles to the alliance's progress is the shortage of other leaders in the hemisphere as realistic as he.

Labor News Conference:

Michigan Apportionment Fight Seeks Genuine Representation

THE MICHIGAN AFL-CIO is fighting for reapportionment of the state's senate on the basis of population not as a means of furthering labor's legislative program, but to insure truly representative government, Pres. August Scholle of the state body declared in a radio interview.

"If we had a legislative body under the apportionment plan which I am suing for, and which did not give us those legislative improvements, I would be satisfied that we were having the will and the desire of the majority of the people expressed," Scholle said on Labor News Conference, weekly AFL-CIO public service program over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

He was interviewed by Jerry Horst, Washington bureau chief for the Detroit News, and Anthony Lewis, Supreme Court reporter for the New York Times.

Scholle explained that he had sued for reapportionment of the state senate on the basis of population as a result of a 1952 amendment to the Michigan constitution which permanently froze state senatorial districts regardless of population, leaving discrepancies ranging from 700,000 population in one district to 55,000 in another.

After an initial defeat, set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court, Scholle won his case in the state courts, but an appeal is pending.

MEANWHILE, HE NOTED, a new state constitution has been written providing another and highly complicated apportionment formula which purports to give weight to both population and area, but which, he said, actually works out in some counties to 90 percent of the representation being given to area and 10 percent to people.

The new constitution will go to a referendum of the voters in April, and the state AFL-CIO president said he was "very hopeful" the court would decide his case before that time.

He stressed his view that reapportionment is not a "cure-all" for Michigan or any other state.

"If we had a restoration of representative government in the states, and we had the will of a majority of the people expressed through those legislative bodies, we would find that the states could assume what most of the ultra-conservative politicians in our country think should be done, or what they give lip-service to: that is, have the states take more responsibility, rather than having the federal government move in."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A "NO NEGOTIATIONS" battle has been promised by Rep. Howard W. Smith, the venerable Virginia Democratic chairman of the House Rules Committee, to regain that group's power to blockade the Kennedy Administration's domestic program. It would seem that the House leaders might well consider whether they should not answer with a considerably broader reform than they imposed upon Smith in the 87th Congress.

The Rules Committee was enlarged from 12 to 15 members two years ago. This gave the leaders a chance for an 8-7 margin in getting clearance of Administration measures for floor action. If the committee should revert to 12 members, the record shows that Smith would have 6-6 tie votes on clearing most such bills—and a tie vote keeps a bill bottled up.

The President spelled out the issue very clearly in his television interview Dec. 17. He said if the Rules Committee is not kept at 15 members, "we can't function, we are through."

"Nothing controversial" would reach the House floor in that case, Mr. Kennedy elaborated; "our whole program would be emasculated."

The Rules Committee is so powerful that it can even block appointment of a conference committee to consider compromises between different versions of a bill that both houses have actually passed. It is utterly impossible for the Administration to operate if Smith, securely in command of two Democratic and four Republican votes on a 12-member committee, is given a new lease on personal dictatorial powers.

WHEN THE 87TH CONGRESS convened in 1961, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn protected Smith from drastic reductions of the Rules Committee powers. He chose the mildest alternative in supporting a slight enlargement of the committee to reflect more accurately the temper of the House as a whole.

But stronger measures are available. In the 81st Congress, a 21-day rule prevailed which allowed the chairman of the appropriate legislative committee to call up a bill for floor action if Smith misused his power to bottle it up. The result was that some bills were reluctantly given a green light by the chairman and others were literally jerked from his clutches.

Another reform proposed for the next Congress would be adoption of a 7-day rule on conference committee agreements. When a bill has been passed by both Senate and House in differing versions, the Rules Committee would be given exactly a week to decide whether to allow a floor vote on the appointment of House conferees; if he refused to move, the appropriate legislative committee chairman or ranking member could thereafter bring up the proposal.

THERE ARE OTHER obvious available reforms. For example, the tradition is that in a 12-member Rules Committee under Democratic control, the eight Democrats are split between four southern and four northern members. All the Republicans traditionally are conservative and at least two of the Democrats. The leadership, made up of seniors, is exceedingly reluctant to tamper with such traditions. But power carries a responsibility.

"Judge" Smith of Virginia, nearly 80 years old and an "against er," does not represent the thinking of the majority of the House. If he did, he would not fear to send bills to the floor. It is because he knows that many measures he opposes would pass that he tries to keep them pigeon-holed.

The vote on keeping the Rules Committee at 15 members may be extremely close. A shift of only three votes would have killed the increase two years ago. Still, the Democratic leaders cannot afford to allow Smith to take a "no negotiations" position without plainly warning him that he is inviting more drastic counter-action. The Kennedy Administration cannot be put into the position of being unable to get House decisions on major programs in the two years leading up to the 1964 presidential election.

How to Buy:

Price Rises in '63 Due to Take New Nibble Out of Pay Check

By Sidney Margolius

A YEAR ago this department forecast higher living costs of 1 to 2 percent for 1962. They went up 1.4 percent. For 1963, you can expect more of the same to nibble at the purchasing power of your wages. Particularly you can anticipate higher housing and operating costs, some food price rises and further boosts in charges for medical care. The buy of the year will be home appliances.

The job outlook for the new year is fair—only fair, because a stubborn pool of unemployment still remains from the last recession, and signs indicate the possibility of a business downturn late in '63. Booming car sales have been a main employment prop this past year, but recently, used-car sales have been slowing down.

The prospect of continuing high prices and a sluggish economy means your family needs to practice smart buying and money management to protect your living standards and avoid financial jams.

Two expenses you especially need to watch are food and household operating costs. Here are pointers for securing best values in 1963:

Food Outlook: Look for better values in pork, which will be in heavier supply in 1963. Beef prices will remain at about the same fairly-high levels but veal and lamb will be noticeably expensive. To keep meat bills down, you will need to rely more heavily on broiler-fryers, which will be in big supply and priced low.

Two more protein food bargains will be cheese and eggs—especially this spring.

Also shop carefully for the better values in breads, other baked goods and cereals. Their prices have been advancing steadily this past year. You can whip costs into line here by more home preparation of cereals and baked goods.

Canned vegetables are in abundant supply. Canned corn, snap beans, tomato products and frozen orange juice concentrate are especially good buys this year.

Cars: Prices of used cars jumped over 7 percent in 1962, and in recent months have been priced at the highest level in 10 years. The average used-car currently costs about $85 more than a year ago.

But the new stickiness in used-car sales noticed by market reporters means a family expecting to buy a new car soon had better do it early while used models still command relatively high prices. Used-car buyers, on the other hand, now can find more room for price negotiation.

Housing: The news for mortgage-seekers is moderately optimistic. While mortgage rates are holding on to high levels, the extra fees lenders charge, such as "points" and stiff closing fees, are being reduced because of increased competition. The National Association of Mutual Savings Banks also reports a tendency among lenders to permit larger mortgages with lower down payments.

Home Renovation: This will be a good year to finish an expansion attic, install new heating or plumbing equipment or put on a new roof. Prices of heating equipment especially have been reduced, plumbing equipment costs have been pared, lumber prices are down, and asphalt roofing has taken a big price cut.

Rentals: Renting families must expect continuing high costs for at least another year. The best the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Statistics can offer is that the recent rate increase in rental charges is less than it has been in recent years. Only the luxury apartments that speculators have been building hectically in large cities show any signs of price reduction so far.

Home Equipment: Any family in the market for a refrigerator, washer, dryer, range, television set, vacuum cleaner or other appliances will find unusually good prices this year, and especially this winter.

Prices of appliances have come down every year for the past five years, but they took their sharpest plunge of all in 1962. Competition is very brisk between the private-brand appliances of the large retailers and mail-order houses, and the national brands sold at cut prices by discount stores and other competitive retailers.

Generally you will find values of the private brands and the discounted national brands approximately equal.

Look for sharpest price cuts on refrigerators in mid-winter, and on washing machines in the spring.

Clothing Buys: Wash-and-wear and easy-care garments will be cheaper than ever. Prices of synthetic fibers such as Orlon and the new spandex elastic fabrics, more durable and easier to wash than rubber elastic fabrics, have been chopped sharply.

From Soup to Nuts:

If You Think 1962 Was Tough, At Least HOPE for Next Year

By Jane Goodsell

PRITHEE, why so grim and sad?
Listen, things aren't all that bad!
Sure, the world is in a mess,
But isn't it always, more or less?

Things were plenty tense, it's true,
In nineteen-hundred-sixty-two.
Life was full of jolts and shocks,
Riots, storms and falling rocks.

Trouble bubbled everywhere,
In Cuba, Guam and Belgrave Square,
In Mississippi and Manila
And Elizabeth Taylor's Roman villa.

Everything from smog to sex
Seemed to grow ever more complex;
Critics deplored our moral decay,
But hasn't it always been that way?

The twentieth century's not the first
To rate itself the very worst.
Every era's had its share
Of jangled nerves and black despair.

The Status Quo has always been
A fancy term for the mess we're in.
Mankind, since the world began,
Has jumped from fire to frying pan.

PALEOLITHIC man, no doubt,
Found plenty to complain about;
The Middle Ages were grim and dark,
And even the Renaissance was no lark.

Man, throughout the centuries,
Has railed at life's anomalies,
And groaned into the midnight blue,
"Oh, what is this world coming to?"

Earth's a risky habitat,
There isn't any doubt of that,
But tell the truth now, honestly,
Is there anywhere you'd rather be?

No? Well, in that case, let's cheer up,
And pass around the wassail cup
And, taking a chin-up attitude,
Shift to a merry Christmas mood.

Let's toast ourselves in Yuletide cheer
To joy throughout the coming year
And, unafraid but cautiously,
Let's welcome nineteen-sixty-three!

SHEET METAL WORKERS are not all husky he-man types, Lola Boettcher proves by her presence as a delegate to the union's recent 31st convention (top photo). Mrs. Boettcher was the only woman delegate, but two-thirds of the members of Local 547, Minneapolis, which she serves as recording secretary, are women who have proved their skill in assembling intricate louvers and aluminum shutters produced by the Louver Manufacturing Co. The bottom photo shows Mrs. Boettcher on the job operating a wire stitching machine.

Mankind Dehumanized:

There's No Laughter On Production Line

WHEN CHARLIE CHAPLIN gave us "Modern Times," his take-off on the mass production line a generation ago, the whole world roared with laughter. Yet, even then, it was laughter overladen with the tragedy of men reduced to the status of robots and finally overwhelmed by the machine. Today it is infinitely worse.

There was no laughter recently as members of the Intl. Labor Press Association toured the Ford automated engine plant in Cleveland and watched automobile motors roll in as rough forgings and less than an hour later roll out as finished engines ready to pound over the nation's roads.

The plant wasn't such a dreadful place. It was clean and neat and tidy and orderly enough. Everyone wore his safety glasses conscientiously, even though they didn't seem too necessary. It was noisy with the constant thump of metal presses, the whirring of never-ending production lines, the racket of power-drive wrenches and screw drivers. But the noise wasn't really deafening.

There was an oppressive odor of hot metal shavings and the heavy air of any factory where there is no daylight and there are no lengthening shadows to tell the time of day. The air had a curious, dead quality. Yet, undoubtedly it was pure.

But what hit the pit of the stomach was the dehumanization of the men who worked the never-ending lines. They never laughed. They barely spoke beyond the minimum needs of the job. They carried on their little jobs—a bolt tightened here, a part added there—with mechanical perfection. Thirteen seconds for this operation, an interval of four seconds, six seconds for another operation and the ever-growing engine kept moving beyond them.

Inexorably the engines came, by slow hundreds and even endless thousands, one after another, and just as inexorably they went on, each process adding something to the naked forging.

There was skill needed for some of the operations and unconsciously you rejoiced for the men who could use their skill. But for most of the processes there was no skill needed, only a rhythmic repetition after repetition of some simple operation.

You had the feeling that either there ought to be less automation or more of it to give the man on the job the chance either to run the machine in his own right or to defy it.

Collective Bargaining Report:

Vacations Lengthen For More Workers

Union contracts are changing the nation's vacation patterns as more workers benefit by more weeks of leisure each year.

During the past decade alone, there have been dramatic changes in union-negotiated vacation provisions, according to an analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research in the December issue of the American Federationist.

In 1952, only 4 percent of major union agreements—those covering 1,000 or more workers—provided maximum vacations of four weeks or longer. Fifty percent of contracts had maximum vacations of less than three weeks.

By 1961—the most recent data available from the Labor Dept.'s annual survey of union contract provisions—43 percent of all agreements provided four or more weeks of vacation. Only 8 percent had maximums of less than three weeks.

For 1962, the Research Dept. analysis notes, additional improvements have brought the majority of union contracts up to the four weeks or more vacation standard.

The analysis, a Collective Bargaining Report feature of the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, notes that labor's drive for a shorter workweek has spurred the trend towards longer vacations.

Among the innovations mentioned is the agreement the Steelworkers negotiated this year with the major can companies providing a special 13-week vacation every five years for employes with 15 or more years of service.

First 'Sabbatical'

This, the article points out, is the first form of "sabbatical" leave negotiated in a major settlement.

While vacations longer than four weeks are still infrequent, the article cites five-week vacations negotiated by the Brewery Workers in a number of contracts, and a St. Louis agreement reached by the union early this year which provides six weeks of vacation for employes with 20 years' service.

The AFL-CIO analysis also notes a new trend towards paid vacations in the construction industry despite its seasonal and casual nature. Twenty-six percent of the major construction contracts included in the 1961 survey provided vacations, compared with 20 percent in a 1957 survey.

Most of the construction vacation agreements require employers to contribute specific amounts per hour to a central fund for distribution as vacation payments. This is similar to the procedures used in other seasonal industries such as apparel and maritime.

Indicative of the rapid pace of improved vacation provisions in union contracts, the study notes, is the fact that more than one-fourth of all new agreements provide liberalized vacations. The most common improvements are the shortening of service requirements to qualify for a second, third or fourth week and the addition of another week for long-service employes.

Service Bands Aid Cultural Center

The wholehearted support of the musicians has been given to recordings by the four major U.S. military bands—Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force—to be sold for the benefit of the National Cultural Center projected for Washington.

The albums are being recorded in Washington this month and will be placed on sale in the spring. They will carry a manufacturer's list price of $3.98 for monaural and $4.98 for stereo. Each band will record the Star Spangled Banner, but otherwise the selections will differ.

The project was constituted by Jarold A. Kieffer, secretary-coordinator of the National Cultural Center, who particularly cited Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians and Carl Haverlin, president of Broadcast Music, Inc., for their cooperation.

MOBIL REFINERY picket at Trenton, Mich., still can smile as striker's wife and children warm themselves at home-made stove in freezing weather. The union, OCAW Local 7-456, has been on strike since June 27 to preserve contract from massive management "raid" attempt. Wives and children sang carols in front of Christmas tree and picketed the refinery office the day this picture was taken.

Kenin Hails Aid Formula For the Arts

New York—The formula of aid for the performing arts advanced last year by Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, then secretary of labor, was called "necessary, realistic and workable" by Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians.

Kenin outlined the plan during a panel discussion of the workability of the formula held during the convention of the Association of Concert Managers. Its activation, he maintained, would conserve human resources and propagate new talents.

Goldberg advanced his formula when he handed down an arbitration award in a contract dispute between the Musicians and the Metropolitan Opera Co. which threatened the Met's season. It calls upon federal and state governments, local communities, individual patrons, business and organized labor to share the promotion and the costs of the "undernourished" performing arts.

The AFM president took strong issue with those who have been fearful that government subsidy might foster state control of the arts. The fact that the role of backer is shared, he claimed, renders any subversion impossible.

He urged early application of the formula to preserve the human resources that "contribute to all civilizing influences."

Other panelists were Patrick Hayes, Washington, D. C., past president of the association; Frederick Holborn, White House aide; Roger L. Stevens, board chairman of the National Cultural Center; John H. McFayden, executive director of the New York State Arts Council; Actor Hal Holbrook; Andrew H. Gomery, New York banker, and Monroe Bush, vice president of the Old Dominion Foundation, Washington, D. C.

Job Gains Cited In ARA Program

State, local and federal projects approved under the emergency public works program are generating "approximately 200,000 man-months of direct employment," the Area Redevelopment Administration has announced.

Projects thus far approved involve $144 million of the $400 million appropriated by Congress, Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., said.

"The first effects on the economy already are being felt" as workers have begun jobs on the projects and "received their first paychecks," Batt declared.

The projects approved include hospital and health facilities, public buildings, water and sewage facilities for the states and cities. Federal programs include small flood control projects and highway improvement in the national forests and national parks.

Forand Assails AMA On 'Dishonest' Data

The American Medical Association is guilty of "stupidity, dishonesty or cupidity" when it argues that elderly Americans with financial problems are "an exceedingly small group," former Rep. Aime J. Forand declared in an address to the Greater Washington Council of Senior Citizens.

Forand, who heads the National Council of Senior Citizens, said the AMA Committee on Aging was at odds with "all the studies of the economic problems of older people made by reliable researchers" when it declared in a recent report that "older persons are much better off economically than some people seem to think."

This position, the NCSC president declared, was "completely opposite" from facts disclosed by the Senate Special Committee on Aging which reported last June that more than half of all persons 65 and older had total cash incomes of less than $1,000 in 1960.

Forand charged that the AMA was using "one of the finest propaganda machines in history" to sell the idea that older people can afford to pay for their own medical care without a social security health insurance program.

He cited government statistics showing that an elderly couple needs about $250 a month to maintain a "modest but adequate" standard of living, but that the average old-age benefit paid retired workers under social security is only $76 a month for those already on the rolls and $80 for those now retiring.

"No multi-million dollar public relations programs by the AMA are going to hide the fact that millions of America's older citizens are in desperate need of health care now," Forand declared.

He added that millions more would face the problem in the future unless the social security approach is adopted to enable people to contribute during their working years toward health insurance in retirement.

AMA officials he charged, are prone to issue millions of words "on matters outside their competence—such as the economic problems of older people"—but "seem to have a muzzle over their mouths" on matters within their competence, "such as how to protect American mothers against untried drugs like thalidomide."

In this respect, he accused the organization of keying its pronouncements to its self interests—"millions of dollars" in free services and medical journal advertising from drug firms and druggists.

Forand said the campaign of the 1.5 million members in the NCSC to focus public attention on the health care needs of older people "was properly reflected in the recent election returns."

"We have had sufficient debate on this issue," he concluded. "The facts are available for all Congress to see. The time has now come for Congress to act."

New Hearings Ordered On Advertiser Boycott

The 9th U.S. Circuit of Appeals has reversed a National Labor Relations Board ruling that unions may lawfully distribute "do not patronize" handbills against television station advertisers, and has remanded the case to the labor board for further hearings.

In a second decision that quickly followed, the same appellate court reversed the NLRB's dismissal of charges against a union that handbilled markets that bought candy and specialties from a struck distributor, asking customers of the markets not to purchase the named goods supplied by the struck firm.

The NLRB had ruled that the managers of the retail stores were not covered under boycott provisions of the Landrum-Griffin Act, on the ground that they were not included in the group defined as "employes." The appellate court disagreed.

In the first case, handbills were one feature of a public information campaign by two unions which struck TV Station KXTV in Sacramento, Calif., on Sept. 26, 1960, when a new owner, John Hay "Jock" Whitney sought major contract cutbacks.

The NLRB decided 2-1, almost a year ago, that the handbilling of advertisers was protected by the "publicity" section of the Taft-Hartley Act. The four-judge court rejected this reasoning, saying the board decision leads to "the rather remarkable conclusion that a television station can be a producer of automobiles, bread, gasoline and beer" because advertisers distribute those products.

The court ordered the board to hold hearings and make a ruling on two other union arguments—that the handbilling was protected by the free speech and free press provisions of the 1st Amendment to the Constitution; and that the T-H section involved in the case relates only to union activity which "tends to threaten, coerce or restrain."

No such activity was involved at KXTV, said the unions—the Broadcast Engineers & Technicians and the Television & Radio Artists. In the second case, a local of the expelled Teamsters was involved.

A Day With the NAM Finds Nothing Changed

New York—Heard in floor statements at the NAM's 1962 Congress of American Industry:

"A satisfactory return is as much as the consumer will pay. The consumer will govern the rate of return. If the price is too high, there'll be plenty of competition. . . ."

"Regardless of the New Frontier NLRB efforts to undercut the law, we still have now the most effective body of restrictions on union conduct since 1935. . . ."

Appraisal of the Kennedy Administration's care of the nation's economy: "The crows are guarding the corn. . . ."

Midway in the panel meeting on the NLRB: "I understand there's a representative of the AFL-CIO News present." Then much later: "Of course, he has every right to be here. . . ."

Toronto Labor Backs Health Center Project

Toronto, Ont.—A proposed health center at which comprehensive prepaid medical care and hospitalization would be provided for a minimum of 50,000 residents of Metropolitan Toronto has been endorsed by the Toronto & District Labor Council, representing 110,000 members of unions affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress.

A master plan for the proposed center was developed after 18 months of study and surveys. Fifty-five unions contributed to a fund that met the expenses of the study. More are expected to be enrolled in recruiting members for the center.

The proposal includes the utilization of "satellite" health centers as the operation grows, and the construction of a general hospital in close association with the plan.

Dr. John Hastings, associate professor of public health and preventive medicine at the University of Toronto School of Hygiene, who headed the group which drew up the plans, made no estimate of the capital cost. He urged that the center provide a full range of benefits from the beginning, including preventive and diagnostic service, treatment and rehabilitation facilities and dental services.

In a study of several prepaid group practice plans in the United States, Hastings worked closely with Ted Goldberg, medical care specialist in the Steelworkers' Research Dept.

Vice Pres. Donald Montgomery of the Toronto Council, chairman of the center's study committee, predicted the average 20 percent increase in rates announced by the doctor-sponsored Physicians Services, Inc., effective Jan. 1, would spur community interest in the health center plan.

Unions which affiliate with the center are expected to negotiate for transferring to the health center plan the funds now provided for health care and hospitalization under their contracts with employers.

"Remember, this is an innovation in Canada," said Hastings. "You are going to be watched and judged in competition with other facilities. This plan is not merely a financial gimmick—it is an attempt to apply the modern concept of modern group practice in order to provide a better standard of medical care."

'Persistent' Joblessness Laid to Several Factors

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Sixty percent of American family heads who were out of work in the recession of 1960-61 were also unemployed at some time during the previous three years.

This "persistent" unemployment, which means economic disaster for some families, is found to be closely related to a number of socioeconomic characteristics—such as occupation and education, and particularly the local market area—according to a study by the University of Michigan Survey Research Center.

The center's report on "Persistent Unemployment 1957-61" has just been published by the W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, Kalamazoo, which sponsored the study.

Prof. Eva Mueller and Jay Schmiedeskamp point out that "brief spells of unemployment often do not cause a major disruption in the family's financial situation."

"Relatively small income losses are met primarily by drawing on savings and 'economizing' temporarily, although at times debts are incurred or help from relatives is needed," they said. "By contrast, prolonged or repetitive unemployment greatly reduces the ability of a family to make discretionary purchases, even after the main breadwinner returns to work."

While seven out of 10 wage or salary-earning family heads reported having escaped unemployment during the four years studied, more than half the remainder were out of work at least once, and a substantial number more than once.

Over a fourth of family heads unemployed in 1960-61 were out of work more than half of that year, the analysts continue.

"Of those family heads unemployed more than half the time during a 12-month period, at least 40 percent estimated their financial loss at $2,000 or more," they said.

"Such losses often resulted in the family's having to get help from relatives, going into debt, moving to cheaper quarters, other family members having to go to work, or occasionally going on relief.

"It is noteworthy that families receiving unemployment compensation during the entire period of their unemployment less frequently had to rely on such drastic measures."

$1.25 Minimum Bill Introduced in Ontario

Toronto, Ont.—A resolution calling for a provincial minimum wage of $1.25 an hour has been introduced in the legislature by Norman Davison, New Democratic Party member from Hamilton East. At present there is no minimum rate for men. For women, there is a sliding scale under which less can be paid in smaller communities than the 65 to 70 cents set for Toronto and Hamilton.

Labor Warns Diefenbaker:

Canadian 'Austerity' Policy Seen Drag on Jobs, Growth

Ottawa, Ont.—Sharp criticism of the economic policies of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker's government has been filed in a memorandum to the government by the Canadian Labor Congress.

The 1.5-million-member group forecast the government's austerity program would have a restrictive effect on the economy and would aggravate already serious unemployment.

The 7,500-word document, read at a meeting of CLC officers and representatives with Diefenbaker and his cabinet, covered a wide range of topics—automation, social security, treatment of persons receiving welfare, labor legislation, strikes, broadcasting and international affairs. The presentation of such statements by various groups is a long-standing tradition, believed to be peculiar to Canada.

Dangers Listed

A discussion of economic matters was a major part of the labor memorandum. The CLC said it would be unwise to regard emergency import restrictions as a long-term solution to economic problems.

"Such restrictive measures are out of step with today's need for substantial liberalization of world trade," the brief said. "They are out of step with the important tariff changes which the Kennedy Administration is seeking to bring about between the United States and Western Europe. Liberalization of trade, however, should not be at the expense of any one industry or industries. There must be adequate compensation for any employes and employers affected."

Cutbacks in the government's building and expansion program have reduced already limited employment opportunities, the CLC said. Citing gross national product figures, the memorandum commented:

"What has been happening is that Canada has been standing virtually still, or slipping backward, while other countries have been forging ahead. We simply cannot afford the wastefulness of capital goods used below capacity or the nonproductivity, let alone the inhumanity, of idle manpower."

Proposals advanced by the CLC included: assistance to secondary industry to compete effectively with foreign products; export subsidies under certain circumstances; seasonal shifts in monetary and fiscal policies to encourage winter construction; special forms of regional aid; and massive expansion in the public sector of the economy.

The unions found satisfaction in increased support for economic planning.

"We wish to stress now, as before, the importance, even the urgency, of a program of economic planning so that the material and human resources of our country can be fully and effectively utilized to strengthen our economy, to stimulate business and to give our workers jobs," the CLC said.

The government's suggestion of a National Economic Development Board was welcomed, and the hope was expressed that it would be truly representative with members nominated by the organizations concerned.

The labor group also referred favorably to the announced intention of the government to aid employers and workers in meeting the impact of automation. The location of industry was also cited as one requiring attention in the face of a strong disposition by corporations to transfer plants from one locality to another to gain advantages for themselves.

CLC Proposals

"The transfer of a plant from one location to another may result in loss of jobs, in lost savings represented by homes rendered valueless, a dislocation of family life and other severe social and economic disturbances," the memorandum said. To the community which has been deserted, the loss of a plant or industry may mean blight and industrial decay.

"The corporation is already required to meet certain standards for the protection of employes and public. It is consistent with the evolution of such policies that corporations should be required to justify any proposal to locate or relocate in the light of public interest."

Major Role of Unions Praised in Rights Fight

Organized labor is playing a major role in a civil rights "revolution of rising expectations," the American Jewish Committee's National Labor Service observed in releasing its annual review of progress in the civil rights field.

"In contrast to peoples in so many areas of the world who are reaching for the promise of equality, we in America are working for fulfillment of promises as old as our nation itself," AJC Pres. A. M. Sonnabend said in a preface to The People Take the Lead, issued each year in connection with Bill of Rights Day, Dec. 15.

The review lists legislative, administrative, judicial and voluntary actions contributing to civil rights progress.

Advancements over the past 12 months, Sonnabend said, reveal that equality in America finds expression "in the court room and the voting booths, in schools and colleges, in hiring halls and renting offices, in restaurants, theaters, hospitals and all other public facilities."

A particularly significant step forward, he said, was Pres. Kennedy's executive order barring racial and religious discrimination in federally assisted or insured housing, issued last Nov. 20.

Copies of The People Take the Lead are available from the AJC's National Labor Service, 165 East 56th St., New York 22, N. Y., at 25 cents per copy, $20 per hundred.

'Tomorrow . . . Peace and Freedom':

Free Labor Institute Graduates 2d Class

"Tomorrow our children will smile happily, because they will be able to walk through streets where there will be no boots or rifles, because they will live with peace and freedom."

This, declared Manuel Matamala M. of Chile, is the ultimate purpose for which he and 36 other young Latin American leaders have been trained so intensively in union organization and administration.

Matamala spoke for the second group to graduate from the American Institute for Free Labor Development. The 37-member class included young leaders from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Surinam, Trinidad and Venezuela.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany presented diplomas to the graduates at special exercises and read a message of congratulations from Pres. Kennedy.

"The free man anywhere," said Kennedy, "seeks an end to poverty and deprivation everywhere. He seeks equality in opportunity for all persons and justice in the rewards a man receives for his labors on earth. Above all, he believes so thoroughly in his own dignity that he cannot deny it to others."

And that, commented Meany in rereading this passage, expresses very concisely the institute's reason for being.

Contract Approved

Earlier, the institute's board of trustees announced it had approved a two-year contract with the U.S. Agency for Intl. Development to operate a training center in Lima, Peru.

Plans also were approved to negotiate with AID for the financing of centers in Central America and Jamaica. Training centers are now operating in Ecuador and Venezuela.

The board also elected to its ranks Dr. Rafael Caldera and Chase Mellen, Jr. Caldera is a professor at Catholic University in Caracas, Venezuela, and a leader in the Christian Democratic movement. Mellen, of New York City, is a fund-raising specialist and as the institute's financial secretary will direct fund-raising efforts among foundations and other sources.

The graduates heard from the following speakers at the exercises and at a banquet in their honor:

- Meany, who serves as president of the institute, traced the philosophy of the U.S. labor movement. "Samuel Gompers set up the American labor movement on a basis of American tradition which believes that all men are equal, and this philosophy has been maintained all through the years," he declared.
- Under Sec. of Labor John Henning told the graduates the peoples of all the Americas "are committed alike to the preservation of human freedom . . . we are committed alike to the removal of all tyrannies, whether economic, political or social."
- Teodoro Moscoso, U.S. coordinator of the Alliance for Progress, said that just as American labor strongly supported Pres. Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal revolution, their task now is to take an active part in their own social revolutions and to keep them "democratic and peaceful."
- Luis Alberto Sanchez, rector of the Universidad Nacional Mayor of San Marcos, Peru—oldest university in the western hemisphere—offered a note "of unvarnished realism and harsh warning."

The urgent gap in education, with a literacy rate of roughly 50 percent, is multiplied a hundredfold among workers, Sanchez declared. Worse, he added, is the slipping back into illiteracy when opportunities are lacking.

Sanchez appealed to the graduates to continue their growth, to pass on all they have learned to others and to use their leadership responsibilities to promote education for everyone. He urged that Latin trade unionists become politically conscious both effectively to fight Communism and to implement the principles and ideals of a free society.

- Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO inter-American representative and the institute's executive director, told the graduates the purpose of the institute is to train a new type of union leader—a capable organizer and administrator with a sense of mission. He said the institute's proof of success is its widening support from progressive-minded people in the U.S. and in Latin America.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES of The American Institute for Free Labor Development, gathering for the graduation of the second group of young Caribbean and Latin American union leaders, announced plans to open a training center in Lima, Peru. The Agency for Intl. Development will finance the Lima center under a two-year contract with the institute, which already operates centers in Ecuador and Venezuela. The board also approved plans to establish centers in Central America and Jamaica.

ILGWU Aids Kenya School For Tailors

Philadelphia—The Philadelphia Dress Joint Board of the Ladies' Garment Workers has set up a $10,000 fund to finance a year-long training school for garment workers in Kenya, East Africa.

The AFL-CIO will assist in the project by contributing the services of Maida Springer, staff member in the federation's Dept. of Intl. Affairs, for two to three months. She will supervise the establishment of the school in Nairobi, capital city of Kenya, which is the largest garment manufacturing nation in East Africa.

William Ross, manager of the joint board, said the purpose of the school will be to help the Kenya workers upgrade their skills and obtain government qualifying certificates. The lack of such certificates, he noted, has been used by employers to depress wages in the industry.

The school will operate under the general direction of the Kenya Tailors & Textile Workers Union, with teachers drawn from those union members holding Group I master tailor certificates. Four-month evening courses will be held for employed members holding lower certificates and seeking to upgrade their skills. In addition, the school will conduct six-month day courses for unemployed members now qualified only for semi-skilled jobs.

Peterson Named NLRB Examiner

Ivar H. Peterson of Cincinnati, general counsel of the Railway Clerks, has been appointed a trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board.

Born of Swedish parents in Finland, Peterson was a member of the NLRB from Mar. 21, 1952, through Aug. 27, 1956, under an appointment by former Pres. Truman. In 1938-1946 he had served the board in various legal capacities in Washington and was administrative assistant to Sen. Wayne Morse (Ore.), then a Republican, now a Democrat.

After the expiration of his term as a board member, he engaged in private law practice in Seattle before becoming general counsel for the Railway Clerks in 1958.

International Session Examines Impact of Automation on Workers

London—Formation of a British counterpart to the U.S. Foundation on Automation & Employment has been followed up by a series of international conferences here on the impact of automation on workers.

One set of meetings brought together specialists and educators from the U.S. and more than a dozen universities in Western Europe in a "conference of scholars" at the London School of Economics.

Another conference was held by members of both the American and British foundations. Board members of both groups then met with a committee from the conference of scholars.

Joint Statement Issued

Machinists Pres. A. J. Hayes and John I. Snyder, chairman and president of U.S. Industries Inc., who are co-chairmen of the U.S. foundation, said in a joint statement explaining the reasons for the meetings:

"We recognize that the spread of automation cannot and should not be stopped. But the fruits and benefits that automation can bring can never be achieved if the effect on the workers is not considered and dealt with.

"For the first time, we are joining together experts from both sides of the Atlantic in order to share our mutual experience and cross-fertilize our thinking about the major problems that automation is creating, and will continue to create, in both the United States and Western Europe."

Pres. Kennedy and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent messages of goodwill to the meetings.

Kennedy Sends Message

Kennedy expressed the hope that the conference would contribute to "the essential thinking and planning which we must do in order to make automation the servant, rather than the master of the people."

Meany said that American labor "gladly accepts the idea of automation, as it should, but it cannot accept and must not accept what can only be perilous sacrifices in job security and income."

The distinction between a democratic society and a totalitarian society, Meany observed, is that the former is concerned with the present as well as the future in economic planning while a Commuist regime is "forever renewing its pledge of a better tomorrow in order to exact untold sacrifices from an exploited people today."

The American Foundation on Automation & Employment was jointly established last April by the IAM and U.S. Industries, which manufactures automation equipment, to sponsor research into techniques for alleviating the effects of automation. USI provides funds for the foundation's work based on income from sale or lease of the company's equipment.

The British foundation was set up last month with William J. Carron, president of the Amalgamated Engineering Union, as chairman, and Lord Robens, chairman of the British Coal Board, as vice chairman.

Among other U.S. representatives at the London meetings were Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City Central Labor Council, and Victor Riesel, labor columnist and vice chairman of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped.

ILO Parley Acts to Hike Asian Living Standards

A broad program designed to help millions of Asians improve their standards of living has been adopted at the Asian regional conference sponsored by the Intl. Labor Organization and concluded recently in Melbourne, Australia.

The conference, attended by more than 300 delegates from 19 nations, approved what is expected to become known as the "Melbourne Resolution," which includes these major points:

- Establishing the right of workers to be free to choose their own jobs in contrast to the near-peonage that has prevailed in some countries.
- Developing free, strong unions and management organizations.
- Providing work for all who seek it.
- Extending technical and research assistance to Asian nations.
- Providing workers with basic skills for industrial jobs through speeding up apprenticeship and other training programs.

Throughout the conference speakers bitterly denounced Communist China's attack on India. Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate to the tripartite sessions, condemned both Communist China and the Soviet Union, declaring "the ever-present threat of aggressions of the Communist bloc" has forced other countries to spend "far more than would be necessary to meet their minimum defense requirements."

This threat, he added, "has retarded otherwise achievable economic advancement and improvement of living standards in so many of the developing countries."

He pointed to the Communist attack on India which "has tragically nullified years of toil and sacrifice of the Indian people" to raise living standards and speed economic development.

George P. Delaney, special adviser to U.S. Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and U.S. government delegate, sharply attacked the stand of Soviet delegate N. S. Vassilenko for attempting to use the conference as a platform to attack U.S. aid programs in Asia.

Delaney charged that the Soviet delegate in his attack on U.S. programs did not mention a single word on how India "has been forced to shift gears from her plan of economic improvements to a defense economy."

Crosswaith Honored on 70th Birthday

New York—Frank R. Crosswaith, veteran of 40 years of working for economic and social causes, was honored on his 70th birthday by more than 200 labor and civic leaders with a testimonial at the Harlem Labor Center.

Maida Springer of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs was mistress of ceremonies. Judge Jonah J. Goldstein, a close friend; Mrs. Daisy Allen of the New York Housing Authority; Richard Banks, Jr., financial chairman of the Negro Labor Assembly, and Mrs. Winifred Gittens, of the Negro Labor Committee, joined in presenting citations from Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Chairman William Reid of the New York City Housing Authority. Negro Labor Assembly delegates presented him with a trophy.

Crosswaith, a one-time organizer for the Ladies' Garment Workers who helped establish the Sleeping Car Porters, during the 1930s assisted in setting up the former Harlem Labor Union, which later became the Negro Labor Council.

Pres. Kennedy Says:

Overhauling of Tax System First Step Toward Growth

Pres. Kennedy has called for a major overhaul of the national tax system as an essential first step toward stimulating the economy and assuring long-range economic growth.

The opening round in the President's campaign for a new understanding of the government's role in the economy through budget and tax policies came in an address to a business group—the Economic Club of New York.

The President did not spell out the specifics of his program, now being prepared for the 88th Congress. He did, however, lay down the basic guidelines for the Administration's economic thinking.

The choice before the nation, he stressed, "boils down to one of doing nothing and thereby risking a widening gap between our actual and potential growth in output, profits and employment, or taking action at the federal level to raise our entire economy to a new and higher level of business activity." The choice also, he emphasized, is not between tax reduction and the avoidance of large federal deficits.

"An economy hampered by restrictive tax rates will never produce enough revenues to balance our budget as it will never produce enough jobs or enough profits," he said. "Surely, the lesson of the last decade is that budget deficits are not caused by wildeyed spenders but by slow economic growth and periodic recessions. . ."

The present tax system, said Kennedy, "exerts too heavy a drag on growth in peacetime—it siphons out of the private economy too large a share of personal and business purchasing power—it reduces the financial incentives for personal effort, investment and risk-taking."

Proposed Tests

He proposed three tests for any new tax legislation:

- It should reduce net taxes "by a sufficiently early date and a sufficiently large amount to do the job required . . . the greater danger is a tax cut too little or too late to be effective."
- It must increase private consumption. After-tax income could and should be greater, providing stronger markets for the products of American industry. Legislation must reduce personal as well as corporate income taxes for those in the lower brackets "who are certain to spend their additional take-home pay . . ."
- It should improve both the equity and simplicity of the present tax system by enactment of long-needed reforms, a broadening of the tax base and elimination of special tax privileges.

Kennedy asserted that tax legislation following these guidelines would not "revive an inflationary spiral or adversely affect our balance of payments." He added that enactment of the "right bill" next year "will in due course increase our gross national product by several times the amount of taxes actually cut."

The President stressed also the government's commitment to "expenditure control," declaring that next year's budget "will hold domestic outlays at their present level" although defense and space expenditures "will necessarily rise."

Kennedy's presentation of Administration views to the New York business group is regarded as the first of many attempts by Administration spokesmen to line up support for the new application of fiscal policy.

Mills Opposed to Cut

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the tax-writing House Ways & Means Committee, has indicated in a news magazine interview that he is opposed to tax reduction before 1964 and then on a somewhat limited basis.

Another approach has been called for by the Committee for Economic Development, a business group, which urged a two-part program: reduction of all individual rates by 8 percent in 1963 with a top rate of 70 percent and a reduction in corporate tax rate from 52 to 47 percent; an additional cut of 6 percent in individual rates in 1964 and a drop in the corporate rate to 42 percent.

Planned federal spending in fiscal 1964 would be held to 1963 levels.

Export Curb Proposed On Out-Flow of Dollars

Curbs on wages while allowing full freedom for capital to move overseas will not solve the nation's balance of payments problems, the AFL-CIO told a congressional committee.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, the federation's research director, told a subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee that the attention given U.S. wage-price competitive relationships with other nations "distorts the balance of payments picture and can do more harm than good."

America's great economic danger, he said, is "persistent underutilization of manpower and physical resources" rather than "fears of a non-existent inflation."

If the U.S. generates sufficient economic strength at home, "effective solutions to payments problems can be found," Ruttenberg declared.

The payments problem "results largely," he noted, from "capital outflows and U.S. international commitments."

The U.S. cannot avoid her world commitments or "abdicate her leadership position," he said, but there can be some control over the flow of capital to other nations.

The U.S. has remained competitive with other nations, he said, with wages and prices rising less rapidly than those in other countries.

There Really Is an Eden —For Harried Executives

Something new has been added to that version of La Dolce Vita whipped up for executives in the six-figure salary set.

It's described as "a haven for harried executives . . . a place where the living is priceless and the price is deductible," as the tab is, of course, picked up by the stockholders.

It is even named Eden—Eden Roc Gardens in full—and it is located at Tucson, "in winter-wonderful Arizona." It was brought to light in a recent 3-column ad in the Wall Street Journal which modestly described it as "a new concept in longer life for your key executives."

This new concept, the ad explained, presents for the first time "a concise course of action enabling corporations to give special consideration (and added compensation) to the harried executive."

"On a lush and lovely 12-acre site," it hopefully rhapsodized, "a choice of spacious director's suites will become a second home for the executive and his family. A myriad of facilities supply every creature comfort. The famous resort atmosphere abounds with fascinating, health-giving diversions. But there's more. A skillful weaving of business and communications facilities will enable the executive to retain his active participation on the executive team. The projected concept includes, among other conveniences, a 400-seat auditorium with steno pool, PBX, TWX and ticker tape services.

"Nowhere else in the world is there a composite to equal Eden Roc Gardens . . ."

Arizona's feeling for corporations and executives, it seems, extends beyond its so-called "right-to-work" law to another law which, according to the ad, "permits corporate ownership of individual apartments, and an attractive lease-purchase plan," which "makes it economically attractive to utilize this novel asset in programming a rotating sequence of use by key executives."

There's nothing, of course, like being a rotating executive in Eden.

New Challenge Set In Minnesota Vote

Minnesota may not know its new governor when the state legislature convenes next month. Republican incumbent Elmer L. Andersen was certified as a 142-vote winner in the November election, but proceedings are under way that may swing the victory to Democratic Lieut. Gov. Karl Rolvaag.

Some 30,000 votes may be challenged, with the legality of the ballots submitted to a special three-judge district court panel in St. Paul for purposes of a recount.

Under Minnesota law, Andersen will hold office until the election winner is duly qualified and sworn in. The recount may not be completed until mid-January.

In Massachusetts, incumbent Republican Gov. John A. Volpe conceded the election to his Democratic rival, Endicott Peabody, calling off a new recount of ballots in Springfield ordered by Superior Court Judge Robert Sullivan. Peabody's margin over Volpe had previously been raised from 3,091 to 5,292.

THIS PLAQUE MARKS the dedication of the hydrotherapy section of St. Margaret Memorial Hospital in Pittsburgh to the memory of the late Pres. William Green of the former AFL. The section was made possible through the William Green Memorial Fund.

Contract Ban Urged For Anti-Union Firms

The Textile Workers Union of America has called on the Kennedy Administration to deny federal contracts to companies whose labor practices are in violation of federal law.

In an exchange of letters between TWUA Pres. William Pollock and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, the union suggested that a major target in the Administration's drive on discrimination in employment could well include employer discrimination against pro-union workers.

Pollock cited the recent award of a $1 million Defense Dept. contract to Burlington Industries, Inc., as an example of the way profits from government contracts help subsidize labor relations practices forbidden by federal law.

He noted that the contract went to Burlington, the largest U.S. textile firm, "despite the fact" that the National Labor Relations Board on Dec. 12 "found the company guilty" of unfair practices during an organizing campaign in 1961 at its plant in Cleveland, Tenn.

A three-member board panel unanimously set aside the results of an election which the TWUA lost Nov. 16, 1961, by a vote of 292-399, and ordered a new election. The board found Burlington management had engaged in unfair labor practices and had "created an atmosphere of fear and reprisal" which interfered with the employes' freedom of choice.

Such practices, Pollock told Wirtz, included a "captive-audience speech, threats to close the plant, and the creation of a climate of fear among workers, which resulted in the subsequent loss of an election by the union."

'Long and Continuing Record'

Burlington Industries, he added, is the same firm which closed its Peerless woolen division in Rossville, Ga., 30 miles from the Tennessee plant, after the Allied Industrial Workers won an election there earlier in 1961.

He urged the Administration to seek a pledge from employers "that they not only will not discriminate against workers on the basis of race, creed, color or national origin, but also will desist from discriminating against pro-union workers."

When Pollock proposed last Oct. 15 that the President's committee take up the issue of anti-union discrimination, Wirtz said Congress has "made the type of discrimination to which you refer the exclusive jurisdiction of the NLRB" and that the "propriety of its inclusion in the program of the President's committee" would be open to question.

Pollock said it was "erroneous" to imply that the problem of remedying unfair labor practices is solely the NLRB's responsibility.

"We believe," he said, "that the problem of constructive labor relations is the responsibility of all branches of the federal government, and it should be accepted in the same manner that they have assumed their responsibility to discourage racial discrimination."

"Our first need is a frank recognition of the problems and the shortcomings of a policy under which the federal government continues business relations with companies which perennially defy federal law."

Trial Examiner Upheld

NLRB members ruling in the latest decision against Burlington were Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

They upheld a trial examiner's report holding that company supervisors influenced the election by telling workers Burlington might close the Cleveland plant as it had the Rossville plant in case of a union victory.

Union Seamen Set To Aid Cuba PWs

The AFL-CIO has recruited volunteer seamen on a stand-by basis to man the proposed Cuban prisoner exchange ship, the American Red Cross has announced.

In response to an ARC appeal for stand-by help, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared "we are glad to join in this act of mercy with the Red Cross." He noted that the federation's Maritime Trades Dept. is cooperating in supplying the crew for the supply ship handling medicines and food in the proposed exchange and that "our AFL-CIO longshoremen are working around the clock" loading the supply ship.

Meany requested recruitment of the seamen, chiefly top-rated marine cooks, from Paul Hall, head of the Seafarers and president of the Maritime Trades Dept. The MTD had announced earlier that it was donating labor estimated at $15,000 to load and transport the medicines and food to Havana.

2-Stage Tax Slash Urged; Meany Lists Goals for '63

Rules Fight Seen Key to Progress

Reform of House and Senate rules during the opening days of the 88th Congress is essential to victory in the "cold war with unemployment" and a break in the five-year "stalemate" in the nation's domestic economy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared in a New Year statement.

Meany said 1963 could mark a "turning point" for the world as well as the nation. Hailing Pres. Kennedy's "firm and decisive handling" of the Cuban crisis, he declared that it appears "to have at last convinced the Soviet leaders that the United States will brook no further adventures in Communist imperialism."

'No Change of Heart'

The Kremlin, Meany emphasized, has not had "a change of heart or a change of objectives." But, he added, "the new awareness of America's unwavering commitment to the defense of freedom may be the first step toward a world in which there is less threat to the survival of humanity."

On domestic issues, the federation president warned that an "ever-widening gap between production and employment" will soon bring the nation's economy to a "crisis" unless "decisive" steps are taken.

He called for a broad range of "essential" social and economic

Long-Term Jobless Get Training Aid

Nearly half of the first 4,434 workers assigned to training under the Manpower Development & Training Act came from the ranks of the long-term unemployed—those out of work 15 weeks or longer, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reported.

Wirtz's report also showed that two-thirds of the trainees are heads of families and nearly 80 percent of them have been in the labor force three years or longer.

ORGANIZED LABOR JOINED in the successful volunteer campaign to secure the freedom of Cuban prisoners by donating longshore crews at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to load the freighter African Pilot with medicines and food. The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. provided the longshore crews and seamen for a stand-by ship, the Wappen Von Hamburg, which was finally not needed for the exchange. The National Maritime Union, and other unions represented aboard ship, manned the African Pilot.

In Milwaukee Retail Chains:

Joint Union Drive Seeks 5,000 Clerks

Milwaukee—Three AFL-CIO unions are conducting a joint drive here to organize the Gimbels-Schusters department store chain—seven stores in the Milwaukee area with some 5,000 employes.

Working together are organizers from the Retail Clerks, Building Service Employes and Office Employes, backed by shop committees of workers from all seven stores.

RCIA Intl. Rep. Clyde Brzezinski is directing the campaign and the headquarters of Retail Clerks Local 444 here has been taken over for the command post. Its walls are covered with bulletin boards on which are posted fast-growing lists of employes who have been personally contacted.

By the time of the National Labor Relations Board vote—set for Jan. 31 and Feb. 1—union representatives expect to have personally met with each eligible employe.

In addition to the traditional house calls and meetings with small groups of workers from various departments, the three unions have adopted a wide range of techniques to take their story to employes and the general public.

During the height of the Christmas buying season, some 20,000 customers entered the stores carrying shopping bags emblazoned with the insignia of the Retail Clerks. The bags were distributed by union volunteers at the entrance to the

Pay Increases Assured in '63 For 3.3 Million

At least 3.3 million workers will get pay increases in 1963 that have already been negotiated in major union contracts, and bargaining is due during the year on wage reopenings or renewal of most other big pacts.

This preview of contract developments in the coming year was presented in two companion articles in the December issue of the Labor Dept.'s Monthly Labor Review. One article summarizes contracts affecting 5,000 or more workers which will be up for renewal or reopening in 1963, and the second reviews deferred pay increases and cost of living escalator provisions in agreements affecting 1,000 or more workers.

Heaviest bargaining period will occur in the spring and summer

1st Bracket Tax Relief Asked First

A two-step tax reduction program designed to produce a $9 to $10 billion cut for persons in the lowest income brackets in 1963 and across-the-board cuts in other personal and corporate rates in 1964 has been urged on Pres. Kennedy by the AFL-CIO.

Federation Pres. George Meany, in a letter to the President, spelled out the views of the AFL-CIO, declaring "we completely support your effort to achieve major tax reduction and tax reform next year" to stimulate the economy and increase the equity of the tax system.

Two-Step Program

Meany specifically urged the President to consider an interrelated two-step program that would:

- Immediately cut to 12 percent the rate on the first $1,000 of taxable income and to 15 percent the rate on the second thousand. The present rate is 20 percent on the first $2,000. The reduction would be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963.
- Reduce the range of individual tax rates to 12 to 65 percent from the present 20 to 91 percent and drop the corporate tax rate from 52 to 49 percent. This would be effective Jan. 1, 1964, and be tied directly to closing loopholes in the existing tax system as part of a general reform.

The details of Meany's letter to Kennedy were disclosed by AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg in an interview on Labor News Conference, broadcast by the Mutual Broadcasting System radio network.

In his final appearance as a federation spokesman—he becomes economic adviser to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz on Jan. 1—Ruttenberg predicted that the "fifth postwar recession" would set in by mid-1963 unless taxes are cut promptly, or unless there is a "significant increase" in government expenditures.

Unemployment, he said, may rise from its present level of a little over 5.75 percent "to somewhere above stores—despite management complaints that this was "unfair competition" because the stores sold shopping bags inside the entrance.

MEMBERS OF THREE UNIONS work together on a joint drive to organize seven Milwaukee department stores in the Gimbel-Schuster chain. Posted on the board are lists of workers who have already been personally contacted by union representatives.

Direct mail, transit advertising placards and radio and television spot announcements are among the techniques being used in the campaign—the largest in the retail field ever held in the state.

The drive, the organizers say, is winning a favorable response among the employes, including many long-service workers making only $1.25 an hour.

One veteran employe with 20 years of service went to union headquarters to complain that she had been assigned to help train temporary Christmas season employes for jobs which paid $1.30 an hour—even though she, herself, was earning only $1.25.

She said the personnel official to whom she first brought her complaint had told her sympathetically: "You must realize this younger generation is greedy."

When Gimbels acquired the locally-owned Schusters stores, union spokesmen report, employes lost even the cold comfort of the "one big family" relationship which the stores had sought to promote. Names were eliminated from time cards and employes are now identified by numbers only.

Second NLRB Vote Set Aside in Bias Case

For the second time, the National Labor Relations Board has set aside a representation election among employes of two Georgia clothing plants because the company distributed pre-election propaganda designed to "inflame the racial feelings and other prejudices" of the workers.

Upholding the objections of the Clothing Workers, a three-member board panel ordered a third election among employes of the Sewell Mfg. Co. at its plants in Bremen and Temple, Ga., because conditions under which the second vote was held "impeded a reasoned choice as to a bargaining representative and nullified the election."

The Clothing Workers lost the vote, 931 to 345.

"In our opinion, the propaganda complained of is essentially the same type of appeal and argument upon which the board set aside the first election," said the NLRB panel, made up of Members Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown.

On that occasion, last August, the board declared that it "does not intend to tolerate as 'electoral propaganda' appeals or arguments which can have no purpose except to inflame the racial feelings of voters."

The board noted that just before the second vote, Sewell employes received copies of a segregationist publication, Militant Truth, which contained four pages of appeals and arguments against unionization "based in part upon racial considerations."

Additionally, the board said, the employes received copies of local newspaper editorials and a letter from the employer stressing similar appeals and arguments against unions.

As it did in the first instance, the board rejected the regional NLRB director's finding that such propaganda did not impair the employes' freedom of choice in the election.

"We find that the documents in question were intended to and did inflame the racial feelings and other prejudices of the voters on matters unrelated to election issues," the board panel declared.

"As we noted in our prior decision setting aside the first election, such propaganda has no place in board election campaigns since it creates an atmosphere which is not conducive to a sober and informed exercise of the franchise."

In its earlier decision, the board observed that "there are propaganda appeals . . . which we do not approve or condone, but which we tolerate, leaving the proper weighing of such appeals to the good sense and judgment of the electorate."

"But the appeals made to racial prejudice in this case are different," it added.

Such propaganda, the board stated, "exceeded permissible limits and so inflamed and tainted the atmosphere in which the election was held that a reasoned choice of a bargaining representative was an impossibility."

2 Unionists Named To College Council

Hempstead, N. Y.—Appointment of Pres. Charles J. Browne and Executive Vice Pres. Anthony Costaldo of the Long Island AFL-CIO to the newly formed Hofstra Council has been announced by Pres. John Cranford Adams of Hofstra College.

The council is composed of recognized leaders from different business and professional areas. Its function is to advise the college on its relations with the community, in its planning and development programs, and as a committee to help obtain gifts. The college is seeking to raise $2 million in order to qualify for a $1 million grant from the Ford Foundation.

Mrs. FDR Group Names Bookbinder

Hyman H. Bookbinder is taking a leave of absence as special assistant to Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges to serve as director of the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation.

The foundation is being organized by a committee of citizens appointed by Pres. Kennedy at a White House meeting last month. Adlai Stevenson, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, is chairman.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and David Dubinsky represent labor on the 22-member committee.

Bookbinder, who has served as special assistant to Hodges since April 1961 with special responsibilities in the fields of labor-management relations and equal employment opportunity, had previously served as an AFL-CIO legislative representative.

Hodges said in a statement that "Mr. Bookbinder has been one of my most trusted and effective lieutenants. He has richly earned the high regard in which he is held in government, management and labor circles."

The Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation will work to support those programs to which Mrs. Roosevelt had been dedicated—the UN, human rights, social development and public health.

The 88th Congress will be asked to charter the new foundation early in the session.

75,000 on Strike:

Injunction Expires, Longshoremen Out

The 75,000 members of the Intl. Longshoremen's Association resumed their walkout at East and Gulf Coast docks as an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction expired and the union remained deadlocked with the New York Shipping Association over terms of a new contract.

Capt. William V. Bradley, ILA president, said there was "no change whatsoever" in the bargaining situation, "no indication of any movement" by the shippers from their demand for the right to cut work crew sizes.

As the dock tieup entered its fifth day, however, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced that he was personally intervening in an attempt to find a solution. Wirtz said he had scheduled separate talks Dec. 28 and 29 with negotiators for the shippers and the union.

The walkout is a continuation of the strike the ILA called Oct. 1 which was interrupted by the T-H injunction.

The union rejected a last-minute proposal by Pres. Kennedy for a further delay of 90 days in the strike while two committees—one dealing with job security and related issues and the second with other problems—could hold hearings and come up with recommendations for a settlement.

ILA Executive Vice Pres. T. W. (Teddy) Gleason, chief negotiator for the union, said in a reply to Kennedy that such a course "would be the taking away of our rights to collective bargaining and putting the matters in the hands of persons who are not familiar with the industry and its complex problems."

He accused the shipping association, which represents about 150 domestic and foreign shipping firms, of having "continuously failed to negotiate in good faith."

Bradley said the dispute over manpower had blocked any real negotiations on other issues—wages, hours, pension and welfare contributions, and the term of the contract. The shipowners want the power to reduce dock work crews from the present minimum of 20 men to 17 and to move them from dock to dock during the day.

The union has expressed firm opposition to any job-destroying measures without adequate indemnity for the displaced workers.

The ILA president said the union had the "solid backing" of every union connected with the waterfront and the maritime trades, with the sole exception of an unaffiliated group in Galveston, Tex., which he described as "scabs." That group, calling itself the Banana Union Workers Cooperative, crossed the ILA picket lines to unload a Swedish freighter carrying bananas.

The Longshoremen have exempted military shipments from the strike, as well as dangerous or emergency cargo, and permitted the removal of experimental food stored in Port Newark, N. J., by UNICEF, the UN's children's relief organization.

Kaiser Employes Vote Jan. 11 on 'Share' Plan

Pittsburgh—The Kaiser Steel Corp.'s 7,000 employes in Fontana, Calif., will vote Jan. 11 on the proposed "long-range sharing plan" announced recently by a special committee representing the Steelworkers, the company and the public which developed the plan in three years of negotiations.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald, who announced the date for the vote at a news conference here, predicted the workers would approve the plan because they "have everything to gain and nothing to lose" from it.

McDonald hailed it as a "real breakthrough" toward greater job and income security, but said the union would need some experience with its operation before seeking similar arrangements with other companies.

The plan, which will go into effect at the Kaiser plant Mar. 1 if approved by the workers, would protect employes against loss of jobs to automation by setting up an "employment pool" for retraining and reassignment to jobs vacated through attrition. It also would provide the workers with 32.5 percent of any savings in labor, material and supply costs, with a minimum assurance of at least the same level of pay and benefits negotiated by the union with other steel firms.

McDonald refused to comment on the prospect of a reopening of the union's contract with the steel industry, which under the existing agreement may be requested next May.

He said the union's Wage Policy Committee is responsible for collective bargaining, and so far it has not scheduled any meeting.

"It's up to this committee—of which I am a member—to determine whether that issue will be brought up," the USWA president said. "But as of now, I absolutely will not comment on collective bargaining until the proper time."

McDonald also announced that the joint union-industry human relations committee, which meets periodically to seek solutions to mutual problems, will hear progress reports from subcommittees on Jan. 14. He said it will then step up its pace in an attempt to resolve such issues as vacation scheduling, work assignment and contracting out of work.

He emphasized, however, that this "has nothing to do with contract negotiations per se."

McDonald to Receive Histadrut's Award

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald has been chosen to receive the 1963 Histadrut Humanitarian Award, the National Committee for Labor Israel has announced.

The presentation will be made at a dinner in Philadelphia on Mar. 16 at the Sheraton Hotel. Former Pres. Harry S. Truman, one of the first recipients of the annual award, is general chairman of the dinner committee. Heading the arrangements is Hugh Carcella, USWA district director.

Hartnett Suspended By IUE Board Vote

The executive board of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has suspended indefinitely the union's Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett by a vote of 25 to 5, with one abstention.

The suspension deprived Hartnett of all official functions but continued him on full salary contingent on his future activities.

4 Dailies Locked Out:

NYC Labor Backs Newspaper Strikers

New York—Delegates to the New York City Central Labor Council voted unanimous endorsement of the Typographical Union's strike against four of the city's major daily newspapers, now in its third week.

The resolution, presented for the executive board by Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., empowers council officers to enlist all affiliates in a mass demonstration showing labor's support of the striking printers.

Bertram A. Powers, president of the ITU's "Big Six" local here, renewed his offer for resumption of work at four papers that locked out their employes, sending the total of idled newspaper workers to 20,000.

The Herald Tribune, Post, Mirror and Long Island Star-Journal suspended publication and the Long Island Press eliminated distribution within the city after the local had struck the Daily News, Times, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun.

"The publishers must bear full responsibility for the news blackout and its disruptive effect on the city's life," Powers told the delegates. "The four newspapers which arbitrarily shut down could have supplied New Yorkers with all the essential news coverage and advertisements for the duration of our restricted strike. Instead they chose to aggravate the crisis in the hope of whipping up public opinion against the union."

Federal Mediator Stephen I. Schlossberg resumed joint meetings with the local and the Publishers Association after talks were interrupted for three days over the Christmas weekend.

The publishers are seeking settlement on the basis of an $8 package over two years, plus a fourth week of vacation for workers with 15 years of continuous service on one newspaper.

The management proposal breaks down, the union said, into pay increases of 55 cents a week the first year and $3.75 the second; $3 more a week in welfare coverage; payment of jury duty, bereavement and holiday benefits to all substitutes and regulars who work 120 days a year, plus added benefits for extras and an increase in employer payments into the Industrial Pension Fund.

In exchange, however, the publishers are demanding changes in ITU work rules and concessions on the use of new printing processes which the local said would wipe out a large number of jobs.

Against the management package, the printers have submitted a "negotiable" proposal calling for pay increases of $10.35 a week the first year and $8.45 the second; a reduction of 15 minutes per shift to bring the workweek to 35 hours for the day and night shifts and 33.75 hours for the "lobster" or early morning shift; above-scale differentials of 5 percent for the night shift and 10 percent for the lobster shift; a fourth week of vacation after one year, four additional days of paid sick leave and preservation of existing job safeguards.

In Cleveland, the Newspaper Guild strike which since Dec. 1 has closed down both dailes, the Press and the Plain Dealer, remained stalemated over the union security issue. Federal mediators scheduled further talks over the weekend. The ousted Teamsters union, which kicked off the walkout Nov. 30 but later returned to work, rejoined the picket line Dec. 20.

$180 for Reporters Sets New ANG High

A new two-year agreement between the Newspaper Guild and the Washington Post sets the minimum salary for reporters, the key editorial classification, at $175 a week this year and $180 next, highest among all ANG newspaper contracts.

Wage increases of at least $8 over the two-year period are provided, but minimum rates for most classifications are upgraded additionally by amounts ranging to $26.75.

MIDNIGHT COFFEE BREAK means time out for these locked-out members of Typographical Union Local 6, on the picket line at the New York Post. Pouring is John L. Soricelli, a union member employed by the Post and its former subsidiary, the Bronx Home News, for 42 years. The Post and three other New York dailies locked out all their employes when the union called strikes against four other newspapers.

Gains Worth $30 Million Won in Pact

New York—A new contract containing wage boosts ranging up to 35 cents an hour and pension increases averaging 25 to 28 percent has been signed here by Utility Workers Local 1-2.

The settlement, announced by Local 1-2 Business Manager Michael Sampson, covers the 21,000 union members employed on properties of the Consolidated Edison Co.

Medical Care Provided

In addition to wage and pension increases, the pact provides for comprehensive family medical care, half paid for by the company this year and entirely paid for by the company next year. The settlement is retroactive to Dec. 2 and expires Dec. 1, 1965.

Other features of the contract, estimated to provide benefits of approximately $30 million, are a reclassification and progression program, improved vacations and stronger job security provisions.

In announcing the settlement, Sampson called it the "best contract in the history of the union." It was overwhelmingly ratified in a referendum vote conducted by the American Arbitration Association.

Sampson headed the negotiating committee, and had the active assistance of Intl. Pres. William A. Pachler.

SIGN LANGUAGE instructions are given George A. Godley (center) and Louis B. Demingo (with umbrella) by Henry Sigel on the Typographical Union's picket line at the New York Journal. The three are among 400 deaf members of striking Local 6.

Memorial Scholarships Honor Union President

Three college scholarships will be awarded each year to children of members of the Operating Engineers as a permanent memorial to the late Pres. Joseph J. Delaney.

Two of the memorial scholarships, worth up to $1,500 a year during four years of college, will be awarded each year in the United States. One boy and one girl will be chosen annually through the competitive tests given by the National Merit Scholarship Corp., the nonprofit group which will administer the program.

A third scholarship, reserved for children of Canadian members, will be awarded annually under a separate plan being worked out in cooperation with the Canadian Universities Foundation.

The scholarship program was approved by the union's executive board after having been proposed by a special committee named by Pres. Hunter P. Wharton. Members were Vice Presidents Leo Bachinski, chairman; John F. Brady and William J. Stuhr.

In announcing the program, the board noted that Delaney, who died last September, never had the opportunity to go to college but held "a high appreciation of the value of a good education."

The executive board said it felt that "the finest and most constructive tribute to his memory would be to give that opportunity each year to the best qualified children of members."

The only restriction on the merit basis of the selection of scholarship recipients is that both U.S. winners may not come from the same state. The amount of each scholarship will be based on the estimated cost of attending the college of the winner's choice and the element of financial need—with a minimum of $250 a year and a maximum of $1,500 for each of the four years. In addition the union will make a grant of $250 a year to the college selected by each winner.

Fannia Cohn, ILGWU Educator, Dead at 77

New York—Fannia M. Cohn, a pioneer in labor education and the unionization of women and the first woman vice president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, died on Christmas Eve. She was 77.

Miss Cohn was an ILG vice president from 1916 to 1928 and headed the union's Education Dept. from its inception in 1918 until she retired last August.

She came to this country from her native Russia in 1904 and joined the ILGWU shortly before the "uprising" of shirtwaist-makers in 1909. For the next 10 years she organized among garment workers in New York and Chicago and, in 1917, was one of three ILG vice presidents assigned to draw up a union educational program. After serving as organizing secretary of the education committee, she became executive secretary of the new department.

For nearly 45 years she guided the department through such pioneering ventures as the "Workers' University" that opened here in 1918 with outstanding college instructors as teachers. In 1921 she helped found the Workers Education Bureau and the Bookwood Labor College. In later years she developed programs that included panel discussions and group visits to civic institutions.

FANNIA COHN

Miss Cohn was internationally known as a labor educator, and the success of the ILG program under her direction provided the foundation for similar programs in other parts of the U.S. and of the world.

California Insurance Regulations Upheld

San Francisco—A California State Supreme Court decision upholding regulations barring private insurance companies from "skimming the cream" off the state's disability insurance program has been hailed by State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts.

California is one of four states which, in addition to workmen's compensation, provides payments to workers temporarily incapacitated by sickness or off-the-job injuries. Financed by a payroll tax paid by employes, the basic insurance program is operated by the state. However, private firms may provide alternative insurance for groups of workers by offering greater benefits for the same premium.

To do this, a number of private insurance plans have been set up which cover selected low-risk groups. The effect, Pitts said, was to load the state program with the heaviest costs and threaten its financial stability.

Under labor-supported amendments passed by the legislature in 1961, the state employment director issued regulations which prohibited private insurers from rejecting high risk groups and closed other loopholes in the program.

When the private firms sought to block the regulations through a court injunction, the State AFL-CIO filed a counter action. The California high court then unanimously ruled against the insurance firms and directed the state to enforce its regulations.

Next Step in Civil Rights

THE AFL-CIO "will vigorously promote the next great surge forward toward the achievement of equal rights for all citizens —a national fair employment practices law," Pres. George Meany stresses in his New Year message.

"Such a statute," he writes, "is not only a matter of simple justice; it will also have favorable economic effects, since a heavy proportion of those now suffering economic deprivation are Negroes.

"The last year saw momentous progress in the field of human rights. The President's historic order forbidding discrimination in federally assisted housing developments, while not quite as sweeping as some had hoped, insures the ultimate right of every citizen to make his home anywhere that is within his financial reach. Through other administrative steps, such as more vigorous enforcement of voting rights and of court orders on the desegregation of schools, the Administration made notable contributions to democratic principles.

"We in the AFL-CIO are proud of the affiliated national and international unions whose leaders signed, at the White House, a pledge that guarantees equal rights and equal opportunity to all without regard to race, creed or national origin. We congratulate the hundreds of employers who joined in similar pledges.

"It is clearly the sentiment of the American people that the blight of discrimination must now be eradicated. That sentiment must be translated into reality through a federal fair employment practices system."

Equity in Tax Relief

THE CURRENT TAX CUT debate is having the beneficial effect of producing some searching analyses of the nation's tax system in terms of both economic impact and simple equity.

In terms of equity it has become readily apparent that the trend of the last two decades has been to write more and more loopholes in the tax laws that allow higher-income taxpayers to escape their fair share of the burden.

During World War II tax levies were put into effect that brought millions of low-income families into the ranks of direct federal taxpayers. Over 25 years later they have won little or no relief while the following benefits were enacted for the higher income groups:

- In 1942 the holding period on long-term capital gains on stock and real estate sales was sharply cut.
- In 1948 family income-splitting, especially beneficial to high-income recipients, was enacted.
- In the same year a substantial cut in estate and gift tax rates went into effect.
- In 1950 the capital gains treatment of stock option profits was legalized.
- In 1951 the use of family partnerships as another tax avoidance device was permitted.
- In 1954 the dividend credit and exclusion were enacted and capital gains treatment was extended to still more forms of income.

In contrast, for low-income and middle-income groups the first-bracket tax rate dropped from the 23 percent of World War II years to 20 percent at present and the $500 dependent exemption was increased to $600.

Tax history makes it increasingly important that any tax reduction enacted in 1963 have the greatest impact on the lower end of the income scale to apply more equitably the principle of taxation based on the ability to pay.

Msgr. Higgins' Sermon:

Vision Made Father McGowan Pioneer in Social Reform of U. S.

The following is excerpted from a sermon by Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept., National Catholic Welfare Conference, at a mass for the late Father Raymond A. McGowan, former department director.

MANY YEARS AGO—in the early winter of 1923—a young priest just beginning a distinguished career in the field of Catholic social action was invited to consult with a grand old man who was rapidly approaching the end of his own distinguished career as the dean of the American labor movement.

The young priest was Father Raymond A. McGowan, who had only recently been appointed assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. The illustrious old man who had summoned Father McGowan to meet with his executive council at the American Federation of Labor headquarters in Washington was Samuel Gompers.

Father McGowan had just established the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems. A garbled news release on the first meeting of this new organization in Chicago was a little disturbing to Mr. Gompers. He was under the mistaken impression that the CCIP was to be a separate Catholic union or federation of Catholic unions which would compete with the affiliates of the AFL for the loyalty of Catholic workers. After Father McGowan had cleared up this unfortunate misunderstanding, he went on to explain that the long-range program of the CCIP was an organized system of labor-management-government cooperation.

In other words, almost 10 years before the publication of Pope Pius XI's encyclical, Quadragesimo Anno, he was advocating the encyclical program, which has since come to be known as the Industry Council Plan.

On Nov. 13, 1962, Father McGowan followed Mr. Gompers to the grave. He died peacefully in his sleep in a residence for retired priests in Kansas City, Mo. For reasons of health he had retired in 1954 as director of the NCWC Social Action Dept., a position which he had held since 1945. He had previously served as assistant director, under the great Msgr. John A. Ryan, for approximately 25 years.

From the very beginning Father McGowan proved himself to be a man of extraordinary vision. Surely it required unusual vision to establish a Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems in the "golden" Twenties and even greater vision to establish, a few years later, a Catholic Association for Intl. Peace.

Both of these organizations and several others which owe their existence to his initiative were started at a time when few Americans were even remotely interested in the application of moral principles to domestic economic life and international relations. It is doubtful if any of them would have been established at such an early date except for his initiative and vision.

The same thing can be said about the Bishops' Committee for the Spanish Speaking, the Catholic Council of the Spanish Speaking, the Bishops' Committee for Migrant Workers and the Inter-American Catholic Social Action Confederation.

Father McGowan's imaginative vision was particularly evident in his long-standing concern about the social, economic and religious problems of Latin America. He was one of the first Americans to sense the urgency of these problems.

LONG BEFORE MOST of his contemporaries, Father McGowan saw the necessity for the greatest possible degree of interfaith cooperation in the field of social reform—the kind of cooperation called for in the encyclical Mater et Magistra and in several other recent statements by Pope John XXIII.

A generation ago, at a time when Catholics, Protestants and Jews in other areas of American life and culture were glaring at one another across apparently unbreachable chasms, Father McGowan was quietly and unobtrusively organizing joint meetings and joint social action projects with his counterparts from the National Council of Churches and the Synagogue Council of America.

Few, if any, of his contemporaries were as quick to see the logical necessity of an organized system of labor-management-government cooperation in American economic life. He was one of the first Americans to grasp the full significance of the encyclical program of social reconstruction and one of the first to begin to think realistically about its application to the American economy.

The greater part of his time and energy was to be devoted over a period of 35 years to a patient effort to persuade these organizations of the importance and the necessity of their working together for the solution of their common problems. There is reason to believe that his efforts are now beginning to bear substantial fruit.

Morgan Says:

Dispute over Skybolt Points Up Need for Allied Understanding

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IRRITATING AS the thin-skinned and accusatory defensiveness of Britain is—further inflamed by the grating chauvinism of the British press—and maddening as the austere arrogance of Pres. de Gaulle can be, we Americans must try to put ourselves in the positions of the British and the French in order better to understand them and this acrimonious hubbub over the West's nuclear forces. This is not a tempest in a teapot nor are we without blame in it. Nor does the Nassau agreement, hopeful as it is, solve it.

Morgan

What we are trying to do is the impossible. We are trying to devise a formula whereby we can give our European allies in NATO, a—theoretically—collectively-controlled nuclear striking force while at the same time holding the key strings to the disposition and use of these weapons ourselves. It is the age-old ambition of wanting to have our cake and eat it too. Yet this approach is not quite so schizoid as it may look. There is a good deal of realism in it, given the way emotion tends to dominate logic in human reactions.

As things stand, the United States owns and/or controls the decisive nuclear striking power with which the West confronts the Communist bloc. We Americans built this terrible deterrent force ourselves, with our own money and in accordance with the best judgment of the top leaders of our government. So, quite humanly though not necessarily faultlessly, we believe that we know best how this power should be marshaled and, if necessary, applied and therefore we insist that there be only one finger on the nuclear trigger and that finger must continue to be ours.

We have made a great point about the niceties and the necessities of prior consultation with our NATO partners and we have tried to stress that we are neither going to leave them in the lurch in case of Communist provocation nor are we going to provoke recklessly the Soviet bloc. The "bold prudence" the Kennedy Administration displayed in applying power against the Soviets in the Cuban crisis served to reassure our allies some on both points.

But deep doubts remain. Britain and France, for instance, do not trust us. Or to put it a little less unprettily and a little more precisely, they do not feel they can, with full confidence, lean their respective destinies on our almost exclusive judgment of how to handle the nuclear arsenal.

If the situation were completely reversed, if Paris or London—or those two European powers between them—controlled the West's nuclear strength, how fully and how long would we be willing to pin our faith on them? Would we not do everything in our power to establish a voice and a veto in the decision? And if we could not would we not make every effort to develop a nuclear striking force of our own in order to pursue our destiny as independently as possible?

ADD TO ALL THIS the anguish of the French and the British peoples over the virtual disintegration of their empires and you begin to understand a little better that the suspended saga of the Skybolt missile means more to our British cousins than the mere abandonment of a dubious weapon. To some of them it is a Yankee plot to make them more dependent on if not subservient to the nuclear giant of the western alliance, us. And tragically unrealistic as de Gaulle's determination may be to become an independent nuclear power, the emotional forces driving him are recognizable.

Given such a tangled situation, what do we do, what can we do to strengthen NATO and ease the divisive political strains within it?

One of the first things we must do, surely is to realize that every difference among allies does not necessarily sound the death knell of the alliance. And the converse must apply too; that is to say, that when we have a crisis it is not necessarily solved by a communique.

The flap over Skybolt is a vivid case in point. From dispatches over the past fortnight one might conclude, first, that the Anglo-American alliance was at the breaking point and, second, that Pres. Kennedy and Prime Minister MacMillan in four sun-kissed days in Nassau not only put everything right again but developed a Polaris missile formula for a satisfactory NATO nuclear deterrent force which de Gaulle might be persuaded to buy pretty quickly. Both diplomats and journalists, I'm afraid, must share the guilt of inspiring such extremes.

It is urgently necessary too that Washington be both more sensitive to the sensibilities of European allies and more consistent about our own position within NATO. As Malcolm Hoag, a Pentagon consultant on NATO military matters, put it in an article in the January issue of Foreign Affairs, "We cannot simultaneously preach Atlantic community and practice unimpaired sovereignty on life-and-death matters." A place where this advice is especially needed is in Congress.

Finally it must be recognized that the Nassau agreement itself is indeed a remarkable step toward solution of the dangerous competition within NATO on nuclear weapons but it is only a step and further progress will depend not only on reasonableness in Europe but fresh understanding in Washington of how difficult the art of successful leadership is, including its psychological aspects.

Morgan Essay Contest Judges Named, Deadline Set for Jan. 31

NINE PROMINENT Americans have been named as judges for the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest, sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the American Broadcasting Co. radio network in association with the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

Deadline for entries—600 words on "Youth's Challenge in the Labor Market of the 60's"—is Jan. 31.

Undergraduate students at all colleges or universities are eligible for the annual contest. The two top winners—a young man and a young woman—will receive scholarships for graduate study and an expense-paid visit to Washington where they will meet with leaders in government, labor, education and broadcasting.

Among the judges will be Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and all three living former secretaries, Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, James P. Mitchell and Frances Perkins. The contest theme is tied to the 50th anniversary year of the Dept. of Labor.

Also serving as judges will be AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.), Dean John McConnell of Cornell University's Industrial & Labor Relations School, ABC Radio Network Pres. Robert R. Pauley, and Morgan, whose nightly broadcasts are sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

WIRTZ HAS PRAISED the contest theme as encouraging "thoughtful consideration by American youth of their own contribution to our nation's goals."

He noted:

"One of the deepest concerns here in the department is for the proper development of America's youth in an era of increasing technological change, occupational specialization, scientific advance and job qualifications of an ever-growing complexity."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE GEORGIA COUNTY-UNIT case has reached the Supreme Court, and the Justice Dept. brief filed as friend of the court seeks to push a step farther a definition of the limits beyond which the states may not go in electoral discrimination.

In the county-unit system set up under state law and Democratic Party rules, Georgia since before the turn of the century has permitted a minority of voters in a handful of sparsely populated counties to dominate the choice of governors, senators and other statewide officials. The law was hastily revised after the Supreme Court's historic Tennessee decision declaring the power of federal courts to set aside grossly discriminatory apportionments, but even the revision embodies extreme distortions.

Residents of the 11 smallest counties have 7.5 times as much weight in selecting nominees for statewide office as residents of the four most populous counties. A vote in Echols County, population 1,876, is worth 14 times a vote in Fulton County, population 556,326.

A three-judge district federal court outlawed both old and revised county-unit systems last April and now the case is on appeal.

A second three-judge court also outlawed the state legislative apportionment last May, warning that unless at least one house was redistricted by January 1963 the court would make its own reapportionment. This case is not directly involved, but the government's brief impinges on it.

THE PURPOSE OF the county-unit system in Georgia is clear—it is to dilute the voting influence of urban and suburban residents and to enhance the influence of sparsely populated areas. The justification is that urban voters can more easily "concert" their political action.

Due process and the equal protection of the laws guaranteed all persons by the 14th amendment, the government argues, outlaw any apportionment or election system "that imposes an extreme or invidious discrimination against a particular class of voters" and bears no observable relationship to proper legislative or electoral processes.

The government does not argue that the equal protection clause reduces to a "mechanical yardstick" of measuring election or apportionment laws. It acknowledges that case-by-case adjudication is needed to apply both constitutional practice and traditions. But outlawing a grossly arbitrary and discriminatory system is the first necessary step to creating a defensible system.

IN THE LONG RUN, the Supreme Court is certain to have to decide several specific cases. In Maryland, for example, state courts have upheld geographical apportionment of the state senate. In a Michigan case, a similar decision was reversed by the Supreme Court and sent back for reconsideration. The government brief in the Georgia case suggests flatly that in weighing any electoral system or legislative reapportionment, "the starting point must be per capita equality of voting power."

There may be "room for choice" among theories of representation in state legislatures, the Justice Dept. concedes, "as long as there is no more than a modest departure from per capita equality." The federal election systems, despite the provision for two members of the Senate from each state, are vastly less inequitable in diluting per capita influence than the election systems of Georgia and many other states.

The state systems, with their ingrained abuses, have substantially controlled legislation in Congress because the state legislatures have set up the congressional districts to favor rural and small-town areas. The discrimination thus becomes national as well as statewide. The county-unit doctrine under fire in Georgia imply adds another element. The hope is that the whole system of discrimination will be swept away.

AFL-CIO HEADQUARTERS building is stocked with survival equipment and emergency rations after designation as a public shelter in event of atomic attack. Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, right, emphasized that the building will not be restricted to employes. It is the first major non-federal building in the District of Columbia to be equipped with food, water, medical and sanitation supplies and radiation measuring instruments. On hand for delivery of supplies was Michael F. Smith, left center, labor specialist with Office of Civil Defense. The shelter will accommodate 1,000 persons.

Highlight's of Labor's Progress in 1962

Organizing Picture Improved, Advances Scored in Bargaining

By Harry Conn

Organized labor made progress in 1962—but limited progress.

There was improvement in the organizing picture. National Labor Relations Board statistics show that a larger percentage of workers voted for unions in representation elections than in the preceding year. But the gain was restricted.

There was steady progress in collective bargaining, a continuing trend in this field, but the loss of union shop votes in some key aerospace elections hurt.

On the political front, labor registered important gains in the 1962 election, enabling labor-supported liberals to improve their positions slightly in both House and Senate.

In Congress, organized labor came up with a fair legislative record in many areas, but some big bills, such as social security, medical care for the aged and federal aid to education, were scuttled.

Morse Tells Foundation Members:

ILO Ready to Tackle Automation Policies

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization is ready to serve as the focal point for a worldwide effort to meet the social problems posed by the rapid growth of automation, ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse declared at a dinner meeting with members of the U.S. Foundation on Automation & Employment.

With its international tripartite labor-management-government structure, Morse observed, the ILO has both a responsibility and an opportunity to serve as the mechanism for cooperation and informational exchanges to ease the effects of the new technology on workers.

Morse invited industrialists and union officials from the United States and a number of other countries to meet with him as a follow-up to talks held in London by the American foundation and its British counterpart.

Heading the U.S. delegation were Machinists Pres. Al J. Hayes and John I. Snyder, Jr., president and chairman of U.S. Industries Inc., who are co-chairmen of the American foundation set up by the union and the company last April. U.S. Industries produces equipment used in automated plants.

In the course of the discussions, Snyder declared that "we look for cooperation with the ILO" in the realization that "automation is here to stay and its social impact will be more and more deeply felt in the future."

Hayes warned that a failure to meet the human problems raised by technological change could undermine democracy. Labor, he noted, welcomes progress and sees in automation "the means by which we can eventually release mankind all over the world from the grip of historic scarcity."

Nevertheless, automation presents an "ironic paradox" in that it throws workers out of jobs and thus destroys purchasing power at the same time it creates the need for more purchasing power, the IAM president observed.

"Unless industry, government and labor can solve this paradox, then automation can only degenerate into an exercise in futility," he warned.

Discussing the AFL-CIO's approach through its campaign for a 35-hour workweek, Hayes said a reduction in working time is "long overdue" to match the enormous strides in productivity since the 40-hour standard was set in the Thirties.

"We are not seeking shorter hours to provide more leisure for our work force," he continued. "To the contrary, we want a 35-hour week because millions of American workers have too much leisure time."

Snyder denounced the thinking that ignores the social problems created by automation and suggests that "in the long run" more jobs will be created than will be destroyed.

"In the long run we are all dead," he declared, calling for immediate action.

"Not enough businesses have as yet made meaningful efforts towards finding solutions to the human problems of automation," he said, even though it is in the best interest of business itself to look beyond profit and loss statements to assure "equitable treatment" for workers whose jobs are jeopardized.

AUTOMATION'S social implications were discussed in Geneva by officials of the Intl. Labor Organization and the American and British Foundations on Automation & Employment. Shown at the head table in the ILO's Samuel Gompers Room are, from left, Theodore W. Kheel, New York arbitrator; John I. Snyder, president and chairman of U.S. Industries, Inc.; ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse; Machinists Pres. Al J. Hayes, and Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City Central Labor Council. Snyder and Hayes are co-chairmen of the U.S. foundation and Kheel and Van Arsdale are board members.

Supreme Court Asked To Rule on Rail Jobs

Rail operating unions are asking the Supreme Court to review a lower court decision upholding the right of railroads to make drastic unilateral changes in work rules which would eliminate tens of thousands of jobs.

The unions—Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen—charged that the companies have not followed procedures of the Railway Labor Act and asserted that lower courts erred in refusing the unions' request for an injunction against the changes.

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas granted the unions' request for a stay in the work rules changes while attorneys for the unions completed their petition asking the court to accept the case. A temporary injunction granted by a lower court had been scheduled to expire Jan. 2. Douglas gave the unions until Jan. 9 to file their petition—which would maintain the status quo until the Supreme Court acts.

The request for a Supreme Court review came after an appellate court rejected the unions' request for a rehearing. The unions contended that the decision by a three-judge panel was based on "findings" which the unions never had an opportunity to refute, thereby denying them "their day in court."

In a joint statement, chiefs of the five unions charged railroad management with an unwillingness to negotiate on the work rules dispute.

"The railroads have insisted on trying to force their demands upon the operating employes," they declared.

Declaring that the unions "are not dedicated to the status quo," the statement added:

"Rail operating employes have fallen behind workers in other industries and their organizations seek a thorough modernization of the work rules, not a regression to the practically prehistoric days of unbridled management authority over safety, hours of work, length of assignments and other basic working conditions."

Radio Series Tells Rail Unions' Story

The nation's railroad unions have launched a 26-week series of radio broadcasts to tell their story to the public.

Sponsored by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, the five-minute programs combine song, narration and brief statements by union spokesmen on such matters as railroad mergers, elimination of services and the future of the industry.

On the opening program. RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty warned that many smaller railroads are threatened with "deliberate destruction" through "ill-conceived merger plans which only can destroy railroad service for the many to provide excessive profits for the few."

CSA Booklet Lists Plans For Retirees

New York—A program for organized labor's activities in behalf of the growing number of senior citizens is spelled out in a new pamphlet, The Aging and the Community, just issued by AFL-CIO Community Services Activities.

The booklet explains how labor, the community and local and federal governments can work together to provide workers "the deserved rewards of a lifetime of productive labor."

It recommends that subcommittees on older and retired workers be established under the community service committees of local unions. Such subcommittees, it is explained, would seek to determine the problems, interests and needs of retired members and see that they are met; keep retired members informed of local meetings and other activities for the retired; organize drop-in centers, and undertake preretirement programs to help prepare the older worker for retirement financially, physically and psychologically.

"There must be an earnest effort to give the same status and sense of worth to leisure time as is now accorded productive work," the pamphlet states. "More specifically, there must be increased opportunities in the areas of education, recreation and cultural activities."

The pamphlet can be ordered from AFL-CIO-CSA at 211 E. 43d Street, New York 17, N. Y.

N. Y. Label Group Elects Garrahan

New York—Charles J. Garrahan, manager of the Joint Board of Shirt & Leisurewear Workers of the Clothing Workers, and Joseph Tuvim, secretary-treasurer of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 142, have been elected president and vice president, respectively, of the Union Label & Service Trades Council of Greater New York & Long Island.

Their predecessors, Pres. Moe Rosen and Vice Pres. James C. Quinn, both of whom had served for more than 25 years, were elected to emeritus posts in their former offices. Louis F. Donato, also retiring, was named a member emeritus of the executive board.

Harry Avrutin of Office Employes Local 153, was unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer, a full-time post.

November CPI Static, Up 1.3 Percent in Year

The cost-of-living index was unchanged in November from its October level, according to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics. During a year of relative price stability, the rise in living costs has totaled 1.3 percent.

Biggest factors in the 12-month increase were a 6.2 percent rise in used car prices, a 3.1 percent jump in the cost of medical care and a 2.2 percent rise in food prices.

While the average weekly wage of factory production workers went up 64 cents from October to November—to $97.36—the buying power was virtually unchanged from the previous year.

After deductions for federal income and social security taxes, the average factory worker with three dependents had "spendable" take-home pay of $86.19 in November. Although this was $1.16 a week more than the comparable figure for November 1961, in terms of constant dollars it represented only 2 cents a week more in buying power.

The November 1962 consumer price index of 106 meant that goods and services which would have cost an average of $10 during the 1957-59 period would cost 60 cents more at current prices.

Although there was no change in the consumer index over the month, some 200,000 workers who receive periodic cost-of-living pay adjustments geared to the November index will get wage increases of 1 to 4 cents an hour.

These include 75,000 aerospace workers who will receive a 1-cent raise and 80,000 workers in the meat packing industry who will get an additional 2 cents an hour.

Most of the shifts in living costs from October to November were less than one-half of 1 percent either way. One of the larger changes, however, was a 1.4 percent decline in prices for women's and girls' clothing. Reductions in some railroad fares reflecting the elimination of the federal transportation tax brought about a one-half of 1 percent dip in the cost of public transportation, but this item was still 1.7 percent above a year ago.

Small gains in both the factory workweek and average hourly earnings accounted for the rise in factory wages in November, the Labor Dept. said. The rebound, however, still left average weekly earnings 32 cents below the record $97.68 set in September.

'Work' Propagandist Hit on Wage Claims

A Vermont economist who recently issued a study demonstrating that wages in "right-to-work" states have slipped further below the national average since adoption of laws banning the union shop has strongly defended his conclusions in the face of an attack by the National Right-to-Work Committee.

Prof. Milton J. Nardworny of the University of Vermont said criticism by Reed Larson, director of the "right-to-work" group, is careful "not to let any facts enter into the picture."

Nardworny said federal statistics "show conclusively" that hourly and weekly wages and per capita personal income in right-to-work states have all "steadily decreased" in relation to states which permit union shop agreements.

Noting that Larson based part of his criticism on the fact that the original study compared dollar wages rather than "real" wages, Nardworny said that if constant dollar wages had been used, the results would show that the average "real" wage in "right-to-work" states was further behind the national average in 1961 than in 1950.

"In short," the economist said, "on any basis it is put, wages in these states have been doing worse than the national performance on a dollar-and-cents basis. Larson wants us to believe that falling further behind really means catching up, or going ahead."

The Vermont professor, a member of the National Council for Industrial Peace, also took sharp issue with Larson's description of the council as a group which has "promoted compulsory unionism."

Meany Urges 2-Step Tax Cut, Reform

First Priority Asked For Lowest Brackets

6.25 percent and may be as high as 6.5 percent."

"This is intolerable economically, intolerable politically, and I think that going along with this rising level of unemployment will be a declining level of income," he said.

Ruttenberg, interviewed by Hobart Rowan of Newsweek and Richard Mooney of the New York Times, said the AFL-CIO tax proposals are designed to allow the first part affecting lower bracket rates to be enacted without "the confusion of great debate in Congress over what would be an adequate tax structure and what would be the proper closing of loopholes.

President Supported

Meany's letter to Kennedy expressed the labor movement's "deep appreciation" for the President's "outstanding address to the Economic Club of New York" in which the President stated the case for a tax cut in 1963.

Stressing AFL-CIO support for the President's tax proposals in general, Meany noted, however, that "we do not subscribe to the view of some that a reduction in federal outlays must be a prerequisite to tax reduction.

As a matter of fact, indiscriminate budget cutting would not only jeopardize the national welfare; it would nullify the stimulative economic impact of tax reduction," he added.

Corporate tax reduction should have "the lowest priority," Meany said, in view of the 10 percent cut granted to business in 1962 through the investment tax credit and liberalized depreciation allowances.

History Reviewed

The AFL-CIO president reviewed the history of tax legislation since the end of World War II, detailing the aid to nearly all groups except those in the lower-income brackets. Almost two decades after the war, Meany noted, the first-bracket rate is still 20 percent and the $600 dependent exemption now allowed buys far less food, clothing and shelter than the $500 exemption of wartime.

Meany cited the following example:

"A prewar family of four persons with a net income of $3,000 paid no federal tax and a $5,000 family paid less than 1.5 percent on its income. The burdens they shoulder today—when incomes at these levels buy far less of the essentials of life—are 4 percent and 10 percent respectively."

The reduction of the first bracket rate to 12 percent on the first $1,000 and 15 percent of the second $1,000 "will provide a measure of tax relief for all of the nation's taxpaying families," Meany said," and it will exempt no taxpayer from a continuing obligation." He added: "It will most immediately and effectively raise consumer demand and thus stimulate economic growth. The cost of this first step in tax reduction will approximate $9 billion."

3.3 Million to Get Hikes Negotiated Prior to '63

months, the Labor Dept. observed.

Contracts covering non-operating railroad workers and more than 900,000 Steelworkers will be subject to reopening in May, and the same month will see expiration of key contracts covering more than 275,000 workers in rubber, telephone, utility and some apparel industries.

Of the workers scheduled for deferred pay increases during the year, 1.8 million are in manufacturing, mainly in automobile, auto parts, farm equipment, aerospace, meat packing, canning and some men's apparel, the department reported.

At least 600,000 are in construction, it added, and 900,000 are in other nonmanufacturing industries, notably local and long distance trucking and retail trade.

The most commonly scheduled deferred increase—affecting about 875,000 workers — will average about 7 cents an hour, the Monthly Labor Review said. Another 575,000 will get raises averaging 6 cents.

Cost-of-living escalator provisions are rare in the construction industry, the analysis noted, but more than half the workers scheduled for deferred increases in other industries also are covered by escalator clauses.

Mistrial in Hoffa Case, Probe Sought

Nashville—A special federal grand jury was called for by U.S. District Judge William E. Miller after a mistrial was declared in the trial of Pres. James R. Hoffa of the Teamsters on charges of conspiring to violate the Taft-Hartley Act by sharing in payments from a Michigan trucking firm.

The mistrial was declared when the jury reported it was unable to reach agreement. Miller in dismissing the jury said the special grand jury should investigate whether "illegal and improper attempts" were made by "close associates" of Hoffa to influence jury members.

Two jurors were dropped from the panel during the trial and their places were filled by alternates.

The government case charged that the Michigan trucking firm, Commercial Carriers, paid more than $1 million to a car-hauling firm incorporated in Nashville in the maiden names of Mrs. Hoffa and the wife of a close union associate, the late Teamster Vice Pres. Owen (Bert) Brennan. Hoffa denied sharing in the profits.

It marked the fourth time the government during the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations has failed to convict Hoffa of criminal charges.

The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt influences.

Big USWA Local Names McNabb

Sudbury, Ont.—Donald McNabb, one of the leaders in the fight to oust the Communist-tinted Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at the Intl. Nickel Co. here, has been elected president of the successor Steelworkers Local 6500.

McNabb was chosen head of the 15,000-member local in a contest with Wesley Basso, who also was active in the anti-Mine-Mill fight. In 1959 McNabb was vice president of the reform administration under Donald Gillis which won control of Mine-Mill Local 598.

Congressional Rules Battle Held Key to Progress in New Year

legislation and declared that "if reason and statesmanship prevail" when Congress convenes, "we in the AFL-CIO look forward to progress."

Agreeing with Kennedy's analysis that unless the House rules fight is won the legislative outlook will be "almost hopeless," Meany declared:

"The reform of the House rules, adopted in 1961, must be continued and in fact should be broadened . . . The Senate, too, should at long last adopt a workable means of ending filibusters without hampering full debate."

Workweek Cut 'Essential'

In the face of "a growing labor force, plus the accelerating erosion of jobs by automation," reduction of the basic workweek to 35 hours is "essential," he emphasized.

This, he said, should be coupled with "a continued expansion of public investment, through such programs as federal aid to education, better health facilities and so on. There must be tax reduction and reform."

Meany said labor will launch a direct drive next year for repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits states to ban union shop agreements through so-called "right-to-work" laws. The continuing battle over "right-to-work", he said, "wastes money and manpower that could be put to better use; injects unnecessary bitterness into labor-management relations . . . and in general contradicts the established policy of the United States that the encouragement of collective bargaining is in the national interest."

The AFL-CIO also "will continue to fight for health insurance for the aged as part of the social security system," Meany pledged. He added:

"This plan has been thoroughly examined by Congress. It needs no further investigations or hearings. And it is completely familiar to the American people, who have demonstrated their overwhelming approval for it."

A national fair employment practices law, he said, should mark "the next great surge forward toward the achievement of equal rights for all citizens."

'Simple Justice'

It is "a matter of simple justice," he added, and "will also have favorable economic effects, since a heavy proportion of those now suffering economic deprivation are Negroes."

Meany hailed the "momentous progress in the field of human rights" during 1962 through presidential and other administrative action. Taking note of "the President's historic order forbidding discrimination in federally-assisted housing developments . . . the more vigorous enforcement of voting rights and of court orders on the desegregation of schools," he cited them as "notable contributions to democratic principles."

His New Year statement expressed pride also in the unions and employers who signed equal opportunity pledges at the White House.

"It is clearly the sentiment of the American people that the blight of discrimination must now be eradicated," Meany declared.

The AFL-CIO, he said, does not enter the new year in "a spirit of unalloyed optimism."

"It is possible," he went on, "that every hope will be disappointed.

AFL-CIO to Work for Goals

"Yet we can look ahead to another possibility as well—the possibility that the cause of peace and freedom will be strengthened; that basic measures will be taken to meet the problem of unemployment; that great new strides will be made toward fulfilling the American promise of equal opportunity for all.

"This is the possibility toward which the AFL-CIO will devote its unstinting efforts."

DGB Issues Booklet On Eichmann's Trial

Bonn—In an effort to describe to young Germans the horrors of the Hitler regime and what happened during it, the youth section of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB) has issued a pamphlet devoted to the trial of Adolph Eichmann, Nazi leader executed after conviction in Jerusalem of a principal role in killing millions of Jews before and during World War II.

The booklet is entitled simply, Eichmann Trial, and was written by Alfred Wolfmann. The DGB said it is seeking to assure through the pamphlet that Germany will never again be subjected to a dictatorship.

Labor Gives Vets TV Sets, Cigarettes

Los Angeles—Ten 19-inch television sets and 10 cases of cigarettes —all union-made—were presented by the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor Veterans Committee to the Veterans' Administration Wadsworth Hospital at Sawtelle, Calif.

Each of the television sets carries a stencil identifying the donor. The Veterans' Committee has given more than $75,000 in gifts to the men and women in VA hospitals in recent years.
